The success of their battle and union philosophy is told in recent events.

The Communist-dominated CGT in June 1952 called another "general strike," this time protesting against the arrest of some of their leaders following violent demonstrations.

Of 1100 workers, only about 150 struck. FO's 500 members and even the majority of the CGT's 350 remaining members preferred to conserve their energy for serious economic protest in the future.

Polydor, now the elected delegate of the bus drivers, says they will need all their energy. He earns 25,000 francs (about $70) a month, and French prices are at least as high as any in Europe. A constant threat of unemployment exists. In the last five years, 700 workers have lost jobs.

Mama Aline is taking in washing these days to supplement the family income.

"We don't eat a lot," says Polydor, "but what we eat is good—and Mama is a good cook. But prices keep going up, up, up!"

Since he returned from the union training course, Polydor has been elected to the administrative committee of the FO departmental union. With a split shift from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. and union work in the evenings, the redheaded dynamo has a long day. He has no time to go home between shifts, but he comments:

"That's all right. It gives me time to look after grievances—and haggle with the Communists."

Almost every night there is a committee meeting or other union business that keeps him in town. Apart from being a delegate, he belongs to the social aid commission and is one of the three worker members of the council of discipline, which reviews all disciplinary discharges.

"The three of us always vote against firing anybody—after all, that's our role," he says.

Polydor feels the training has been a real aid. He explains that the school helped him to understand the delegates' rights in questions of hiring and firing.

Help From Abroad

Verbecke can laugh about many things.

But he has a serious understanding of his union role. At the school he studied organizing and propaganda techniques, the history of the old CGT, and something of the trade unions in other countries.

"We have a lot to thank them for, the other trade unions," he says, "not only for the course that they financed, but for the courage they gave us, knowing we're not alone.

"We in the FO are still not as strong as we'd like to be. But the free trade unions in a lot of countries are setting us a good example—one that we 'young militants' are doing our best to follow."

LIKE MOST good Frenchmen, Verbecke enjoys "vin rouge" with his meals. He and Aline, his wife (left), don't eat a lot but they eat well, for she's a good cook. And he doesn't mind making fun of his heft, as by trying to squeeze (center) into a tiny Renault car several sizes smaller than his bus. In free time not taken up by union work, he enjoys digging in the flourishing garden where he grows flowers and vegetables.

Knight Heads New Worldwide Federation Of Oil Workers

A WORLDWIDE trade secretariat for the oil industry, the Intl. Federation of Petroleum Workers, was formally organized at a meeting in Paris attended by representatives of oil workers' unions in 14 nations.

O. A. Knight, president of the CIO Oil Workers and a CIO vice president, was elected president. Headquarters of the new international organization, which represents about 250,000 workers as a starter, are being set up in Denver—also headquarters of the OWIU-CIO.

The IFPW was promised the support of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and its Regional Activities Fund by Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek. Fraternal greetings were extended to the delegates by representatives of several other international trade secretariats and by the late Leon Jouhaux, president of the French Force Ouvriere and Nobel peace prize winner.

LOYD A. HASKINS of the OWIU-CIO and Andre Miffre of the French Oil Workers Union, who worked actively with a provisional committee, presented tentative proposals for a constitution which were adopted after two days of discussion. Haskins was named general secretary and Miffre his assistant.

The new body demands free negotiations and the right of workers to conclude collective bargaining agreements and to strike if necessary. Its objectives were set forth as organization of workers in its field, the study of economic and social problems, and opposition to exploitation and attacks on human rights from any source whatsoever.

The founding convention was attended by delegates from unions of oil workers in Austria, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Egypt, France, Germany, India, Italy, Lebanon, Netherlands and the Philippines, as well as the U. S.

South Africa

Trade unions "are in dire danger of being destroyed as free and independent bodies," representatives of the British Trades Union Congress reported to that body's General Council after a six-weeks study of unionism in South Africa.

From without, they reported, the legislative program of Nationalist Premier Malan has fixed "fresh fetters on basic trade union freedoms," notably by utilizing laws enacted to fight communism. From within, they said, a divided leadership, where "the greatest obstacle to unity is rooted in the racial question," saps the strength of the labor movement to counter-attack.

ICFTU

Twenty-three students from India, Pakistan, Japan, Hongkong, Thailand and the Philippines have just completed their course at the ICFTU Asian Trade Union College in Calcutta, India. The college staff will run short labor education courses in India, Ceylon, Thailand, Hongkong and the Philippines until the next session opens July 26.

NEW 3c stamp (above) honoring Intl. Labor Organization, issued by United Nations, goes on sale May 10 at UN headquarters.

World Labor Exchanges Greetings On May Day

GREETINGS have been sent by the CIO to workers and their unions in other parts of the free world where May 1—May Day—is traditionally observed as labor's holiday.

"In these tense and trying times, with the threat of possible worldwide hydrogen war hovering over all humanity," said CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, "the need for solidarity and common purpose in the ranks of democratic labor is greater than ever before."

HE RENEWED the CIO's pledge of brotherhood with workers in free countries who "are exercising their freedom to struggle for social and economic justice," and its support for "the exploited and enslaved workers behind the Iron Curtain."

He also restated the CIO's pledge of active support of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in its fight for bread, peace and freedom, and reiterated "unalterable opposition to all oppression, to all dictatorships."

In addition, he expressed the CIO's recognition of the United Nations "as a hopeful instrument for the realization of our mutual aspirations of freedom and respect for the dignity of man," and voiced the CIO's hope for world peace.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, reviewing the growth of the U. S. labor movement, declared May Day is "an appropriate time to renew our faith in the international brotherhood of democratic unionism."

"There will be May Days in the not too distant future," he predicted, "when the workers and their organizations of all nations will be able to join hands in freedom and fraternity, and the Iron Curtain will be forever forgotten."

The ICFTU sent greetings "on this day of international working class solidarity" to all workers—to the 54 million in free unions affiliated with the ICFTU, to those in totalitarian countries who are "deprived of their elementary rights," and to those in dependent countries "striving for national freedom by democratic means."

Kemsley Gets ICFTU Post With The United Nations

WILLIAM Kemsley, former education director of the Michigan CIO Council and a veteran member of the CIO Auto Workers, has been named a representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at the United Nations in New York.

He succeeds Martin Wagner, former president of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, who has been appointed a special assistant to Chairman Anthony J. Federoff of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

KEMSLEY has been in Paris since late in 1951 on the staff of the Foreign Operations Administration and its predecessor agencies. His last assignment was as head of the labor and productivity training section of the ECA's European Productivity and Technical Assistance Div.

He first became interested in the labor movement in 1932, when he tried to organize a union and was fired from his job as manager of a chain grocery in Detroit.

He joined UAW-CIO Local 174 in 1937 and immediately became plant chairman—at a time when the local president was Walter P. Reuther, now president of both the UAW and the CIO. In 1940, after holding many other officers, he became a local organizer, later serving as local education director.

Kemsley went to Germany in 1945 as a labor specialist in the Manpower Div. of the Office of Military Government, U. S. (OMGUS).

A year later he returned to this country and became Michigan CIO Council education director. In that post he directed the development of a program that attracted much favorable comment and included the widely-known annual leadership training institute at the FDR-CIO Labor Center, Port Huron.

Swedish Union Leaders Visit CIO

Three top officials of the Swedish Metal Workers Union visited National CIO headquarters last week for discussion with officials centering on piecework and incentive problems.

Vice Pres. Ake Nilsson and National Secretaries Lennart Eckerstrom and Bertil Sundberg, members of a joint labor-management team visiting the U. S., also were scheduled to inspect headquarters of the CIO Steelworkers in Pittsburgh and of the CIO Auto Workers in Detroit.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

Leon Jouhaux Dies; French FO Leader

LEON JOUHAUX, 74, founder of France's Force Ouvriere and winner of the 1951 Nobel Peace Prize, died last week at his home in Paris.

The revered leader in the international labor movement, and French Socialist elder statesman, was re-elected to the presidency of the Economic Council on the afternoon of his death. The Council gives economic advice to the French Parliament, and Jouhaux had served as its head since it was established in 1946.

CABLES of condolence expressing his own sympathy and that of the CIO were sent by Pres. Walter P. Reuther to Jouhaux's widow and to FO.

Jouhaux was widely known in the U. S. He addressed the 1946 National CIO Convention in Atlantic City and made a fervent plea for peace. He expressed a desire to see all agencies of the United Nations work to establish security, telling the convention:

"This security will bring world disarmament that will lighten the burden of armament on every worker and give them a chance to work for their well-being.

"We must be working for peace, all of us, and not for war. We are the builders of a new world. We have the faith and the confidence, we are tightly united, nothing can separate us."

The son of a Paris match factory worker, he left school when he was 12 and went to work in a match factory. He became national secretary of the match workers union while still a youth and in 1909 was elected secretary general of the French Confederation of Labor. He was a delegate to the first Intl. Labor Conference in Washington in 1919.

BEFORE World War I, Jouhaux tried to organize an anti-militarist movement with German labor leaders, but when this failed he supported the French war effort. At the peace conference in 1919 he helped draft the Intl. Labor Charter and was a delegate to the League of Nations from 1925 to 1928.

Fearful of a new war, he came to the U. S. not long after to ask for former Pres. Roosevelt's intervention to maintain peace. When war came and the Germans overran France, Jouhaux was interned by the Petain regime which dissolved the labor confederation.

Later he was turned over to the Nazis and sent to a German concentration camp from which he was liberated by American troops in 1945.

HE RESUMED his leadership of the labor confederation, but split with its Communist majority in 1947 and established the non-Communist Force Ouvriere (Workers Force). FO is a member of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

When he received the Nobel peace award in 1951, Jouhaux said he regarded it as a recognition of the working class' efforts for world peace.

Any peace that did not have the working class support, he said, would no more be a true one than "a peace not based on social justice."

LEON JOUHAUX

Reuther Asks Freedom For Indo-China

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther told a nationwide television audience last week that he favors direct American aid to stop "aggression" in Indo-China, provided that Indo-Chinese independence is guaranteed before troops are used.

"I am for stopping aggression wherever it rears its ugly head," Reuther said, "but you don't win the minds and hearts and loyalties of men with guns alone.

"People who are fighting poverty, hunger and social injustice won't be on freedom's side as long as they can't have independence without strings."

Reuther's stand came in answer to a question put on the ABC television program, Junior Press Conference, after he had voiced the fervent hope that the world could remain at peace.

On the domestic issue of unemployment, Reuther said that currently some five million people who are either unemployed or working short time represent a $30 billion annual loss to the American economy.

He said the CIO will continue trying to get the Eisenhower Administration to act on the problem. He recalled he first wrote

"The important thing is that full production is not just a domestic problem," Reuther pointed out. "All over the world the Communists are saying American prosperity is geared to a war-time economy. But we can find a way to keep our economy geared to the aims and hopes and aspirations of peacetime."

He attacked the Administration's view that business would be all right because 1954 will be almost as good as 1953.

Replying to a series of questions about politics and the coming 1954 congressional elections, Reuther said he thought there was a good chance that the Senate would raise personal income tax exemptions as a means of stimulating purchasing power.

On the question of McCarthyism, Reuther noted that "the real tragedy of this ugy, evil, immoral thing that is McCarthyism is that is has brought about division in the nation when the country needs a sense of unity of purpose."

CIO COUNCILS In Action

CIO COUNCILS all over the nation are continuing to press for adequate steps to meet the unemployment crisis.

• Although the California CIO Council had reservations, it supported a bill enacted by the Legislature which hiked maximum unemployment compensation benefits from $25 to $30 a week.

• Michigan CIO Council also criticized the State's new unemployment compensation law, which boosted maximum benefits for the jobless worker with four or more dependents from $35 to $42 a week. Council Pres. August Scholle said the legislation "falls far short of what is needed," and was particularly critical of the raising of the minimum requirements for benefits.

• "Judging from the trend of expired unemployment benefits and the increased relief load, it would appear that the need for a special session of the Iowa Legislature to improve the unemployment compensation law and to provide for emergency public works construction grows more urgent as time goes on," declared the Iowa CIO Council.

• With the general election about to start in New Jersey, Sec.-Treas. Victor D. Leonardis of the State CIO Council wrote State Republican Chairman Samuel L. Bodine that the GOP "does not have to wait until October or November" to show whether it supports Pres. Eisenhower. The Council called on the GOP Legislature to support recommendations of the Eisenhower Administration by raising the maximum jobless benefits to $50 a week and their duration to 26 weeks.

• Pres. Harry Boyer of the Pennsylvania CIO Council urged all affiliates to ask their respective county commissioners to act to make surplus food available for the jobless. The Pennsylvania CIO Community Services Committee already is making arrangements to hold its annual training institute at Pennsylvania State University, State College, Pa., June 20 to 25.

• Pres. Joseph T. Kelly of the Philadelphia CIO Council appeared before the City Council to urge continuance of rent control. He pointed out that decontrol would add "to the burden of present economic problems of so many of our people," who are jobless or working part time.

• Pres. Frank Flatch of the Bucks County, Pa., CIO Council has been elected first vice president of the Lower Bucks County Hospital, near Bristol, to which CIO and AFL members pledged $700,000. Another of the six labor representatives on the hospital board of directors is John Spadaccine, a CIO member who is a labor staff representative of the County Community Chest.

• The Portsmouth, O., CIO Council lost its vigorous fight to have Pres. Eisenhower extend rent controls in Scioto County, but it sent a letter to all persons who had complained that their rents had been unreasonably increased. Rep. Polk (D. O.) was listed among those who supported the Council's campaign. The Council called for supporting friends and defeating enemies in the November election.

Council Gives Scouts $5000

The Erie, Pa., CIO Council has pledged $5000 to the Erie Boy Scout Camp Expansion Fund. The money will be used to build the camp's health lodge, which will bear a bronze plaque crediting the Council with the gift.

GOP Accused of Attempting To Scuttle Negro School

THE PRESIDENT of Howard University, Washington, last week charged that a change of policy by the Eisenhower Administration is killing the Negro school.

Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, university president, made the accusation before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee.

He asserted that during the past two years "the government has paid no attention to the needs of Howard University—none whatever."

DR. JOHNSON said that during that period he had not been given the opportunity to go over the needs of the university in detail with officials of the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare.

The school head declared that $2,520,000 requested by the Administration for operating costs next year—a reduction of $15,000 in the current funds—"is just enough to break our backbone."

"Already we have been forced to give up the idea of a liberal arts graduate school," he added. "Howard University is being killed.

"Somewhere minds were made up to stop building Howard up and give it less than we have had in 20 years."

Teachers' salaries, he said, are "still far below the scale approved by Congress for public school teachers of Washington, and the salaries on non-teaching personnel are substantially below the minimum available for comparable work in government."

Russell R. Larson, assistant secretary of Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, denied there has been a policy change.

Reuther To Aid 2 Charity Drives

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has accepted posts with two national campaign drives. He advised Gen. Omar N. Bradley that he would again serve as vice chairman of the United Defense Fund in this year's campaign.

Reuther also accepted the co-chairmanship of the 1954 national labor committee of the United Cerebral Palsy drive. He pledged the cooperation of the CIO Community Services Committee in the development of a year-around program for the benefit of the whole community.

Calif. Council Backs Yorty For Senate

ENDORSEMENT of Rep. Yorty for the U. S. Senate and Richard Graves for governor was announced last week by the Political Action Committee of the California CIO Council. Both are Democrats.

Graves will oppose Gov. Goodwin Knight, a Republican. Yorty, now serving his second term from California's 26th District has compiled an excellent liberal voting record. He has also been endorsed by the AFL League for Political Education.

In a statement issued with the endorsements the Council said it was giving support to eight liberal Republicans and 104 liberal Democrats who are pledged to a positive program that will restore the economic well-being of the nation and implement a policy that will contain the menace of communism.

ENDORSEMENTS in congressional races went to a number of Democratic incumbents. Among them were Rep. Condon, 6th Dist.; Rep. Miller, 8th Dist.; Rep. King, 17th Dist.; Rep. Holifield, 19th Dist.; Rep. Doyle, 23rd Dist., and Rep. Sheppard, 27th Dist.

Also endorsed were Philip O'Rourke, a vice president of the CIO American Radio Association, as Democratic candidate for Congress from the 4th Dist., and James Roosevelt, son of the late Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt, seeking the Democratic nomination for Congress in the 26th Dist.

General Pay Boost Asked By GCEOC

GENERAL wage increases for all federal employes were urged by the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee to meet "the distress currently being experienced at all levels of employment."

Testifying before the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, Legislative Rep. Gerald Fitzgerald of GCEOC-CIO proposed an $800 pay hike for government workers.

He criticized Administration proposals for extension of fringe benefits to federal employes, particularly those dealing with life and health insurance and eligibility for unemployment compensation. Fitzgerald cited the case of three young women stenographers laid off by the government.

ALL, HE SAID, had the same experience and qualifications and were similar in all respects except place of residence. When they reported to their respective unemployment offices all similarity ended. The girl who lives in Virginia receives $22 a week for 16 weeks, Miss District of Columbia gets $20 for 20 weeks, and the young woman in Maryland gets $30 for 16 weeks.

Fitzgerald registered objection to a proposal that the Administration's wage revision plan be effective 180-plus days after enactment.

"Postal employes are apprehensive that further postponement is a possibility," Fitzgerald said.

THIS TRIO has been named to lead the New Jersey CIO Council in place of Pres. Carl Holderman, who resigned to become State Labor Commissioner. They are, from left, Executive Vice Pres. Joel R. Jacobson, Pres. Paul Krebs and Sec.-Treas. Victor D. Leonardis.

Triumvirate To Lead New Jersey Council

THREE young leaders of the New Jersey State CIO Council were named by the 59-member executive board to direct council affairs for the next 19 months.

The trio, with equal authority, succeed to the duties of Carl Holderman, who resigned as president of the council to become State Labor Commissioner in the cabinet of Gov. Robert B. Meyner. They are:

Paul Krebs, chairman of the State Political Action Committee since January 1945, who was elected president to succeed Holderman.

Joel R. Jacobson, executive secretary of the Essex-West Hudson CIO Council, was named to the newly created post of executive vice president of the State body.

Sec.-Treas. Victor D. Leonardis.

They will serve until December 1955, when the next State CIO convention will be held. The constitution of the group provides that the executive board, made up of representatives of each international union and each county CIO council, fill vacancies to serve unexpired terms.

Krebs, a member of the CIO Auto Workers, joined the union in 1940 and became an international staff member in 1944. He had served as regional UAW-CIO political action director and education director before taking the State PAC post.

Jacobson, president of Newark Local 6 of the CIO Newspaper Guild, joined the State CIO staff in 1947 as education and research director. He became executive secretary of the Essex-West Hudson CIO in 1949, his duties including direction of PAC work. Last January he also was named coordinator of county councils for the State CIO, holding both posts concurrently.

Leonardis, State CIO secretary-treasurer since 1951, formerly was an international representative for the CIO Electrical Workers. As president of Local 436 at the General Instrument Co., Elizabeth, he was active in the fight to oust the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers from the industry.

Power Policies To Be Discussed

Public power policies and operations on the local and federal levels will be discussed at the eleventh annual convention of the American Public Power Association in Chicago May 4-6.

More than 500 officials from local publicly-owned electric utilities will attend. Speakers will include Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.), Rep. Jones (D. Ala.) and Undersecretary of the Interior Ralph A. Tudor.

Education Group Aided By Conn. CIO

A FUND-RAISING campaign for the Connecticut Council for the Advancement of Economic Education has been started by the Connecticut CIO Council.

The CCAEE is composed of teachers, trade unionists, businessmen and farmers whose purpose is to bring more complete and up-to-date economic education into teaching at both the elementary and high school levels.

The organization is an outgrowth of a similar group which has functioned for four years on a local level in Hartford in which CIO also actively participated.

AT A SPRING conference of CCAEE, attended by CIO Council Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff and other officials, it was explained that CCAEE can bring to educators current information on economic problems from the viewpoint of labor, industry and agriculture.

"The benefits," Sviridoff said, "are mutual. We gain a great deal from the educators. Labor, business and agriculture representatives are likely to find that they get more out of the organization than they contribute."

The Council has already made a $300 contribution toward CCAEE's $30,000 budget for the coming year, and is now campaigning for funds among its affiliates.

UAW Artist Paints Union Hall Mural

Union artist Richard W. Bartosh is shown in right photo painting mural at the hall of Local 887, CIO Auto Workers, in Los Angeles, Calif. A Navy veteran, Bartosh worked swing shift at the North American Aviation plant, joined Local 887 and attended night art classes. Mural took two months to complete. Bartosh painted nights after work and weekends. Bottom photo shows finished section of the mural which commemorates membership program of Local 887.

Economic Outlook Says—

Administration's Double Talk Blocking Action On Schools

THE EISENHOWER Administration is engaging in "double talk" when prompt federal action is needed to meet the problem of the nation's neglected schools, the CIO charged in the current edition of the Economic Outlook, monthly publication of the CIO Dept. of Research and Education.

Noting that "even Pres. Eisenhower himself admitted that 'our school system needs some prompt, effective help'," the Outlook recalled that, however, "the Eisenhower Administration has spoken no word of approval" for bills proposing federal aid for school construction.

The Administration, it continued, "has proposed instead that we hold conferences to discover the needs of our schools and what should be done about them."

This proposal, the CIO publication continued, "ignored" the vast volume of reliable data already collected. The Outlook said:

"Conferences to talk about it (the need for school assistance) are neither prompt nor effective, particularly when several years will be spent gathering material which is already available. This is not only double work but double talk."

Recalling the CIO's long fight for adequate public school education, the Outlook noted that every American is paying the cost of neglected public schools.

"We pay it in the cost of crime, especially juvenile crime; we pay it in wasted and unproductive lives of men and women whose talents might have been brought out by proper schooling; we pay it in Selective Service rejections for inability to read and write," the Outlook said.

"Classrooms are crowded beyond capacity; teachers are hard to get and even harder to keep; building and teacher shortages that have plagued the elementary schools are now moving slowly in on the high schools."

Recalling the huge crop of World War II babies, the Outlook said present school enrollment is estimated at 29.6 million and added, "by 1959, this will have jumped to 36.3 million, an increase of approximately one million children a year."

To meet this load, the Outlook continued, the nation needs "at least 40,000 new teachers a year." But with current pay scales averaging $3605 a year, the CIO publication continued, "it is small wonder that we can't attract young people to teaching or keep them in the classroom for more than a few years."

Recalling the recent tragic school fire in upper New York State, which took 14 lives of children housed in a frame "temporary" building, the Economic Outlook reported that one out of every five school children is "housed in a building that doesn't meet minimum fire safety standards."

The Outlook recalled that in 1949, CIO and many other groups, supported the bill offered by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) for a federal school construction program allocating $3 billion over a five-year period.

As of September, 1952, it continued, the U. S. Office of Education reported the need, in 43 states, for 245,317 classrooms to relieve overcrowding, house the enrollment increase and to replace obsolete buildings.

Yet, the Outlook observed, the average per family spending for schools is $200 per year, while the cost of crime is $495 per family.

Stafford Is Elected ANG Vice President

Unofficial returns from 44 CIO Newspaper Guild locals indicate that Robert C. Stafford, Cleveland, has been elected ANG vice president at large. He succeeds William M. Ware, also of Cleveland, who resigned because of a job promotion.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

THE FULL STORY of the swindles perpetrated on small homeowners under FHA's modernization-loan program has not yet been told. Thousands of homeowners have bought and are still buying costly mastic paint jobs that don't stand up, fake "gas-proofing" jobs for furnaces, home fire-detection systems for as much as $900, water-conditioning systems for which they paid twice as much as the regular price, insulation jobs and storm windows at prices far beyond the market value and many other products on which they have been over-charged.

'Dynamiters At Work'—Behind Housing Gouge

So far all the publicity has been about the speculative builders throughout the country who reaped big profits putting up skimpy, inadequate housing projects. Government officials have only hinted that there is a further scandal involved in the cases of many homeowners bilked on home repair jobs.

In many ways the once proud FHA program has been distorted into becoming a guaranteed money-making deal for banks and builders in this area of housing shortage. But the many gouges involving home "improvements" have been one of the unhappiest experiences for homeowners.

Under the FHA modernization-loan program, a homeowner may borrow up to $2500 for repairs or improvements at an interest rate of purportedly 5% (it had been 4.5% but the new Administration raised it). Actually the interest rate comes out to over 9% because the homeowner is also charged various premiums and service fees.

Repair Loans Called Dubious

Theoretically the FHA modernization loans are a help to a moderate-income homeowner. But not only is the interest charge so high that such a loan has become of dubious value, but the program itself has been used by some promoters and contractors to charge an extra-high price for home products and repairs, and in some cases to sell moderate-income families some quite worthless products, like mastic paint jobs already reported here and aluminum windows that don't always fit the house.

Just today this department learned of a working man living in Levittown, N. Y., who bought a set of aluminum storm windows that don't fit his house. The windows cost $500 and were financed by an FHA modernization loan. When the seller delivered the windows, the wife—as so many other people have—signed a paper without checking the fit.

She didn't realize it but the paper was the official FHA "completion certificate" certifying that "the work or materials have been satisfactorily completed or delivered." The seller then turned the man's note over to a bank, so the seller is out of the picture and has his money. Now the bank is threatening to take away the family's house if they don't make the payments due.

From Carmichael, Calif., a reader of this column reports that "there are at least 26 families in this vicinity that were caught" in mastic paint deals, and "most of the jobs that were not cash, were financed through FHA Title I loans."

So widespread are the complaints about shoddy home repair jobs that the Association of Better Business Bureaus reports last year complaints and inquiries about home construction and remodeling jumped from fourth place to second in its list of consumer gouges.

The Government modernization-loan program has come pretty close to becoming an actual vehicle for racketeering with the appearance of crews of salesmen and promoters—known as "dynamiters"—who travel from one area to another selling home-modernization projects.

Some Banks Aid Gouging

The dynamiters have been shown to have charged exorbitant prices for various products and purported repairs. They then turn the jobs over to local contractors to do the actual work at a true cost sometimes half what the promoters charged the homeowners. Then the promoters turn the homeowners' notes over to banks and pass on to another region to repeat the campaign.

You can see how some banks in effect have aided such gouging. Because FHA for all practical purposes guarantees the banker against loss on such loans, a number of banks have been lax in making the investigations of dealer reliability they are supposed to make under the FHA program.

After this department's reports last fall on the mastic-paint jobs, an FHA official wrote us defending the loan program and pointing out that FHA called the attention of local banks to the operations of mastic-paint promoters, and warned them "repeatedly" to exercise "extreme care in selecting their dealers and in approving the products to be financed."

The FHA has taken other steps to stop abuses, including a new completion certificate which says plainly: "Do not sign this . . . until you are satisfied that the dealer has carried out his obligations to you and that the work or the materials have been satisfactorily completed or delivered."

This warning has become necessary because sellers frequently induced owners to sign completion certificates under the pretext they were only delivery receipts.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

I HAD THE PLEASURE of driving to Front Royal, Va., this past Sunday to visit the CIO Communications Workers Institute. The Institute itself is a converted stone lodge that accommodates comfortably up to 20 students. Aside from its scenic location in the foothills of the beautiful Shenandoah National Park, the Institute demonstrates the foresight of CWA Pres. Joe Beirne and his associate officers in developing leadership qualities within the membership of the CWA-CIO.

Upon arriving at the Institute, I was greeted by Brother Jules Pagano, CWA director of education. During the afternoon and at dinner, I had occasion to talk at length with Brother Pagano and the CWA organizers who were "students" at this particular week-long session of the Institute.

Following dinner the group went to work by holding its opening training session at which Dir. Pagano gave a brief history and the purpose of the school. Over the past three years the ever-expanding program has imparted effective educational material to the union's membership, local union officers and organizers, as well as national union officers.

The underlying principle of the program is developing effective group action at all levels within the union structure—developing group leaders who can introduce, guide and encourage group participation in understanding and solving problems confronting their union.

Upon leaving the Institute the following day I had been deeply impressed with an educational program that is instrumental in making the CWA-CIO a strong, well-informed, militant union within the CIO family.

ONCE AGAIN, CIO's Chemical Workers report a major victory. This time Pres. and Dir. of Organization Elwood Swisher sends news of an election Apr. 26 at the National Carbide Co., Calvert City, Ky. The majority was overwhelming, with a vote of 140 for the Chemical Workers to 39 for the other union, and four votes for no union.

I have noted, in this column, many times that our major organizing efforts have to be concentrated in certain basic industries, which were either passed by the great tide of organization in the late thirties and early forties, or where the industry has taken on new importance after World War II.

Certainly, in these days of plastics and chemical processes, the chemical industry, along with textile, ranks among the largest areas for trade union action toward organization of the unorganized.

It is heartening to realize that CIO's Chemical Workers are making such steady progress—a young union in a young industry. The leadership and staff deserve our thanks for the fine job they are doing, night and day, to build a strong organization, and a responsible organization.

ORGANIZATION continues not only in those industries we might consider "new" fields for the labor movement, but also within the great basic industries, which some people consider completely organized. In large plants and small plants the workers are winning the rights and benefits of CIO representation.

For instance, Hugh Thompson, CIO regional director in Boston, reports a victory for the CIO Auto Workers at the Judson Thompson Co., Waltham, Mass., by a vote of 347 to 219. At the same time, New York Reg. Dir. Mike Mann reports on Auto Worker victory at Metro Screw Machine Products, Bronx, N. Y., where only 13 workers were involved (UAW-CIO 12—no union 1).

While our unions must of course conserve their resources to bring unionization to the greatest number of workers, for the greatest benefit of all, they are ready to answer the call of all workers who really desire help in forming trade unions of their own choosing, and who desire to add their spiritual and economic strength to our brotherhood.

Ted Rhodes and Roy Norros report a fine victory for CIO's Textile Workers, and for the workers of the Cranston Print Works, Fletcher, N. C., who chose TWUA-CIO as their bargaining agent by a vote of 174 to 104.

From California, CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin De Shetler reports an Oil Workers victory at the Monsanto Chemical Co., Avon, Calif., by a vote of 46 for OWIU-CIO to 27 for the other union. OWIU Rep. Verlin McKendree was in charge of the campaign.

Religion Group Meets, Gets Gift From Murray Foundation

By DONALD E. SMITH

LABOR and religion have the same objectives—the economic and social betterment of the masses of people throughout the world.

Union officials stressed this theme in talks to the annual convention of the National Religion and Labor Foundation in Columbus, O., last week.

Victor G. Reuther, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, and R. J. Thomas, assistant to CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, were principal speakers at the convention, which attracted more than 110 church leaders and students.

Thomas presented the foundation with a $500 check on behalf of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation.

"The goal of labor and religion is one and the same," Reuther said, "and the goal is that the well-being and welfare of every segment of our society is taken into consideration."

Reuther said the U. S. can defeat the Kremlin on the social, economic and political fronts and win the current international struggle for the free world but to do it the U. S. must help less-developed areas erase "misery, poverty, colonialism and exploitation."

"If the people overseas knew that we stood on the side of freedom against exploitation and colonialism," Reuther said, "I would doubt that we would have to send our boys to Southeast Asia. We have been more concerned with alliances with countries than alliances with people."

People in foreign countries don't understand Americans because what they hear comes from professional soldiers and diplomats, Reuther said.

Reuther called for more missionary work overseas—not only by religious but by business and government—and criticized those businesses which established plants in France and Italy "and immediately adapted the pitifully low wage scales of French and Italian employes."

Thomas attacked the premise that ministers should remain neutral in the problems confronting the people.

"If any person in this world believes that he can be neutral, then he should thank God, because to me there can't be a neutral position," Thomas asserted. "If you think so, then you should study your Bible more closely. Do you think Christ was being neutral when he drove the money changers from the Temple?"

Three church leaders were honored posthumously by the Foundation for their contribution to social justice. The Social Justice Awards were given posthumously to Methodist Bishop Francis J. McConnell, a native of Lucasville, O.; Catholic Bishop Francis J. Haas of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York City.

GIFT OF $5000—R. J. Thomas, assistant to CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe (right), presents $5000 check on behalf of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation to Labor and Religion Foundation. John G. Ramsay, LRF director of community relations, accepts check. In center is Dr. James A. Crain, director of Christian Missionary Society, Indianapolis.

Needless

Failure of the Eisenhower Administration to act to prevent the recession was criticized in the convention issue of the National Religion and Labor Foundation's publication, "Social Justice," as follows:

"The present totally needless recession, euphemized by blind and selfish interests as an economic 'readjustment' should have been foreseen by real statesmen, with plans formulated to head it off and prevent 10 million American people from having any income because of unemployment of the heads of those families."

Anti-Bias Clause Tightened In Government Contracts

THE GOVERNMENT last week instituted a new and tougher program to outlaw job discrimination in plants holding government contracts.

Ordered by the President's Committee on Government Contracts, the revised clause is intended to halt all discrimination in employment, because of race, creed, color or national origin, in plants holding government orders.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther is a public member of the committee.

Deputy Atty.-Gen. William P. Rogers announced that the non-discrimination clause — already required in all government contracts—has been revised and toughened to define discriminatory practices and require the clause be posted in plants with government contracts.

Elsewhere on the discrimination battle line, the New York State Court of Appeals last week upheld the power of its State FEPC to discipline employment agencies that follow unfair practices.

HONORS SEN. WAGNER—Mayor Robert F. Wagner, New York City (center), presents the $10,000 Philip Murray Award check, which his father, the late Sen. Robert F. Wagner, received from the CSC-CIO in 1948, to the New York School of Social Work, Columbia University. The money will provide scholarships in labor and social welfare. From left, Frederick Sheffield, the school's board chairman; Leo Perlis, CSC director; Wagner; Kenneth D. Johnson, dean of school, and Joseph A. Beirne, CSC chairman and CWA-CIO president.

Where The Big Dough Goes—

Business Perfects Jobless Pay Chiseling

By ED LASHMAN

TESTIMONY by federal officials that people drawing unemployment compensation are being overpaid, either through administrative errors or fraud, is currently being widely publicized.

But nobody is talking about fraud on the part of employers, or worse, the legalized fraud of employer lobbies in state legislatures gutting benefits to jobless workers by adding restrictive provisions to state laws.

Even the sensational reports of information given a House Appropriations subcommittee point up that better than one and a half times as many cases of overpayment are due to "laxity in administration and bookkeeping" as to fraud.

And no distinction is made between willful fraud and cases in which a worker simply misunderstood the legalistics of a highly technical form and gave an answer which provided him with a higher benefit than he was entitled to.

Robert C. Goodwin, director of the Labor Dept's Bureau of Employment Security, a career government employe, made the charges. He said reports from five unnamed states indicated a fraud rate of 4.4% of claims, and a clerical error of 6.8% of claims. He proposes the Labor Dept. give states $2.5 million to "investigate."

The equally startling fact is that when you get down to cases, what all the fuss is about is a mere 107 cases of overpayment discovered out of a total of 949 investigated. The percentage figures that were made out to be so alarming were based on 42 "fraud" cases and 65 cases of "clerical or administrative error." It's these 107 cases that are presumed to give an average national rate.

No mention was made of severe cuts in Republican congressional appropriations to states to administer unemployment compensation offices. In the face of the rising unemployment which the Republican Administration continues to ignore, greatly increased claims and overburdened, reduced staffs could certainly account for the high rate of "administrative error."

In 1951 only 1.9 million people were jobless. Today, 3,725,000 are. Yet, if the figures are correct, the ratio of "fraudulent" claims today is only fractionally higher than it was in 1951.

OF COURSE while some 1.84% of all workers' claims were accidentally or willfully fraudulent in 1951, 2.8% of all employers were delinquent in making required reports, 7.3% of them were delinquent in making required payments, and some $3,125,561 they owed was declared uncollectable.

Despite these startlingly high rates of law violation by business, nobody has asked for funds to investigate that situation. The fact is that in 1951, employers broke the law at a rate anywhere from 15 to 39 times as often as claimants did. The delinquent tax money amounted to 2.2% of total contributions, with an average amount of $294.16.

Of course, most employer chiselling is legal. It's a matter of lobbying in state legislatures to hamstring the unemployment compensation laws and reduce benefits to workers.

Spearheaded by General Motors and Standard Oil, the lobbyists work to reduce the amount of weekly benefits, to make it harder for workers to qualify for benefits, to cut the number of weeks workers get paid, and to provide incentives for employers to oppose claims.

That they have been effective is shown by the fact that in most states a worker out of a job actually gets only 35-40% of his average weekly wage—or 30-40% of his actual cost of living.

RESTRICTIVE provisions in 1951 disqualified one of of every seven workers because they hadn't earned enough money to meet state requirements. Another one out of five was disqualified for technical provisions, even though earned credits were high enough.

The reserve funds built up in various states as a result of disqualifications from legalized chiselling would pay current average benefits for more than nine years, without employers contributing another penny. Unemployed workers are paid only .9% of their wages as benefits, yet reserve funds over the country amount to 8.3% of wages.

Incidentally, the average amount of "fraudulent" overpayment, Goodwin says, is now $75.06, and the average "administrative error" is $35. In 1951 the figures were $70.48 and $35.21 — no significant change.

He gave no figures on the average loss to workers through legalized fraud.

Whose Fraud?

When Robert C. Goodwin, director of the Labor Dept. Employment Security Bureau, asked Congress for $2.5 million to investigate "fraudulent" and erroneous overpayments of unemployment compensation, he said California was one of the worst states.

Here are some interesting figures about unemployment compensation frauds in California he can have without spending a penny:

Some 1.7% of all employers in 1951 were delinquent in making reports as required by law; some 12,606 were delinquent in paying $2,928,856 into the fund, and employers in 1951 defaulted on payments totaling $126,565.

GOP Farm Aims Held 'Creeping Localism'

AMERICA'S farmers are suffering from the policies of "creeping localism" fostered by the Eisenhower Administration, Paul Sifton, legislative representative of the CIO Auto Workers, charged last week.

Speaking at a two-day conon Agricultural Life and Labor, Sifton hit Republican budget cuts for vocational education, health, public power, conservation and other federal activities to aid farmers.

The situation today, he said, is similar to that in 1898 when William Jennings Bryan exclaimed in a famous speech, "God help the independent farmer!"

"The federal government is evading its responsibility to the people on the nation's farms," Sifton continued. "Agricultural workers and farm operators have no social security protection and no parity in education, health services or housing."

Mrs. Katherine P. Ellickson, CIO associate director of research, told the conference banquet that an "unrealistic ruling" by the Justice and Labor Depts. which permits employers to replace U. S. workers with Mexican contract labor by shifting jobs from packingsheds to the fields is "depressing wages of U. S. workers in agriculture."

The conference was attended by approximately 100 delegates representing more than 30 national religious, social welfare, consumer, labor and farm organization.

Rep. McCarthy (D. Minn.) drew an enthusiastic response when he proposed that, whenever taxpayers' money is used for price supports and other aid to agriculture, the national interest may legitimately require that labor be protected by the establishment of minimum standards.

CIO Attacks Tax Limiting Amendment

OPPOSITION TO the "millionaire's amendment" to the income tax law, the proposal to limit federal income tax to 25%, was voiced in congressional testimony last week by CIO Research and Education Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg.

Ruttenberg testified before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee on a bill introduced by Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) and Rep. Reed (R. Ill.). He charged that "the whole drive for this amendment grows out of the Committee for Constitutional Government whose record of opposition to all liberal, progressive legislation is well known."

RUTTENBERG said the amendment would "be a return to the character of the regressive tax structure of the 18th and 19th centuries" from which "we moved toward a progressive tax structure based on ability to pay with the adoption of the 16th amendment in 1913."

He added that adoption of the amendment would reduce federal revenue by more than $13 billion in the current fiscal year.

Also opposing the amendment was Rep. Patman (D. Tex.), who testified that it would lead to "monopoly" and centralization of economic power. Patman said he believes supporters of the amendment would actually destroy the capitalistic system.

Supporting the amendment was a whole roster of leaders of arch-conservative hate-groups.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTION IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU

1. CIO Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg testifies before Senate Judiciary subcommittee against "millionaire's" tax amendment.

2. House Labor Committee decided to delay further consideration of Taft-Hartley Act amendments and before voting, wait for debate in Senate, where some congressional strategists hope to push through labor-opposed changes.

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What You Can Do
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals (S.2650)	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate will act on anti-labor bill week of May 3. House Labor Com. has postponed report on bill until Senate acts.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Reed Unemployment Insurance Bill (H.R. 5173)	Would start break-up of federal-state system of unemployment insurance and hold down benefits.	Passed House last year. Pending before Senate Finance Com.	Write or wire your Senator to defeat the Reed bill and provide increased unemployment benefits for at least 39 weeks.
Administration Tax Revisions (H. R. 8300)	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	Voted by House, coming up in Senate.	Urge your Senators to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor and to work for an increase in the personal exemptions to $800 this year and $1000 thereafter.

(Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)
(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Tougher T-H Law Is Aim Of GOP Planners

MANAGEMENT maneuvers to make Taft-Hartley Act amendments "tough on labor" are reported behind the decision of the House Labor Committee to halt its own activities and wait for Senate debate and voting on the proposed changes.

It is part of overall strategy by some GOP congressional leaders to insure that any changes in the law this year will be more to the liking of management than labor. A Republican majority will try this week, when voting starts in the Senate, to ram through sections to make an already bad law much worse.

IF THE PLAN advocated by business-backed GOP leaders works, several bad-for-unions amendments will be tacked on T-H. If it doesn't, the proposed revisions will be shelved for this year.

Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.) intimated last week he was having difficulty in getting a bill satisfactory to the Administration out of his House Committee.

Whichever stratagem is decided upon in the Senate, it will be regarded as a setback for Pres. Eisenhower. Despite promises to make T-H "fair and just" towards labor. Eisenhower's proposals have encountered strong union opposition.

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce notified its member organizations throughout the country last week in an "Action Needed" letter that plenty of work must be done fast if businessmen's hopes of "improving" T-H are to be fulfilled this year.

CIO on ABC
Monday thru Friday
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS

CIO Union Conventions
See Pages 6 and 7

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., May 10, 1954 — 82 — Vol. 17, No. 19

Super-T-H Drive Stopped

THE ADMINISTRATION drive for a super-Taft-Hartley law was stopped dead in its tracks Friday afternoon when the Senate voted 50 to 42 to recommit the measure to the Labor Committee.

The CIO had urged recommital.

The vote, viewed as one of Pres. Eisenhower's worst legislative defeats, found 46 Democrats plus three Republicans and one Independent balloting for recommital. All 42 votes against recommital came from Republicans.

Action followed a motion by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) to send the bill back to the committee. Hill had been angered by GOP steam-roller tactics in forcing the measure out of the committee under a gag rule.

The vote virtually killed all chances that Congress would pass any bill to make Taft-Hartley worse during this session.

Just before the vote was taken, Majority Leader Knowland (Calif.) said recommital would be repudiation of the President.

All 48 Senate Democrats lined up for recommital. Two of them later allowed their votes to be paired against those of absent Republicans. The Republicans voting for recommital were Sens. Langer and Young (both N. D.) and Sen. Malone (Nev.). The Independent was Sen. Morse (Ore.).

White House pressure for "a bill," no matter how strongly anti-labor, continued unabated until the Senate clerk began reading the roll call.

Knowland, who on other occasions hasn't seemed particularly concerned with following White House leadership, threw his support behind the amendments proposed by Sen. Goldwater (R. Ariz.). Goldwater himself admitted they could even outlaw collective bargaining.

The vote reflected strong Democratic resentment against Republican gag rule in the Labor Committee. The chairman, Sen. Smith (D. N.J.), flagrantly disregarded customary Senate procedure and prohibited Democratic members even from offering amendments. (Detailed story on earlier debate on Page 3.)

PAC PROTECTS THE LUNCH BOX AT THE BALLOT BOX

TWU Marks Birthday

Inspired by PAC slogan (above), more than 5000 members of the CIO Transport Workers smile and wave signs (right) at the union's celebration of its 20th anniversary at New York City.

The delegates who represent workers in ground and air transportation looked at gains—which included paid holidays, pensions, hospital insurance—and found them good.

They also looked to future for better wages and election of friendly public officials. Michael J. Quill, union's first and only president, was given gold anniversary pin.

Textile VIPs Go Fishing

Heads of the CIO Textile Workers admitted their industry and union faced challenges as TWUA held its 15th anniversary convention last week. But, if they find time, they'll have union-made fishing gear.

Pres. R. J. Heitzmann, right, of Local 41, Utica, N. Y., presents rods to N. Y. Dir. Jack Rubenstein, left, Pres. Emil Rieve, Sec.-Treas. John Chupka and Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock.

Three U. S. Senators, two CIO union presidents and a Governor spoke at the sessions. (Convention story on Page 6.)

USA Sets Pay Hike, Annual Wage Goals

BASIC bargaining goals of higher wages, pension and insurance improvements, the guaranteed annual wage and better working conditions were set last week by the CIO Steelworkers.

The big steel union's 1954 bargaining program was adopted at a two-day meeting in Pittsburgh of the USA-CIO's International Wage Policy Committee, as first negotiations were set with the steel industry.

Full negotiations will begin on May 18 with the U. S. Steel Corp., the Number One steel producer.

THE USA-CIO represents some 600,000 workers in the basic steel industry, with most of the contracts expiring on June 30. The outcome of the basic steel negotiations directly affects the union's bargaining for as many more workers in can plants, the aluminum industry and in fabricating plants.

This year's basic steel negotiations are on a full contract reopening. They are, in addition, the first opportunity for discussing and modernizing the pension and social insurance sections of the contract—won by the USA-CIO in a pace-setting strike in 1949.

Formal 60-day notice of reopening the basic steel contracts was served on the industry on Apr. 27 by USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald.

In that letter, he requested negotiations at "an early time" on "wages, rates of pay, hours of work and other conditions of employment, including pensions and insurance."

These proposals were spelled out when the 170 members—many of them directly from the mills—of the Wage Policy Committee convened. The wage policy statements sets forth these "basic objectives" in coming negotiations:

1. Higher wages: "The economic needs of the members of the United Steelworkers of America, their increasing productivity, the profitability of the industry and the economic situation of the country as a whole, all require that the industry give favorable consideration to this proposal."

2. Improved insurance and pension plans: "The present insurance and pension plans in the industry were negotiated in 1949. Experience under these plans, modifications in the social security laws, and depreciation in the value of the benefits, all point to the necessity for enlarging and improving the insurance and pension plans."

3. The guaranteed annual wage: "The time is overdue for the establishment of a guaranteed annual wage along the practical and feasible lines advocated by the United Steelworkers of America."

4. Better contract terms: "Contracts should be modernized and brought up-to-date through the negotiation of improved provisions with respect to hours of work, shift premiums, overtime, week end premium pay, severance pay, holidays, incentives, reporting allowances, vacations, seniority, preferential hiring upon layoff or when plants or departments are discontinued, military service, local working conditions, grievance and arbitration machinery, contracting out, safety and health, supplemental workmen's compensation, the full union shop, and the elimination of all remaining geographical wage differentials and wage and salary inequities.

"EVERY EFFORT shall be made to negotiate a master agreement for each company and uniform expiration dates. Each negotiating committee shall conduct a complete review of existing agreements with the objective of obtaining these and additional improvements and in order to remedy deficiencies which have been disclosed by arbitration proceedings or in the operation of the contracts."

Steel Union On TV Urges Jobless Aid

THE CIO STEELWORKERS last week took to the nation its case for action now to end rising unemployment.

Over 93 television stations throughout the U. S., the union presented the full employment program which it gave to Pres. Eisenhower after it had been adopted by USA-CIO Executive Board.

USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald narrated the presentation which showed scenes of unemployment in steel towns. Some 200,000 members of the union have been furloughed in U. S. and Canada, and about 260,000 are working part time.

The program of the Steelworkers calls for:

1. "Benefit payments to the unemployed and to pensioners under the Social Security Act should be increased immediately by at least $3 billion.

2. "By raising the personal federal income tax exemption to $800, an additional $4 billion can be added to consumer demand.

3. "Public works programs should be immediately expanded by at least $5 billion to catch up with the backlog and kept abreast of the new demand.

4. "Prompt federal action can increase our national home construction and slum clearance effort by $5 billion."

Sparkman Beats Big Spenders In Alabama Senate Contest

SEN. SPARKMAN
Wins bitter contest

AFTER a bitter four-way primary campaign, Alabama's John Sparkman last week clinched his fight to stay in the Senate as a fighting representative of the New South.

Sparkman, aided by vigorous CIO-PAC work in the state's industrial areas, defeated a heavily-financed Dixiegop drive which was marked by twin anti-labor and racist attacks.

The count from some 2100 of Alabama's 2700 precincts indicated that Sparkman had won a clear majority for the Democratic nomination, equivalent to election, and would not face a run-off primary.

Former Gov. James Folsom, also supported by Alabama CIO, led a seven-man contest for governor, but a run-off primary appeared likely.

Other primaries were held last week in Ohio, Indiana, New Mexico and Flordia, highlighted by Rep. Bender's winning of the Ohio Republican nomination for the Senate.

SEN. BURKE (D. O.), appointed after the death of Sen. Taft and unopposed in the Democratic primary, will meet Bender in next fall's general election. Burke has the support of the Ohio CIO-PAC.

In the Alabama contest, Sparkman—who was the 1952 Democratic nominee for Vice President—opposed Rep. Battle, former Admiral John Crommelin and William C. Irby.

The Congressman was dubbed "Reddy Kilowatt" Battle by Crommelin because of connections with the Alabama Power Co. and other big business interests in the State.

A FIRST-HAND account of the anti-Sparkman campaign in The CIO News (of May 3) described it in these terms:

"No expense has been spared and no holds have been barred by the coalition of Dixiecrat leaders, Republicans, big industrialists, Wall Street, Texas oil and other interests which have ganged up to defeat him. The campaign, based on appeals to bigotry, has been one of the dirtiest on record."

When the votes were counted, Sparkman was in. Elected also were several congressional candidates supported by CIO-PAC, including Rep. Roberts and George Huddleston, Jr., who campaigned in Battle's old district around Birmingham.

Too Busy?

Rep. Battle, defeated reactionary candidate in the Alabama Democratic primary, was too busy to meet with some of his constituents during the campaign.

A CIO delegation led by Sec. D. D. Stafford of the Birmingham CIO Council was refused an appointment to meet with the Congressman concerning the Taft-Hartley situation.

The CIO group was turned down because it wasn't supporting Battle's candidacy for the Senate. To which Stafford commented:

"I may be wrong, but I was under the impression that a U. S. Congressman should serve all the people of his district and not just those that vote for and support him during his election campaign, or does Battle have his own definition of a democratic system?"

Steel Union Renews Drive At Weirton

THE LONG campaign of the CIO Steelworkers to organize Weirton Steel Co. has been renewed.

The USA-CIO last week announced that it has filed petitions for a representation election with the National Labor Relations Board, covering plants at Weirton, W. Va., and nearby Steubenville, O.

Paul Rusen, director of USA-CIO Dist. 23 with headquarters at Wheeling, is heading up the renewed organizing drive. Hearings on the election petition now are pending with the NLRB.

A so-called independent union represents workers at Weirton.

JUNIOR PRESS CONFERENCE—CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther is interviewed by Ruth Hagy on ABC-TV program, Junior Press Conference. In broadcast from Philadelphia, Reuther urged full independence for Indo-China.

8500 Strike At Philco To Save IUE Pension Plan

SOME 8500 CIO Electrical Workers struck at three Philco Corp. plants last week in the first walkout during current contract negotiations of the union with major companies in the electrical appliance industry.

The strike occurred at two radio and television set plants in Philadelphia, where 8000 are employed and at the Sandusky, O., radio set factory.

Two main issues are involved. One is the firm's insistence that the best pension plan in the industry be emasculated. It demanded that its contribution to the fund be cut from 8.5c an hour to 3.5c an hour and that the present minimum of $120 a month for workers with 25 years' service, including social security, become the maximum.

Philco also refused to make any offer to increase wages.

The Philadelphia workers are represented by IUE-CIO Locals 101 and 102, both with a score of years of contractural relations, first in the AFL, then in the United Electrical Workers, subsequently ousted by the CIO for following the Communist Party line, and now in IUE.

Local 101, which was the first to bolt from UE, is the home local of IUE Pres. James B. Carey and IUE Vice Pres. Harry Block. Carey was once the local's president.

THE CURRENT president is Lewis Cummings, who headed the committee which negotiated with the firm for several weeks prior to the expiration of the contract, when the strike began. Block also assisted in the talks.

Meanwhile, IUE negotiators continued pact discussion with General Electric and Westinghouse. Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, headed the IUE-CIO team that began negotiations with GE on the very day the firm announced that the first quarter of 1954 was the best financially in its history.

Liberal Demos Battle GOP T-H Drive

By AL ZACK

SENATE Democrats last week exposed the completely anti-labor character of Republican attempts to make the Taft-Hartley Act worse.

During four days of debate, before the Senate moved to the voting stage, liberal Democrats, in a series of searching questions, demolished all GOP claims that T-H proposals under consideration were "middle-of-the-road."

Sen. Smith (R. N.J.) led off for the Eisenhower forces but was almost immediately forced to confess that the Republican majority on the Senate Labor Committee, which he heads, had violated all customary Senate rules to ram through the White House T-H bill.

The Democratic minority, in a report filed as debate opened, charged the Smith gag rule was "a flagrant disregard for essential and long-established" Senate practice.

Through the use of "steam-roller tactics," the Democrats charged, the majority had voted out a bill which was the "product of haste and expediency."

Under vigorous questioning by Sens. Lehman (N.Y.) and Douglas (Ill.), both Democrats, Smith admitted the "steam-roller" charge. He said it was done "with regret" so as to report a "bill reflecting the wishes and recommendations of the President."

Smith did not comment on the minority report which showed that only two of the 13 members of the committee approved the bill in its entirety, an unprecedented situation. Earlier The CIO News had revealed that the so-called "majority" reporting the bill out of committee really was not a majority, as Senate rules provide.

MOST of the week's hottest debate centered on a proposal offered by Sen. Goldwater (R. Ariz.), a department store owner who repeatedly referred to his experience as an employer and based his proposals on that experience.

Goldwater's amendment, CIO lawyers agreed, would invite state legislatures to pass laws more anti-labor than Taft-Hartley which would supercede the federal law. These sweeping powers for anti-labor states would cover all aspects of labor-management relations.

Under stiff cross-examination from liberal senators, Goldwater made these damaging admissions:

1. States would be permitted to prohibit collective bargaining in manufacturing.

2. There could be 48 different and conflicting labor laws adopted under the Goldwater amendment.

3. States could require compulsory arbitration under the Goldwater proposal.

4. States could adopt laws requiring 95% of the workers eligible to vote would have to vote for a union before it could become the collective bargaining agent. Presently a majority of those voting is required.

5. Complete jurisdiction would be granted to the states to regulate strikes, picketing and all other aspects of disputes between workers and management.

Late in the week, Goldwater introduced another version of his state's rights amendment, the fourth version in a year. He called it a softened approach, designed to win support from some of his Republican critics.

—Herblock in Washington Post
"Surprise"

The admissions wrung from Goldwater by the sharp questions of Lehman and Douglas, who were joined by Sens. Kennedy (D. Mass.) and Morse (Ind. Ore.), became more important when weighed against Goldwater's prepared statement on behalf of his amendment.

In that statement, Goldwater "interpreted" his bill in an entirely different manner. Whether Goldwater had been attempting to camouflage his views in his prepared statement or was confused by his own amendment was not made clear.

Some Republican senators indicated dissatisfaction with the Goldwater proposals and Sens. Ives (R. N.J.) spoke at length in opposition. Ives pointed out the Goldwater attempt would create considerable confusion and predicted that, if it were passed, both labor and management would shop around for the most favorable law and bring their cases up under that law.

Sen. Lehman, speaking from his experience as a long-time governor of an industrial state, delivered a slashing attack on the Goldwater proposal.

LEHMAN demolished Goldwater's repeated charge that the federal law invalidated the police laws of the state. He cited his own experience and added, "I could not conceive, under our Constitution, of any responsible judge acting to deprive a state of this vital authority for the protection of its people."

Lehman also rapped the Goldwater proposal to grant state's power to "deal with labor disputes causing, or likely to cause, emergencies." Under it, he said, any governor or even a police officer could act in any dispute.

Goldwater, in a press conference, indicated this may have been just what he had in mind. In reply to reporters' questions, Goldwater said he considers "any work stoppage an emergency in our economy."

The Arizona Republican attempted to defend his bill by pointing out that each state has different tax laws. But Morse, an acknowledged expert on constitutional law, charged this was "a completely non sequitur argument."

POINTING out that the Constitution provides the federal government must make laws relating to interstate commerce, Morse charged it was this doctrine, as old the Constitution itself, which Goldwater was seeking to violate.

Indicating the fact that some Republicans from industrial states were dissatisified with the Goldwater proposal, Sen. Purtell (R. Conn.), with some sharp questions, drew from Goldwater the admission that the whole setup of representation elections could be changed by his measure.

Other amendments to the Smith Bill, which were not debated at length by press time, were introduced by Sens. Lehman, Ives, Purtell, Kennedy and Douglas.

BOTH Lehman and Ives sought to write into Taft-Hartley a clear ban on discrimination in employment, which would be declared an unfair labor practice.

Speaking for the Republican party, Knowland said these amendments would be tabled, despite the fact that they were the only civil rights proposals to come up during this session.

Purtell souhgt to include in the Smith Bill the Eisenhower proposal for government-conducted strike votes in every labor dispute. This proposal had been rejected by the Senate Labor Committee.

Kennedy and Douglas offered an amendment to outlaw statutes adopted in 16 states and misnamed "right-to-work" laws. These laws curb union security and are invited by a section of the present Taft-Hartley Act.

New Slogan

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) discovered the new Republican slogan during Taft-Hartley debates, he hold the CIO Textile Workers convention.

Last year, Morse said, it was "What is good for General Motors is good for the country."

Now it is being rewritten, he added, to read "What is good for Goldwater's Department Store is good for labor-management relations."

Ike, Mitchell Duck Questions On Goldwater's Union Curb

BOTH Pres. Eisenhower and Labor Sec. Mitchell last week ducked outright comment on the controversial Goldwater proposal to give states the power to pass laws more anti-labor than Taft-Hartley.

Eisenhower said he hadn't read the Goldwater amendment but told his press conference he would dislike to see his own T-H recommendations altered by extraneous matters.

The President added his own general feeling that so long as the rights of workers and employers were not violated that the powers of the states should not be interferred with.

Mitchell refused to comment on proposals now before Congress but did tell reporters he disliked the present T-H permission for states to pass laws prohibiting union security which T-H permits. Union security measures, Mitchell said, are "a sound national policy."

CIO Conference Pushes Drive To 'Keep America At Work'

CIO UNION leaders from across the nation will meet in Washington this week for a National Full Employment Conference, determined to prod the Eisenhower Administration into effective and long-overdue action to stop the economic slump.

On the eve of the conference—called by CIO after Pres. Eisenhower turned down requests for a joint government-industry-labor-farm session—there were these developments:

1. The government's first combined Labor Dept.-Commerce Dept. unemployment figures showed that job layoffs are continuing to climb in manufacturing industries, while the normal spring seasonal trend cut the overall jobless total.

The Apr. 10 national unemployment total was estimated at 3,465,000. That was a drop of some 260,000 from the 3,725,000 level of mid-March, and was accounted for by spring gains in farm, construction and trade employment. Industry employment was off.

"The figures, if accurate," a CIO spokesman said, "reflect the overall seasonal trend."

2. Figures for insured unemployment—only part of the total—were at the second highest level of the year. That was for the week ending Apr. 17, when the total was 2,206,209. For the week ending Apr. 24, new claims for unemployment compensation dropped by 5.5%, to 304,987.

3. New factory hirings for March, the latest month reported, were at a low rate for the season, climbing from 25 per 1000 to 28 per 1000, while the layoff rate was virtually unchanged.

4. Labor income in March continued downward for the eighth straight month. Personal income for the month was at an annual rate of $282.8 billion, down $4.7 billion from last July's record. Wages and salaries for the month were at a rate of $160.2 billion, some $1.2 billion below the February figure.

5. In the key industrial state of New Jersey, unemployment now is at a four-year high. According to Carl Holderman, state labor commissioner and former State CIO Council president, the total at the end of April was 135,000.

PAUL KREBS, who succeeded Holderman as president of the New Jersey CIO, last week called on the State Chamber of Commerce for a joint labor-management conference on growing unemployment.

6. In Congress, new support for anti-recession legislation along lines supported by CIO came from Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Rep. Howell (D. N.J.).

7. A leading business magazine, Fortune, warned that even if business picks up, unemployment may approach the six million mark by next February.

This further sharp increase in layoffs was predicted by Fortune because of the continuing growth of the labor force (estimated at 900,000) and the need for new jobs for workers displaced by increased productivity. Some 1.5 million more jobs were needed because of that economic trend, Fortune said.

CIO's employment conference will be held May 11-12, with some 300 representatives of CIO unions and councils expected to participate in the review of the nation's economic problems and meetings with members of Congress.

At the first day's session, major addresses are scheduled by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who also heads the Auto Workers, CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald, and CIO Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve, who heads the CIO Economic Policy Committee and will be conference chairman.

OTHER important reports are scheduled by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey on unemployment legislation, USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes on housing, Maritime Union Pres. Joseph Curran on social security, and Communications Workers Pres. Joseph A. Beirne on political action. Delegates will give field reports on unemployment developments in various sections of the country.

Another conference feature will be addresses by "the two Humphreys" — Sen. Humphrey and Sec. of the Treasury Humphrey, who is a leading GOP Administration policy-maker in the economic field.

Spectacles

Pres. Eisenhower last week cautioned against looking at the economic picture through too rosy colored glasses.

The President told a press conference that most recent economic reports reaching him have been favorable, but that he is advising now against over-optimism, just as several weeks ago he recommended against too much pessimism.

Bus-Load

The hard-hit Altoona Local 2017 of the CIO Railroad Workers will send a bus-load of delegates to the CIO Full Employment Conference.

Since last December, some 5000 workers out of a normal force of 8000 have been laid off at the big Altoona Works of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Heading the delegation of 50 workers will be Local 2017 Pres. Andrew Ott and George Gibboney.

Time For A . . . ?

The '54 election campaign is starting early, and the GOP plans to spend a lot of money for its Congressional candidates.

For instance, an outfit known as the "National Citizens for Eisenhower Congressional Committee" is producing a 25-minute film for GOP campaign workers.

Title of the movie is "The Big Change, USA."

And, if the Administration's tax bill passes, maybe they'll make a movie entitled "The Short Change, USA."

Reaping The Whirlwind

The United States has suffered one of its most serious diplomatic defeats at the Geneva Conference.

Our French and British allies have been embarrassed and appalled by the conflicting statements, the strong words un-reinforced by plans for action, that have marked U. S. policy on Indo-China and Southeast Asia

The reasons for these recent diplomatic failures are many and complex. But one fact cannot be ignored: the Republicans, by their irresponsibility during the Korean war, paved the way for their own troubles.

For years, Pres. Truman and Sec. of State Dean Acheson were considered fair game for any Republican orator. The most irresponsible statements were o.k. if they were directed at Acheson and the State Dept. Both GOP internationalists and isolationists took delight in ganging up on Truman-Acheson policies to unite the free world, through the United Nations, against the threat of Soviet aggression.

That smear-and-smirk program was effective—so effective that the Republicans, having taken control of U. S. foreign policy, now find themselves unable to move and unable to stand still. The Vice President says we're through with little wars, then announces we'll send troops if necessary to Indo-China, and is then slapped down by Ike.

Truly the Republicans are reaping the whirlwind from the seeds of doubt they cast for so many years. We hope that they will overcome their past and help America regain its diplomatic leadership of the free world.

But let them not point the finger of blame for their their present difficulties at anyone but themselves.

'Gloom And Doom' Boy

From Advertising Age Magazine:

"Walter E. Hoadley Jr., economist for Armstrong Cork Co., said . . . for the short term 'relatively little decline is in prospect and there is a strong possibility of moderate upturn before the end of the year,' For the long term, he considered another boom likely in the period 1960-65 . . . the next two to five years will probably be an interim between booms."

Same Fighting Spirit

For two years, the CIO Textile Workers have been hammered by depression in their dwindling industry and by employers' efforts to snatch back hard won gains. Last week, at Atlantic City, 1500 convention delegates ranged themselves beside TWUA's doughty Pres. Emil Rieve and slugged back hard at their enemies on the economic and political fronts.

In the same spirit that early made it one of CIO's bigger and more aggressive affiliates, the TWUA made it plain it is ready to fight harder than ever to keep its gains.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS
Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.
Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII May 10, 1954 No. 19

The Octopus Has Grown New Tentacles

In Other Words—

The Battle For Hells Canyon

Soon after it took office, the Eisenhower Administration dropped past federal support for a high level dam at Hells Canyon, claimed "neutrality" on the issue. A few weeks ago, the Budget Bureau officially opposed the project. What's at issue at Hells Canyon is described by Joe Miller in this article digested from The Reporter magazine:

By JOE MILLER

VERY FEW PEOPLE have ever seen Hells Canyon. Except for a weekly mail boat, the canyon, which is the deepest river cleft in America, is isolated from civilization.

Remote as it is, Hells Canyon, one of America's last great power sites, is being fought over in the most momentous power fight since the late Wendell Willkie took on TVA.

The issue arose over a year ago when the Interior Dept. under its new Republican leadership withdrew as intervenor before the Federal Power Commission, the body empowered to decide what kind of dam could be built on the Snake River—one multipurpose high federal dam or three relatively small dams to be built by the Idaho Power Co.

No Longer A Corporal's Guard

The argument between public power and private power is an old one, but the regional and national interest that Hells Canyon has aroused in the past year is a matter of considerable surprise to both sides.

Last April the working advocates of a big dam were a corporal's guard concentrated in northern Idaho and eastern Oregon. Today they are a small army stationed throughout the Northwest and extending into other regions as far away as New England. Along with the traditional farmer-labor nucleus, the army includes bank presidents, Idaho's biggest Republican fund raiser, influential businessmen, and other staunch free enterprisers.

Actually, both sides in this debate begin with the postulate that the Snake River and the entire Columbia River Basin must serve private enterprise. They differ only as to how it may best be served.

The low dam would certainly show a profit for private enterprise, at least for the stockholders of the Idaho Power Co. The single high federally-built dam would provide cheap power to a number of smaller private enterprises, as well as more extensive facilities for flood control, irrigation and reclamation, storage and conservation.

The prize is a mighty one, and much more than Hells Canyon is at stake. The Columbia system still has 10.2 million kilowatts to be developed. Decisions made now may well set the region's hydroelectric pattern for many years to come.

Lending an urgency to this struggle is the Northwest's pressing need for huge new resources of power, a minimum of 500,000 to 600,000 more kilowatts every year just to keep pace with growing consumer loads.

Cheap power has brought new plants. Population has increased by almost 40%. This flowering has produced a considerable change in the Northwest's economic attitudes. No longer relying solely on lumber, fish and agriculture, business leaders now talk of aluminum and other new light metals, whose fabrication requires great amounts of low-cost power. Because of its outstanding power potential, the Northwest envisions itself as the center of the burgeoning light-metals and electrochemical industries.

In recent months, events have caused such staunch Eisenhower supporters as the Portland Oregonian to wonder if the new Administration is intent upon the possible "liquidation or fragmentation of a regional power system which is the backbone of Northwest industry and employment."

Hells Canyon will be mentioned many times in the forthcoming political campaign. How a candidate stands on Hells Canyon may be the most important consideration to many Northwestern voters next fall, especially if the region's pressing unemployment continues.

Regardless of how the elections and the FPC decision go, those who want a high multipurpose dam at Hells Canyon are determined to carry their campaign a long way.

"We'll fight the case through the courts if necessary," Lars Nelson, a Republican wheat farmer who is master of the Washington State Grange, has promised. "As far as we are concerned, this is a bedrock issue."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THESE ARE SOME observations about the McCarthy-Army hearings written just after Republican members of the Senate subcommittee tried and failed—in their first major attempt—to wash out the spectacle and to whitewash Joe:

1. It should never be forgotten that one of the two "principals" in the whole "case" is Dwight David Eisenhower. The President of the United States could not appear as a witness, but he is the real "defendant" against McCarthy's charge that Army Sec. Stevens "coddled Communists." Stevens was merely Pres. Eisenhower's agent in handling Army affairs for the Executive Dept.

2. Eisenhower did not excite sympathy by his successive news conference statements that he hoped the hearings would quickly be finished and that they were damaging American international prestige.

He should have thought of such factors when, during the 1952 campaign, he allowed himself to be threatened out of a paragraph of praise of Gen. George C. Marshall in Wisconsin, McCarthy's home state, at McCarthy's insistence.

Reminder

Former Pres. Truman, returning to Washington for a Democratic rally, had a wonderful sentence for reporters who asked him how he judged the relative significance of Korea and Indo-China.

He wouldn't talk about that subject, said Truman, but he could promise one thing: He would not announce publicly for campaign purposes, "I shall go to Indo-China."

Eisenhower was advised in 1952 that he had to appease McCarthy, and he did appease McCarthy, and he helped get McCarthy re-elected. Does he, in his conscience, now think that this was part of the role he needed to play to get rid of the "mess in Washington?"

The Republican mess in Washington, with McCarthy dominating events and swaggering about with his fake photographs, fake FBI "letters," and fake allegations that everyone who fights him is a pro-Communist, is a "mess" worse than this nation has known since the weakling Pres. Buchanan invited the Civil War.

3. The Hon. Sec. Stevens is no different, although he is a Republican, from the various honorables, such as Dean Acheson, who held jobs under Mr. Truman and found themselves assaulted by McCarthy and his gang, bewilderingly, as "coddlers of Communists."

Sec. Stevens is a decent, respectable man who obviously, from his testimony, did everything possible to get McCarthy to shut up.

He wouldn't willingly suspend, fire or otherwise disgrace a federal employe on mere suspicion of wrongdoing. But he would allow the suspension of people when McCarthy put enough pressure on.

He "coddled" McCarthy to the extent of sending his lawyer, John Adams, to find out whether Joe would "object to the removal of an officer, Gen. Lawton, from command of Ft. Monmouth.

The Republicans, as the hearings neared the end of their second week, were showing manifest signs of pain.

They couldn't discover, by any exercise of the imagination, how the battle of Republican McCarthy and Republican Stevens would do the GOP any good. They belatedly tried to shush things, to cover up, to pretend that nothing really had happened to warrant a Senate investigation.

The suggestion may be offered to Pres. Eisenhower that he had better beat McCarthy on the head, politically speaking, this week or next week, rather than wait for what he may be persuaded is a more opportune moment.

Some diseases cure themselves in the process of time. McCarthyism is a malignancy that time and successive victories make worse.

If Pres. Eisenhower allows Sen. Mundt and his Republican colleagues to cut short the hearings and whitewash Joe, he will have to face a more terrible and menacing McCarthyism in the future.

The man in the White House allowed himself to be kidded, by a gaggle of politicians and newspaper publishers, into thinking that a White Knight of victorious generalship was needed to save the Republic.

It is not too much to ask that he accept the responsibility he assumed, automatically, in fighting to become the Republican nominee and in fighting for the election he won.

Record On Joe Is Sellout

WHILE Joe McCarthy is keeping mum about it, The (LaFollette) Progressive 96-page documented expose of the Wisconsin Senator has gone to a second printing.

The magazine invited McCarthy to reply; he hasn't. Meantime, the 140,000 copies of The Progressive's 45th anniversary issue were sold out, and another 65,000 have been printed.

The Progressive's special issue charges, and presents the supporting evidence, to show that the self-styled anti-Communist Senator by his operations actually has "aided the Communist cause." He is charged with dividing the anti-Communist western alliance, with creating fear, doubt and disunity at home, and with impairing the operations of the U. S. civil, military and scientific establishments.

Walter P. Reuther, president of CIO and the CIO Auto Workers, praised The Progressive's special issue for "this excellent and timely contribution to the cause of civil liberties and human decency."

Copies of The Progressive's special issue on Sen. McCarthy, priced at 75c, may be obtained from The Progressive, Madison, Wisc.

World In Crisis—

French Learn In Indo-China That 'Lesson Teaching' Era Is Past

By MORRIS H. RUBIN

Editor of The Progressive Magazine

IN NOVEMBER, 1946, the government of France, acting against the better judgment of its more far-sighted officials, undertook to teach "a lesson" to the people of Vietnam, one of the three Associated States of Indo-China.

Today, seven and a half years afterward, it is the French who have been taught a lesson, at a staggering cost in men, money, and morale.

What had seemed in the fall of 1946 a local incident had become in the spring of 1954 the world's major area of bloodshed and the potential explosion point for World War III.

The conflict in Indo-China broke out in 1946 when the French sought to re-establish their colonial control after World War II. At first the resistance to French imperialism, led by Ho Chi Minh, was largely nationalist—more anti-colonial than pro-Communist. This is still partly true, in the sense that some of the opposition to France and her native forces comes from non-Communists.

Reds In Counterfeit Role

But there is no serious dispute over the fact that the Communists have moved in on a considerable scale, posing again in their counterfeit role as champion of the underprivileged and liberator of the enslaved.

The French have grown tired of the struggle as their costs mount and their prospects on the battlefield decline. Mindful of the fact that the loss of Indo-China to the Communists would expose all the rest of Southeast Asia to Red penetration, the United States has assumed an increasingly larger role in the struggle. This country is today bearing about 80% of the billion-dollar-a-year cost of hostilities.

Moreover, the Eisenhower Administration had floated trial balloons to test sentiment in Congress and the country on the possibility of committing U. S. forces to combat action in Indo-China. The first response was negative.

On the eve of the international conference in Geneva, the French seemed anxious to negotiate with the forces of Ho Chi Minh, but the Eisenhower regime was reported to be discouraging a negotiated settlement on the ground that it would open the way to Communist domination of Indo-China and later of all Southeast Asia. But there was considerable sentiment in this country and among our allies for a major effort at negotiation.

—Herblock in Washington Post

"How About Sending Them a Flag?"

Demand For Full Independence

Even more emphatic was the growing opinion in the United States that France should relinquish entirely her colonial control by granting full independence to the three Associated States.

Many of those who know the tragedy of Indo-China first hand are convinced that the non-Communist peoples of that area would be much more interested in resisting Red aggression if they had something to fight for—something like political freedom, the hope for economic opportunity and social security.

This observer is convinced that the creative course for our country to follow is (1) to insist even more firmly than we have that the French agree to complete independence, and (2) to take our position in favor of a United Nations attempt to seek a cease fire in order to explore the possibilities of negotiating an honorable settlement.

The Nation's Real Housing Needs

There's a danger of Congress "throwing out the baby with the bath" in the current investigation of FHA housing frauds, warns John W. Edelman, veteran Washington legislative representative of the CIO Textile Workers.

The need for more adequate housing for low-income families was stressed by Edelman, who also is chairman of the CIO Legislative Committee's sub-committee on housing legislation, in this letter to the Washington Evening Star:

By JOHN W. EDELMAN

IT WOULD PROVIDE some emotional satisfaction for those public interest groups and labor organizations, who for years have fought against both the basic legislative directives of Congress to the Federal Housing Administration and the operational policies of FHA itself, to say at this point "We told you so."

But the danger of Congress "throwing the baby out with the bath" is so real that we strongly urge responsible citizens to understand that even more important than the fact that crooked or grossly unethical deals are being exposed is that the kind of housing most needed in this country is not being built.

In the long run it is probably even more reprehensible to deprive millions of families of the decent shelter at a cost they could afford than it was to make exorbitant profits out of projects built in that frantic postwar period when the scandals actually occurred.

The Real Housing Need

The 20-year history of FHA should show beyond question that Government guarantees are absolutely essential if we are to obtain a substantial volume of home building in this country. The real criticism of FHA is that it has regarded itself only as an institution to enable businessmen to avoid taking risks rather than to give service to people needing housing.

Instead of tackling the tough part of its job, FHA has largely confined its activities to building for the upper middle income brackets, where the need is not so pressing nor the demand so great as in the lower middle income groupings.

The CIO and others have repeatedly urged Congress to require government insurance guarantees to be confined to housing that could be bought by the 15 to 17 million people in the $2500 to $6000 brackets, who today can seldom afford to buy typical accommodations sold by the average builder. The percentage of FHA insurance on homes selling below $10,000 is disgracefully small. Yet the largest volume of demand is in that price range.

In 1953, the CIO urged Congress to set either $12,000 or $13,000 as the top limit on mortgage insurance. Not that this limitation would in itself prevent all opportunity for abuse or irregularity, but because it would narrow the chances of graft and gouging to minute proportions.

Certainly, the FHA personnel responsible for current malpractices should be dropped. But what then? For years FHA has actually been run as a sort of adjunct to the real estate industry. If it is to do the job that is needed, FHA must prepare to play a very different role.

In its earlier days FHA served a useful purpose in putting a stop to the worst sort of "jerry building." After that it went along pretty much in the general patterns of the industry. Now FHA must bring about, preferably by education and persuasion—if not by whatever types of pressure it may use—a different set of goals.

FHA must use its influence and authority to required improved techniques in the housing field. Small-scale, high-cost operations must be replaced by mass-production techniques.

If the home construction industry bogs down as a result of the current investigation, the entire economy will suffer. A two-million-unit home building program, because of its pervasive impact on many fields of manufacture and commerce, could virtually assure the country a return to high over-all levels of employment.

Textile Workers Fight To Save Job Gains

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

MORE THAN 1500 delegates to the eighth convention of the CIO Textile Workers last week in Atlantic City, N. J., faced bravely up to the problems of a shrinking industry, mounting unemployment and repressive labor laws.

In the same city where their union was born 15 years ago, the representatives of the 325,000 workers under TWUA contracts voted overwhelmingly to pay higher dues to further organizing, pledged more vigorous political action on the state and national fronts and condemned attempts to saddle them with restrictive legislation.

Despite reports of closed mills, strikes against wage cuts and short work-weeks, there was an underlying current of optimism.

PLEAS for election of a liberal Democratic Congress this fall and a Democratic President in '56 were made by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.), to last week's convention of CIO Textile Workers. Guest's badge is pinned on Carl Holderman (in right photo), former TWUA state director and now New Jersey commissioner of labor, by Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock as Pres. Emil Rieve looks on.

Compassion

Recalling he voted against confirmation of Albert C. Beeson to the National Labor Relations Board after Beeson was caught in "twice as many falsehoods as Ananias," Sen. Neely warned the TWUA convention what they could expect from the NLRB as it is now constituted.

"They will be as merciful to labor," he forecast, "as a shovel-nosed shark scooping blubber out of a wounded whale."

Gen. Pres. Emil Rieve, who won re-election, summed it up in his keynote speech.

The Real Gain

Admitting the challenges ahead, Rieve listed the benefits won in the last decade and a half, then went on to say: "More than all of these material gains, we have given new dignity to the textile worker as a human being, a free and independent citizen."

Re-elected with Rieve were Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock and Gen. Sec.-Treas. John Chupka.

Rieve minimized the effects of efforts to split the union following its last convention and noted that a delegation from Rockingham, N. C., was seated as guests. This group was the first to leave TWUA in the secession and the first to return to CIO. Rieve predicted similar action by most of the other locals who seceded temporarily.

Telegrams went from the convention to every senator to stem the tide of worsening amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act after Rieve branded them as an attempt to "create neo-fascism" in the U. S.

He hurled a defiant challenge at Congress to pass the Goldwater amendments and he called for "drastic measures" by American labor, CIO, AFL and independents if the law is made worse.

"We applauded the trade union movement of Soviet East Germany so many months ago when they revolted against tyranny, and if this is not tyranny, then I don't know what tyranny is," Rieve thundered.

'Step To Fascism'

The telegram said passage of the Senate proposals would cause "every trade union member to automatically become a prisoner of war at the mercy of greedy employers . . . These proposals would be a decisive step on the road to fascism in America."

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) flayed Administration efforts to make a bad law worse. He charged the Goldwater amendment would discourage bargaining and "is a means for putting weapons for industrial combat into the hands of employers. In effect, it gives anti-union employers an opportunity to shop for the most favorable forum."

Morse pointed to "a realignment of the two-party system. I think the Republican Party is on its death bed and an independent party is coming into being." He said the GOP "came into being off the death bed of the Whig Party when the Whigs failed to carry out their public responsibilties."

Sen. Neely (D. W.Va.) told the convention mankind has erected "two matchless monuments to confusion, the Tower of Babel and the Eisenhower Administration."

"This Adminstration," he said, "not only confuses tongues but everything else."

Pointing to what he called the "circuses in Washington," Nealy said that "under circus canvas is where the Republicans should conduct their meetings." The birthday party for Pres. Eisenhower in a circus tent at Hershey, Pa., several months ago was an appropriate setting for the "plutocratic acrobats and political freaks of this Administration," he said.

A convention highlight was the impressive memorial service to Executive Vice Pres. Mariano S. Bishop and Rolla L. Wallace and Joseph R. White, longtime TWUA officials who died since the last convention.

Delegates adopted a resolution calling on Congress to establish an agency "to enforce a 35-hour week with 40 hours pay" as a means of ending the depression in which their industry finds itself.

Other resolutions pledged support to striking TWUA members, called for higher unemployment compensation paid for longer periods, improved social security and workmen's compensation and a federal housing program geared to fit the needs of families with limited incomes.

The Woof And Warp Of It

Laughter and applause punctuated the address of New Jersey's Gov. Robert B. Meyner to the TWUA-CIO convention.

After describing himself "as a minor speaking at a major convention" the Governor talked in terms every textile worker understood.

He said he wondered what he would do "when I shuttle to Atlantic City to be boxed in at this convention hall, I didn't know whether I should weave a program or spin a yarn or twist the elephant's tail—or fix the smash in Washington—or tie an end or make a warped motion or harness an idea."

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said last week that the TV cameras ought to be focused on the problem of unemployment instead of the "ugly spectacle in the Senate caucus room."

"With 140,000 workers laid off in Detroit, with 189,000 steelworkers unemployed and another 257,000 working short time," Reuther told the CIO Textile Workers convention, "all the Republicans can find to do is engage in name-calling."

The basic problem Reuther said, is that American industry can create more production than we have purchasing power to buy back.

The People's Needs

He referred to the CIO Full Employment Conference in Washington as CIO's "effort to get the government to begin to recognize that these problems exist and then to do something constructive about them."

Reuther charged that Administration leaders have accused those who are warning of economic danger signs of demonstrating lack of confidence. He commented "the problem is, they don't know the difference between confidence and complacency."

"We in the CIO have unlimited confidence in the American economy," he said, "provided it is geared to the needs of people instead of being geared to the stock-ticker."

Reuther outlined a number of measures CIO is proposing that the government should take to restore full employment. Chief among them was the proposal to increase personal income tax exemptions from the present $600 to $800. He also called for increases in social security benefits and boosting a minimum wage to $1.25 an hour.

Work To Do

"There is enough work in America," Reuther said, "to keep every able-bodied man and woman employed for the next 25 years."

Noting that action is necessary on the political front as well as the economic front, Reuther said that "if somehow about three dozen reactionary politicians lose their jobs in Congress next November, it ought to mean that we can put about three million people back to work in factories."

Potofsky Urges Better Health Care

PRESIDENTS of two CIO unions and a U. S. Senator were among the speakers who kept the Textile Workers convention galvanized with action last week.

After commenting on the traditional friendship between TWUA and his CIO Clothing Workers, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky made an eloquent plea for legislation to insure better health and housing.

"The health needs of this nation, so dramatically demonstrated by a recent program showing that eight million American families went into debt last year because of unexpected illness, are virtually ignored by an Administration proposal that only maintains our present inadequate systems," Potofsky said.

"In a nation as rich as ours, no citizen should suffer bad health, or fear an operation because he or she does not have the necessary funds. Our nation can afford good medical care for every one of its citizens, if the government will take the necessary steps to insure it."

Problems of growing unemployment were attacked by Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers. Unemployment compensation is so inadequate, he said, that it is no longer a cushion.

"Rather it is today just a very hard, thin pallet," he said.

McDonald discussed his recent White House visit where he urged steps to ease layoffs.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) charged the Administration with using "soft words and soft music, a sort of political Muzak treatment" to change the tide of political forces in the U. S.

"This Administration has been talking about selling, selling, selling, when it should be serving, serving, serving," Humphrey told a cheering convention. "They seem to manifest about the same kind of executive leadership you would get from a defunct notary public commission."

Humphrey scoffed at the Administration's blunder on the "hard money policy." Hard money means just one thing—hard times, he said.

Other speakers included Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald of the Canadian Congress of Labor-CIO and former U. S. Ambassador to India Chester Bowles.

Wool Minimum Pay Boost Order Blocked By Court

THE FEDERAL courts once again have intervened to block a textile minimum wage increase under the Walsh-Healey Act.

Last week Federal Judge Edward Tamm in Washington stopped an order, scheduled for May 7, by Labor Sec. Mitchell. The order would have increased the minimum wage in woolen mills on goverment contracts by 15c to $1.20 an hour.

The judge granted a preliminary injunction at the request of 36 woolen companies in both the North and the South.

Tamm in his order directed the firms holding government contracts to post bond covering the cost of the higher minimum wage, in event the Labor Dept. wins the final court decision.

The mills in their move for an injunction argued that the Labor Dept. does not have the power to set uniform minimum wages in all sections of an industry and that minimums should vary by areas.

In reply, Mitchell told a press conference that the Labor Dept.'s long-standing policy for nation-wide wage minimums on government contracts is correct.

Tamm more than a year ago issued a similar restraining order requested by management in the case of Walsh-Healey cotton mill wages.

Packinghouse Sets Wage Bargaining Goals

By GERVASE N. LOVE

AN INDUSTRYWIDE Bargaining program aimed at meeting the twin threats of unemployment and increasing mechanization won roaring approval from 600 delegates to the ninth convention of the CIO Packinghouse Workers in Sioux City, Ia., last week.

Its high spots are a guaranteed annual wage plan, a 35-hour, seven-day week with maintenance of 40-hour take-home pay, and a substantial general wage increase.

The program was adopted after Pres. Ralph Helstein, in his opening address, recalled to the delegates, representing more than 170,000 members in the United States, Canada and Puerto Rico, that the basic needs of the membership "rise out of unemployment and the pressure for continual reduction in unit labor costs at the expense of the worker."

Helstein made it clear that the union "welcomes the machine and its continued improvement so long as it serves as an instrument of social progress, and not just at a device for increasing profits." But it will fight, he warned, where mechanization "results only in increasing unemployment or reducing unit labor costs."

Warns Of Frankenstein

"It can become a Frankenstein from which we must protect ourselves," he said.

The guaranteed annual wage program calls for a "52 week guarantee covering all employes who have established seniority, with no sacrifice of rights to daily or weekly overtime or to other premium pay time."

The program in addition called for improved weekly guarantees, higher shift premiums, and a series of special premiums and allowances aimed at safeguarding the worker from expenses of operation that are rightfully those of management.

It also stressed better health coverage and pensions, and strict enforcement of the union's stand against discrimination in hiring.

A constitutional amendment barring Communists and other totalitarians from holding office in the union was roundly defeated, with only a dozen or so votes in its favor, after more than an hour of a vigorous debate.

Recommended by Local 31, Tifton, Ga., it reached the convention floor through the constitution committee, which recommended non-concurrence.

The proposal read: "No member shall be eligible for nomination or election or appointment to, or hold any office, or position, or to serve on any committee in the international union or a local union who is a member, consistent suporter, or who actively participates in the activities of the Communist Party, Ku Klux Klan, or any Fascist, totalitarian or other subversive organization which opposes the democratic principles to which the United States and Canada are dedicated."

'Take A Position'

J. W. Housewright, Dallas, Tex., a member of the committee, gave a minority report, with J. W. Pittman, Fort Worth, Tex., director of the union's Dist. 8, making the main argument.

"The time has come," Housewright said, "when we should take a position against Communists on our payroll, people that we pay with our dues."

Pittman said a similar resolution, taken from the National CIO Constitution, also had been proposed, and claimed the resolution on the floor tended to confuse the issue.

"If there aren't Communists on the payroll of this union," he declared, "there ain't a cow in Texas."

He recalled that the National CIO had adopted its constitutional ban on Communists in office in 1949, and added that "we've had a better CIO since then."

Majority Views

Virtually all the other speakers upheld the committee's recommendation on non-concurrence.

Russell Bull, Des Moines, Ia., director of the union's Dist. 8 and chairman of the committee, declared the proposed amendment was "wrong in principle and just plain vicious." Whenever a local had an election or appointed a committee, he maintained, it would "have to make pretty sure of the opinions and outside associations of the members."

"And who would decide it?" he asked "who would be the supermen to decide? Do we want to hold a McCarthy hearing to find out?"

Helstein, declared the issue was not communism or the Klan.

"Our position on the differences between our form of government and that of the Soviet Union has been clear for years," he asserted. "We are committed to the Bill of Rights in the U. S. Constitution.

"My position is that if there are those in our union who desire to use it for other goals, we have the constitutional tools and the constitutional powers to control them.

CONVENTION SCENES — Pres. Ralph Helstein of the CIO Packinghouse Workers (left) pins a guest badge on CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe at the UPWA's convention in Sioux City, Ia. At right, UPWA Sec.-Treas. G. R. Hathaway checks the beards of Felix Boucher, Arthur Utesch, and Clayton Johnson, three Sioux City UPWA members joining in local centennial celebration.

Opportunity

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein scored the Eisenhower Administration for its "theories of corrective" economic adjustment that have resulted in 3.7 million unemployed workers and farmers suffering drastic cuts in income.

"In this year of congressional elections," he added, "we are given an opportunity to undo some of the mistakes of the past election."

Irony

Gen. Sec. Sergio Kuilan Baez of the Puerto Rican Sugar Workers union, one of 13 delegates from the island, expressed satisfaction at the UPWA convention that there is no discrimination there "as we have heard it described here."

"We are glad to come here from across the sea," he added ironically, "to help you in your fight against it."

"I have complete confidence in the intelligence of our members to handle any situation that arises, and in their conviction to the principles we all believe in. Let us be done with this silly, stupid nonsense."

The convention passed a series of forthright resolutions in its long fight against all forms of discrimination and segregation. One urged the National CIO to summon all CIO unions with members in the South to an anti-discrimination conference.

UPWA local unions and district councils were directed to step up their campaigns to win complete equality for Negro and Spanish-speaking members within the union, the industry and the communities, with special emphasis on ending segregation in the schools.

Other resolutions called for elimination of discrimination against women within the industry—wage-wise and otherwise—and a unionwide drive to enlist more women members in union activities.

CIO EXECUTIVE Vice Pres. John V. Riffe told the Packinghouse Workers that the CIO must cooperate with farmers and professional groups to be successful in politics.

"I am proud of the great record of the CIO and its affiliates," he said. "Much progress has been made. Not only have we gained wage increases, established paid vacations, hospitalization, etc., but we have brought more freedom to the worker than he has ever enjoyed before."

He called for an end to "bickering among ourselves," and praised the UPWA-CIO for doing "perhaps more than any other CIO international union to develop a closer relationship with the farmer."

"We can't win in the political field without the aid of the farmers, the teachers and other professional groups," he added. "The workers themselves cannot send to Congress the people who will give fair representation to the common people—we have to work with these groups."

Riffe urged the delegates to write "not once but many times" to their congressmen and senatos, asking them to vote for the proposed increase in the income tax exemption from $600 to $800.

Urges Action For Jobs

"We can employ the best minds to produce things to destroy and murder people all over the world," he pointed out, "but we are not willing to spend money to do something about solving the problem of unemployment that is destroying men and women in our own country."

Esther Murray, a PAC field director, warned the convention that unless organized labor does more to get out women's votes, it is in for trouble.

She pointed out that women voters outnumber the men, "and consequently you men are a minority group." Despite the fact that the Republicans have had five national conferences for women voters within the last year, the Democrats have done nothing of which she is aware, Mrs. Murray said.

NORTH AND SOUTH—Puerto Rican and Canadian delegates exchange greetings at UPWA convention. At left, Armando Sanchez and Jesus Enriquez from island sugar locals. At right, Betty Sherman from London, Ont., and Ace Smith, of Vancouver, B. C. Sanchez is president of Puerto Rican Sugar Workers and a member of the Commonwealth's House of Representatives.

UPWA 'Drains The Swamps' Of Meat Packing 'Jungle'

A DECADE of progress, the first 10 years of the CIO Packinghouse Workers as a self-governing, constitutional body, was reviewed by the officers in their report to the Sioux City convention.

It was a story of steady growth, organizationally, wage-wise and in the other contract gains that have added stature to the union and increased the self-respect and dignity of its members.

"We have drained the swamps and cut down some of the trees in the industry that almost a half-century ago Upton Sinclair called 'The Jungle,'" the officers noted.

"In doing this we have let in some sunlight and brought firmer ground for those who toil in the jungle."

When the UPWA first became a self-governing body in October 1943, the report showed, it had 188 locals with about 70,000 members. Ten years later, it had 548 locals with more than 170,000 members.

In 1943, the common labor rate in the industry ranged from 47.5c an hour in rural communities in the southeastern states to 72.5c in metropolitan areas. Now it is $1.42 in the southeastern rural communities and $1.50 in the metropolitan areas—the Pacific Coast showing the highest rates topped by $1.64 in San Francisco.

Long St. Lawrence Seaway Battle Finally Won In House

THE 30-YEAR battle for the St. Lawrence Seaway was almost over last week. The House voted 241 to 158 to clear the last Congressional hurdle for the project. Senate approval was given some time ago.

Earlier, the House voted down, 173 to 79, the Brownson amendment which CIO described as a "palpable device to wreck" the waterway project. This amendment would have required that private capital finance the U. S. share of the joint waterway between Canada and the U. S.

A deep water channel linking the Great Lakes with Atlantic seaboard shipping has been a dream for a century and advocated by every President for three decades.

A few days before the crucial vote CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wrote congressional leaders calling for passage of the seaway bill and defeat of the amendment offered by Rep. Brownson (R. Ind.).

Reuther said the amendment was a "joker" offered on the assumption the seaway bill would pass. He said it provided that bonds sold "to the public" by a seaway Authority would lack a government guarantee.

"The bonds of all important public works projects, such as TVA, Bonneville and others have been government guaranteed. As a matter of fact, no single one of our vital public undertakings of the past generation has been financed otherwise," Reuther noted.

The CIO head pointed out that the Seaway "has been recommended as a measure of national security." He noted it was "absolutely clear" that Canada would build the Seaway on its own if Congress refused to participate "in an undertaking so vital to the interests of both countries."

Franz Daniel Named Reuther's Field Aide

APPOINTMENT of Franz Daniel as a field assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther was announced last week.

His previous assignment was director of Reg. XII, comprising Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Montana and Idaho. Earlier, Daniel was CIO director of South Carolina from 1946 to 1950 and of North Carolina from 1950 to June, 1953.

A VETERAN of 22 years in the labor movement, he was a general organizer for the Clothing Workers from 1932 to 1945. He was on assignment to the CIO since its inception as the Committee for Industrial Organization.

From 1937 to 1939 Daniel was assistant director of the Textile Workers Organizing Committee. He was Washington representative of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers from 1945 to 1946.

He is planning to move his wife and their two sons to Washington from Denver, where Reg. XII headquarters are located. His wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Hawes Daniel, also was a ACWA general organizer and later served with TWOC.

FRANZ DANIEL

Forand Presents New Bill Blocking Public Aid Cuts

A MOVE to prevent heavy cuts in public assistance payments scheduled for this year was made last week by Rep. Forand (D. R. I.).

He introduced a bill which would extend for two years the present matching formula under which the federal government contributes to the cost of the public assistance programs in the various states.

"There has been no change in the cost of living since increased federal funds were made available in the Social Security Act Amendments of 1952 which would justify a decrease in such payments," Forand said.

Federal funds for public assistance will be cut automatically next Sept. 30 by up to $5 in the case of Old-Age Assistance, aid to the blind and aid to the permanently and totally disabled, and by up to $3 in the case of aid to dependent children unless Congress acts to continue the present level.

"To permit such decreases in the federal share would be unfair both to the states and the recipients, because the majority of state legislatures do not meet until next year," Forand pointed out. "Unless the temporary matching formulas are continued, there very probably would be reductions in public assistance payments in most of the states."

Under the present formula, the federal share in the cast of old-age assistance, aid to the blind and aid to the permanently and totally disabled is four-fifths of the first $25 of a state's average monthly payment per recipient, plus one-half of the remainder, within individual maximums of $55.

Unless Congress acts, the old formula would be restored, under which the federal share is three-fourths of the first $20, plus one-half of the remainder, within individual maximums of $50.

Ferguson Dodges Moody Challenge To Debate Issues

SEN. FERGUSON (R. Mich.) is in the race for re-election, but he's unwilling to debate the campaign issues with a major opponent, Blair Moody.

Moody, who served part of one term in the Senate by appointment, is seeking the Democratic nomination for a full term. He challenged Ferguson to a statewide television debate.

Ferguson, who is chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, turned the challenge down when he formally announced his campaign.

OWIU Sets Convention, Wage Parley

THE CIO Oil Workers last week planned two important conferences:

1. A special convention to consider ratification of the proposal to merge oil unions, at Cleveland June 1.

2. A special session of the Wage Policy Committee to begin a drive for general wage increase, also in Cleveland on June 4.

In announcing the move for a pay increase, OWIU-CIO Pres. O. A. Knight said "oil companies are producing more oil, refining more oil, selling more products, and making more profits than they were the last time wages were adjusted."

THE PHILADELPHIA convention proposed a merger of various unions in the oil, chemical and allied industries fields into one organization to be known as the Oil and Chemical Workers International Union. That convention drew up and adopted a proposed constitution to govern the merged union and a resolution of procedure governing the methods by which merger would be achieved.

UAW Hits Unfair Tactics Of Un-American Inquiry

DETROIT hearings of the House Un-American Activities Committee were termed "regrettable and unnecessary" last week by the top leadership of the CIO Auto Workers.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey and Vice Presidents John W. Livingston and Richard T. Gosser joined in a statement condemning the work of such congressional investigating groups during recent years.

"The timing of the House Committee's visits to Michigan should be noted," they said. "Its first visit was in 1938 and was devoted primarily to smearing Michigan's greatest and most devoted public servant, Frank Murphy, and to defeat him for re-election. The second was in 1952 and was manifestly timed to publicize the unknown and obscure Charles Potter, then a Congressman but a candidate for the U. S. Senate.

"This week it arrives for the convenience of Congressman Kit Clardy's campaign for re-election."

Such committees "under the direction of men like Martin Dies, J. Parnell Thomas, McCarthy, Velde and now Clardy," the statement said, "have denied citizens their democratic rights. They have scorned the Bill of Rights. They have tried to smear genuinely non-Communist liberal and independent organizations—including labor unions—teachers, ministers and other groups and individuals."

Declaring that the UAW "is proud of its part in the fight against communism and all other ugly and evil forms of totalitarianism," the union leaders charged the committees "in their reckless drive for headlines and personal political advantage" of carrying on "an immoral campaign of intimidation which has resulted in a serious erosion of the political fabric of America."

Quote

"You guys may think Joe McCarthy is a s-o-b, but he's my kind of a s-o-b," Rep. Clardy (R. Mich.) told a CIO delegation which called on him at his Lansing office.

Clardy greeted the CIO members by saying he had made "a mistake" in arranging the meeting because it interfered with seeing the McCarthy hearing on television. However, he granted them a 20-minute interview.

Private Utility Lobbyist Boasts Of Senate Rule, Kefauver Says

PURCELL SMITH, top lobbyist for the National Association of Electric Companies which spent $547,000 last year, "blatantly claims" to control the votes of the House and Senate, Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) told his colleagues last week.

Meanwhile, in an address before the American Public Power Association, Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.) charged that the "private power lobby" has launched a campaign of "vilification" against public power projects at the expense of its own customers.

Magnuson said that the electric companies' advertising and public information programs "represent a nationwide effort to poison the minds of the people" against public power.

"The program is paid for by dollars collected from the customers of these companies," he said. "It is directed at the rate payers themselves."

Kefauver said that Smith, whom he described as head of the "plushest, most open-handed lobby in Washington," claimed in an interview that he has kept appropriations for the Tennessee Valley Authority to a "reduced minimum."

The Tennessee Senator conceded that TVA funds were cut 68% during two years of Republican Administration when Smith "stood nearer the throne," but he said he felt it was "most immodest for Mr. Smith to claim credit for all of it."

Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) joined Kefauver in denouncing the propaganda put out by the private power companies, much of which describes public power projects as "creeping socialism." Kefauver commented that even Pres. Eisenhower "bit on their lure."

Lehman pointed out that the companies charge off the cost of their propaganda twice—first in higher rates to consumers and again as an "expense" which they deduct in computing their income taxes. He denounced a House-approved bill giving five private power companies a "virtual monopoly" over power in New York state by granting them authority to build a hydro-electric plant at Niagara Falls.

Kefauver said Smith claimed credit for this, too, and now is working on Senators to get them to approve the bill.

(See "The Battle for Hells Canyon," Page 4.)

Gold Gets Jail Term

A JAIL sentence of from one to three years has been handed down for Ben Gold, president of the CIO-expelled Fur and Leather Workers.

Gold was convicted of perjury in filing a Taft-Hartley Act non-Communist affidavit, by falsely denying that he was a member of the Communist Party or supported its policies.

The fur union was among the group expelled from CIO some four years ago because of Communist-domination.

The jail sentence was imposed by Federal Judge Charles F. McLaughlin in Washington. Gold continues free under $10,000 bail, pending an appeal.

2 Stations Add Vandercook News

Two additional radio stations on the American Broadcasting Co. network, not previously available, have now been added to the network carrying the CIO-sponsored nightly broadcast, "John W. Vandercook and the News."

The new stations are: Roswell, New Mexico, Station KSWS, 1230 on the dial; and Riverton, Wyoming, Station KWRL, 1450 on the dial. Both stations will carry the program at 7 p.m. local time.

FIRST MEETING of new Labor Advisory Committee to Foreign Operations Administration is held with FOA Chief Harold Stassen. From left (seated): CIO-Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Stassen, AFL Pres. George Meany and (standing) Dan Benedict, associate director of CIO International Affairs Dept., Victor Reuther, representing CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald, AFL Sec.-Treas. William Schnitzler, and AFL Intl. Rep. Philip Delaney.

CIO Joins In FOA Labor Advisory Group; 'Wetback' Plea Is Rejected

THE EISENHOWER Administration has flatly turned down labor's request that it be consulted officially on the "wetback" and Mexican contract labor problems.

The rejection came on the eve of a conference of the Joint U.S.-Mexican Trade Union Committee, with which the CIO is affiliated, in Laredo and Nuevo Laredo on the Texas-Mexican border May 11-13.

Action to offset the Eisenhower Administration rebuff will be high on the agenda of this meeting, which was called by ORIT, the Inter-American Organization of Workers.

THE ADMINISTRATION refusal was made known in identical letters to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, AFL Pres. George Meany, Mine Workers Sec.-Treas. John Owens and Chairman George Leighty, Railway Labor Executives Association. They had all written the President requesting labor representation.

Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams said in his reply that the recently signed agreement with Mexico "does not authorize status" for labor with the Commission on Migratory Labor set up by the agreement.

The Joint U.S.-Mexican Trade Union Committee was set up last December and includes delegates from U. S. and Mexican labor unions.

MEXICAN WORKERS will be represented at the conference by delegates from the Mexican Confederation of Workers (CTM), General Workers Confederation (CGT), National Agricultural Workers Confederation (CNC), and the National Industrial Trade Unions (SNI).

The CIO will be represented by Vice Pres. O. A. Knight, who also is president of the Oil Workers; R. J. Thomas, assistant to the executive vice president; CIO Rep. Nicholas Dragon; Ernst Schwarz, CIO representative in ORIT, and CIO Rep. Gardner Jackson.

Present for the AFL will be H. L. Mitchell of the National Agricultural Workers Union, Sec.-Treas. J. C. Haggerty of the California Federation of Labor, Exec. Sec. Jerry Holleman of the Texas Federation of Labor, and Serafino Romualdo, AFL representative in ORIT.

Paul K. Reed, special international representative, will represent the Mine Workers and Research Dir. Frank L. Noakes the Maintenance of Way Employees.

ICFTU Sets Goal Of Full Employment

A program to assure workers everywhere of their "undeniable right to earn their living by work" has been announced by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

ICFTU Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek announced the program, adopted by the ICFTU Executive Board. It calls for:

Expansion of consumer purchasing power (especially of wages), higher public expenditure as for housing, direct and substantial aid to underdeveloped countries, the reciprocal lowering of trade barriers, and full recognition of the role of trade unions in aiding full employment.

High wages and a steady wage income," the ICFTU said, "are essential for maintaining consumer purchasing power at the level required for full employment."

Israel's Premier Voices Thanks For $100,000 Gift

THANKS OF ISRAEL for the recent $100,000 gift from Philip Murray Memorial Foundation has been voiced by Prime Minister Moshe Sharett and Abba Eban, Israeli ambassador to the U. S.

The Murray Foundation, in one of several recent awards, contributed $100,000 to Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor. It will be used for construction of the Philip Murray Labor Center at Elath, a new city in southern Israel.

Appreciation of the gift was voiced by Eban in a letter to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, while Sharett said: "Please accept Israel's deep appreciation and grateful thanks."

FORMATION of a new Labor Advisory Committee, on which four top CIO leaders serve, has been announced by Foreign Operations Administrator Harold E. Stassen.

Stassen noted the committee would advise him on labor matters and also on the "development and operation of our programs overseas which are directed toward raising the living standards throughout the free world."

Representing the CIO on the committee are Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. David. J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, and Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, who is chairman of the CIO International Committee. Victor G. Reuther, executive assistant to the President of CIO, will serve as Pres. Reuther's alternate.

THE LABOR advisers reached a clear understanding with FOA Dir. Stassen that no labor program would be undertaken without the consent of the committee. The committee will also aid in staffing certain FOA posts, which now is in the process of nominations.

Meantime, to insure a greater degree of coordination between the FOA and the Labor Dept.'s foreign operations, FOA and the Labor Dept. will exchange representatives at each other's meetings.

In a statement, Stassen noted that no country has gone Communist where effective trade unions, through collective bargaining, have been able to bring about actual improvement in workers' living standards. He added:

"The strengthening of the free trade unions is a bulwark against Communism. Effective trade unions give the worker a greater sense of participation in his economy and a greater sense of personal dignity in his labor."

CIO Aide Cited

Sec.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz of the New York City CIO Council has been cited by the Labor Advisory Committee on Puerto Rican Affairs for aiding Puerto Rican residents of New York City.

Aid Needy At Home, Abroad—

CIO Backs Plan For Food 'Surplus' Use

THE CIO last week put its support firmly behind pending legislative proposals to distribute so-called "surplus" farm products to school children, the aged and dependents, and the unemployed, as well as to the "poor and wretched" abroad.

But—CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther added in a letter to Chairman Hope (R. Kan.) of the House Agriculture Committee—such distribution must be "by ways and means that will feed the hungry and clothe the ill-clad without being perverted into substitutes for, instead of supplements to, cash payments and other provisions already made for these groups in our population."

Reuther also denounced as "reckless and dangerous irresponsibility" the statements by Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson that city people are opposed to firm price supports.

"We do NOT resent, we do NOT object to, the continued use of firm price supports, particularly if, as we assume, such use would be part of a sensible over-all farm program in which farmers themselves would participate on the basis of democratic representation and voice in the formulation of policies and methods."

AID HANDICAPPED—CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe (left) chats with Bernard M. Baruch at conference of the President's Committee on Employment of the Physically Handicapped.

Two CIO Maritime Unions Begin Wage Bargaining

TWO CIO seamen's unions—the Maritime Union and the Marine Engineers — have opened negotiations for new contracts with shipowners.

A NMU-CIO committee headed by Pres. Joseph Curran asked the American Merchant Marine Institute for increases in wages and overtime.

High among the demands were proposals to boost vacations to 30 days, and to hike contributions by the employers to the pension and welfare funds from 60c a day for each man to $1.

AMMI represents the Gulf and East Coast shipowners, and MEBA-CIO also has asked the same group to begin discussions. MEBA-CIO already has presented its four-point program to the West Coast shipowners, represented by the Pacific Maritime Association.

NMU-CIO called for a compulsory 30-day vacation for a seaman continuously employed by one company 360 days. The union also asked that the employe have the option of returning at the same rating to the same vessel or any other vessel of the same firm—to protect employment security.

MEBA-CIO requested a two months' vacation after 10 months instead of three weeks after one year.

MEBA-CIO Pres. H. L. Daggett said one of the aims of this demand was to aid employment in the industry, hard hit by recession months before unemployment occurred in the rest of the economy.

The union also requested more personnel in the engine rooms than the minimum required by law in cases where there is not sufficient personnel. The shipowners were urged to make a daily contribution per man into a pension fund, and to set up a vacation fund, instead of paying the engineers directly as is now done.

Bishop Sheil's Talk Offered

More than 3400 congratulatory letters and phones calls have prompted the CIO Auto Workers to offer a record and pamphlet of excerpts of the denunciation of Sen. McCarthy by Bishop Bernard J. Sheil at the recent UAW-CIO Education Conference at Chicago.

The Bishop accused the Senator of "a phony anti-communism that mocks our way of life" and said McCarthy's tactics are "immoral" and "undermining democracy."

On the other side of the record are highlights of the conference speech of Paul Hoffman, former Economic Cooperation Administrator and chairman of the Studebaker Corp. The record may be ordered for $1 from the UAW-CIO, 8000 East Jefferson Ave., Detroit 14, Mich.

First NMU Pension Checks Presented

Thirty-two retired CIO Maritime Union members last week received $55 checks, the first payments under the union's pension plan.

NMU-CIO Pres. Joseph Curran, secretary of the pension plan board of trustees, and Pres. Walter E. Maloney of the American Merchant Marine Institute, board chairman, participated in the brief ceremony at the union's welfare headquarters in New York City.

CIO Calls For An Equal Voice On Plant Safety Committees

By FRED ROSS

"WHY SHOULDN'T labor and management serve together on plant safety committees?" a CIO Steelworker asked last week at a meeting of some 2300 delegates attending the President's Conference on Occupational Safety at Washington.

He was Joe E. Jackson, safety director of USA-CIO Local 1133 at the General American Transportation Co. plant at East Chicago, Ind. And he noted that the management and union safety committees meet separately at his plant.

His question drew an affirmative answer from Gordon P. St. Clair, president of the Medical Supply Co., Rockford, Ill., and from Victor G. Reuther, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther. Both were on a panel on reaching small business by community action.

REUTHER CALLED for coordination of all interested groups at the factory and community levels to reduce industrial accidents.

"How well we can get a community to respond to a safety program shows how successful we are in developing a civilized society," Reuther said.

He said that state, nation and union efforts for safety would decrease as the community assumes its responsibility for maintaining safety.

LABOR'S SAFETY GOALS—Harry Read (left) and Pat Greathouse, members of the CIO Safety and Occupational Health Committee, confer at meeting of CIO participants in the President's Safety Conference. Read is an executive assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey while Greathouse is regional director of the CIO Auto Workers.

"Organized labor will do all it can at the factory level and at the community level to reduce the very heavy cost we are paying for industrial accidents," he added.

Jackson was one of 110 CIO delegates who attended the conference at the call of the CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health.

Pres. Michael J. Quill of the Transport Workers, committee chairman, was unable to be present. Another committee member, Dir. Pat Greathouse of Reg. 4, Auto Workers, presided at a meeting of the CIO delegates held prior to the conference.

They heard reports from CIO members serving on conference committees.

Resolutions "don't mean anything unless you can get the ideas back to the workers in the plants," declared Harry Read, CIO committee secretary.

Read, who also is executive assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, served on the conference coordinating committee and as vice-chairman of the conference's committee on community occupational programs.

HIGHLIGHTS of the reports of other CIO members included:

- Congressional appropriations for the Labor Dept. are needed to publicize the conference findings and to determine what chemicals widely used in industry are harmful.
- General Motors spearheaded opposition to recommendations for joint labor-management safety committees.
- Some management representatives give lip service to safety proposals but oppose making them effective at home.
- There is an effort by business to reduce further the Labor Dept.'s power.
- The federal government should pay the cost of proposed research on state safety codes and on machine guard devices.

You And Your Money—

Real Wages Going Down—But Watch Profit Parade

THE REAL spendable wages of U. S. factory workers are sliding downward along with industrial production, but the same can't be said for prices at the grocery store or the figures in the latest corporation earnings reports.

Weekly factory wages are falling at a faster pace than the cost of living, which has barely edged downward in the latest cost-of-living index figure of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The Washington Bureau of National Affairs, a specialized news service, last week reported what's happening to workers' wages. Its survey uses constant 1947-49 dollars to figure real wages, after income tax and social security deductions. Here are the figures for mid-March:

The average single worker received a real spendable wage of $50.95 a week, a drop in a month of 0.3%.

The average married worker, supporting a family of four, dropped from $57.37 to $57.21 over the month.

In the year since March 1953, the single worker's real wage has dropped by 1.4% and the married worker's by 2.7% thanks to shorter hours due to the nation's fast-developing economic recession.

Profit Parade

More big corporations reported profits and dividend hikes last week, in the wake of the General Motors' statement that it is earning more money while selling less goods—a condition identical with big business practices in the Twenties.

E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.—one of the biggest owners of General Motors, and that's just part of its interest—boosted its first quarter profits by $17 million, to a total of $73.7 millions. Earnings per share of common stock went from $1.19 to $1.56.

Bethlehem Steel Corp., the Number Two steelmaker, had its earnings trimmed as first quarter basic steel production fell below 70% of capacity, but increased its usual quarterly dividend. Earnings fell from $30.9 million in 1953's first quarter to $27.8 million in the latest three month period. But the firm upped its dividend from $1 to $1.25.

Price Prospects

Bumber crops of food products are headed for U. S. groceries during the late spring and summer months—but don't expect the "law of supply and demand" will result in any price reductions of importance.

The Agriculture Dept. issued the optimistic crop prediction, and added that retail food prices are expected to average close to those of a year ago.

Slightly higher prices are ahead for pork and top grade beef, fats and oils and many cereal products. Some price cuts are predicted for chicken, eggs, dairy products, potatoes and some fresh vegetables.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

Toy Trains Hit Contract Switch

Those toy trains which whistle around department store display windows at Christmas time aren't being manufactured by the Lionel Corp. right now.

Last week, some 2300 members of the CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers struck the Lionel plant at Irvington, N. J. The union asked a 10c hourly increase. Talks deadlocked over the company's counter-move for a 7c wage cut.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

BAIT ADS are on the increase. If you don't watch out, you can get seriously hooked. You'll overpay seriously for expensive products. You'll have a lot of grief when you find out you have been tricked but are tied down by an iron-clad contract.

Bait ads are the trick of advertising a product at a seemingly low price and then trying to convince would-be buyers that the advertised special is not worth buying, and high-pressuring them into buying costlier goods.

Don't Get Gyped By Bait Ads

Some of the tricks used by the bait-and-switch sellers might be considered funny if the chief victims weren't moderate-income working families who are anxious to get these needed appliances and household items at reasonable prices.

Take the bait tactics in the sale of vacuum cleaners, which has long been one of the most notorious areas of bait advertising. Thomas C. Roberts, of the Association of Better Business Bureaus, reports that bait sellers advertise rebuilt or used models of such well-known cleaners as Electrolux and Hoover at very low prices. But when people come in to buy them, the bait seller uses such tricks as reversing the fan blades on the advertised special so the cleaner doesn't have suction, stuffing tissue paper in the tube or loosening bearings so the machine makes a lot of noise. Having thus discouraged the customer who came to the store in all sincerity to buy the advertised special, the salesman then tries to sell her a costly new machine, generally an unknown make, but at a very high price like $80. Often the trick works.

It's Growing Problem

The problem is a growing one. Bait advertising has spread out from the vacuum cleaner, sewing machine and furniture business, and into the selling of storm windows, used cars, furniture reupholstery and rugs. It also continues in the sale of television sets and service, especially in towns where new TV stations recently started operating.

Bait advertising has become so widespread that some very large retailers are now using it as a regular selling method. One of the country's largest nationwide chains of appliance, auto equipment and general-merchandise stores is now using bait ads on cleaners and sewing machines to get people into its stores, although otherwise it sells reputable merchandise.

Bait advertisers have been active in the furniture repuholstery business. Mr. Roberts reports some firms have been advertising that they will reupholster any three pieces of furniture in your living room for a low price like $39 or $59. Naturally a moderate-income family grabs at an offer like that which seems to solve its furniture problem for little money. But when the salesman comes to the house, the fabric samples he brings are obviously inferior quality and in unattractive colors. So a woman often signs up for a $200 reupholstery job, on the installment plan instead of the $39 or $59 she planned to spend.

The Price Of Competition

Real reason for the increase in bait ads is that competition among sellers has gotten keener, because with growing unemployment, shorter work weeks and higher living costs, people haven't as much money to spend. The sellers are dragging out all their tricks, and bait-and-switch has proved to be one of the most successful.

The bait advertisers have also discovered that television provides a new and successful medium for baiting. Television gives the baiters direct entry into your home. They can demonstrate their products alluringly, and couple the demonstration with the smooth patter of a pitchman and a low-sounding price. The baiters also use radio stations throughout the country.

The Federal Trade Commission has the job of policing radio advertising, but while the FTC has to move slowly, the thousands of bait advertisers move fast.

Rice Unfair List Pushed As Strike Enters Seventh Month

A NEW CALL for CIO and general consumer support of the CIO Brewery Workers' unfair list against two Arkansas rice mills was issued as the long walkout entered its seventh month.

In a fight for union recognition and wages above the 75c an hour legal minimum, several hundred rice mill workers are out at Stuttgart, Ark.

The struck firms and their brands are:

Arkansas Rice Growers Cooperative Association: Riceland Rice, Green Shield, Perfection, Monogram, Lotus, Sultana, Sunnyfield, Monarch, Richelieu, Tohoco, Tropical, Goldcoast, Good Treat, Osceola, Oversea and Chico.

Wonder Rice Mills: Wonder Rice, Adolphus Rice, Peacock Rice, Comet Rice, Cash Saver, Showboat, Sultana and Sunnyfield.

There's a CIO brewers' union label on brands from the Arkansas State Rice Milling Co., including Water Maid, Mahatma and Sonny Boy.

Victory in the Stuttgart strike will aid the Brewery Workers in an organizing drive among some 10,000 rice mill workers in Arkansas, Texas and Louisiana.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

IN OMAHA, NEB., I had the chance to meet many of the officers of CIO unions and the Nebraska State CIO Council, to discuss their organizing efforts and the legislative work of the Council. On both of these fronts, our brothers in Nebraska are moving steadily ahead.

Under the leadership and guidance of Herb Stocker and CIO Reg. Dir. Del Garst there has been united and effective effort directed toward carrying out the policies of our organization.

Our people are facing up to hard problems with great courage and skill, and we can well take pride in the fact they are joined with us in our common struggle to make a better world for all.

The Packinghouse Workers convention, in Sioux City, Ia., was attended by more than 600 delegates. I had special reason to be pleased at the opportunity to speak to these trade unionists, since I worked with many of them, rank and file and leadership, too, in the organizing efforts which led to the formation of their union.

Their wage and policy committee has outlined a program of progress which deserves the support and assistance of every man and woman in CIO. And their new organizing plans, for widening union representation among some of the bigger chains are sound and solid means for building our collective strength.

THE UNITED TRANSPORT SERVICE EMPLOYES convened in Chicago, with 200 delegates in attendance. I reported to them on some of the organizing activities of CIO, and on our struggle for a fair tax bill—one that would increase the buying power of the average consumer—and our continuing fight to protect our unions from anti-labor legislation.

As this column is being written, the debate is on in the Senate concerning the Taft-Hartley proposals made by the present administration. We have pointed out how these proposals would injure the working man in his search for economic justice, but I think it would also be proper to praise the work done by Bob Oliver, assistant to Pres. Walter P. Reuther, and his legislative staff—as well as the Council and National CIO representatives and directors who have carried on a consistent program of education with various members of Congress. Whether or not America's workers are successful in this present struggle over legislation, the fact remains that a fine job was done in their behalf.

The seven month's old strike of rice workers in Stuttgart, Arkansas, continues. These workers are giving their best in a fight for the right on the picket line. They have a right to expect that we will give them every support, and I feel it should be clear to all staff people that they must offer every bit of assistance that is possible.

ORGANIZING victories have been reported by Reg. Dir. George DeNucci: National Can Corp., Cleveland, O., CIO Oil Workers; Newburgh and South Shore Rwy. Co., CIO Steelworkers; and National Tank Steel Co., Akron, O., also won by CIO's Steelworkers. The CIO Steelworkers also beat back an attempted raid at the Barnett Scrap Iron Co., Barberton, O.

CIO Brewery Workers report victory at Meyer's Bakery, Jonesboro, Ark., CIO Rep. Otis Waddings worked on the campaign. CIO Chemical Workers report a victory at Airco, Deepwater, N. J., with Lyman Covert and Frank Podsiadlik working on the campaign, according to John Maurillo, organizational director for Region 1 of the Chemical Workers.

Despite a two-hour harangue in which they were threatened with reprisals by management, employes of Accessory Overhaul Industries, Inc., at Richmond Hill, N. Y., voted for the CIO Transport Workers Air Transport Div. TWU-ATD Dir. James Horst and Local 501 Pres. Benjamin Bially headed the drive.

UAW GM Council Supports Better Pay, Political Action

FULL SUPPORT for a vigorous program of collective bargaining and political action was voted by some 225 delegates to the annual conference of the CIO Auto Workers' General Motors Council last week.

Meanwhile, the UAW-CIO Executive Board branded the policy of some employers of spreading employment by short work weeks as "morally unjust and economically unsound."

The board declared it is "a technique wherein management uses the fear psychology of unemployment to 'spread the misery' of fewer jobs among its employes." Locals were urged to "stay on the alert to combat such practices when they occur over extended periods."

The delegates, who met in Detroit, represented more than 325,000 GM workers. They unanimously adopted a resolution which reaffirmed past economic programs and committed them to press for wage and contract improvements.

The conference also pledged efforts to win the guaranteed annual wage in 1955 and the election of "representatives whose attitudes and actions reflect a desire to build peace and plenty for all the people."

"No union program can claim devotion to the future security of its people and fail to deal with the question of political action," the resolution said. "Vigilance and activity on the political front is as important as intelligence and militancy on the collective bargaining front."

Correction

The wage increase recently granted by the Panama Canal Co. to non-U. S. citizen employes amounted to $1.2 million in total benefits, rather than $1.2 billion as inadvertently reported in The CIO News of Apr. 12.

'Bargain-Basement' Stalling Brings CWA Strike Planning

"BARGAIN-basement" bargaining as usual by the giant Bell System is deadlocking telephone industry negotiations across the nation, the CIO Communications Workers charged last week.

The CWA now is bargaining for some 86,000 members in 10 bargaining units of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and its subsidiary Bell System operating companies.

CWA charged management is trying to take advantage of the economic recession in an effort to "force union acceptance of below-par contract terms."

Last week a major nation-wide contract, covering Western Electric installers of telephone exchange equipment, expired. Negotiations continued after the deadline.

WITH overwhelming strike votes completed in a half-dozen odd bargaining units—including manufacturing, traffic, clerical, installation and sales groups—CWA Vice Pres. John L. Crull warned:

"We are still seeking peaceful settlements, even though contracts have expired in some places. However, this situation can't go on forever. We are not ruling out the possibility of a strike at any time."

Crull said management has made a wage offer in only one of 10 current negotiations, and that was an inadequate one.

The CWA officer, who is the union's national bargaining director, charged the giant phone utility with trying to "weaken contracts, deny needed wage increases and force union acceptance of below-par contract terms."

Crull said the phone companies are following the usual "AT&T philosophy to force strike action rather than settle on decent contract terms without a strike."

The telephone workers' "Number One" demand across the nation is for company-payment of hospital and surgical benefits.

AT&T is the nation's "largest and richest industrial corporation," Crull noted, and its profits for the 1954 first quarter rose to almost $110 million—a record figure.

"Yet nowhere in the Bell System," he added, "does any company pay any part of this premium" for health insurance, which is standard now in most basic industries.

CWA'S bargaining proposals also include general wage increases, improved pension payments, shortening of progression and experience schedules, and other contract improvements.

The bargaining units now involved in negotiations — with others entering weekly—include: Manufacturing units at Haverhill-Lawrence, Mass., Lincoln, Neb., and Queensboro, N. Y.; all departments of Ohio Bell; the nation-wide Western Electric installation and sales units; New Jersey traffic; Michigan Bell plant, traffic and accounting units, and Bell Laboratories.

TWO STRIKERS — Tom, Muscovy duck, helps his master, a member of CIO Rubber Workers on strike at Firestone warehouse in Memphis.

Steel Union Beats Raid At Newark

BY A MARGIN of almost three-to-one, the CIO Steelworkers have defeated an attempted raid by the AFL Machinists at the Newark, N. J., Machine Shop of the American Can Co.

USA-CIO victory came after a nine-month bargaining contest, which was climaxed by the filing of the IAM representation election on the day that Steelworkers Local 4348 struck the Newark plant.

In the recent consent election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board, the vote was 407 for the USA-CIO to 153 for the IAM, with a scattering of challenged and void ballots.

THE STRIKE at the Newark American Can plant involved super-seniority and management attempts to fire long-service employes. The walkout preceded the USA-CIO's national strike against American Can last autumn.

Pres. Walter Sagitas and other officers of Local 4348 headed up the successful campaign, with assistance from Local 4476 Pres. Michael Wenzel of the clerical workers unit.

T-H Decision Brings $75,000 CWA Pact

A PRECEDENT set by a tough court decision under the Taft-Hartley Act has forced the CIO Communications Workers to settle big damage suits brought by the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of West Virginia.

CWA-CIO settled for $75,000 the breach of contract action against it and Glenn E. Watts, director of the union's Dist. 2. The company had asked $1.4 million as an aftermath of a 1952 grievance strike which lasted a month.

The settlement included an agreement by Watts to withdraw a counter suit for $1 million charging the firm with defamation of character. The suits had been entered in the federal court in Washington.

CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said the settlement was made on advice of counsel.

"The estimated cost of litigation," Beirne said, "plus the time and energy of members, witnesses and staff weighed heavily in the decision."

He said a recent decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit reversed a ruling of the National Labor Relations Board. The court decision, he said, established "a new interpretation of the law which, unless reversed by the Supreme Court, removes any strike activity during the life of a contract from the protection" of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Railroad Workers Set Major National Parley

NATIONAL officers of the CIO United Railroad Workers Organizing Committee looked forward this week to one of the most significant conferences in its history.

Delegates from 17 short lines and such great centers of rail activity as the Pennsylvania will gather in Washington on May 14-15 to consider ways and means of pushing forward CIO policies in the transportation field.

National Chairman John Green stated, "I am confident our membership is determined to clear the tracks for a militant program of CIO progress in an area of our industrial life which badly needs organization along CIO lines and in conjunction with CIO policies."

Green also called for special action of his staff and the local unions in support of CIO's Full Employment Conference in Washington May 11-12. Like other basic industries, the railroads have been hard hit in the recession.

Besides pushing for legislative action to assist in meeting the present economics cricis, the Railroad Workers are expected to push for improved and increased benefits in the Railway Retirement Act, including support for bills aimed at beating back the present restrictions on dual benefits.

Demo Rally Nails GOP For Growing Recession

By MILTON PLUMB

SHORTCOMINGS of the present Republican Administration and the harmful effects of its policies on the nation's economy were spelled out last week at a two-day Jefferson-Jackson Day Conference of the Democratic National Committee in Washington.

The meetings, which launched the Democrats' 1954 congressional election campaign, included panel discussions by outstanding Democratic Senators and congressmen on the nation's economy, farm problems, national security, public power and natural resources, and federal programs to aid American cities.

Chairman Mitchell gave the committee an optimistic report on Democratic prospects next fall, but warned against over-optimism. He said "the impact of Republican campaign funds is yet to come" and pointed out that the $3.8 million which the GOP has allotted is "twice the amount any party ever budgeted before for an off-year campaign."

Stanley Woodward, Democratic treasurer, said the Democratic Party had a deficit of $67,147 when the sessions opened. This was written off, however, by the $100-a-plate dinner which closed the conference, netting about $150,000.

SEN. MURRAY (D. Mont.) charged the Eisenhower Administration with fostering "a deliberately planned economic decline." He said that the recent deflation of the economy was planned in New York banking circles and carried out by bankers in the Administration.

Instead of "built-in stabilizers," the Republicans "built in lines of unemployed," Murray declared. The blueprint of the recession, he charged, was issued by the New York Clearing House Association a year ago when it called for opposition to the policy of full employment, to farm price supports, and to "demands of labor for wage increases exceeding gains in productivity."

Charging that the Administration has designed its economic policies for the benefit of bankers, Rep. Howell (D. N.J.) said that these policies have produced "a hard-boiled egg, not a golden one."

"I suggest to the Treasury Secretary," he continued, "that consumer buying power is the hen needed to hatch the golden egg."

Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) said last year's increase in interest rates on veterans' housing loans was a "stab in the back" because the Administration knew before it boosted them that it was going to reverse its "hard money" policies.

He said the Administration, because it follows economic policies favoring the rich, is "like a greenhorn in the cattle business who tried to fatten his herd by merely feeding the bull."

THE ADMINISTRATION'S "greatest evils," said Rep. Sullivan (D. Mo.), "are that they see no evil and they hear no evil when it comes to the economic security of the American people. The leadership of the Republican Party appears to be bored with the dilemma of the average American family in making ends meet."

Leon Keyserling, former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said that even if things get better before next November's elections, the American people should realize that "there is no possibility that such progress would equal the kind that the Democrats have to offer." He said that the economy is now suffering the loss of production of "$20 billion a year in what people can enjoy."

Rep. McCarthy (D. Minn.) said that the President may have "mixed up" the appointments of his Secretaries of State and Agriculture. He suggested that he may have intended to appoint Ezra Taft Benson secretary of state and John Foster Dulles secretary of agriculture "because we apparently need some flexibility in our foreign policy and we have too much flexibility in regard to farm price supports."

Danger

Former Pres. Harry S. Truman said last week that proposed super-amendments to worsen the Taft-Hartley law were "the most dangerous kind of legislation." The changes "would destroy all the progress we've made in the labor movement in the U. S.," Truman declared.

In Washington for the Democratic rally, the former President called the current Army-McCarthy hearings "a disgrace to the Senate."

Murray Runs Again On Fair Deal Record

DECLARING that the strength and prosperity which the New and Fair Deals brought to the country is "today being undermined," Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) last week formally announced his candidacy for re-election to the Senate.

"I have determined to make this campaign," Murray said, "because I owe a duty to the people of Montana to see that our state continues to advance in resources development and industrial expansion."

He pointed out that if he failed to run, the people of Montana would lose his seniority on the Senate Interior Committee which controls legislation affecting public lands, mineral resources, forest reserves, Indian affairs, oil conservation, power development, rural electrification, irrigation and reclamation.

SEN. MURRAY

Childs Says Budget Balancers Block Decent Health Program

A WARNING that Republican "budget-balancers" are blocking decent health care for the American people was voiced last week by Joseph W. Childs.

Childs, vice president of the CIO Rubber Workers and a member of the CIO Social Security Committee, testified before the House Interstate & Foreign Commerce Committee.

HE CONDEMNED the Administration's health reinsurance proposal as producing only "meager" progress and added:

"Your great contribution this year to America's health needs can be the development of a dramatic program geared to America's resources and sufficient over a period of years to make the marvels of modern medical science available to everyone in the U. S.

"Don't let the budget-balancers and the tax-cutters keep pushing people onto the scrap heap! Don't promote cheap pills with a nice name but no contents when real money will obtain genuine prevention and cures."

Childs warned there are "many limitations" of coverage and benefits to voluntary health insurance programs, and warned "it is incorrect to conclude that the continued spread of voluntary health plans will solve medical care problems."

"Only the national government," the CIO witness said, "can plan effectively for efficient development and use of medical facilities."

Bailey Backs Move To Split Labor Group

A PROPOSAL to split the House Committee on Education and Labor into two standing committees, each concerned exclusively with one of the two fields, has been made by Rep. Bailey (D. W. Va.).

Declaring that both education and labor are of "major importance" to the nation, Bailey said that the present lumping of jurisdiction over both in one committee denies each of these fields proper attention from Congress. His resolution would amend the rules of the House and replace the present committee with two new ones.

"We have been meeting almost steadily this session on proposed changes to the Taft-Hartley Law," Bailey said. "Meanwhile very pressing educational matters—such as school construction legislation—has been sidetracked. It would have been just as unfair to devote our time to educational matters and give labor a secondary priority."

Bailey said that Taft-Hartley revision and increases in the minimum wage are "alone of sufficient importance" to demand the full attention of a congressional committee.

CIO on ABC
Monday thru Friday
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTION IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU

1. Senate nears crucial floor votes on Republican proposals for a super-Taft-Hartley Act, with new "states' rights" amendments to cripple labor. (See Pages 1 and 3.)

2. Long congressional battle for St. Lawrence Seaway finally won as House approves U. S. participation. (See Page 8.)

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What You Can Do
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals (S.2650)	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate will act on anti-labor bill week of May 3. House Labor Com. has postponed report on bill until Senate acts.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Reed Unemployment Insurance Bill (H.R. 5173)	Would start break-up of federal-state system of unemployment insurance and hold down benefits.	Passed House last year. Pending before Senate Finance Com.	Write or wire your Senator to defeat the Reed bill and provide increased unemployment benefits for at least 39 weeks.
Administration Tax Revisions (H. R. 8300)	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	Voted by House, coming up in Senate.	Urge your Senators to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor and to work for an increase in the personal exemptions to $800 this year and $1000 thereafter.

(Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)
(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Texas Jury Bias Slapped By High Court

EXCLUSION from jury service in Texas of persons of Mexican descent is discrimination prohibited by the 14th Amendment, the Supreme Court held last week.

It unanimously reversed the conviction for murder of Pete Hernandez, who contended that his rights had been violated because no persons of his national origin were on the lists from which grand jurors and the petit jury in his case were drawn.

Chief Justice Earl Warren, who delivered the opinion, rejected the finding of the Texas Appeals Court that the 14th Amendment, which provides that no persons shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law nor be denied equal protection of the law, recognized only two classes, the Negro and white races.

Mrs. Bowring On Labor Group

Mrs. Eva Bowring, recently-named Republican Senator from Nebraska, has been appointed to the Senate Labor Committee, as well as to the Commerce and Post Office-Civil Service groups. Appointed after the death of Sen. Griswold, she will serve in the Senate only to the end of this year.

CIO Union Conventions
See Pages 8 and 9

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., May 17, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 20

CIO Rally Pushes Job Fight

'Build Prosperity From Bottom Up'

—See Pages 3, 6 & 7

A Big Week In Washington— Two CIO events in Washington drew national attention last week. At top, Pres. Walter P. Reuther addresses the big CIO Full Employment Conference urges program for "building prosperity from the bottom up." Below: Former Pres. Harry S. Truman visits the CIO Executive Board meeting, exchanges a multiple handshake with CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (left), Reuther and Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe. CIO officers sang "Happy Birthday, Harry" as the 70-year-old former President left. The board gave the go-ahead signal on the CIO-AFL no-raiding agreement. The two-day jobs rally was marked by visits on Capitol Hill and a call for more intensive political action. (Stories on rally, Pages 3, 6 & 7; stories on CIO Executive Board on Page 2.)

'An Old Friend' Gets Ovation At CIO Board

By AL ZACK

AN OLD FRIEND and next-door neighbor, Harry S. Truman of Independence, Mo., dropped in to visit the CIO Executive Board last week.

Looking hail and hearty, the just-turned-70 "plain citizen" received a heart-warming ovation from the CIO's top leaders and the headquarters staff jamming the board room.

"I just wanted to drop in to express my appreciation for what you've done for the cause closest to my heart," the former President of the United States said in his familiar Mid-West twang.

He was referring to the CIO's $150,000 contribution and the CIO Steelworkers' $100,000 gift to the Harry S. Truman Library which will house the Truman Presidential papers.

"I WANT to thank you too for standing by me after I became a private citizen," the "man from Independence" continued. His eyes twinkling, the famous "whistle-stopper" added, "I've been trying my best to be a private citizen and I've been having a terrible time doing it."

Truman's visit to the Executive Board meeting brought a temporary halt to the business meeting. He was preceded into the room by 20 reporters and a half-dozen camera men.

VISIT TO CIO—Former Pres. Truman (center), chats with CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (left) and Pres. Walter P. Reuther during his visit to CIO Executive Board meeting last week. He thanked CIO for $150,000 gift to the Harry S. Truman Library.

Following an ovation for the former President, plus the traditional "give-'em-hell" battle-cry of 1948, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther introduced "an old friend and an old neighbor."

"When he lived next door," Reuther said gesturing toward the nearby Blair-Lee House, where the Trumans lived while the White House was being rebuilt, "there were happier times in America. CIO members had full employment. There was prosperity for all. The home front was in better shape."

"Now," Reuther added, "we have fewer friends in the world."

With this, he introduced "Mr. President," and the crowd jumped up to applaud enthusiastically while the flash bulbs popped.

A few minutes after he started to speak, the broad Truman grin faded and he spoke of serious matters, reiterating his strong plea for a bi-partisan foreign policy in this time of danger.

REFERRING to his recent speeches, the former President said, "I've been explaining how necessary it is for the man in the White House to take charge of things."

Recalling a sign on his own White House desk, which read "The buck stops here," Truman said:

"Any Chief Executive who passes the buck to his subordinates is not a proper executive. Somebody has to say 'Yes' or 'No.' The man in the White House has to be able to make his own decisions."

Earlier in the day, in a speech at the National Press Club the former President had urged his successor to restore bi-partisanship in foreign policy by giving a "clear lead" and by putting a check-rein on "political assassins" in his own party.

HST WAVES a greeting as he leaves CIO Building with General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg after addressing CIO Board.

As the former President, who had celebrated his 70th birthday only a few days earlier, arose to leave the CIO audience applauded lustily. Then, simultaneously, they sang with gusto, "Happy birthday, dear Harry."

"Oh, thank you—thank you very much," he murmured.

CIO Board Okays No-Raid Signing

THE GO-AHEAD signal for putting the CIO-AFL no-raid agreement fully into effect was given last week by the CIO Executive Board.

Unanimously, the board authorized an early meeting of CIO officers with the AFL for the exchange of ratifications of the agreement by CIO and AFL unions.

Effectiveness of the pact now is limited to the AFL and CIO and to local unions directly chartered by the two federations.

Approval of the pact earlier was voted by unions representing some 95% of the CIO membership, while about 70 of the AFL's 110 unions, according to press reports, are ready to join in the agreement.

Text of the CIO Executive Board resolution, adopted on May 10:

AT THE MEETING of the CIO Executive Board in New York on Mar. 22, the Board expressed its concern that the No-Raiding Agreement between the CIO and its affiliates and the AFL and its affiliates, because of the limited number of ratifications then forthcoming, might not become fully effective in the interests of the labor movement as a whole.

It has been the view of the CIO throughout that there is no point in having merely a paper agreement, since it would be obviously misleading to the membership of both federations and to the public at large to announce a ratification of the agreement by a limited number of affiliates of both federations as realizing the hopes of the CIO and the AFL, as expressed at both conventions, to eliminate raiding within the labor movement.

After the meeting of the CIO Executive Board, Sec.-Treas. Carey met with Sec.-Treas. Schnitzler of the AFL and exchanged information as to the present number of ratifications on the part of affiliates of both federations.

BASED ON this information, the Executive Committee of the CIO, meeting in Washington on Wednesday, Apr. 14, decided to recommend to the CIO Executive Board that, in light of all present circumstances, the CIO representatives on the CIO-AFL Unity Committee should proceed to meet with the AFL representatives on that committee for the purpose of exchanging the signatures of all CIO and AFL affiliates which, up to the time of actual signing, have authorized execution of the No-Raiding Agreement.

The Executive Committee of the CIO directed Pres. Reuther to convene a special meeting of the CIO Executive Board on May 10 in Washington, to give consideration to this recommendation of the CIO Executive Committee.

The CIO Executive Board has considered the recommendation of the Executive Committee and fully concurs therein.

Now, therefore, be it resolved that: The CIO representatives on the CIO-AFL Unity Committee are hereby authorized and directed to meet with the AFL representatives on this committee for the purpose of exchanging the signatures of all CIO and AFL affiliates which, up to the time of actual signing, have authorized execution of the No-Raiding Agreement.

Murray Foundation Gives NAACP $75,000 For Anti-Bias Education

A GIFT of $75,000 for educational work in race relations was made last week by the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc.

The grant was made to NAACP leaders by CIO officials at ceremonies in the Carnegie Endowment Building, New York City. It was the fifth award in recent months by the Foundation, created to honor the late president of the CIO and the Steelworkers.

The contribution was made on the basis that it be "expended exclusively for educational purposes in race relations in the name of Philip Murray, with the overall purpose of promoting and fostering, by educational means, the full acceptance of civil rights guaranteed by the American Constitution."

CIO speakers noted that Murray had taken a prime interest in the campaign for improved civil rights for minorities.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther said: "We in the CIO are proud of this contribution. The free world cannot win the struggle against totalitarianism merely by building great military power or flexing its economic strength. We must develop a comparable moral power."

Pres. Arthur Spingarn of the NAACP hailed the CIO gift as a "material aid in the struggle for racial democracy."

Praising the CIO's campaign against racial discrimination, he said the gift would "help stop the exploitation, even the persecution of persons, who because of their economic situation, their race or national origin, are exposed to threats against their general welfare and their rights as human beings."

UNABLE to attend because of illness, NAACP Exec. Sec. Walter White sent a message noting that discrimination is the "Achilles heel of democracy" and called for a frontal attack on discrimination. If we fail, he added, "people in other parts of the world will continue to distrust us."

Others participating in the ceremony were Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers, Pres. Willard S. Townsend of the CIO Transport Service Employees, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, W. Averell Harriman and Roy Wilkins of the NAACP, Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union and CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, the Foundation's director.

Rieve, who is chairman of the Foundation Board, praised the NAACP and said, "There is no organization in the United States that is carrying on a more vigorous fight against discrimination in all its forms."

The GOP . . .

1854

Organized at Ripon, Wisc.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

The Republican's martyred first President . . .

JOE McCARTHY

. . . is mocked by the 1954-model "Mr. Republican."

1954

Sen. Joe McCarthy will deliver the keynote address at the GOP 100th anniversary at Ripon, Wisc.

CIO Rally Pushes Jobs-For-All Fight

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE BRIGHT posters on the pillars almost obscured the time-mellowed murals of the Hall of Nations in the national capital's Washington Hotel last week, but they told why 500 CIO leaders from all parts of the country gathered there to focus the nation's attention on unemployment.

"Unemployment Is UnAmerican," one read. "Keep America At Work," said another . . . "An America At Work Is a Strong America" . . . "The Job You Save May Be Your Own."

Behind the platform from which CIO leaders and government figures discussed growing joblessness—now estimated to total five million workers—and its grim effects on the country's most precious asset, its people, was a quotation from the unused law a Democratic Administration passed as part of a program to stop such recessions as now beset the nation—the Full Employment Act of 1946. It read:

"The Congress hereby declares it is a continuing policy and responsibility of the federal government . . . to promote maximum employment, production and purchasing power. . ."

And directly in front of the speaker's table rested a placard carrying the time-tested CIO principle which tied together the slogans on the pillars and the legislation cited at the back of the stage:

"What's good for America is good for CIO."

Parley Highlights

Against this background, dramatic in its stark simplicity, the two-day conference:

1. Heard CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther describe the unemployment situation as "critical" in the keynote speech, assail the Eisenhower Administration for "doing nothing" about it, and call for an intensified program of political action on the home front to see to it that "20 or 30 reactionaries in Congress are unemployed after November."

2. Adopted a 10-point program for "Prosperity in Peacetime."

3. Heard summarized accounts of scores of calls on representatives and senators which reported growing concern—especially among Republicans—over the employment situation, spreading dismay at lack of White House leadership in meeting the problem, an aroused interest in proposals to increase the income tax exemption, and very, VERY great worry over the political effects of Republican inaction.

4. Heard "the two Humphreys"—Sen. Hubert H. (D. Minn.) and Sec. of the Treasury George M.—discuss employment, unemployment and national prosperity from widely divergent points of view.

5. Applauded a call by Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers for a follow-up general conference including the CIO, AFL, railroad brotherhoods, Mine Workers and other bona fide independent unions to "help put pressure on Congress and the Administration to put into effect the Employment Act of 1946."

The conference got under way with a charge by CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve that the Eisenhower Administration "has failed the people on the economic front" by not utilizing the Employment Act.

Reuther gave the parley a working basis when, in his keynote address, he said:

PAC Work Is Vital

"We don't believe we can work out the answers to all the problems here in Washington. But we believe that as we can arouse the people back home, we can get the government to act realistically."

This means, he said, utilizing the "full political potential" of CIO members and their neighbors.

"There is more political consciousness about the coming election than there has ever been about an election before," he said.

"We have to mobilize it, and convince the people to make changes in the political complexion of Congress. We must continue our bargaining activities and combine them with our political activities.

"There will be a day of reckoning in November. If we can see that 20 or 30 reactionaries in Congress are unemployed after November, we can do a lot about the unemployment of other people. It's a great opportunity, and a great challenge.

"Go back home determined to work harder at this job than you've ever worked before. If we go back home and work together and fight together, we can win in November."

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey reported on unemployment compensation, CIO Vice Pres. Joseph N. Curran on special security and public assistance, and CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes on housing and public works.

The dubious honor of having the highest rates of unemployment was shared by Rhode Island, with 13% of the work force out of jobs, and Kentucky with 11%. In Woonsocket, R. I., it was reported, one of every three workers is jobless.

Illinois reported 170,600 out of work, New York State 500,000, Pennsylvania about 315,000 and Ohio some 126,000. From all parts of the country came accounts of children missing school because of lack of clothing, insurance policy cancellations, and loss of household equipment being bought on time payments.

More PAC Appeals

These evidences of personal tragedy took on added meaning when the conference closed with further appeals to politicial action by CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne and CIO Legislative Dir. Robert Oliver.

"When we encourage the people to accept their responsibilities as citizens," Beirne said, "we begin to cure our national ailments. It's a 365-days-a-year job. It's up to us to stimulate the people."

(More stories and photos on Pages 6 and 7.)

MEET THEIR CONGRESSMEN—Delegates at the CIO Full Employment Conference spent a day on Capitol Hill. At left, New England group talks textile woes with Sen. Kennedy (D., Mass.). From left are Pres. J. William Belanger of Massachusetts CIO Council, Kennedy and CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson. At right, an Indiana group: UAW Rep. John Bartee, James Tinsley, and State CIO Council Pres. Dallas Sells meet with House Majority Leader Halleck (R. Ind.).

Production?

To Administration arguments that more production is necessary to end the recession, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther replied:

Steel production for months has been at only 68% of capacity.

Auto production is at 74% and truck production around 70% of capacity.

"Our problem is not more production," said Reuther, "but finding more customers for what we can make in America."

Nice Work

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey cited these contrasting economic trends to the CIO Full Employment Conference:

General Electric has laid off 16% of its production workers, yet its profits after taxes were "up a fantastic 42% over last year."

Westinghouse has cut employment by 12%, yet its profits for the first quarter were up 55%.

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

MOUNTING concern over the employment slump was evidenced by lawmakers of both parties, delegates to the CIO Full Employment Conference reported after brief but intensive sessions on Capitol Hill.

Within a few hours, delegates said, they met with scores of House members and a majority of the Senate to sound out their views on taxes, unemployment compensation and other matters. They summarized: "Better than we thought we'd do."

The conference concluded with the announcement by CIO Legislative Dir. Robert P. Oliver that "passage of the George Amendment raising personal tax exemptions to $800 is the Number One Legislative target."

He described the amendment as the "most effective anti-depression weapon in the hands of the Administration" and urged delegates to support its passage when they returned to their areas.

Action Is Needed

One delegate after another told of previously "hopeless" congressmen who now are showing grave interest in unemployment problems. Many said they felt action was needed quickly and a number of GOP House members ruefully admitted they had not received the leadership they expected from the White House.

Only a few refused to concede unemployment was a problem, even fewer declined to talk to the delegates and a mere handful thought that "all this talk will scare us into a depression." In the last group was Majority Leader Halleck who told an Indiana delegation there had been "too much talk calculated to scare the farmer and others."

Dir. Hugh Thompson of CIO Region 1 told of the GOP congressman from Massachusetts "who feels a depression is imminent and is worried" and of another who promised that "unless the Administration moves, Congress will have to take the lead."

Region 2 Dir. Michael Mann told of House members "gasping with incredulity" when told of plants in their own districts closing down. "The figures on unemployment make a difference when they hit our own districts," one strong GOP congressman admitted.

Favors Fair Tax Bill

A Republican Senator told Reg. 3 Dir. George Craig he was for higher jobless pay benefits and a House member conceded he would now vote for an $800 tax exemption although he was formerly opposed.

Dir. Paul Christopher of Region 4 said there was more concern than ever about unemployment, "especially from congressmen in textile and mining areas."

The George Amendment is gaining favor with numerous Deep South congressmen, Dir. Charles H. Gillman of Reg. 5 told the conference.

Republican congressmen from Ohio, said Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman of that State's CIO Council, are "showing anxiety for the first time" about unemployment. Several other CIO regional directors also reported.

No Cause For Continued Complacency

ALL THE NEW government employment figures show is a purely seasonal pickup, and "there is no cause for satisfaction in these figures and no excuse for continued complacency."

That's what CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said about the first combined report of the Labor Dept. and Commerce Dept., giving job figures for mid-April. Here's what the figures showed:

- Total employment has increased by some 500,000 to a total of 60.5 million. That was accounted for by spring seasonal gains in building construction, farm work, etc.
- Total unemployment has edged downward, by 260,000, to a new official estimate of 3,465,000. That was still the second highest layoff figure for April since World War II. Another 200,000 are counted as on 30-day layoffs.
- Factory employment in the nation's basic manufacturing industries is still going down, despite the slight gain for the nation as a whole. In the latest month reported, factory employment dropped by 255,000. And the average factory work week dropped from 39.5 hours to 39 hours—equivalent to the loss of another 200,000 jobs.

Reports last week from steel centers reported that shorter hours—and shorter pay checks—are spreading. In all industries in April, about 700,000 more workers were on shorter hours.

The Commerce Dept.'s Business Advisory Council of top-level businessmen was warned that it will take more than a year for employment and production to return to the 1953 peak.

Bread Box And Ballot Box

The thick smokescreen of economic optimism over Washington was punctured last week by CIO's national Full Employment Conference and its call for a program for "building prosperity from the bottom up."

Out of the reports and deliberations of the conference and the visits of CIO unionists with lawmakers on Capitol Hill, there are these two immediate problems:

(1.) The immediate legislative situation on the tax bill, now being worked over in secret sessions by the Senate Finance Committee. A fair tax cut bill—upping individual exemptions from $600 to $800, and later to $1000—is the Number One item on CIO's comprehensive program for expanding that consumer purchasing power which is the base for a lasting full employment economy.

(2.) The political situation building up to the November congressional elections. CIO's task, as Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the conference, is "to relate the ballot box to the bread box. The day of reckoning is in November."

The economic facts and trends support CIO's case for the 10-point program to "Keep America At Work." They include: A continuing drop in national production, equal to $25 billion in lost goods and services; new declines in employment in basic industries, despite the recent and slight employment gains in seasonal industries; and profits going up even faster than the jobless rolls.

The business community and the GOP Administration are still waiting for something to turn up. The Wall Street Journal even argues that full employment "can be had only at the price of a lower standard of living for all."

The Administration apparently is engaged in a campaign to ignore and to scuttle the Employment Act of 1946. One high Treasury Dept. official, W. Randolph Burgess, argued that the important point of that act is to foster "free competitive enterprise," not "to promote maximum employment, production and purchasing power." The day of reckoning is in November.

Defensive Victory

The Administration's defeat in its effort to ram a super-Taft-Hartley Act through the Senate was a defensive gain for the labor movement. CIO noted it was a "victory to keep Taft-Hartley from getting worse but no victory as far as our desire to get the act repealed is concerned."

The teamwork of CIO forces was a factor in the Taft-Hartley decision. Similar vigorous legislative work will help win the fight for a "fair share" tax law.

Sweatshops To Security

Last week the CIO Clothing Workers held their fortieth anniversary convention in Atlantic City. The story of the ACWA's rise from sweatshops to security is a proud chapter in American labor history. The intelligence and vigor of the ACWA's convention decisions indicate that the Amalgamated will play a similar role in the years ahead.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS

Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII May 17, 1954 No. 20

Look Who's Coming From The 'Bull' Pen

In Other Words—

A Community Is People

The National CIO Community Services Committee this week will hold its 13th annual training institute and staff conference in Washington. CSC-CIO aims are set forth by its director, Leo Perlis, in excerpts from an article on "A Community Is People" which appeared in the Journal of Educational Sociology:

By LEO PERLIS

IS A COMMUNITY just a place on the map where the people share a common post office address? Or is it a place where people are born, where men and women work and live and die?

It is both, of course, and it is more. The word "more" needs emphasis since its precise definition may reflect our conception of the true community.

The question, then, is more of what?

Almost every American community is a community of communities.

There are several, almost distinct, economic and social communities in every community. They may share the same street—as they do on Park Ave. in New York—but they are poles apart in their background, education, needs and hopes. We know what we mean—or at least we think we know what we mean—when we casually refer to the "Park Ave. crowd."

The Greater Good

We know—and everybody else does—that we are not referring to the Puerto Rican and Negro residents of upper Park Ave. Expressions such as this are no mere cliches or empty phrases; they have real meaning because they are a reflection of our total sum of knowledge—not excluding prejudices—of a state of affairs.

A wholesome community isn't born; it is made by mentally healthy people who are good friends, good workers, good businessmen, good mates, good parents and good citizens. A wholesome community is made by employes who have found "a meaningful life outside the job" and by businessmen who have brought their business "ethics and morals in harmony with (their) own personal principles."

All must work together and all must cooperate if we are going to have integrated communities. The test is deep faith in the proposition that what is good for the community is good for all of us—or at least the majority of us.

Faith in this proposition will determine every action we take. Superficial public relations programs are no substitute. They are frequently and fortunately discovered for what some of them really are—smokescreens and coverups.

Take a plant that moved, say, from Lawrence to South Carolina. The decision to relocate the plant was motivated purely by profit. Unorganized workers, lower wages, longer working hours, tax concessions, lower water rates, and similar considerations were the factors that finally persuaded the company to move.

The result was, among other things, unemployment in Lawrence (certainly not good for the community) and uncommon corporate advantages in South Carolina to the disadvantage, perhaps, of a potentially better school system which needs more tax funds, to the disadvantage of a dignified and self-reliant labor which needs the feeling of belonging and the security and wages which only a union, through genuine collective bargaining, can help to provide.

What kind of public relations program can help to cover up these ugly facts for too long?

Men of good will—no matter what their background, training, social status or economic condition—can sit down together to discuss and act in concert upon community problems.

This is no job for the so-called elite who get their pictures in the Sunday supplement. This is no job for the vice president in charge of public relations. It is a job for all the people, acting on their own or through organizations of their own choosing, who firmly believe that what is good for the community is good for them—and who are prepared to make it good.

Only in this way can we hope to make of our community of separate communities one integrated representative and responsive community.

The CIO Presents
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS
every weekday evening
on the ABC Network

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE SECOND MAJOR Republican attempt to whitewash the McCarthy-Army hearings was spearheaded by Sen. Dirksen of Illinois, chairman of the GOP Senate Campaign Committee. It didn't take long, after Dirksen's effort failed, to learn one of the reasons for his anxiety.

The reason cropped up as soon as Army Counsel John G. Adams took the witness stand.

It was the fact that, according to Adams' sworn testimony, the Army didn't begin to fight back at McCarthy until Sec. Stevens & Co. had got White House clearance.

Unless John Adams is a perjurer, Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams was consulted on the problem of the abuse and racketeering pressure exerted on Stevens and his staff by McCarthy and the Senator's staff.

Then there was a conference in which Atty.-Gen. Brownell participated, and the Army subsequently decided to make a fight. The Army may say, as Sec. Stevens testified, that an inquiry by Republican Sen. Potter touched off matters—but Stevens didn't move until he had consulted the White House.

This was testimony which Dirksen might quite naturally have preferred to hear in the relative obscurity of secret committee meetings outside the glare of the dramatizing television lights.

A favored few columnists for pro-Eisenhower newspapers recently have been "revealing," without ever mentioning a source, that Pres. Eisenhower has made a decision not to "use" McCarthy in the upcoming congressional campaign and that the decision has been forcefully passed on to Chairman Leonard Hall of the Republican National Committee.

Trying To Salvage Joe

Not even the favored columnists have thought of suggesting, however, that Eisenhower controlled Sen. Dirksen, or that Dirksen might not be entirely willing, on his own responsibility, to use his separate campaign committee as a clearing house through which McCarthy might be "respectably" sponsored as an approved Republican spokesman.

So Dirksen made his try—the second Republican effort to halt the televised hearings, to pretend that the whole uproar was just a merry little misunderstanding between playful and mutually trusting comrades.

Dirksen knew in advance what Adams' testimony would assert: every senatorial member of the subcommittee has long ago had the advantage of transcripts of secret examinations.

Republicans of the Dirksen temper naturally wish to salvage as much as possible of the McCarthy reputation for campaign purposes.

Dirksen's intent was to keep John G. Adams and Asst. Defense Sec. Hensel off the public witness stand; to prevent the shrewd and formidable Boston special counsel for Stevens, Joseph N. Welch, from again publicly cross-examining the excitable Roy Cohn, who appears to have operated, curiously, as a terrible force dominating, on occasion, the terrible McCarthy himself.

Dirksen lost because Stevens, under severe pressure from the Republican senatorial side, kept his backbone stiff and pointblank rejected any compromise.

It would be interesting to know—which I don't—whether Stevens had to go to the White House again for renewed support. But the White House, despite Eisenhower's repeated refusals to repudiate McCarthy directly, clearly was in on the original Army decision to fight back.

Perhaps one of Mr. Eisenhower's difficulties in making a direct public denunciation of McCarthy is his realization, at last, that since the Wisconsin blowhard has challenged the integrity of a Republican Executive Dept., he probably was equally as wrong and mendacious in attacking the basic integrity of Harry S. Truman's Executive Dept.

The Town Seems Happier

Mr. Truman came to town again—and as usual the town seemed happier because he was here.

The former President, just turned 70, stole the show at Democratic functions designed to emphasize the congressional campaign. He got warm praise from newspapers, which regularly used to damn his eyes, when in two notable speeches he firmly warned Eisenhower that every Chief Executive must use the full acquired powers of the White House or lose control of his own party and of foreign policy itself.

A taxi driver told Bill Gold, Washington Post columnist, that business in recent days had been much better—"I guess because Mr. Truman is back."

The Team

Washington, May 3 (AP)—William P. Knowland, Republican leader of the Senate, said tonight he would lead a Senate fight to send United States troops to Indochina if President Eisenhower decided it was necessary.

Washington, May 3 (UP)—House Speaker Joseph W. Martin, Jr., said tonight it will not be necessary to send U. S. troops to Indochina or anywhere else in Asia.

Washington, May 4 (AP)—President Eisenhower today displayed plain disgust over his golf game.

—New York Post, May 5, 1954.

P. S.—The U. S. Golf Association is paying for a practice putting-green to be constructed on the White House lawn directly behind the President's office.

Economic Outlook Says—

Soaring Industrial Output Holds Both A Promise And A Threat

AMERICA'S genius for increased industrial productivity poses both the "promise of an abundant life" and the danger of mass unemploment, the CIO Dept. of Education and Research warns in the current issue of the CIO Economic Outlook.

From the standpoint of justice and "economic reality," it adds, the blessings of increased productivity should be shared by workers, industry and consumers through wage increases, lower prices, and profits geared to higher total sales at lower unit profit margins.

"The buying power of wages and salaries must rise each year—along with the yearly improvements in productive efficiency—to provide the markets and customers for the economy's increasing output of goods and services," the CIO publication continues.

"It is not enough for workers to receive wage increases based on rises in the cost of living alone. A 10% wage increase—based on a 10% rise in living costs—leaves workers' buying power the same as it had been before the price increases occurred."

Buying Power Is The Key

The Outlook asserts that "the mere existence of an efficient labor force and a more powerful economic machine is no guarantee that they will be used fully or wisely."

"As recently as 1949," it points out, "many of the nation's industries were operating considerably below capacity, despite the fact that the American people had unfilled needs that could have absorbed the industrial output at full production.

"And in late 1953-early 1954, there was a repetition of this situation. Unless wage and salary earners have sufficient buying power to spur our vast resources of manpower and machinery into continuing action, the promises of a richer economic future will not be fulfilled.

"Rising productivity holds forth the promise of an abundant life for all American families, as well as national strength in a world confronted with the threat of aggression by a powerful enemy. But it also presents the danger that an economic imbalance may develop and twist industrial progress into mass unemployment, instead of the improving living conditions it could provide."

The Outlook traces the history of improved productivity. It shows that by last year, the real value in stable dollars of all goods and services produced "was almost twice as great as it had been in 1939—despite the decline that set in during the last half of the year."

"Had full employment been maintained during all of 1953," it notes, "the real value of total output would have been more than double the production of 1939."

A good part of this rapid expansion, the publication says, was "a response to consumer demand for goods and services."

"It is consumer demand—backed up by consumer buying power—on which economic activity, in the long run, is based," it maintains.

The Outlook then explains that the economy's increasing productive efficiency necessitates growing markets for the sale of an expanding volume of goods and services. Goods are produced for customers. When output rises faster than sales, production is cut and unemployment rises. It adds:

Need For Growing Markets

"Failure of markets to grow, along with our improving productive ability, can twist industrial progress into mass unemployment and idle machines. Only through full production and full employment—based on expanding consumer markets for the sale of the rising volume of goods and services—can our ability to produce be the blessing it should be."

Failure of business "to share the fruits of industrial progress with other groups can create economic distortions—excessively high profits and insufficient buying power," the Outlook notes.

"From the viewpoint of justice and economic reality," the CIO publication continues, "the fruits of rising output per man-hour should be shared by workers, industry and consumers—through wage increases for workers, reduced prices for consumers—and business profits that arise from an increasing volume of sales at lower unit profit margins.

"In that way, the entire nation can share—through rising standards of living—in the benefits of the increased output per man-hour of the national economy."

Injustice

If workers merely maintain their buying power, they cannot improve their living conditions or provide the additional buying power needed to keep the economy's improving productive capacity going in high gear, the current CIO Economic Outlook makes clear.

"This would be an injustice to workers," it adds. "It would create a lag between productivity and the buying power of wages. And such a lag could become a prelude to a recession or a depression."

Stormy Weather

Sen. Douglas—Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Sen. Goldwater—It is getting late in the afternoon. It is raining and I do not know of any better place to be when it is raining than in the United States Senate.

Sen. Douglas—Yes; it is dry inside.

—Congressional Record, May 3, 1954

Keep America at Work! Reuther Urges Fair Tax Bill To Build Prosperity From Bottom Up

TAX POLICIES of the Eisenhower Administration were bitterly assailed by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in the keynote address at the CIO Full Employment Conference.

"The people who don't need tax relief get it by the truckload," he said, referring to the GOP tax revision program, "while the people who need it most get a few crumbs."

Reiterating the CIO demand for tax cuts for the great mass of consumers, Reuther declared the prosperity of the United States "must be built from the bottom up and not from the top down, as the Administration would have us believe."

HE URGED the delegates to rally union members and their neighbors behind pending proposals to increase the income tax exemption from the present $600 to $800 and eventually to $1000, reminding them that it would add 8.5c an hour to the purchasing power of every American.

"This is just as important as bargaining," he declared, "because 8.5c won in a tax cut will buy just as much as 8.5c won at the bargaining table."

The CIO leader said that "we have fought for and supported the kind of tax laws needed for our country."

"But the Administration," he added, "on the tax front, as on other aspects of the fight against employment, is doing the wrong thing for the wrong people."

He recalled that in the tax revision already passed, the 74% of American families with incomes of less than $5000 a year get only 12% of the benefits, "while the wealthy and the corporations—the same people—get the rest."

"WE HAVE a dynamic expanding economy," he continued. "We can't stand still. We have to encourage industrial expansion by creating consumers. I know of no economic Santa Clauses. The emphasis must be placed on expanding purchasing power, to put money into the hands of people who will spend it, and not on expanding productive capacity.

"Our problem is not to encourage expansion by tax policies. Our problem is to find more customers to buy the products we are able to make. Yet the whole Republican policy is based on prosperity from the top down.

"The Administration's total effort to date has been to give people who have too much even more."

He recalled that some Administration stalwarts oppose the exemption boost because it would take seven million taxpayers from the tax rolls.

"This is as it should be," he added. "And don't worry about them not paying taxes. Families with incomes of less than $5000 a year carry 40% of the tax load at the local and state levels.

"The Republicans would have us do nothing. They say we should just sit back and relax, and that things will correct themselves. The people who say we should sit back and relax are getting their paychecks every week. The people who don't get them just can't afford to relax."

Reuther estimated current unemployment at the equivalent of five million, taking into consideration those laid off indefinitely, those on short-term layoffs who are not counted in the official figures, and those working less than the customary hours per week in their respective industries.

"The CIO is proud of the fact that throughout its history it has been in the forefront of every fight for full employment," he said.

CALLING the job situation "critical," Reuther stressed that the country still has to find a solution to "the serious imbalance between the nation's ability to create wealth and the ability of millions of Americans to consume the wealth they create."

"We in the CIO have unlimited faith in the future of America," he said, "but we have it only to the extent that we can supply the needs of the people.

"We've said all along that we don't want to get panicky. But we don't want the Administration's do-nothing policy. We believe there's a middle course—examine the facts and take corrective steps.

"We believe that corrective steps taken early can save drastic steps later."

Get In Focus On Real Problems

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther brought the house down at the CIO Full Employment Conference when he suggested that press-TV-radio coverage of the Army-McCarthy mess is missing "the real problems of the American people."

"The headlines, the TV and radio networks," said Reuther, "are focused on Washington. Unfortunately they aren't focused on the real problems of the American people. Instead, we find an ugly, disgusting and immoral spectacle.

"We'd better find a way to take the headlines and TV away from low-blow Joe and put them on the unemployment problems of the American people."

Rieve Charges Administration Has Shelved '46 Jobs Act

THE ADMINISTRATION has failed the people on the economic front, CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve charged in the opening address of the CIO Full Employment Conference, over which he presided.

"I charge this Administration with indifference to the welfare of the people," he declared. "I charge this Administration with failing to utilize the Employment Act of 1946 to create jobs."

RIEVE

He recalled that when the act was going through Congress, it "was jiggered around so it isn't as good as it was intended to be—they even took the 'full' out of the name and called it the 'Employment Act' instead of the 'Full Employment Act.'"

"But if they only used what's left in it," he added, "it would do some good. The CIO will never settle for any cheap imitation of full employment."

Rieve, who also is chairman of the CIO Economic Policy Committee and president of the CIO Textile Workers, said:

"The CIO has never stood aside from an economic problem, and it isn't going to stand aside now just to satisfy a new Republican Administration."

He said that CIO economists have estimated that failure to achieve full employment is costing the country $25 billion a year.

"THINK of what we could do with $25 billion!" he added. "Think of the hospitals we could build! Think of the schools we could build!"

The CIO does not accept the view of some people in the Eisenhower Administration, he said, that "full employment means around four million unemployed." He added that "even" government statistics show joblessness is running from 4% to 6% of the working population, and said indications are that "by July there will be 4.5 million unemployed, or more than 5% of the work force."

"All the indicators," he said with a note of regret, "still point the wrong way."

CIO's 10-Point Prosperity Program

The following program for "prosperity in peacetime" was adopted by the CIO Full Employment Conference in Washington:

1. Taxes: A tax program to benefit the many, not the privileged few, by raising personal income tax exemptions now from the present $600 to $800 and to $1000 next year.

2. Minimum Wage: An increase in the minimum wage from 75c an hour to $1.25 an hour and greater coverage for the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act.

3. Higher Wages: Collective bargaining must be strengthened to protect consumer buying power and to enable workers to obtain a fair share of the rising productivity of American industry.

4. Improve Unemployment Compensation: Benefit levels should be raised to entitle an unemployed worker to 66% of his average weekly wage for at least 39 weeks with additional benefits for dependents.

5. Housing: A greatly expanded housing program with a goal of two million homes a year is needed to provide decent homes for millions of Americans in the lower and middle income groups and to bolster the economy.

6. Social Security: Passage of the Lehman-Dingell Bill would expand social security coverage, add permanent and temporary disability insurance, and raise monthly payments to a maximum of $200.

7. Farm Program: The government should continue and strengthen programs including price supports, conservation, low cost credit and rural electrification to aid the nation's farm families now suffering from a serious recession.

8. Aid to Small Business: A special credit agency to perform functions formerly carried on by the Reconstruction Finance Corp. should be established to make possible liberal credit for small business and to aid in the expansion of America's economy.

9. Public Works: A big-scale public works program to build badly needed highways, hospitals, schools, recreation facilities, etc., should be inaugurated at once.

10. State and City Programs: The 48 states and local communities should embark at once on a program of planning action for a number of activities listed above in order to insure that in every section of the country the full benefits of this program will be made available to all the people.

A DATE IN NOVEMBER — CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther tells Full Employment Conference labor must "relate ballot box to bread box."

GONE FOREVER—Current recession has cost some $26 billion in lost gross national product, according to CIO estimate. That's equivalent to a million new homes, 200,000 new school rooms, 200,000 new hospital beds. If upturn comes, that lost U. S. production still is gone forever.

GLOOMY PROPHETS — Clippings from business magazines predicting the recession are checked by Maren Newfield and Mary Humphrey.

THE FIGHT FOR JOBS—Here's general view of CIO Full Employment Conference which brought some 500 delegates from CIO unions and councils to Washington for two-day rally and legislative visits in support of more jobs.

Reports Urge Old Age, Jobless Pay And Housing Action

FAILURE of Congress and state legislatures to act in the fields of social security, unemployment compensation, housing and public works was scored at last week's CIO Full Employment Conference by several speakers.

JAMES B. CAREY, CIO secretary-treasurer and president of the Electrical Workers, pointed to the loss of $1.75 billion in wages which was compensated for by only $350 million in unemployment compensation.

Carey noted that despite Pres. Eisenhower's mild suggestion in January that states improve their unemployment compensation laws, only three states acted at all.

California and Michigan, he said, improved payments but at the cost of other undesirable changes. Virginia, he went on, increased payments but made duration even more limited. Only five legislatures now remain in session, Carey observed.

"It is perfectly clear that we cannot place reliance upon state unemployment compensation programs as a real bulwark against unemployment or loss of income. Like the old age pension system, unemployment compensation can operate properly only on a federal basis," Carey declared.

JOSEPH CURRAN, a CIO vice president and head of the Maritime Union, said labor could properly "claim a major victory" in defeating Chamber of Commerce-inspired attacks on old-age and survivors' insurance earlier this year.

"The current recession increases the need for improvements in our social security system. Higher benefits for aged persons and survivors now entitled to benefits would rapidly add to community purchasing power as well as to their own security. Present levels are pitifully low for many beneficiaries," Curran told the conference.

JAMES G. THIMMES, a vice president of CIO and the Steelworkers Union, attacked the "skeletonized" public housing program of the Eisenhower Administration. "An annual program of 35,000 new units is virtually meaningless," Thimmes said. "We have proposed 200,000 a year.

Thimmes called for a program of public works coordinated on the federal, state and local levels "to provide the lift to employment and meet the needs of this nation."

2 Humphreys Differ On Job Prospects

THE TWO HUMPHERYS of Washington—the Secretary and the Senator, that is—gave the CIO Full Employment Conference widely contrasting views on how to regain prosperity.

Treasury Sec. Humphrey stoutly defended the Administration "trickle down" theory, pointing out that "jobs don't grow on trees, someone has to create them." To create jobs, he argued, tax relief must be given to investors and corporations.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) called for a program closely paralleling that of the CIO with higher personal tax exemptions, lower interest rates, expanded public works, higher social security payments and larger and longer unemployment compensation benefits.

As the cabinet member left the stage, Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers, who was presiding at the time, called out to remind him that the Full Employment Act of 1946 "is still in effect and we have nearly five million unemployed. We wish that you would do something about it."

HE DIDN'T AGREE—Treasury Sec. Humphrey disagreed with CIO's program for building prosperity from the bottom up.

Sen. Humphrey

SEN. HUMPHREY told the conference "anyone knows that the best way to balance the family budget is not to quit eating but to earn more money."

"I am here not to make a speech but to work with you," the Senator said. He said he was an optimist about America's future and not "an economic McCarthy."

The Senator said he was tired of anti-Communists who have yet to prove they are pro-democracy and said he was not "just anti-depression" but was "pro-prosperity, pro-progress."

He was critical of the recent report of the President's Council of Economic Advisers for having ignored the legal mandate to set forth levels of employment, production and purchasing power necessary to carry out the Employment Act of 1946.

HE CITED statistics of Leon Keyserling, former CEA chairman, who reported that between 1929 and 1940 the U. S. national output was $635 billion less than it would have been if we had maintained a prosperous and growing economy.

"We lost about twice the cost to us of World War II in goods," the Senator said.

"A political catch phrase is no substitute for an economic program. With an estimated 17% drop in gross national production from last year's level and $30 billion drop in potential gross national product, I suggest that the political hucksters be sacrificed for the political economists."

If America's economy can continue to expand as it should, Humphrey saw a $500 billion economy by 1960. This, he said, would mean 70 million jobs.

Sec. Humphrey

SEC. HUMPHREY told the conference that America has more people employed today than at any other time in her history—"except a year ago today."

With this brief nod in the direction of the whole picture of jobless men and closed factories, the cabinet member maintained that tax benefits given to investors and corporations are best because they provide jobs.

"You can stimulate consumers until the cows come home," he said, "but this won't stimulate the heavy industries which your Pres. Reuther has pointed out are hard hit."

It is the investors who buy the heavy goods, they make the jobs and "we believe that we must expand business to provide employment," the Secretary said.

"WE WANT to keep America the land of opportunity for young men. If they are not to be unfairly burdened, we must cut taxes. The only way we can do this is to reduce government expenditures because the money government spends has to be paid for through taxes," Sec. Humphrey continued.

"The 160 million people of the U. S. are like one big family and if they spend more than they earn or collect they must borrow the balance."

He said the Administration was trimming $7 billion in expenditures during the coming year and "we are giving the $7 billion back to the people in tax cuts rather than have the government spend it for them."

FAILURE of Congress and the legislatures to act on improved unemployment compensation, social security, housing and public works was rapped by James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer; James G. Thimmes, Housing Committee chairman; and Joseph Curran, Social Security Committee head.

CONGRATULATIONS—Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers (left) greets Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), after liberal lawmaker presented a "prosperity, pro-progress" economic program to CIO Full Employment rally. He said GOP slogans are no substitute for an expanding U. S. economy.

ACWA Warned Of 'Dark Days Ahead'

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

SKIES were gray, a fine rain was falling and wind-lashed waves were hurled up the beach toward the Boardwalk along which nearly a thousand and a half delegates were making their way from their hotels to the opening session of the CIO Clothing Workers' 40th anniversary convention last week in Atlantic City.

The first day's sessions were held in the Warner Theater, which was jammed to capacity with close to 2000 delegates and visitors. From Tuesday morning on, the convention met in the huge gray stone Convention Hall on the Boardwalk, and the sun beamed often during the rest of the week.

Birthday Mood

But rain or sunshine, the mood of the ACWA delegates and officers was on the exuberant side, for they were celebrating the union's 40th birthday and its really amazing achievements since 1914, as well as conducting the regular business of their 19th biennial convention.

(It would have been the 20th, except that during the depression in '32, the union could not afford to hold a convention—as white-haired Joseph Schlossberg explained in his speech reviewing the union's colorful history. One of the founders of the union, Schlossberg was the ACWA's general secretary-treasurer from 1914 until his retirement in 1940.)

Mixed in with the expression of the pride of achievement, however, were strong notes of bitter protest and warning about things going on in Republican Washington that are threatening union members and all the American people.

'40 Year Crusade'

In his keynote speech, ACWA Pres. Jacob Potofsky first discussed the union's gains won in the "40-year crusade" in which, working with former Pres. Sidney Hillman, he had played an important part from the beginning.

"Four decades ago, in what was known as a sweatshop industry," he said, "we began with a membership of 24,000. Today we are almost 400,000 strong, functioning in nine industries, under civilized and humane conditions.

"We were a penniless, obscure organizations 40 years ago. We had to borrow money to furnish our first offices composed of three rooms on Union Square in New York City. Today we are well-known, rich in honor and rich in material resources." The union's present worth, Potofsky said, including its subsidiaries, is $250 million.

The gains the ACW has won for its members, Potofsky warned, must not hide the fact that today the union and the country are facing dangerous times with a Republican Administration in power and a Congress that has "failed us in lots of ways."

"The 83rd Congress has demonstrated virtually nothing in terms of legislating for the people," he said. "It has legislated primarily in the interest of big business."

Reuther's Condemnation

Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum also warned that "sad, dark days are ahead." He accused the Republican Administration of "aiding and abetting" the evil designs of Joseph McCarthy.

"McCarthyism strikes at the very foundations of our republic," he said. "It attacks the minds of men, perverts all American concepts and makes suspicion and fear almost common attributes of our present-day existence."

CIO Pres. Walter Reuther, in what Potofsky called his "maiden speech" to the Clothing Workers—it was the first time he had addressed them—slashed at the "stumbling bumbling efforts of the Republican Party to construct a program for the American people." Under the Administration's foreign policy, he said, "we're fighting our friends not our enemies."

News of the H-bomb "has filled the minds of people all over the world with fear," Reuther told the delegates. He added:

"It is up to the United States, as the strongest of the free nations of the world, to find a way to fill the moral vacuum the H-bomb has created, with positive peacetime human values."

The U. S. should use our great technical progress to help underdeveloped countries, he said. While half the people of the world go hungry, we produce more food than we can use. "Our food surpluses have more power than all the H-bombs in the world," he said.

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) made an outspoken and fiery attack on both the domestic and foreign policies of the Republicans. He charged them with being an out-and-out "anti-labor party" on the home front, and with "fast becoming a war party" in foreign affairs.

Morse Hits War Peril

"American prestige in the field of foreign relations today is at the lowest ebb it has been in 25 years," Morse said. Only the election of a Democratic majority in 1954 can check the bungling mistakes of Sec. of State John Foster Dulles by replacing present Republican policies with a bipartisan foreign policy, he declared.

"It is time for the mothers and fathers of America to make it clear to the Eisenhower Administration that they want no flag draped coffins shipped back from Indo-China," Morse said.

"We must rise to the challenge of the hour and stop the foreign policy of the Administration that in my opinion is now marching straight to war."

Gov. Robert B. Meyner of New Jersey earlier told the delegates that "if the Administration defaults its responsibility, the people will be heard from at the coming elections on Nov. 2."

Only one rather vague note defending the Administration's policies was heard during the convention, and that came from a speech of Sec. of Labor James P. Mitchell read to the delegates by Assistant Sec. Rocco Siciliano. (Mitchell was in the hospital for a check-up.)

Mitchell's speech stated that the Administration's programs were geared toward promoting "continued growth of the economy and constant improvement in the standard of living and employment opportunities for the working people of America."

In answer to this, Potofsky, while expressing personal regard for the Secretary of Labor, said that unfortunately he had no power. He added: "The millionaires in Pres. Eisenhower's cabinet are deciding the policies."

"FORTY YEARS OF PROGRESS" of CIO Clothing Workers, from the sweatshop to security, were marked at ACWA convention. Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum is speaking, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky in center, Joseph Schlossberg is at right.

AN EYE ON THE NEWS—Jack Kroll (next to left), an ACWA vice president and CIO-PAC's national director, keeps an eye on news ticker at PAC booth. With him (from left) are David Monas, Meyer Lieberman, Sander Genis.

Bouquet

CIO Pres. Reuther brought the house down at the ACWA convention when he wrapped this bouquet for the union around a brickbat for Sen. Joseph McCarthy:

"I say to Joe McCarthy and all of the other immoral politicians in action, that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, in the practical fight for social justice, does more in one day to fight Communists than Joe and his gang will do throughout their lives."

Ouch!

When Gov. Robert B. Meyner of New Jersey stood up to address the ACWA convention, the news photographers began leaping around him to get a good angle with their lights and cameras lenses.

Somehow, the Governor remarked, he always seemed to have his mouth open when he had his picture taken. Like the one of him displayed in a certain restaurant beneath a sign which read "Open 24 Hours a Day."

KEY CLOTHING CENTER—Here's part of the delegation from Chicago, city of founding struggles of the ACWA for union organization. The Atlantic City convention was marked by vigorous denunciations of the GOP regime.

Clothing Workers' Parley Broadens Label Campaign

EXPANSION of the Clothing Workers' union label campaign to include all garments in all Amalgamated industries in the U. S. and Canada was unanimously approved at the convention.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky called the campaign "one of the most important activities of our union." More than $2 million has been spent on the drive since it was started, he said, and the union is prepared to spend more.

The convention also called for legislation to reduce the work week from 40 to 35 hours, and to boost minimum wages from 75c to $1.25 an hour. It urged repeal of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act, and called for effective fair employment practices legislation by federal, state and city governments.

After hearing Msgr. John Patrick Carroll-Abbing, under whose leadership the Boys' Town movement in Italy was founded in 1944, the delegates voted to commend the ideals and goals of the program and to endorse its activities. Last year ACWA members in New York City contributed $100,000 to the movement.

At a meeting of the union's National Education Dept., a delegate from St. Louis, Mo., reported that the union there had inaugurated a successful educational program for displaced persons in Amalgamated shops.

MOST of them at the start knew little or nothing about the U. S. labor movement and what it is trying to accomplish, he said. What the program tries to do, he explained, is teach them what unions are all about.

A delegate from the New York Laundry Workers Joint Board told about problems created by the influx of Spanish-speaking workers—most of them Puerto Ricans—into the industry during the last three years.

To help these members become active in the union, he said, a Spanish-speaking member had been added to the staff to translate at meetings, and one page of the union's newspaper is printed in that language.

Sec. Mitchell Enters Hospital For Checkup

Sec. of Labor Mitchell last week entered the Walter Reed Hospital at Washington after his physician ordered him to "rest before resuming his heavy schedule." He will receive a "complete medical checkup," the Labor Dept. said in a brief statement.

"HILLBILLIES FROM UNION SQUARE"—At Southern Night party, ACWA officers join in mountain music. From left, straw hats and all: Mrs. Bessie Hillman, Jacob S. Potofsky, Frank Rosenblum, singer Joe Glazer, and Jack Kroll (standing).

'Creeping McKinleyism'—

HST Urges Big Tax Cuts To End 'Cruel Recession'

DRASTIC tax cuts and a $3 billion boost in federal spending to haul the nation from the Republican-created "cruel recession" were called for by former Pres. Harry S. Truman at the CIO Clothing Workers convention.

Cheering delegates interrupted the former chief executive 15 times with applause, sang "Happy Birthday" in honor of his recent 70th birthday and welcomed him when he was made an honorary ACWA-CIO member in a ceremony by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky. Then he was given $25,000 for the Truman Library fund.

Truman charged that the Administration's "trickle down" economic theories have doubled unemployment and lopped $20 billion from the nation's output.

"I SAY TO YOU," the former President said, "that this economic recession has already been too big, it has already lasted too long. It has already inflicted too many cruel hardships upon too many people. And now is the time to do something about it."

A seven-minute standing ovation preceded the former President's address in which he raked the Administration for its "bad judgment" in cutting defense funds, putting a balanced budget ahead of national needs and tightening money supplies until the bankers began "to squeal."

'The Administration is not telling us how to rub out this $20 billion national economic deficit," he maintained. "It is not telling us how to eliminate excessive unemployment. Instead, it seems to be merely hoping and praying that things will not get worse."

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther greets ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky after address ripping McCarthy.

The way out of the recession, Truman advised, "is to elect a new kind of Congress" in November, and, he hinted, a Democratic president in 1956.

MEANWHILE, he offered a six-point program "to stop this creeping McKinleyism."

The former President would, he said, recommend boosting personal income tax exemptions by $200 a year "to put $4.5 billion in purchasing power in the hands of those who need it most," adopt a policy of higher wages including a higher minimum wage and expand unemployment insurance.

Also, he proposed a vast expansion of the housing program, increasing federal spending by $3 billion "to strengthen our defenses against aggression" and start a public works program.

Hillman Foundation Awards $25,000 To Truman Library

DONATIONS totaling $44,500 by the Sidney Hillman Foundation were announced at last week's convention of the CIO Clothing Workers.

Included was a grant of $25,000 to the Harry S. Truman Library, Inc., being created to house the papers and documents of the former President.

The Foundation was established in memory of the late president of the AWCA-CIO and the awards were made known by Jacob S. Potofsky, who succeeded Hillman as head of the union.

A grant of $1500 was made to the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Ga., which has united many of the region's leading groups and individuals in an effort to overcome some of the South's most pressing problems.

UTSE Convention Warned Jobs Periled By Self-Service Moves

By BOB SENSER

SELF-SERVICE hand trucks may soon push redcaps out of rail and airline stations, Pres. Willard S. Townsend warned the ninth convention of the CIO Transport Service Employees in Chicago.

At least two train stations, one in Pittsburgh and one in Boston, have recently adopted the hand trucks on an experimental basis, he said.

No red-caps have as yet been replaced, but Townsend warned that in time the change would "contribute to the already increasing unemployment of our people."

The 95 convention delegates approved a resolution on the "vanishing red-cap" which called the change unfair to the red-cap and "against the best interests of the men, women, and children who use the facilities of the railroads."

The resolution criticized a railroad publicity campaign "using pictures of glamorous women pushing these trucks in order to attract and win public acceptance."

JOHN V. RIFFE, CIO executive vice president and organization and councils director, told the delegates that "our hope and prayer" is that the U. S. Supreme Court will declare school segregation unconstitutional.

He urged that a national conference be held in the South "to bring about a peaceful implementation of the Supreme Court decision," if it is favorable.

Leaders from religious, labor, and civic fields can do much, Riffe said, to make sure that no violence and a minimum of friction will result from the end of school segregation. "Wouldn't the Communists be happy if a good decision would result in bloodshed?" he asked.

James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, was scheduled to address the delegates but had to change plans because of major contract negotiations of the CIO Electrical Workers, which he heads. His talk was read to the convention by George L-P Weaver, Carey's assistant and a UTSE Executive Board member.

"The mess in Washington today," Carey said in his statement, "belongs lock, stock, and barrel to management." He blasted the GOP Administration for doing "little or nothing to meet the problems of the unemployed in America."

Victor Reuther, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter Reuther, said that the anti-communism of Joe McCarthy is ineffective.

"IF McCARTHY really wants to fight Communists, let him join in the campaign to clean up the cesspools of injustice into which Communists and other bigots of that class drop their seeds," Reuther said.

Reuther also warned that "the quickest way to give Communists power in Southeast Asia is to hide democracy behind French colonialism."

In describing recent developments in labor law, Leon Despres, UTSE attorney, said "the National Labor Relations Board today is the Dien Bien Phu of labor's rights. The NLRB appears about to be taken over entirely by the employers."

HE CALLED the Eisenhower-sponsored Goldwater amendment to the Taft-Hartley Law—pending at the time of the convention—the "worst legal blow" to labor since the passage of Taft-Hartley itself.

The convention authorized Townsend to sign the AFL-CIO no-raiding agreement, provided UTSE's rival, the AFL Hotel & Restaurant Employees, will also sign the pact.

CIO OFFICIALS chat with leaders of CIO Transport Service Employees at Chicago convention. From left: CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, UTSE Pres. Willard Townsend, Victor G. Reuther, executive assistant to the CIO president, and George L-P Weaver, assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and director of the CIO Civil Rights Committee.

R. J. Thomas' Mother Dies In Youngstown

Mrs. Mary Alice Jackson Thomas, mother of R. J. Thomas, died last week at Youngstown, O., at the age of 78. Thomas is executive assistant to CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe.

United Fight On Bias Held Labor Must

UNIONS must educate their members to fight for human rights in all phases of community life and not just in employment, Francis C. Shane, secretary of the CIO Steelworkers Civil Rights Committee, told a Toronto conference on FEP and human rights called by the Ontario Federation of Labor.

Shane told the 115 delegates, representing locals in the province affiliated with the Canadian Congress of Labor-CIO, that action by all sections of the labor movement is imperative in the fight against discrimination and racial injustice.

OFL Pres. George Burt, who also is Canadian director of the CIO Auto Workers, urged labor departments to set up special branches to handle enforcement of fair employment.

CIO-Backed Suit Against School Bias Wins

THE ARIZONA Superior Court has issued a strongly-worded decision against segregation in a Phoenix area school.

The CIO supported the suit of six Negro pupils and their parents against the authorities of Wilson School District, Maricopa County.

"The schools is society's chief agency for conserving and transmitting its culture; educational segregation has extra significance," said Judge Charles C. Bernstein in his opinion.

"A segregated educative system is likely to transmit to each succeeding generation the superiority-inferiority value attitudes of a racially conscious society. Futhermore, it provides public approval and reinforcement of private privileges which has become the primary symbol of the Negro's inferiority."

The Judge reviewed "the history of legislation and decisions of the courts on this subject from 1868 to the present time."

These, he said, amount "almost to a legislative declaration that in the absence of an express grant thereof, no school districts or trustees of a school have any authority to discriminate against any child or to deny its admission to any public school thereof on account of its color."

Judge Bernstein also said that the school counsel admitted that in the elementary schools facilities for Negro children "were not and are not equal to those available to the white children . . ."

"Our general experience as we observe human status each day," the decision said, "tells us that segregation intensifies rather than eases racial tension. Instead of encouraging racial cooperation, it fosters mutual fear and suspicion which is the basis of racial violence."

New CIO Atomic Council Hits GOP's 'Biggest Give-Away'

CIO ATOMIC COUNCIL—A new Atomic Energy Council has been formed by CIO Chemical Workers. In group (seated, from left): Pres. Andrew Bragg, Local 420, Miamisburg, O.; UGCCWA Pres. Elwood Swisher; R. P. Buchanan, UGCCWA Dist. 5 director; (standing) Leo Goodman, UGCCWA legislative representative; Pres. William Murphy, Local 565, Portsmouth, O.; and Pres. Emerson Pownall, Local 288, Oak Ridge, Tenn.

By HAROLD ASH

AN ATOMIC Energy Council to implement CIO's program on atomic energy has been established by the CIO Chemical Workers, the largest single union in the atomic energy field, and quickly condemned the "biggest give-away" proposed by the Republican Administration.

The Council was formed at a meeting in Washington on May 6 by representatives of all the UGCCW's atomic energy locals.

The new Chemical Workers unit called for development of atomic energy in the fields of power, medicine, biology and other civilian uses, as well as for military purposes.

It demanded retention of the ownership of fissionable material and all atomic patents by the federal government.

LEGISLATION presently proposed in Congress would permit private industry to own and control patents and fissionable material contrary to the 1946 Atomic Energy Act.

"Giving ownership of fissionable material and atomic patents to private industry would be the biggest steal yet perpetrated by the Eisenhower Administration," Pres. Elwood Swisher of the Chemical Workers told the Council.

"Atomic energy was developed by public funds. It is vital to the public welfare, both in peacetime projects and military ordnance. Fissionable materials, the means of producing this energy, and the patents covering the processes involved must remain under public ownership and control."

THE NEW COUNCIL will also coordinate collective bargaining activities of the various UGCCW locals in the atomic industry and will guide and assist organizational efforts among atomic workers.

Problems of housing, community facilities and job security of the thousands of workers who are thrust into unprepared geographical areas by development of new atomic plants and projects will also be a primary concern of the Council.

CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe called for complete organization of all atomic workers and commended the union for having contracts covering the vast majority of operational employes in the industry.

The delegates also heard addresses by Leo Goodman, UGCCW legislative representative and director of CIO's Sub-Committee on Atomic Energy; Donald Monson, community planning expert; Gerhard Colm, director of the National Planning Association; Leland Olds, former chairman of the Federal Power Commission; Herbert Roback, congressional expert on atomic energy; and Reps. Holifield (D. Calif.), and Howard Baker, (R. Tenn.).

Collective bargaining was discussed by Joe Joy, UGCCW vice president.

Locals from all plants producing fissionable material in this country were represented at the meeting. Other locals, representing other phases of the atomic industry, also participated.

Chemical Workers Present Wage Case To AEC Panel

WAGE increase demands by the Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Paducah, Ky., locals of the CIO Chemical Workers were heard by the Labor Management Relations Panel of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Negotiations with Union Carbide and Carbon Corp., operators of the two plants which produce U-235, began Mar. 18. The company's position throughout negotiations, mediation by U. S. Counciliator John Dietz, and the hearings before the panel has been against any wage increase at this time on any basis.

The union's brief, presented by Pres. Elwood Swisher, Vice Pres. Joe Joy, and Counsel Benjamin C. Sigal, contended that an increase of at least 21c an hour is justified.

It cited the need to keep pace with wage increases in other industries, to preserve the company's competitive position in the labor market, to maintain differential in area wage rates, to control turnover, to compensate for great increases in productivity, to reduce intra-plant and local inequities, and to compensate for a recent substantial rent increase.

The Labor Management Relations Panel hearing the dispute was composed of Cy Ching, chairman, and Father Leo T. Brown, Tom Holland and Oswald Colclough.

2000 Get Pensions Under UAW's Pact With Chrysler

SOME 2000 retired Chrysler workers are receiving pensions under the program negotiated by the CIO Auto Workers with the Chrysler Corp.

The UAW-CIO members of the joint board administering the fund reported 2184 persons retired under the program in the 41 months since its inception and the end of 1953. Of these 1960 were drawing benefits at the end of last year.

The board last year approved 546 applications for pensions. Of these 497 were for normal retirement at the age of 65 or over, 11 for early retirement and 38 for permanent total disability retirement.

In 1953, for the first time, payments from the fund exceeded income. A total of $857,546 was paid to pensioners while dividends and interest were $853,641. An independent actuarial firm pronounced the fund "actuarily sound."

IUE Asks Wagner To Act On Jobs

Representatives of 30,000 members of the CIO Electrical Workers in New York City last week met with Mayor Robert F. Wagner to urge him to take steps to halt rising unemployment in the metropolis.

The delegation to City Hall was led by Pres. Milton Weihrauch of IUE-CIO Dist. 4, which has more than 75,000 members in the metropolitan area and New Jersey.

Woodworkers' Paper Gets Safety Award

The National Safety Council has voted a Public Interest Award for 1953 to the International Woodworker, official publication of the CIO Woodworkers. IWA-CIO Pres. A. F. Hartung said this is the first time the paper has been so honored.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

MANY INSURANCE companies have long had a "hazard" prejudice against industrial workers. Some of the largest refuse to sell low-cost term insurance to industrial workers at all. They reserve such insurance for what they call the "preferred-risk white-collar worker."

How Workers Can Save On Insurance

For industrial workers, such companies offer only the costlier whole-life or ordinary-life insurance, which is so expensive that most wage-earners cannot afford to carry enough of it to adequately protect their families in event of the breadwinner's death.

Some of the cooperative and mutual insurance companies, and a few stock insurance companies, will sell term insurance to industrial workers, but may charge them more if they are in so-called "dangerous" occupations.

In recent years many union locals have bypassed this discrimination which blocks industrial workers from having reasonably-priced insurance, by arranging for group insurance policies, either arranged through the employer or by the union local with an insurance company.

The regulations covering group insurance and the number of people who must be in the group vary in different states. In general it is the best way to buy insurance since the cost of life insurance can be reduced to as much as 40% below the price you might have to pay for a policy you buy individually.

Actually there is little reason in these times for discriminating against industrial workers by charging them more for insurance, or requiring them to buy the more expensive types of policies. One large insurance company—Northwestern National Life, with home offices in Minneapolis—recently announced that workers in so-called hazardous occupations will now be accepted for policies at rates paid by the average person.

Risks in most occupations today are much less than they used to be, and the company's loss experience on many hazardous-rated occupations has been running lower in recent years than was anticipated, company officials reported. They said they believe that the higher wages and living standards in many former low-wage occupations mean longer lives for such workers.

Credit Union Insurance

This company's attitude is to be applauded. There is further help for industrial workers seeking reasonably-priced insurance. One of our readers active in the credit-union movement, Alfred Kempf, of Euclid, O., points out that the credit unions now make available to members most types of life insurance.

If you belong to a credit union you can buy renewable term, ordinary life, mortgage insurance and other types at very reasonable rates. In fact, credit union rates for insurance are as much as 25% below the cost of many commercial insurance policies when individually bought (not on a group basis).

A credit union member can buy up to $15,000 worth of insurance from CUNA Mutual, the insurance company sponsored by the Credit Union National Association, if $5000 is in mortgage insurance, or otherwise, up to $10,000 worth of insurance. The minimum amount of life insurance you can buy from CUNA is $200.

The beauty of CUNA insurance for an industrial worker is that there is no discrimination. A worker can not only buy renewable term insurance, but need pay no higher premiums because of occupation.

CUNA's premium rate per $1000 of term insurance (five-year renewable term) is only $8.93 for a man aged 35. For a man of 40 the five-year renewable term insurance is $10.22 per $1000 of coverage. These rates are further reduced by dividends so the actual cost of the insurance is lower.

Members of credit unions can get rates and other information by writing to Cuna Mutual Insurance Society, Madison, Wisc. (Canadian headquarters are in Hamilton, Ont.). If you are not a member of a credit union, which is primarily a cooperative, self-help savings and loan association, you should investigate whether you are eligible to join one.

Violators Of FTC Orders Face 'Get Tough' Policy

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission has announced it is going to get tough on firms violating its orders.

Its first move will be to make a "spot check" survey of all of its cease and desist orders, stipulations and trade practice rules to see whether they are being obeyed.

FTC has on its books some 4500 cease and desist orders, 8400 stipulations and 180 sets of trade practice rules. One official said the commission has "no knowledge" of what sort of compliance it has been getting with about 95% of these, although it does know "some of the orders have been disregarded."

Court cases may result from the check-up. Under the FTC Act, a firm can be fined as much as $5000 a day each day the order has been disobeyed. When a company violates an order issued under the Clayton Anti-Trust Act, the FTC usually can start a contempt proceeding in a U. S. court.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

AS YOU CAN READ in the pages of this issue of The CIO News, one of the great events of the week was the gathering of CIO delegates from all of our international unions from all over our country to take part in our Full Employment Conference.

The 10-point program of CIO which was presented to these delegates can spell the difference between prosperity and the present recession, if we as trade unionists and as sincere citizens of the United States carry the message of economic hope it contains to all the people.

The program is far-reaching and is also fully discussed in this issue of The CIO News. But it is one thing to meet and deliberate in Washington; it is another thing to drive home that policy with effective action.

Your delegates worked night and day, contacting the congressmen and senators, persuading them and convincing them to act. You must convince the home folks. I will expect every representative of CIO to consider himself an educational committee of one, to go out and talk to the grocer, the filling station attendant, the school teachers, all the people in the community, giving them the views of CIO, and showing them how these views represent their best interests.

In our program, we continue to hit at one of the key problems, the problems of the farmers. We should visit with our friends on the farms. We should visit their leaders. We should show our sincere concern with their problems, and make it clear that we realize no section of the economy can remain prosperous while others suffer.

THERE IS ONE BIT of additional advice: When Sec. of the Treasury George Humphrey finished his remarks and was leaving the platform, David J. McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers of America-CIO, called to his attention the fact that there was already an act on the books, the Employment Act of 1946.

So far this Administration has done nothing to implement that act, and Pres. McDonald reminded Humphrey of that fact, and further called upon him to suggest to the President of the United States that something be done, and now.

You can write to the President of the United States. The law is clear and contains many provisions, which could be applied to help in this present situation. Yet the President has done nothing to meet the requirements of the law, has done nothing real to stimulate employment.

Certainly we have a right to demand that the President carry out the wishes of the people as expressed in that law, and certainly your own expression of interest can help bring him to action.

IT WAS GOOD TO MEET with the officers and representatives of the United Steelworkers of America-CIO, Dist. 32, at their district conference in Milwaukee, Wisc.

They are taking action, under the guidance of Dist. Dir. Walter Burke, to meet their problems and are constantly achieving advances in organizing the unorganized and providing the best of trade union service for their membership. I was happy that Burke invited me to attend. It's always pleasant to meet with old friends and co-workers, still in there giving their very best to building stronger and better trade unionism among the workers.

NLRB Puts Another Curb On Unions In Bargaining

A NEW RULING against unions has been issued by the Republican-controlled National Labor Relations Board.

The action was taken in a case involving the CIO Textile Workers and the Personal Products Co., Chicago, manufacturers of surgical dressings.

Under the ruling, union-sponsored slowdowns, partial strikes and refusal to work overtime were listed as unfair labor practices. The ruling followed the previously held board philosophy that "harassing" union actions are not protected under the Taft-Hartley Act, but marked the first time such conduct was labeled unfair.

The banned union activities allegedly occurred during prolonged negotiations, which dragged from October 1952 through June 1953. The decision pointed out it is "an abuse of the union's bargaining powers" for employes to use their economic power of withholding part of their services to "harass" the employer and thus "impair . . . the process of collective bargaining . . ."

The NLRB trial examiner admitted that "the company bargained hard; however, that is its privilege under the act."

URW Sets Wage Parleys

CONTRACT talks between the CIO Rubber Workers and the B. F. Goodrich Co. will begin May 25 in Cincinnati.

URW-CIO represents about 18,000 Goodrich employes in nine locals from New Jersey to California. Negotiations are already in progress with Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., another Big Four firm.

URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said the union is seeking a general wage increase, a guaranteed annual wage program, adjustment of inter-plant and intra-plant inequities and various fringe benefits. Present average straight time hourly earnings of Goodrich workers is $2.05.

Steel Pact Talks Open This Week

NEGOTIATIONS for new contracts in the basic steel industry open May 18 when the CIO Steelworkers and U. S. Steel, bellwether of the industry, get together around a bargaining table in Pittsburgh for discussions on the union's proposals for a complete new agreement.

USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald will head the union's negotiators. Across the table, the company's "team" will be lead by Benjamin F. Fairless, chairman of the board of directors—a departure from Big Steel's past practice.

Discussions will center on the union's demand for practically a full revision of contracts that expire June 30. Similar demands have been served on other basic producers, who employe about 650,000 USA-CIO members.

THE UNION is seeking a general wage increase, better pension and insurance plans, the guaranteed annual wage, and improvements in a wide range of contract clauses ranging from hours and shift premiums to the full union shop and grievance machinery.

Negotiations aproached without any indication that a strike or lockout was anticipated by either side.

McDonald made it clear that "it is not proper to refer to June 30 as a strike deadline." That is the date when contracts expire, he explained, adding that "we hope to have this all settled long before that." All points in the demands, he stressed, are "equally important."

The USA-CIO president refused to indicate the size of the "package" the union would be willing to settle for.

The bargaining program was drawn up by the union's Wage Policy Committee of 170 members at a two-day meeting in Pittsburgh. McDonald disclosed that the union and the company have been meeting since June on the welfare and insurance clauses.

Top Officers Of UPWA Picked Again

TOP OFFICERS of the CIO Packinghouse Workers were reelected without opposition as the union's ninth constitutional convention concluded in Sioux City, Ia.

They are Pres. Ralph Helstein, Vice Presidents Russell B. Lasley, Waterloo, Ia.; A. T. Stephens, Chicago, and Fred W. Dowling, Toronto, Ont., and Sec.-Treas. G. R. Hathaway.

Three new district directors were chosen and seven others were reelected. The newcomers are George Thomas, Fort Worth, Tex., to replace A. J. Pittman of the same city as head of the union's Dist. 8; Edmund Dumas, Atlanta, Ga., in place of A. O. McKinney, in Dist. 9, and Charles Hayes, Chicago, who succeeds Harold E. Nielsen as director of Dist. 1. Nielsen, in ill health, did not run for reelection and endorsed Hayes' candidacy.

PAC SONG as played by Vito Brando, Local 1011, UAW-CIO (right), wins approval of Sen. Morse (Ind. Oreg.) who was the principal speaker at 6th Annual Cook County CIO Conference at Chicago. Chicago papers did not carry a line on the meeting. (See column below.)

CIO Councils In Action

A BLACKOUT was laid down recently by the entire Chicago press on the annual conference and banquet of the Cook County CIO Council.

Not a single line appeared in any of the four Chicago dailies on the event which was attended by over 500 CIO leaders and was addressed by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.).

Morse called for the re-election of Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), who, he said has "the highest intellect, the keenest brain, and the deepest social conscience of any man in the U. S. Senate."

Referring to "The Great Crusade" which the GOP said it was conducting in '52, Morse urged the Illinois workers to "join a true crusade—a crusade to return the Congress of the U. S. to the people of the U. S."

Insurance Bars Relief

If you are a jobless worker in Michigan and have a life insurance policy of more than $500, chances are that you can't get welfare relief.

Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins of the Michigan CIO told members of the State CIO Community Services Committee that an effort is being made to lift this restriction imposed by county and city welfare commissions.

- A "gimmick" keeps Fostoria, O., from being classified as a "distress area" entitled to special consideration in awarding of government contracts. The Fostoria CIO Council reported this reason: Unemployment in the city is 8%, but since it is classified as part of a larger "area" where joblessness has not reached the required 6%, it is not entitled to special consideration.
- The Buffalo CIO Council has increased the per capita payments from its affiliates by 2c a month to employ a staff member who will assist the increasing number of jobless to get unemployment compensation. The Council reported that many claimants are treated discourteously and only 30% of the furloughed workers are able to collect compensation.
- The Minnesota CIO Council has called on Gov. C. Elmer Anderson to summon a special session of the Legislature to act on the unemployment crisis.
- Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol of the California CIO Council and Floyd Gartrell, California director of the CIO Rubber Workers, have been named to the State Advisory Council on Employment Service.
- The Greater Los Angeles CIO Council has called on Pres. Eisenhower and Agriculture Sec. Benson to distribute surplus food to unemployed workers and their families.
- The Kentucky CIO Council quoted the State Dept. of Economic Security as saying that the March rate of unemployment was the highest in the entire country.
- The Connecticut CIO Council broadcast over six radio stations throughout the State a 15-minute recording of a denunciation of Sen. McCarthy by Bishop Bernard J. Sheil at the recent CIO Auto Workers Education Conference at Chicago.
- A hospital fund drive paid dividends to the Lansing CIO Council. At a meeting to aid the drive arranged by the Council and affiliated locals, union member complaints led campaign leaders to declare that labor would be represented on hospital boards.
- The Indiana CIO Council will hold Indiana CIO Day in Washington May 17-19 to make its members' desires known to the State's congressmen and to visit National CIO headquarters.

Here and There: Twenty-three classes will be offered from June 13 to July 24 at the 11th annual Michigan CIO Council Leadership Training Institute to be held at the FDR-CIO Labor Center, nine miles north of Port Huron . . . A women's steering committee is planning a Conference on Family Participation in Political Action of the Greater Cincinnati CIO Council May 22 . . . The Pennsylvania CIO Community Services Committee will hold its annual training institute at Pennsylvania State College June 20-25.

Farm-Labor Alliance For Public Power Supported

SPEAKERS at a banquet sponsored by the Electric Consumers Information Committee at Washington last week called for an alliance of labor and farmers to win public power for all people at reasonable rates.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told some 250 delegates that the struggle for public power is "a common denominator" for bringing labor and farmers together.

The banquet was held in connection with the Electric Consumers Workshop, sponsored by the committee. A score of CIO members were delegates to the two-day event.

REUTHER SAID that "the fight for public power is part of the struggle" for "translating material values into human values."

"The forces of monopoly are opposed to the economy of abundance," he said, "because monopoly can make greater profits by dividing up scarcity.

"We can't have peace unless we as a free people know how to gird production to the needs of people.

"We need a common denominator to bring us all together. We need to bring labor, farmers and public power proponents together.

"Labor and farmers can't solve their problems in a vacuum."

Reuther said that, just as in 1929, the farmers were the first to be affected by recession in 1953. He noted that only five million cars will be made this year, although U. S. factories have a production capacity of eight million cars a year.

THERE ARE enough farm families in the U. S., he said, to buy an additional three million cars—if they had the purchasing power. Reuther noted that CIO strongly supports a program that will provide full price equity for farmers.

Reuther declared that the farm economy was adversely affected because five million unemployed workers lost a potential purchasing power of $30 billion a year.

He said that "by and large" the same congressmen who vote against "the farmers' needs and public power also vote for Taft-Hartley and against minimum wage improvements."

Reuther castigated private utilities for following a policy of "too little too late and at a cost always too high" and politicians who are interested in "keeping up the fiction" of the conflict between farmers and labor.

THE NEED of labor and farmers to cooperate also was stressed by Sen. Langer (R. N.D.). He offered his own state as an example of cooperation of farmers, labor and small businessmen through the Non-Partisan League.

He called for a larger staff for Clyde T. Ellis, chairman of ECIC and the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association. Langer said the Senate Judiciary subcommittee, which he heads, plans to investigate private power monopoly, and to review the accomplishments and the needs of public power.

Crossed Wires

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the Electric Consumers' Workshop delegates that the prospects were brighter than the last time he spoke to them.

"The last time I met with you (at the public power conference in 1952), you were being investigated," he said. "I suppose the reason you are not being investigated is the they're busy investigating each other on Capitol Hill."

JUST BEFORE battle over Taft-Hartley amendments came to a head in the Senate, three Democrats who spearheaded the victorious fight to send the changes back to committee checked the vote. They are (left to right) Sen. Smathers (Fla.), Minority Leader Lyndon Johnson, and Sen. Hill (Ala.). Hill made the recommittal motion, which carried by a 50-42 vote.

Here's Senate Vote Killing Super-T-H

Here is the roll call vote by which the Senate, on May 7, 1954, voted to recommit the Administration's anti-labor Taft-Hartley amendments to the Senate Labor Committee. The vote was 50 to 42 for recommital.

On this roll call, prepared by the CIO Legislative Dept., R is a right vote for recommital, W is a wrong vote against recommital, PR is paired right for recommital, and PW is paired wrong against recommital. The vote:

ALABAMA
Hill (D)	R
Sparkman (D)	R
ARIZONA
Hayden (D)	R
Goldwater (R)	W
ARKANSAS
McClellan (D)	R
Fulbright (D)	R
CALIFORNIA
Knowland (R)	W
Kuchel (R)	W
COLORADO
Johnson (D)	R
Millikin (R)	W
CONNECTICUT
Bush (R)	W
Purtell (R)	W
DELAWARE
Williams (R)	W
Frear (D)	R
FLORIDA
Holland (D)	R
Smathers (D)	R
GEORGIA
George (D)	R
Russell (D)	R
IDAHO
Dworshak (R)	W
Welker (R)	W
ILLINOIS
Douglas (D)	R
Dirksen (R)	W
INDIANA
Capehart (R)	PW
Jenner (R)	PW
IOWA
Hickenlooper (R)	W
Gillette (D)	R
KANSAS
Schoeppel (R)	W
Carlson (R)	W
KENTUCKY
Clements (D)	R
Cooper (R)	W
LOUISIANA
Ellender (D)	R
Long (D)	R
MAINE
Smith (R)	W
Payne (R)	W
MARYLAND
Butler (R)	W
Beall (R)	W
MASSACHUSETTS
Saltonstall (R)	W
Kennedy (D)	R
MICHIGAN
Ferguson (R)	W
Potter (R)	W
MINNESOTA
Thye (R)	W
Humphrey (D)	R
MISSISSIPPI
Eastland (D)	PR
Stennis (D)	R
MISSOURI
Hennings (D)	R
Symington (D)	R
MONTANA
Murray (D)	R
Mansfield (D)	R
NEBRASKA
Butler (R)	W
Bowring (R)	W
NEVADA
McCarran (D)	R
Malone (R)	R
NEW HAMPSHIRE
Bridges (R)	W
Upton (R)	W
NEW JERSEY
Smith (R)	W
Hendrickson (R)	W
NEW MEXICO
Chavez (D)	R
Anderson (D)	R
NEW YORK
Ives (R)	W
Lehman (D)	R
NORTH CAROLINA
Hoey (D)	R
Lennon (D)	R
NORTH DAKOTA
Langer (R)	R
Young (R)	R
OHIO
Bricker (R)	W
Burke (D)	R
OKLAHOMA
Kerr (D)	R
Monroney (D)	R
OREGON
Cordon (R)	W
Morse (Ind.)	R
PENNSYLVANIA
Martin (R)	W
Duff (R)	W
RHODE ISLAND
Green (D)	R
Pastore (D)	R
SOUTH CAROLINA
Maybank (D)	PR
Johnston (D)	R
SOUTH DAKOTA
Mundt (R)	W
Case (R)	W
TENNESSEE
Kefauver (D)	R
Gore (D)	R
TEXAS
Johnson (D)	R
Daniel (D)	R
UTAH
Watkins (R)	W
Bennett (R)	W
VERMONT
Aiken (R)	W
Flanders (R)	W
VIRGINIA
Byrd (D)	R
Robertson (D)	R
WASHINGTON
Magnuson (D)	R
Jackson (D)	R
WEST VIRGINIA
Kilgore (D)	R
Neely (D)	R
WISCONSIN
Wiley (R)	W
McCarthy (R)	W
WYOMING
Hunt (D)	R
Barrett (R)	W

5-17

Defensive Victory On T-H Hailed

CIO GREETED the recent Senate vote which halted the drive for a super Taft-Hartley Act with "mixed feelings," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said last week.

CIO looked upon the 50-42 vote to recommit the bill to the Senate Labor Committee as a "victory to keep Taft-Hartley from getting worse but no victory as far as our desire to get the act repealed is concerned," a CIO spokesman said.

Republican congressional leaders, following a White House conference, announced they had abandoned "temporarily at least" any plan to push the Administration bill during the balance of the session. The House measure is still bottled up in committee.

IN A LETTER to CIO councils, Reuther praised 'the teamwork and unselfish cooperation exerted in a common cause"—the holding action to keep the law from becoming worse.

"It is not easy," he said, "to express in mere words the value of the supremely effective activity which you conducted in this great effort." To all state and city CIO councils, Reuther expressed his "gratitude and congratulations for a job well done."

Sen. Hoey Dies After Long Term

Sen. Hoey (D. N.J.) died last week. He was 76 and had served in the House and as North Carolina governor.

'A Dirty Business Is Big Business'—CIO Opposes Wiretapping Measures

THE CIO Executive Board last week urged the defeat of all pending bills which would legalize wiretapping, saying it was "offensive to our concept of fair play and invades the security of the individual."

The CIO's statement was sent to Sen. William Langer (R., N.D.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The statement called wiretapping "obnoxious" to America's "most basic traditions." It urged Congress to strengthen the present ban and provide stiff penalties for all violations.

"We know what freedom means and we know from watching the experience of labor in totalitarian countries what the loss of freedom means," the board said. "That is why we ejected the agents of totalitarianism from our own councils; that is why we oppose the use of the methods of totalitarianism by anybody, anywhere, at any time."

The CIO noted that wiretapping was widespread, adding, "this invasion of privacy has become a habitual public and private practice; the dirty business has become a big business."

"It is estimated that there are more than 100,000 wiretap instruments in use in this country, and there is general recognition that private and business phones are tapped in order to spy on unions, business partners, political rivals, and possibly erring husbands and wives," the CIO said.

The board called wiretapping "one of the worst kinds of snooping" and noted "it exposes many innocent bystanders for each person whose line is tapped; it exposes every area of personal life in addition to conversations concerning the subject under investigation."

"We yield to no group in our support of effective measures to block Soviet espionage and sabotage in our country," the CIO said.

"But the proponents of wiretap legislation have failed to make out a case for the effectiveness of wiretapping and of wiretap evidence in this field. The dangers inherent in this invasion of our basic right of privacy far outweigh any showing that has been made for wiretapping as an arm of national security."

'Tenants Pay For FHA Deals, Windfall Profits'

ADMISSION by Federal Housing Administration officials that tenants paid excessive rents because builders got "windfall" profits was disclosed last week by Sen. Byrd (D. Va.).

Digging into the current housing scandals, Byrd learned that FHA allowed rentals in government-insured projects to be based on "estimated replacement cost" rather than actual cost.

The burden of the excessive loans, Byrd said, "will fall heavily upon those who rent in the projects . . ."

Mayors of 16 of the largest U. S. cities urged "decisive action" by Congress on a federal housing program.

Tale of Steel Cities (See Pages 6 and 7)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., May 24, 1954 — 82 — Vol. 17, No. 21

CIO Hails School Bias Ban

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE SUPREME COURT last week removed one of the crushing injustices that have long burdened Negro Americans by ruling unanimously that segregation in the public schools is unconstitutional.

In two historic opinions read by Chief Justice Earl Warren, the high court junked the "separate but equal" facilities doctrine, so far as the schools are concerned, that had stood since 1896.

In one, covering cases originating in Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia and Delaware, it held that segregation in public school education deprives Negroes "of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment" to the Constitution.

In the second, restricted to the District of Columbia, it ruled that school segregation "is a denial of the due process of law guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment."

Application Delayed

The decision was hailed as the most significant judicial landmark in race relations since the Dred Scott decision in 1857.

Because of the "wide application of this decision, and because of the great variety of local conditions," Warren said, the formulation of decrees will be delayed until the court hears further arguments on Oct. 12.

He specifically invited the U. S. Attorney General to participate, and invited the attorneys general of states where segregation is practiced to appear as friends of the court by applying for permission to do so by Sept. 15, and submitting briefs by Oct. 1.

The District of Columbia, Kansas, South Carolina and Kansas cases reached the Supreme Court on appeal from decisions by lower courts which—relying on the "separate but equal" decision of 58 years ago—had upheld segregation. The Delaware case was an appeal by the State School Board from a State Supreme Court ruling that segregation as practiced there was unconstitutional because the facilities were "separate" but "not equal."

New Approach Needed

In the opinion covering the four States, Warren recalled that argument was heard in 1952, followed by reargument last year largely devoted to the circumstances surrounding the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868. Neither the reargument nor the court's own investigation, he said, cast enough light to resolve the problem.

"Today, education is perhaps the most important function of state and local governments," he said.

"Compulsory school attendance laws and the great expenditures for education both demonstrate our recognition of the importance of education to our democratic society. It is required in the performance of our most basic public responsibilities. . . . It is the very foundation of good citizenship. . . .

"We come then to the question presented: Does segregation of children in public schools solely on the basis of race, even though the physical factors and other 'tangible' factors may be equal, deprive the children of the minority group of equal education facilities?

"We believe that it does."

GRANT OF $75,000 for educational work in race relations was given by Philip Murray Memorial Foundation to National Association for Advancement of Colored People, with CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther (center) seen handing check to Pres. Arthur Spingarn (left) and Roy Wilkins of NAACP. Supreme Court school segregation ruling gives it added meaning.

Top Priority

"Top priority" has been given by CIO to the ending of all forms of discrimination, according to William H. Oliver, co-director of the CIO Auto Workers Fair Practices Dept.

Speaking at Boston College's annual Labor Institute on Human Relations, Oliver said:

"The elimination of discrimination and segregation from every phase of American life has been, is, and will continue to be one of the top priority items of the CIO."

After referring to previous school cases, the opinion went on:

"To separate them (grade and high school children) from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone. . . .

"We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate education facilities are inherently unequal. Therefore, we hold that the plaintiffs and others similarly situated for whom the actions have been brought are, by reason of the segregation complained of, deprived of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment."

Reaction to the decision, as might be expected, was mixed. Thurgood Marshall, counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who fought the cases from the States, called it "the most significant decision to date in the field of civil rights."

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said it was "a heartwarming reaffirmation of the American democratic principles that are inherent in the 14th Amendment."

The CIO played an important contributory role to the legal background of the Supreme Court's decision outlawing school segregation as unconstitutional.

Its "friend of the court" briefs, one filed during the court's 1952 term and the second a year later, followed the same general line of legal reasoning used in the decision. They were prepared by CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, and Thomas E. Harris and David E. Feller, assistant general counsels.

Reaction in the South generally followed "wait and see" or acceptance lines. Atty. Gen. Harold Frazier of Kansas said that his office "will see that the ruling will be complied with to the fullest." Gov. Allan Shivers said Texas will comply, but warned that "abolishing segregation is not a panacrea."

Some Violent Reaction

However, politicians from the "heart" of the South—the Carolinas, Georgia, Mississippi—were virulent in their denunciation of the ruling. Gov. Herman Talmadge (Ga.) hinted he will use troops if necessary to prevent its enforcement. Sen. Russell (D. Ga.) blasted it as a "clear invasion" of legislative prerogatives by the court. Rep. Lanham (D. Ga.) was sharply critical, but said he didn't anticipate any "uprising."

Northern leaders for the most part expressed satisfaction. Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) termed it "another step in the forward march of democracy." "This is news which all free men throughout the world must hail with joy," said Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.).

THE CIO HAILED the Supreme Court decision ending segregation in the public schools as "a heartwarming reaffirmation of American democratic principles."

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said "the unanimous nature of the decision clearly indicates that honest Americans recognize that violations or deprivations of civil rights have no place in our nation."

The CIO, which had long aided the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in its court fight on the issue, "will vigorously support every democratic means to implement this decision in our communities," said Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

"Our country will be judged in the manner of how we adjust to this decision," noted Carey, who heads CIO's Civil Rights Committee.

Blow At Communists

"The court is to be congratulated," Reuther said, "for this great and inspiring decision which will benefit America not only at home but in every corner of the globe.

"The decision will be a body blow to the efforts of the Soviet Communists to use America's civil rights record as a propaganda weapon against all the nations of the free world.

"As a result of this historic decision, children of every minority in the United States will receive direct and substantial benefits, and, in turn, a greater share in our democracy."

In a reference to CIO participation in the legal aspects of the fight for civil rights, Reuther went to to say "the CIO is proud to have played a role as a 'friend of the court' in the school segregation cases and in many of the earlier civil rights cases that built the legal groundwork for today's decision by the Supreme Court."

Carey, who is also president of the CIO Electrical Workers, pointed out that the decision "breathes life into another recommendation of Pres. Truman's Committee on Civil Rights." He continued:

"This decision represents the official recognition of our government that the separate but equal doctrine is inconsistent with the fundamental equalitarianism of the American way of life."

A Quick Transition

Carey pledged the resources of the CIO Civil Rights Committee and the rest of the CIO "toward realizing a quick and peaceful transition to an unsegregated American educational community."

"Our country will be judged," he declared, "in the manner of how we adjust to this decision."

From Al Hartnett, IUE-CIO secretary-treasurer and chairman of that union's Civil Rights Committee, came the comment that "Communist propagandists have for years cited our Jim Crow schools as an example of American hypocrisy."

"Today," he said, "we dealt the Kremlin a tremendous blow by announcing that there is no room in our country for second-class citizens. Those throughout the world who look to us for leadership and strength against totalitarianism have more hope in their hearts, I am sure, because of the Court's decision."

Labor Press Exclusive—

The Pegler Libel Case

—Story On Page 2

Labor Press Exclusive—

Pegler Challenged In $500,000 Libel Case

(Editor's note: The nation's publishers have virtually banned all news stories about a major New York libel suit involving Westbrook Pegler, the anti-union columnist who has been attacking unions for many years. Because CIO News readers have virtually no other opportunity for learning about this important case, The CIO News will give full coverage to the trial as long as it lasts.)

By AL ZACK

WESTBROOK Pegler, one of America's most conservative, union-hating columnists, was uncomfortably occupying the defendant's chair in a federal court last week.

For the first time in his long history of viciously attacking everyone and everything he didn't like, Pegler was on the receiving end. He was the target of a $500,000 libel suit, the result of a 1949 column.

Plaintiff in the action was Quentin Reynolds, famed World War II correspondent, feature writer for Collier's and the Readers Digest, TV and radio personality and the author of many books.

Co-defendants with Pegler were the Hearst Corp. and its New York publishing affiliate, which puts out the New York Journal-American.

Wall Of Silence

Despite the prominence of the two men and of the Hearst chain, and despite the size of the suit, one of largest libel actions in recent years, the trial is going virtually unnoticed, as a result of a paper wall of silence erected by the nation's publishers.

Only the New York Post has given the now 10-day-old trial consistent coverage, with the New York Herald Tribune, which figures indirectly in the case, reporting it occasionally but briefly. Newsweek Magazine also is covering it.

Other newspapers, for unspecified reasons, have ignored the trial although two major wire services, in the opening days of the hearing, covered it completely.

Key to the trial is the long-time hatred Pegler held for one of the nation's most famous liberal columnists, Heywood Broun, founding president of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

WESTBROOK PEGLER
The virulent anti-labor columnist is challenged . . .

In 1949, a new biography of Broun was published and Reynolds reviewed it in the GOP New York Herald Tribune. It was this review which aroused Pegler's ire and he viciously attacked Reynolds in a column which appeared on Nov. 29, 1949.

More than four years later, and after a series of legalistic maneuvers by the Pegler forces, Reynold's half-million dollar libel suit has finally come to trial. It marks the first time, according to Pegler's own boasts, that any of his victims have ever gotten him into a courtroom to face trial.

The trial is being held in a small, oak-panelled courtroom on the ninth floor of the Federal Court Building in Foley Square in downtown New York City. There, Judge Edward Weinfeld and a jury of eight men and four women are hearing voluminous testimony about the column which ran in 186 newspapers, with a combined circulation of 12 million.

The trio of defendants, with more opportunity to challenge prospective jurors than the plaintiff had, used up all of its challenges before a jury was picked. Reynolds challenged only a few on the jury panel. Courtroom observers noted Pegler challenged many prospective jurors with Jewish-sounding names as well as active trade unionists.

The Pegler column, which became Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1, accused Reynolds of being a coward with an "artificial reputation" for bravery who had a "yellow streak" in his "mangy hide." Pegler also charged Reynolds was a "British propagandist," a "pro-Communist."

Pegler's Allegations

Pegler's insults included charges that Reynolds engaged in public displays of nudism, proposed to Broun's wife on the way to Broun's burial and later "snubbed her publicly." In passing, Pegler also slapped at the Herald Tribune, insinuating it was "leftist" in its choice of books for review, and reviewers for books.

Reynolds, only witness to date in the trial, is a big, six-footer, with curly, iron-gray hair, who testifies in a deep, resonant voice, familiar to millions of radio listeners.

Pegler, whose tall-frame appears to be rigidly encased in a corset, strides into the courtroom bearing a brown briefcase, which never leaves his side. Today, the columnist with the venom-dripping typewriter looks little like the picture Hearst editors use to illustrate his column. The stern-visaged man those pictures portray has now become a fat, scowling, pouting man, who in four days of trial, never smiled once.

QUENTIN REYNOLDS
. . . in $500,000 libel case brought by veteran war correspondent.

Early in the trial, Reynolds set out to demonstrate the loss he suffered as a victim of Pegler's wrath. During a 17-year period, Reynolds sold 311 articles to Collier's, receiving about $350,000. But since the day of the Pegler column, Collier's has not bought a single line written by Reynolds.

Defense Tactics

Pegler's attorney, Charles Henry, chief lawyer for Hearst, has set himself two goals. He seeks to prove that the case is just "a squabble between two prima donnas of literature" and also that what Pegler wrote was true, and, in any case, was instigated by Reynolds' book review.

Henry, a tall, spare man with white hair, white mustache and deeply lined face, has a hard voice; snaps his questions at Reynolds and wanders far afield in his cross-examination.

Judge Weinfeld has been lenient, but he brought Henry up short more than once, and last week delivered him a stern, verbal spanking when Henry's questions seemed to blame Reynolds for war planning which the Hearst outfit thought was mistaken.

"No correspondent is responsible for war programs or planning," the Judge noted in his long lecture. "Get on with the questions."

WESTBROOK Pegler, who writes as though he were daring and fearless, had a chance to prove his courage in the Federal District Court recently. Instead, he failed.

It was at the conclusion of a day of testimony when Pegler was packing his ever-present brown briefcase. A spectator, Dale Kramer, walked toward him.

Kramer is the author of a biography of Heywood Broun, reviewed by Quentin Reynolds in the N. Y. Herald Tribune. It was subsequent to this review that Pegler wrote the insulting column which is the basis for the Reynolds' libel suit.

Kramer had read a recent Pegler column, which claimed Kramer could not be reached and the author approached the columnist, holding out his hand. "You said you wanted to meet me," he commented.

Pegler swallowed hard. "I won't shake hands. You are a bastard."

"What did you call me?" demanded the white-haired, 200-pound, 42-year-old Kramer.

'You're Another—'

"You heard me," retorted the nearly-60 columnist, who is getting fat but has little gray in his hair.

"Well, if you called me a bastard, you are the same," Kramer replied.

Pegler, his head pushed forward in a turtle-like pose, nearly ran 10 steps to a bewildered court attendant. Pointing his briefcase at the attendant, Pegler wailed:

"This man was threatening me." The court attache, who had heard the exchange, looked puzzled. "I mean it," Pegler continued, his voice rising. "He was threatening me."

The attendant rushed to the judge's chambers and shortly Pegler, Kramer and lawyers for both sides were called into the judge's private room.

When they came out, Pegler rushed by newsmen, muttering "Nope, nope, nope" to queries for a statement. Kramer reported the judge ordered them both to avoid each other, verbally and otherwise, in or around the Federal Building.

His Nibs

Westbrook Pegler strode arrogantly into the Federal Court Building last week and ignored the half-filled elevator which was waiting. He tried to brush aside the operator of a car clearly marked "For Judges Only" but was rebuffed in his attempt to get favored treatment.

That night when he left the courthouse, he entered a long, sleek, black, chauffeur-driven Cadillac, which had been parked in a "No-Parking" zone in front of the building, and was driven majestically away.

Kohler Has Guns, Tear Gas In Struck Plant, Boss Says

TESTIMONY that the Kohler Co. has guns in its struck plant at Kohler, Wisc.—and possibly tear gas he "would not object" to using—has been given by Herbert V. Kohler, president of the notoriously anti-labor plumbing fixtures firm.

Some 3500 members of the CIO Auto Workers are in the seventh week of a walkout at the plant in defense of their grievance machinery and seniority rights, which the company wants to cut from a new contract. The union is also seeking a pay increase of 20c an hour.

Kohler's testimony came at a hearing before the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board investigating company charges that the union has engaged in illegal mass picketing and unfair labor practices.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and officials of the local union discussed the presence of guns and tear gas in the Kohler plant.

Kohler's firm has a long anti-union history dating from a strike in 1934 which the company broke after two strikers were killed and 47 were wounded. The UAW won a National Labor Relations Board election at the plant in 1952 and spent seven months negotiating a first contract.

Kohler said the company had "plenty of guns" in the plant and said the same guns were in the plant in 1934.

Lyman Conger, company negotiating chairman, testified he had been carrying a club and said there were "hundreds like it in the plant." Conger also said he is an unpaid deputy sheriff of Sheboygan County.

The UAW presented its side of the case in full-page newspaper ads in cities where there are large Kohler distributorships. The union cited the long opposition of Kohler to organization by its employes and the UAW contract demands on the company, along with Kohler's position, point by point.

The union specifically put responsibility on Kohler for terminating the contract, breaking off negotiations, refusing to discuss the issues, walking out of meetings called by government conciliators and refusing to bargain.

At issue in the strike is a 20c hourly general pay hike with an additional 10c an hour for skilled workers. The company has offered only 3c and that on conditions "that Kohler workers accept a contract greatly inferior to the old contract."

Feinsinger Named Umpire Of Auto Union-GM Contract

APPOINTMENT of Dr. Nathan P. Feinsinger, impartial arbitrator under the CIO's arbitration plan, as umpire under the contract between the CIO Auto Workers and General Motors was announced last week.

Feinsinger, a veteran in labor mediation and mediation, is 51 and a law professor at the University of Wisconsin. He was chairman of the presidential fact finding board in the steel crisis of 1946, and was head of the Wage Stabilization Board at the time of the dispute between the CIO Steelworkers and the industry in 1952.

The contract, covering nearly 200,000 UAW members, is the largest in the world. Feinsinger succeeds Gabriel N. Alexander.

NATHAN P. FEINSINGER

2+2=9½

SOUNDS CRAZY . . . Does it? Not as crazy as it seems . . .

If you—and millions like you—will invest 2c out of your pocket, and about two minutes out of your lunch period today—this could mean as much as a 9.5c hourly wage increase for you.

How Is That?

Just spend 2c for a post-card and take about two minutes to write to each of your Senators, asking them to support the proposal to increase personal income-tax exemptions from $600 to $800 this year (and to $1000 next year.)

Such an increase would mean that the average wage earner (supporting a family of four) would save $160 per year, or over $3 per week—or over 7.5c per hour in take-home pay. This is equal to a 9.5c wage increase.

Get it now?
2c plus two minutes equals 9.5c per hour!
Does this tax program make sense?

It certainly does! With increasing unemployment and short-time work weeks, this country needs more customers and that means more purchasing power in the hands of people. Higher tax exemptions will do precisely that. It certainly makes lots more sense than giving additional tax bonanzas to the corporations and stockholders—which is what the Administration is urging.

DON'T DELAY . . . DO IT TODAY . . . 9.5c AIN'T HAY.
DO YOUR PART . . . LET YOUR SENATOR KNOW

'Staggering' Atomic Give-Away Rapped

A "STAGGERING give-away program" was the way CIO described proposed amendments to the Atomic Energy Act that would promote corporate monopoly control of A-energy facilities to the detriment of the U. S. public.

Benjamin Sigal, general counsel of the CIO Electrical Workers, testified before the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy that the amendments were "a bald and unadorned surrender of valuable rights which may be worth untold millions of dollars."

CIO is opposed, Sigal said, to any amendments of the present act "which would grant the right of private ownership in production facilities, or would change the present provisions in regard to patents, public lands or restraint of trade.

"We think no change in the present law is necessary, except with regard to international agreements and the exchange of information with friendly foreign nations," Sigal testified.

HE CALLED, however, for support of those amendments "which would provide for more extensive international agreement on the subject of atomic energy and for a wider dissemination of information, particularly to friendly nations, than are possible under the present Act."

In opposing private ownership of atomic energy production facilities, Sigal said the present act permits the fullest development of A-energy for industrial use and that corporate ownership will not speed industrial development.

He pointed out that private industry already has access to nearly all, if not all, the technical knowledge the U. S. people have paid for with an investment of over $12 billion.

All atomic energy facilities and laboratories are operated by private industry and the contractors "would certainly not gain greater knowledge by owning those facilities than they do now by operating them," Sigal said.

"The vast public investment already made in the atomic energy industry," Sigal testified, "requires that nuclear power reactors be developed under the auspices of the government so that the people of this country will not be denied what is potentially one of the major fruits of their tremendous expenditures."

Sigal voiced the opinion that "unless proof of the need for amendments on patent privileges and private ownership at this time is compelling, we think that, at the present juncture of world affairs, it would be a serious mistake to adopt them."

HE NOTED the failure of the Atomic Energy Commission to file a report with the Joint Committee on its estimate of the "social, political, economic and international effects" of industrial, commercial or other non-military uses of fissionable material.

'Joe Keep Out,' Says Ferguson

Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.) thinks Joe McCarthy would be more of a hindrance than a help in his re-election campaign this fall and doesn't want the Wisconsin junior Senator's support. He made that plain in a televison program, "Meet the Press," when he said McCarthy "wouldn't present any of the issues I want to present."

CIO Prods Ike To Push For Jobless Pay Boosts

THE CIO last week prodded Pres. Eisenhower to "give leadership" to his own program for substantial improvements in unemployment compensation benefits.

A letter to the Chief Executive from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther reminded him that "in January, the workers of America were heartened" by the President's recommendations to Congress in this field.

"In May," Reuther wrote, "the workers of America sincerely trust that you will give leadership to the important task of implementing these recommendations."

Reuther warned that "without such leadership, unemployment insurance is certain to remain static and the badly needed improvements, which you so eloquently stated, will not be achieved."

THE CIO PRESIDENT added that with four or five exceptions, the states "clearly will not act to improve benefits this year."

Congress, Reuther said, "still has time to act so that millions of workers and their families who are today's victims of layoffs, furloughs or shutdowns will be assured of something approaching an adequate standard of living."

Reuther reported the box score of state Legislature action on unemployment compensation. Only three states, California, Virginia and Michigan, completed action on improvements.

On The Spot

Although unemployment compensation is generally a matter for state legislative action, Republicans in Congress will be put on the spot over Pres. Eisenhower's recommendations.

Their choice will come when the District of Columbia unemployment compensation bill comes up for action soon. It provides for an increase in weekly benefits to $30, up from $20, and 26 weeks duration, up from 20. The $30 figure is about $3 under half the average D. C. wage of $65.28.

Fourteen state legislatures which met this year did not react favorably to the President's recommendations that they boost unemployment compensation to 50% of wages and lengthen benefits to 26 weeks.

"I am forced to report this unfortunate political fact of life," Reuther wrote, "that despite your January recommendations it is the Democratic legislators who are leading the fight for improvement of the law in various states, and it is in general the Republican legislators who are leading the opposition."

"Millions of workers are deprived of benefits altogether," Reuther said, because of restrictive provisions, lack of understanding of complicated rules, or "because they do not force through their appeals in the face of the many challenges offered by employers who are seeking to keep down their tax payments."

A TOP White House economic adviser last week claimed the business recession had been "slowed down to a stop"—yet jobless pay claims climbed by 10% in a week.

Dr. Gabriel Hauge, a member of Pres. Eisenhower's Council of Economic Advisers, said on TV that the business drop has stopped and predicted a "rising phase" throughout the next year.

The sharp climb of 10% in new claims for state unemployment compensation benefits developed during the week ending on May 8, according to a Labor Dept. report. Total for that week was 327,246—some 69% above a year ago. And total continuing claims, while dipping slightly in the one week period, still are 137% above a year ago.

The increase was credited to "economic conditions" in New York, Michigan, Ohio and other industrial states.

IN THE STEEL industry—now operating at some 70% of capacity—employment dropped to 620,500 in April, some 16,000 below the previous month. And average working hours dipped to 37.2 a week.

USA Opens Basic Steel Wage Talks

NEGOTIATIONS for new contracts in the basic steel industry were opened last week by the CIO Steelworkers in an atmosphere of optimism for speedy settlements.

On May 18, USA-CIO negotiators headed by Pres. David J. McDonald spelled out for the U. S. Steel Corp. the proposed contract changes approved by the union's 170-man Intl. Wage-Policy Committee.

"We expect to get into bargaining immediately," McDonald said after a two-hour session.

The following day another meeting was held at which the company, having studied the demands overnight asked questions and sought additional details.

And on May 20, bargaining got under way with Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp.

The first session between the steel union and U. S. Steel was attended by some 50 union representatives and about 80 company spokesmen.

AMONG THE latter was Benjamin F. Fairless, chairman of the board of directors, who sat in for a brief period during which he made a short address. As usual, John A. Stephens, vice president in charge of industrial relations, headed the company's delegation.

Both McDonald and Stephens described the first meeting as friendly.

The outcome of the union's negotiations with Big Steel is expected to set a pattern for the rest of basic steel and for the fabricating section of the industry as well. About 150,000 USA-CIO members are covered by the U. S. Steel agreement, with 450,000 additional members coming under other basic steel pacts.

The bargaining program approved by the union's Wage-Policy Committee included proposals for an unspecified general wage increase, the guaranteed annual wage, improvements in the pension and hospitalization programs, and additional improvements in wages, hours and working conditions.

Both sides expressed a conviction that a new agreement would be negotiated before the old pact expires on June 30. Meetings with other basic steel producers will get under way later this month. Negotiations with fabricators will follow as contracts expire.

One Picture . . .

The spoken word was abandoned in favor of the Confucian principle that one picture is worth a thousand of 'em at the second negotiating meeting between the CIO Steelworkers and U. S. Steel.

The company opened with a movie film showing how production is lost through work of poor quality. The union countered with its television film, "Full Employment, Production and Confidence," which had been shown on 93 TV stations to explain USA-CIO proposals for prosperity.

MEN OF STEEL greet each other at the start of wage negotiations. Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers (right) led the union's negotiators in parleys with Benjamin F. Fairless, chairman of the board of U. S. Steel, who sat in on opening session.

Strengthening Civil Rights

It was front page news not only in the United States but in the most distant parts of the free world when the Supreme Court cast its nine votes unanimously to outlaw segregation in the schools.

Thousands of Americans—plain tourists and leading figures in both political parties—have returned from abroad in recent years to warn us that U. S. backwardness on civil rights is hurting—and hurting badly—our influence and prestige in other countries.

Obviously, court decisions are not and should not be based on our country's public relations needs. But it is all the more heartening when a great decision is so obviously right, both at home and overseas.

Through the years, the "separate but equal" doctrine of the courts had clearly proven in fact to be "separate and unequal"—and inequality has no place in our democratic country.

So, the justices are to be complimented for looking squarely at the facts and at the laws—and of making a fearless and honest decision.

The problems involved in bringing about single school systems for both white and colored children will be complex and difficult. But they can be solved with patience and intelligence, and tolerance and understanding by every group in the community.

Thinking Southerners—in large part led by trade unionists—have been acknowledging for many years that segregation policies are unjust, unworkable, and indeed uneconomic. Now the stage is set for progress in this field of human relations.

We are confident that Americans of good will, regardless of race or color, will handle it in a way of which we can all be proud.

Louis Stark

Leaders of labor, business and journalism united to pay tribute to the late Louis Stark of the New York Times, who passed away last week.

Louis Stark was not the first labor reporter, but he was unquestionably the best. His writing helped America to understand its trade unions.

He was a true friend of labor, who looked for the facts and wrote them to the best of his great ability. When he criticized, his words were constructive—the words of a friend. He will be greatly missed.

Coming: A 'Must' Item

"Them as has gits"—and they're still getting under the tax bill provisions now being worked over by the Senate Finance Committee in closed door sessions.

The committee's vote last week to keep intact the Number One tax loophole of oil and mineral depletion allowances is another illustration of CIO Pres. Reuther's recent comment that, under the Republicans, "the people who don't need tax relief get it by the truckload while the people who need it most get a few crumbs."

The entire tax situation, as CIO's Legislative Committee emphasized last week, "is a 'must' item if we are to provide equity in our tax laws and provide a bulwark against a continuing economic decline." The key question is increasing individual income tax exemptions, as proposed in the George Amendment, from $600 to $800 and later to $1000. Your letters and wires now to members of the Senate can help bring victory.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS

Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII May 24, 1954 No. 21

'Equal Justice Under Law'

In Other Words—

Labor Eyes The Social Agencies

More than 18,000 CIO men and women are serving today in their communities as members of agency boards and committees, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the National Conference of Social Work in Atlantic City. Excerpts from his address follow:

By JAMES B. CAREY

DURING THE PAST 10 years we have witnessed the development of a closer relationship between voluntary social agencies and organized labor. During this period of time labor has increased its utilization and participation in the work of health and welfare agencies. Let me cite three specific examples of our growing interest in your work.

First, as users of social services and facilities. During the past decade much has been done to eliminate the paternalistic attitude of social agencies so prominent prior to the last depression. The "lady bountiful" approach with its attached stigma that implied the unworthiness and shiftlessness of the welfare recipient has been greatly lessened.

Consequently, many people in our communities—many in the trade union movement—now look upon the social worker and the social agency as a vital part of the community fabric; they have come to appreciate and support the work of the social agency in maintaining the well-being of the individual and the family.

Increased Union Support

A second way in which we have increased our participation is through our financial support of voluntary services. Through federated fund raising and in-plant federation, more and more CIO members are contributing to their local Community Chest or United Fund.

And third, we have accepted our places on community boards and committees; we are sharing in the determination of agency policy and program. All of this represents gain—decided gain to the social work profession, to the efficient operation of social services and to the man and women in the ranks of organized labor.

Social work grew out of the needs of the slum-shocked, those who suffered from a lack of recreational facilities, inadequate health services, those who carried the heavy burdens of illness and poverty, the neglected child, the working mother.

I believe, stated in very simple terms, the thing we are both working toward is a more equitable distribution of the fruits of our increased productivity. In organized labor we want to spread our national wealth and the fruits of our economy among all the people.

You in social work have been more interested in providing health and welfare services for the minority groups such as the marginal family, the physically and mentally handicapped, and the person who is, perhaps for many reasons, unprepared for equal competition in providing for his own welfare.

But if we talk about our community of common interest, if we both lay claim to a common heritage, there is evidently a rather wide and growing difference between the goals, methods and techniques employed by organized labor on the one hand, and those used by many in the social work field on the other.

A Background Of Reform

There are those who believe that the increased professionalism and specialization of the social work profession has lessened its militancy. Certainly, the social work profession is to be applauded for raising its standards of professionalism, but it would be tragic if it moves toward a sophisticated and sterile professionalism that forgets its early roots and its great heritage of social reform.

Organized labor feels a close affinity to those men and women in the social work profession who have battled unselfishly for the sick, the needy, and the forgotten. Organized labor wants to share in the effort to improve the health and welfare standards of our communities. We have both selfish and altruistic reasons for our participation.

We seek full partnership and responsibility in the work of those agencies whose existence is a pledge to the present and a guarantee to the future that wherever human need exists there is a need for the skills, the understanding, and the fighting militancy of the social work profession and the services and facilities of the social work agency.

From our common roots and social reform background, labor and social services should work in a full and democratic partnership toward the common goal of meeting human need.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

IT SEEMED LIKELY, as this column was written, that Sen. McCarthy would be forced to accept a renewal of public hearings in the Army row. Let us be perfectly clear about what McCarthy has tried to allege as a "fact" in his stump speeches in the earlier public sessions.

His whole defensive case has been that someone in the Eisenhower Administration deliberately inspired a "smear," a "cooked-up" attack on himself and his staff, to prevent McCarthy from ferreting out Communists and coddlers of Communists.

He adopted an air of injured bewilderment when Pres. Eisenhower's order of executive secrecy was issued.

He had previously blamed certain individuals in the Defense Dept. for coddling Reds, he said, and now he wasn't so sure. But he complained that the secrecy order "stopped" him from ascertaining the "truth."

He added, generously, that he absolved Eisenhower himself from any such stupidity as that of knowing what the executive order meant when the President signed it. ("I don't think his judgment is that bad, Mr. Chairman.")

Definition

Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.) last week compared Joe McCarthy with a "third-rate assistant detective on a local vice squad."

Noting that the Republicans have created "the grandaddy of all messes in Washington," Monroney said of the Wisconsin Republicans:

"Most of the troubles of the Eisenhower Administration with their problem child, McCarthy, stem from the fact that they thought they could use him and his smear tactics to label the party of Jefferson and Jackson as the party of treason. Now their chickens are coming home to roost."

There are two points to be made.

FIRST, the President was right when he abruptly told his subordinates not to answer questions about any private and confidential discussions they had in the now-celebrated Justice Dept. meeting about what to do about McCarthy.

A legislative committee may have a right to ask the result of executive conferences—although even this right is not certain. The legislators have no right whatever to pry and pry into the various reasons that certain people were present, what each said and why each said it.

Nearly every President, from Federalist and Whig to Republican and Democrat, has been compelled to defend the prerogatives of his great constitutional office from encroaching congressional committees.

Eisenhower was slow on the uptake—but his slowness did not nullify his right to sustain his Executive Dept.

Second, the subcommittee and McCarthy knew before the hearings recessed what the results of the Justice Dept. conference were. The committee knew who attended.

Joe's War Against Ike

Those attending were John G. Adams, Army counsel, plus three White House advisers—Sherman Adams, Gerald Morgan and Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr.—and Atty.-Gen. Brownell and his deputy, William Rogers.

Army Sec. Stevens finally said, after Eisenhower had in effect ordered the subcommittee to resume hearings, that the Army itself—and not anyone else—had decided to challenge McCarthy. He was supposed to repeat the statement under oath before the subcommittee.

The McCarthy "case," let it be repeated, is that some person or persons "cooked up a smear" against himself and his staff to prevent the exposure of "coddlers of Communists."

Whatever individuals he might finally decide to blame, they are at this moment subordinates of Eisenhower, serving by Eisenhower's pleasure.

McCarthy therefore alleges, and not indirectly, that Eisenhower himself is so administratively lax that he "coddles" people who are coddlers of Communists.

This is the same charge he made, falsely, against Harry S. Truman. Only now the accusation is directed against a Republican President, whose party desperately needs Eisenhower's name and support in the November election.

Citation From Acts XVII

Three quotations, in particular, this observer liked in regard to the joyfully unanimous Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation. One came from the North, one from the South, both from people who happened to be white; one from a Negro cab driver in the District of Columbia.

Dr. Arthur M. Schlesinger of Harvard University remarked: "The Supreme Court has finally reconciled the Constitution with the preamble of the Declaration of Independence."

John Gange, head of the Woodrow Wilson School of Foreign Affairs at the University of Virginia, remarked: "This decision will open the way to relieving millions of white Americans of a sense of guilt and at the least relieve some of us of some self-consciousness even when practicing equality."

The Negro cab driver said: "What makes me happy is, I believe in God 100%: a God of equality and justice. He said all men were created equal (Acts XVII)."

The thorough New York Times, which quoted the cab driver, looked further in Acts XVII and found the phrase, "And hath made of one blood all nations of men."

The Capitol Hill Scene—

Reece's New War On Foundations Is Part Of Conformity Campaign

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

NEW FETTERS on freedom are being forged in America by a congressional committee that sees a "diabolical conspiracy" in the educational foundations bearing such respectable big business names as Ford, Rockefeller and Carnegie.

The tax-exempt status of these foundations is the publicly-stated reason for the feverish activity of a House special committee. The unpublicized motivation is a massive attack on intellectual freedom.

Clues to this are plentiful in the record of Chairman Reece (R. Tenn.), onetime chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Despite frequent outspoken differences with Pres. Eisenhower, despite his efforts to capture the Republican nomination for the late Sen. Taft in 1952, there is evidence that Reece has linked his assault with the GOP wing which believes that a saturation assault on the public mind can dragoon it into conditioned thinking.

—And Worst Of All

According to Reece, through Norman Dodd, research director for his committee, the powerful foundations have channeled funds and prestige into such "hateful" educational and governmental themes as internationalism, regard for human welfare around the globe and, worst of all, the concepts of the New Deal.

Again according to Reece (via Dodd), some foundations have used their tax-exempt funds to influence teachers at all levels into believing that the United Nations is a good thing for a troubled world.

The Rockefeller Foundation is assessed part of the blame for the loss of China to the Communists and the Ford Foundation is criticized for its large grants to "pro-Communist" India.

This latest attack on freedom of thought among Americans and a drive toward regimentation of belief is not unexpected in a party which believes that ideas and candidates can be huckstered like detergents. All it takes is money. And money is plentiful as long as Congress continues GOP sponsorship of the biggest give-away program of modern times.

Efforts at placing intellectual pursuits in a straitjacket of conservative design come naturally to pitchmen turned political pundits.

Scalpel May Boomerang

The scalpel may well be turned on those who have attempted this new sterilization of ideas. It is one thing to have a circus billed as "the greatest show on earth" conclude its performances with mighty images of Eisenhower in the center ring and quite another, indeed, to sell the U. S. on the proposition that all that has happened since FDR unseated Hoover has been part of a "socialist plot" financed by the wealth of tax-exempt foundations.

Reece, of course, has played no favorites in tossing vitriol in the past. In 1952 he said the nation's defenses were in "pitiful shape" because the Democrats gambled, largely on the advice of a general named Eisenhower. Today he charges that Communists and Socialists have seized control of fortunes left by big businessmen and have turned them towards the destruction of the business system.

Reece, it has been suggested, may be inaugurating an up-to-date Scopes trial which brought his region into the news two decades ago with the "monkey trial" which was an effort to stylize education.

Inquiry into the foundations is not new. One was conducted by Rep. Cox (D. Ga.) in 1952 just before his death. It decided the foundations were doing a worthwhile job and should be encouraged.

Reece hollered "whitewash" and with ascendancy of a GOP majority announced a new probe. Dodd's directive to his research staff called for exploration of foundation practices, educational procedures "and the operations of the Executive Branch of the federal government since 1903 for reasonable evidence of a purposeful relationship between them."

Our growing international relations over a 50 year period, he convinced himself, came about largely through education of the public by foundation grants. Dodd is an investment counsellor. What is alarming about Dodd's just-submitted report is its indication that any advance in thoughts and ideas must conform to patterns set in the 18th century.

Pressure Against Freedom

While Dodd is critical of some of the most respected foundations and learned societies who are their beneficiaries, he has made no protest about Facts Forum, the television and radio production whose chief angel is Texan H. L. Hunt, an arch reactionary McCarthy fan and reportedly America's richest man.

The report might have been worse, Rep. Hays (D. O.), a committee member, charged, except that last minute changes were made in it to keep its authors from being "run clean out of the Capitol." He said the staff set out "to damn these funds pretty severely" and that conclusions favorable to the foundations were deleted.

The New York Times commented editorially that Dodd was entitled to his views on foundations but his statement "leaves the strong impression that he would guide this committee into an expedition into the realm of the mind, with the idea that a philosophy of politics, research and education that some citizens believe to be right is therefore 'American' and that a differing view is wrong and therefore 'un-American.'"

"This is a very dangerous course for the committee to follow," the editorial continued, "because it constitutes a form of pressure on freedom of teaching, it suggests that advocacy of social change is in itself unpatriotic and it encourages a conformity of thought that is the antithesis of the dynamic, democratic society for which our country—and the great foundations—have always stood."

Big Assignment

The House committee investigating tax-exempt foundations has taken on a big assignment. It reveals there are between 6000 and 7000 foundations, with capital resources of $7.5 billion and annual disbursements of over $300 million.

Two of them, the Carnegie and Rockefeller Foundations, have approximately 15% of the funds. They have endowed projects from science to settlement houses.

The Other Side . . .

Rep. Hays (D. O.) wants the House committee to check into Facts Forum, the radio and TV operation described as presenting "both sides of one side." Biggest backer of Facts Forum is H. L. Hunt, fabulously rich Texas oilman and a warm admirer of Joe McCarthy.

Hays, a vigorous liberal, says that Facts Forum makes bad propaganda for him "because it tries to defeat people like me for Congress." He wants a spotlight turned on FF's tax exemption as well as on those of legitimate foundations.

"Naturally, there'll be tough congressional investigating committees to face, but we've got a private list of psychiatrists you can use, and they'll have you back on your feet in no time."

Tale of Steel Cities

Industry Beats Slo

By DON SMITH

Special Correspondent

"IT'S PRETTY ROUGH when you have to try and get by for weeks and months on potato soup!"

That's how an embittered former infantry sergeant summed up his family's experience in jobless Canton.

Canton is the industrial heart of Stark County in northeastern Ohio, but it's beating slowly and irregularly these days. It's a city with a thousand heartbreaks.

"We're headed out of this recession," says Sec. of Commerce Weeks. But —a third of the U. S. steel capacity is idle, and so are some 200,000 CIO Steelworkers. This is their story.

The unemployment situation, which prompted federal officials to label Canton a labor distress area, shows no signs of improvement.

The city is faced with a relief crisis which is the worst since the depression days. When a federal surplus food station was opened recently, a thousand relief recipients responded immediately.

Business is declining. Retail sales are off from last year. The grocer on the corner is feeling the pinch and wondering rather hopelessly when things will pick up.

No Sign Of Pickup

"There is absolutely no sign of a pick-up," according to W. E. Wycoff, president of the Stark County CIO Council.

Members of the CIO Steelworkers have been the hardest hit by Canton's sagging economy. For example, almost one-half of the 5600 members of Local 1200 are out of work.

Union officials in Canton recently completed a detailed survey of the unemployment situation and found that at least 8500 workers are without jobs.

Here, briefly, are some of the major trouble spots in Canton:

1. A year ago the Timken Roller Bearing Co. employed 8500. Today only 6500 are on the rolls and much of the work has been on a short-week basis.

2. Employment at Republic Steel's major plant has dropped from 7150 a year ago to 5100 today. Most of the workers are on a four-day week and averaging 32 hours a week.

3. Workers at the Union Metal Manufacturing Co. are working seven-hour turns on a four-day week basis.

A number of the smaller plants in Canton have been flattened. The Louis Berkman Co., a sheet steel operation, has 83 workers today compared with 529 a year ago.

The average number of workers filing for unemployment compensation in Canton last year during April was 128. For the week ending Apr. 17 this year, 417 applied for benefits—a jump of more than 300%.

Jumped Crazily

The average number of unemployed workers who have been drawing benefits for one week or more has increased almost 1000% over last year.

Canton cannot afford unemployment much longer. Miss Florence Light, city relief director, said that compared with a year ago, Canton's relief load and costs have jumped crazily.

Relief costs have doubled in Canton in the last two years. In March 1952, the city paid out $10,990 to aid 205 cases. The figures in the same month last year were $11,923 and 233.

In March of this year—a month that Pres. Eisenhower regarded "as sort of a key month"—the case load had jumped to 421 and the amount paid out to $19,467.

"For regular unemployment, our relief situation is the worst since the depression," Miss Light said. "A lot of the workers have exhausted their unemployment benefits and they're coming to us. There are no indications of a let-up."

Unions Act Jointly

In a cooperative effort to ease the unemployment pinch in Canton, the city's various labor organizations have formed the United Labor League of Canton. It was through the efforts of the League that Canton was declared a labor distress area by the federal government. Being placed in such a category entitles a city to special consideration in the awarding of government contracts—if the contracts are available.

According to official figures from the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation office in Canton, the average weekly number of unemployed drawing benefits has increased nearly 600% during the past year.

There is no accurate count of how many workers have exhausted their benefits, but since last September—when unemployment increased sharply —358 workers have run out of benefits.

The city's Republican mayor, Carl F. Wise, has expressed great concern over the unemployment picture and has promised to work closely with the United Labor League.

The Mayor said he had to hire additional help to handle the city's relief load and added that many unemployed workers are applying for city laboring jobs.

They're Eating Less

Myron Jacobs, owner of Jacobs Cut Rate Market, Inc., said his business was off 25 to 30% from last year at this time.

"There are no ifs and buts about it," Jacobs said, "business is bad. There's no sense kidding ourselves about it. A fellow who works just a few days a week just can't buy as much as he did when he worked full-time. People are just eating less."

Jacobs cited the case of a worker with eight children in his family who spent $80 to $90 every two weeks for his groceries when he was working.

"Now the fellow's on relief and gets only $50 every two weeks for food," Jacobs said. "A woman who comes in here—she lives alone—gets only $12.25 every two weeks for food. You just can't live on $6 a week."

Worse Since '29 Crash

David Warren, operating the Garfield Grocery & Meat Market since 1925 in a neighborhood inhabited largely by Timken workers, said that his business is "worse now than since the depression."

"My business was down 18% for the first three months of this year," Warren said. "People who bought steady before are now buying less and less and they buy cheaper food. More families are asking for credit. I know most of the families in the neighborhood and I can't refuse them.

"I also hear more grumbling now by the customers about conditions. Most of them are mad at Ike."

Future Looks Grim

The scene in Canton is only part of an Ohio-wide picture of workers in fast growing numbers coming to the end of benefit periods. The Bureau of Unemployment Compensation said 4831 workers drew their final benefit check in March, an increase of 95.8% over February and 338.8% over March of 1953.

In the first three months of 1954, 9473

LINEUP FOR FOOD—Canton, O., is one of the nation's steel centers hard hit by declining production. When a U. S. surplus fo ployed applied th

A Doorman's Blues

Conversation with a doorman at one of Canton's downtown hotels:

"How's business?"

"Slow but very slow."

"What's wrong?"

"People ain't coming through like they used to. Salesmen who stopped by twice a week now come only once a week and take off in a hurry. No business here for 'em anymore."

"How are tips?"

"What tips? People are squeezing and holding these days, mister!"

. . . There Isn't M

How can you describe an empty ice box so that the hunger it implies can be felt by those whose ice boxes or refrigerators are full?

How can you capture in words the tired and hopeless looks of parents in jobless homes?

Statistics, relief costs and unemployment totals can be written about without too much effort. But the translation of unemployment into human terms is almost impossible.

You come to that conclusion after talking to unemployed workers and their wives. Words just can't do the job. You have to see it with your own eyes. You have to hear it spoken in the cheerless houses.

You come to the conclusion that hun

BIG REPUBLIC STEEL plant is industrial heart of Canton, but employment has dropped from 7150 to 4100, and most are working only four days.

CANTON'S Mayor Carl F. Wise and Relief Dir. Florence Light confer.

The Bitter Days . . .

By JOE NEWMAN

(From the Cleveland Press)

"Is grim Depression on the land . . .
The bitter days that dry and parch?
I recollect that Ike once said
We'd know in March.

"Yet March has come and March has gone,
And Humphrey since has had his say:
Is grim Depression on the land?
We'll know in May.

"But now they take another look,
And Mitchell can't agree at all:
Is grim Depression on the land?
We'll know by Fall.

"No doubt we WILL know, soon or late,
Just what prediction can be trusted;
But what's the difference? I will be Already busted!"

wly In Canton, City Of Broken Hearts

ood station was opened, 1000 unem- e first day. (Canton Repository photo.)

AFTER NINE MONTHS of unemployment, Dale Wantzern, typical steelworker, and his wife and two children are down to a meager dinner.

LATER the Wantzerns go over the budget again, trying to save pennies.

uch Laughter Now

ger, deprivation and a mother's worried look are so completely alien to a civilized country that everyone should be ashamed to admit they exist.

You wish for a magic formula to convince the nation's leaders that people should not have to tell their kids they can't go to the movies; can't have popcorn; can't go to a dance with their friends; and that's all the milk you can have today.

Parts of peoples' lives go down the drain when there is no work. Children's minds are stained with ugly memories. They remember father's shiny coat, his frayed cuffs, mother's cracked shoes and fading dresses. They remember one glass of milk where there used to be two. There isn't as much laughter after supper.

workers exhausted their benefits. That was a jump of 174.2% over the same period last year. This means thousands of workers have been jobless long enough to have used up benefits for periods up to the maximum of 26 weeks.

Does it do any good to look for a job in Canton?

"A trip to the BUC is a waste of time," a union official said.

"I was off work for five months and looked almost every day," a Steelworker commented. "I found nothing."

With no indication of a pickup, most of the workers still on the job are apprehensive about the future. As one worker summed up conditions in Canton:

"It just isn't much fun around here these days."

Tears In A War-Bride's Eyes—

'How Is It Living On Unemployment Benefits? You Can't Do It,' A Steelworker Says

TEARS CAME to the eyes of Mrs. Dale Wantzern, 26-year-old German war-bride, as she talked about her family's life under the limitations of unemployment compensation.

"It just didn't seem like life was worth living," she said as she held her one and a half-year-old daughter in her arms.

Her husband, a 32-year-old CIO Steelworker and veteran of the North African campaign in World War II, lost his job last Sept. 8, almost nine months ago.

While his wife talked, Wantzern attempted to keep their four-year-old son occupied in the cramped living room of the three-room, $28-a-month apartment, one of four apartments in an old frame house.

It's Not Living

In Ohio an unemployed worker can draw a weekly maximum of $30 for 26 weeks, plus $2.50 a week for no more than two dependent children.

Recalling Wantzern was averaging $75 a week when he lost his job, she continued:

"While my husband was working, we'd spend $16 to $25 a week on groceries. After he lost his job, I'd spend $6, $7 or $8 a week, not including milk for the children.

"I had to go to work for a while to help out. We ate a lot of potato soup. I bought the cheapest cuts of meat I could find. We almost forgot what coffee tasted like. That ain't no living.

"We didn't go into debt too much because we didn't buy anything but Dale had to spend the little money he had saved. I'm lucky I can sew and that helped a lot on clothes for the kids.

"We did have to borrow a little to keep up my husband's insurance and a little more from the grocer, but the grocer's bill now is down to $8.

"Both our children have some kind of a rash on their arms but we've been putting off taking them to the doctor because we owe him a little money."

Out The Window

At this point, Wantzern broke in to tell how the family's plans had been dashed by the loss of his job.

"We had been planning to buy a car and find a better place to live but that went out the window," he said wryly.

Did Wantzern look for work?

"I went out every day and found nothing," he snapped. "Nothing. You want to know how it is living on unemployment compensation? You can't do it. You hardly exist."

Wantzern said he finally found a part-time temporary job. Does he blame anyone for the lack of jobs?

"Eisenhower was a good general," he commented bitterly.

(Next: The situation in Youngstown.)

Bachelors, Too

Families aren't the only sufferers in Canton. Unemployment hits the bachelors, too.

A single Steelworker lost his job back on Feb. 25. His landlady has cut off his credit. He hasn't drawn any unemployment pay yet because he lost his social security card and has to wait for the government to give him another.

He's been waiting two months and there still is no sign that Washington has unravelled the red tape.

U. S. Job Action Fails To Help

CANTON wears the federal label proving it to be a "substantial labor surplus area." But that label hasn't brought any extra defense work into the factories hit hardest by unemployment.

Nor do Canton industrialists expect the label will bring a sudden splurge of defense orders. The executive vice president of the Canton Development Corp., devoted to bringing new industries to the town, doesn't consider the designation will "automatically bring more defense orders."

But he does think it puts "manufacturers in a better bidding position." CIO leaders, who fought for the new classification, express the hope that eventually the label will bring more orders from various government procurement agencies.

The Heartbreak File: 10 In The House And No Food...

THE "HEARTBREAK FILE" at Local 1200 of the CIO Steelworkers in Canton is a long one.

Nearly half the union's membership is unemployed. Hunger and suffering are not just words in this local union.

Let's look at the notations on some of the members' cards on file at union headquarters:

- "Ten in the family. Man laid off Mar. 16 and has received no unemployment check yet. There is no food in the house. This man needs an emergency order until he gets further aid."
- "Nine in the family. Man is diabetic. Not yet getting unemployment compensation. All he's getting is surplus food from city welfare."
- "Ten in family. Laid off Mar. 16, no unemployment check received as yet. Family is completely out of food, has to keep children out of school at times because of problem."
- "Family of eight. This man has been laid off six weeks and has had no income. He needs food very badly until he can get further aid."
- "Family of eight. Man lost job in February, no unemployment checks yet. Received relief check of $25 from union."
- "Unemployment insurance has run out. Wife is ill and on special diet. Last paycheck in September 1953."
- "Family of seven has been drawing unemployment compensation but does not cover his immediate expenses. Basic need is food."

WAITING FOR CHECKS—Here's one of four lines of jobless workers waiting at Canton office. Compensation applications have climbed by 300%.

U. S., Mexico Unions Ask Voice On Migrants

By MILTON PLUMB

INTERNATIONAL good will was forged into an action program for social justice at the conference of the Joint U. S.-Mexican Trade Union Committee in Nuevo Laredo, Mexico.

"The spirits of Bolivar, San Martin, Jefferson, Washington and Lincoln met at our meeting and embraced each other across the border," Louis Alberto Monge, secretary-general of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), who was conference chairman, declared in his address summing up the meetings.

CIO Vice Pres. O. A. Knight, who was chairman of the U. S. delegation and is head of the Oil Workers, put it this way:

"In the last few days we have done more to build peace than all the recent diplomatic conferences where men meet with no sincerity in their hearts. Here the joint labor movements of U. S. and Mexico have worked to build a wall against hunger, poverty and oppression throughout the world."

And Mexican Delegate Jesus Yuren Aguilar, member of his country's Senate, called the results of the conference "a demonstration of real Pan-Americanism for peace."

All spoke at the banquet in honor of the Mexican delegates which closed the meetings. The U. S. delegation, which earlier had been honored at banquets given by the Mexican State of Tamaulipas, the municipal government of Nuevo Laredo, and the Mexican Confederation of Labor (CTM), acted as hosts.

Joint Program Set

From the moment the conference was opened by Nuevo Laredo Mayor Zaragoza Cuellar Garcia until Monge's summation, the 30 members of the two delegations hammered away at current problems affecting U. S. and Mexican labor.

At no time was there any basic difference between the two delegations over the approaches to be taken toward finding a solution. Adopted by unanimous agreement were resolutions which:

1. Declared that unions in each country "must be recognized officially and given consultative status before the Joint Commission on Migrant Workers" set up under the recent U. S.-Mexican contract labor agreement.

2. Called upon U. S. Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell, Jr. to promptly and formally repudiate a charge widely published in the Mexican press and radio that he had suggested "killing a few wetbacks in order to stop this influx across the border." (Brownell wired the joint committee the same day declaring that he was "shocked by the falsity" of the Mexican newspaper report.)

3. Spelled out the respective responsibilities of U. S. and Mexican labor in a detailed program to bring the benefits of union organization to Mexican braceros working in the U. S.

4. Developed plans for cooperation between U. S. and Mexican unions in similar industries or whose members work for the same employers.

The conference met under the cloud of serious economic unrest in Mexico resulting from the recent devaluation of the peso. CIO delegates took the lead in pressing for a full discussion of ways in which U. S. labor could help in developing programs to relieve the growing distress of the people of Mexico.

Knight praised the ingenuity of the Mexican peasants who, he pointed out, are even growing corn on the sides of mountains, despite primitive methods. With Point Four and other aid to teach them improved methods of agriculture, real progress can be made, he said.

The Mexican delegates declared that such programs were of great importance and could materially help Mexico's economy. They agreed to ask their government to seek U. S., United Nations and other aid.

Mexico's Problems

H. L. Mitchell, president of the AFL Agricultural Union, told the Mexicans that they should not be ashamed to ask for help.

"We in the U. S. can give you technical know-how you now lack," he said, "but you can give us something just as fundamentally important in return. Mexico has developed better human relationships—through its cooperatives, its absence of discrimination and its strong labor unions—and you can help us by giving us your knowledge."

Yuren said that U. S.-Mexican trade union cooperation cannot be confined to just the two nations.

"It sets a pattern for the whole continent," he said, "which is sure to be followed as the fruits of our cooperation become known."

He said that the "tremendously constructive" programs initiated at the conference prove in a way most convincing to Latin America that close cooperation with North America is possible and counteracts the anti-U. S. propaganda of the Peronists and the Communists.

Auto Parley Cited

One example of inter-union cooperation discussed at length was the forthcoming meeting between the U. S. and Mexican unions in the auto industry which will take place in Detroit in June. Members from 10 different American-owned auto plants in Mexico will make up the Mexican delegation to this meeting.

CIO representatives at the meeting, besides Knight, included R. J. Thomas, assistant to the executive vice president; Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee; and CIO Reps. Nicholas Dragon, Gardner Jackson and Ken Gillie.

COMMON PROBLEMS of U. S. and Mexican unionists were discussed at joint labor rally in Nuevo Laredo, Mexico. At left, Luis Alberto Monge, conference chairman, gives the keynote address. Seated is Mayor Zaragoza Cuellar Garcia, of Nuevo Laredo. At right, the CIO delegation and aides: Gardner Jackson, Milton Plumb, Nicholas Dragon, Sec. Ernst Schwarz of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee, Monge, Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, who led the CIO delegation, Hilda Julbe and Ken Gillie. Parley was called "demonstration of real Pan-Americanism."

Twilight Zone

The Health, Education & Welfare Dept. last week sponsored a 10-state conference in Washington on problems of migratory workers, particularly on East Coast truck farms.

Sec. Hobby called the migrant problem "a tragic social anomaly," saying: "They follow the sun for a living, but live in a twilight zone of citizenship."

Big Haul

The U. S. Immigration & Naturalization Service has obtained the indictment of 41 persons in Los Angeles on charges of smuggling and transporting Mexican "wetbacks" into the U. S.

Last month the border patrol caught and deported some 85,000 workers who had sneaked across the frontier.

"GUADALAJARA . . ."—Mexican orchestra and singers provided entertainment for U. S.-Mexican Trade Union Committee delegates and dinner given by Nuevo Laredo local of the Mexican Confederation of Labor (CTM).

World Of Labor—

ICFTU Asks UN Probe Of East German Labor Curbs

DEMOCRATIC trade unions in all parts of the world, through the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, have asked the United Nations to investigate charges that the union rights of East German workers are being violated by the Communist regime.

The flare-up last June 17 "was neither organized nor provoked nor ordered by any agency or government or organization inside or outside of Germany," the ICFTU charged in a memorandum circulated to nation members of the UN Economic & Social Council.

In nations where the labor movements are free, the memorandum continued, the uprising would be regarded as "a genuine, legitimate trade union measure." It became an "uprising" only when Russian authorities refused to countenance a strike against higher production quotas, low wages and high prices, and for free elections, the ICFTU added.

As result of the repressive measures of Soviet authorities, it went on, 569 East Germans were killed, plus an unknown number executed by order of military courts, and 1744 were wounded.

"Trade union rights do not exist in the Soviet realm," the memorandum claimed. "For this reason, an investigation is necessary."

Spain

Because the free labor movements of the world, including the CIO, helped focus attention on the recent treason trials of 17 Spanish Basque workers charged after a 1951 strike, the sentences imposed were "less heavy than they might have been," the exiled Basque Workers Confederation has advised the ICFTU.

As a result of union pressures, the governments of the U. S., Great Britain, Cuba and France had observers at the trials, held in a tiny, old court room in Vitoria in the hope of excluding the public. American, British and French newspapermen also attended, while the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions and the British Labor Party were represented.

ILO

The general economic mood in several industrialized countries in 1953 seemed "to be one of cautious optimism, tempered somewhat by uncertainty as to the prospects of the U. S. economy," Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse of the Intl. Labor Organization said in his annual analysis of world economic conditions.

High employment and productions levels prevailed generally in industrial nations despite increased unemployment in the U. S., he found, while the cost of living showed few significant changes. In the underdeveloped countries progress continued, he said, with the pace more rapid in Latin America than in Asia.

Asia

The Executive Committee of the ICFTU Regional Organization at a meeting in Calcutta voted support for the struggle of Japanese workers against rearmament, with emphasis on the particular danger that militarism in Japan could lead to further restrictions on trade union and human rights, and to a lower standard of living.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP badge is pinned on former Pres. Truman by Jacob S. Potofsky, head of the CIO Clothing Workers, at their recent convention in Atlantic City. In background is giant photo of Sidney Hillman, longtime ACWA-CIO head. Truman's fiery speech was interrupted 15 times by delegates' applause for his blast at GOP's "creeping McKinleyism."

West Coast CIO Conferences Speed Action On PAC, Jobs

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

CIO conferences on political action, full employment and education are being held throughout California and the Pacific Northwest to bring the broadest participation possible of CIO members in current activities, CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler said last week.

State and local CIO councils and several international unions are cooperating in putting on the conference.

In California, the State CIO Council held some 12 area conferences and a full employment meeting in Oakland. In the Northwest, a CIO education conference in Portland, Ore., brought together delegates from Oregon, Washington and Idaho. Here are the details:

CALIFORNIA—Area conferences began in April and will continue throughout the month of May until a dozen have been held from one end of the state to the other, said Manuel Dias, president, and John A. Despol, secretary-treasurer, of the State CIO Council.

Meetings were scheduled for Contra Costa County, San Francisco, Alameda, Sacramento, South Gate, Bell, Van Nuys, Long Beach, Inglewood, Fontana and San Diego.

Emphasis of the conference was placed on a report to the CIO members on program activities of the Council, and the political action work, stressing the dollar drive.

The State CIO Council also held a Full Employment Conference in Oakland, in co-sponsorship with three CIO Councils.

PACIFIC NORTHWEST — The education conference in Portland brought together some 125 delegates from CIO organizations in Oregon, Washington and Idaho. The conference was sponsored by the Oregon State CIO and the Auto, Wood, Communications, Textile and Clothing Workers.

IWA Pres. A. F. Hartung, and Brendan Sexton, UAW education director, addressed the first session. Other speakers were Richard Neuberger, Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator in Oregon; Edith Green, Democratic candidate for Congress in Oregon, and George Roberts, PAC representative.

BROAD SMILES cover the faces of Sen. Langer (R. N.D.), at left, and CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther at the banquet of the Electric Consumers Information Committee, where both urged an alliance of labor and farmers to win public power for all people at reasonable rates.

ACWA Applauds FDR, Jr. For Blast At Dewey Rule

A ROUSING ovation for Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.), who may be Democratic candidate for governor of New York, climaxed the final day of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers' 40th anniversary convention at Atlantic City, N. J.

Roosevelt delivered a slashing attack on the policies and program of GOP Gov. Tom Dewey —as well as at the GOP Administration and Congress in Washington.

"The strategy of this Administration is to keep the American people off balance—to force us to give up the American vision of progress towards greater freedom and greater economic security — by requiring us to expand all our energies to make a last ditch fight to keep what we have," Roosevelt said.

ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum and Exec. Vice-Pres. Hyman Blumberg were nominated without opposition for new terms in office. Election is by mail referendum.

Delegates saw an hour-long pageant depicting the union's struggles from the first clothing workers' strkes in Chicago in 1910 and 1912 to the present efforts of the union to improve not only wages and hours but the health and living conditions of its members.

THE CONVENTION'S theme was that the past 40 years are a prelude to still greater efforts to bring the benefits of union organization to workers in the men's clothing, shirt, laundry and related fields.

The Amalgamated pledged its "determination to drive out of public life, with an avalanche of votes, all who would destroy freedom and liberty." The union said it was "tragic" that Pres. Eisenhower has not spoken out in the "strongest terms" against Sen. McCarthy."

The convention described the United Nations as "our ultimate hope for peace." The U. S. and other free nations seek peace "but are committed to fight, if necessary, to defend freedom against the armed might of Soviet tyranny," the resolution declared.

TWU Okays Report On N. Y. Transit

CONDITIONAL acceptance was given by officials of the CIO Transport Workers to the report of a fact-finding committee for settling a dispute with the New York City Transit Authority.

The authority operates the subway, elevated and bus lines of the city's transit system, on which TWU-CIO bargains for most of the 44,000 workers.

The report recommended a 14c an hour increase, 6.5c of it to be given immediately and to be retroactive to Jan. 1. The balance would be effective Mar. 15, 1955.

TWU accepted the recommendations conditional on their acceptance by the authority. One of the principal provisions would authorize holding an election which could give TWU sole bargaining authority and would eliminate some 16 small splinter unions.

IN A LETTER to Mayor Robert F. Wagner who named the fact-finders, TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill and three officers of TWU Local 100, Pres. Matthew Guinan, Sec.-Treas. Ellis Van Riper and Recording Sec. Mark Cavanagh, said:

"The report falls far short of the needs, desires and expectations of the Transport Workers on the wage issue and many other points. We say, however, that if the Transit Authority will accept this report in its entirety and in good faith, there is a basis for sound labor relations."

Louis Stark, 'Dean Of Labor Writers,' Dies At 66

LOUIS STARK, who gained a nationwide reputation as labor reporter for the New York Times, died at his home in New York City last week.

Stark, a friend of scores of labor union officials and members, gained a Pulitzer prize for his reporting in 1942 and numerous other honors and awards. In 1951, he left the Washington bureau of the Times to become a Times editorial writer. He was 66.

At the time of his retirement from active reporting, Stark was described by former Pres. Truman as the "dean of all reporters on the labor scene."

He had covered most of the big labor stories of the last two decades, and provided Times readers with clear insight into major trends and developments. As the first reporter on a major paper assigned exclusively to labor, Stark developed warm friendships with leaders of labor, business and government.

WHEN HE CAME to Washington in 1933, he found many of them in high government office —and his production of scoops during the days of the New Deal set a new par for the course.

During the big auto strikes of the mid-1930's newspaper colleagues recalled that only Louis Stark seemed to know what was going on—and what was apt to happen next.

Commenting on his death, the leaders of the CIO—Pres. Reuther, Sec-Treas. Carey, and Exec. Vice-Pres. John Riffe—declared:

"We deeply mourn the loss of Louis Stark. He was a student and a true friend of labor. He understood the aspirations of working men and women, and the efforts of labor unions to win a better life for workers.

"Louis Stark was a great journalist who became the undisputed dean of labor reporters. He made a tremendous contribution to public knowledge about labor in America."

Reuther and Carey also sent personal telegrams of condolence to Mrs. Stark.

In one of his last editorials for the Times, Stark praised the steps of CIO and AFL to end jurisdictional disputes within each federation as well as CIO's decision to go ahead with the no-raiding agreement, which he hailed as a "civilized and constructive move."

LOUIS STARK

Wage Cut Threat Helps TWUA Win 2 Elections

ELECTION victories were scored by the CIO Textile Workers last week at two plants whose employes, long unorganized, joined a brief walkout by TWUA-CIO members in other mills of the Wyandotte Worsted Co. against a proposed wage cut.

TWUA won by a score of 136 to 62 for no union at the Wyandotte mill in Rochester, N. H., where 199 of the 206 eligibles voted.

At the firm's mill in Central Village, Conn., where 153 were eligible and 149 voted, the vote was 96 for TWUA and 45 for no union.

Previous organizing attempts at both mills failed. However, a threat by the company last month to institute a wage slash brought 900 TWUA members out on strike at plants in Pittsfield, Mass., and Waterville, Me. They were joined in a sympathy walkout by workers in the two unorganized mills. Union organizers moved in fast, signed cards and got a quick election.

THE STRIKE of TWUA members against 11 mills of the American Woolen Co. in New England and New York State entered its second month with negotiations deadlocked.

Contracts were extended to May 31 by TWUA to cover 1300 workers in three jointly-owned companies, Barre Wool Combing Co., Putnam Woolen Corp. and the Andrew mill of the Bachmann Uxbridge Worsted Corp., all in New England.

An arbitrator denied the request of the Pepperell Manufacturing Co. for a 10% general wage cut that would have affected 2600 TWUA members in Biddeford and Lewiston, Me.

You And Your Money—

CIO Challenges N.Y. Doctors For War On Group Medicine

UNDER BANNERS proclaiming "free choice of doctors," the doctors' trust has moved to wipe out the "free choice" of union members, civic employes and average citizens to obtain adequate health care through group medical plans.

The latest attack of the American Medical Association and its state societies is against group medicine centers in New York State, and their target is the 500,000 member Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York.

Union-sponsored health centers, such as the Sidney Hillman Health Centers of the CIO Clothing Workers, and group health programs won in collective bargaining throughout the nation could be the next AMA targets.

What the New York State Medical Society, an AMA affiliate, is moving to do is:

1. Bar any advertising of the low-rate benefits of health insurance plans as "unethical," That's the "doctors' lobby" word for it.

2. Crack down on doctors who serve on group health plan panels. They also would be declared "unethical." And any such salaried practice would be limited to hospitals treating "public charges."

The whole operation, said Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council, is a move to protect "vested interests . . . who have made a big business out of medicine."

CIO Council Aids Defense

Hollander, who is also an officer of the ACWA, promised a vigorous fight in defense of the Health Insurance Plan. He pointed out the Medical Society's moves also are aimed at the Sidney Hillman Medical Centers, which also engage in group medical practice.

"It would be more appropriate," Hollander suggested, "if the New York State Medical Society were concerned with the real unethical practices, to clean up fee splitting, ghost surgery, unnecessary surgery, the workmen's compensation racket and other evils which make the society's pretensions a hollow mockery."

Actually, the Medical Society's House of Delegates—at the same meeting which struck out at group medicine—also moved to "clarify" the AMA's "code of eithics" to allow fee-splitting by physicians and surgeons in some cases.

The latest Medical Society attack on the HIP involves a case dating back to 1951. In that year, Queens County doctors lambasted Dr. Ben E. Landess, medical director of a local HIP unit, because his name appeared in newspaper advertising and a booklet listing the plans benefits and program. The State society upheld the "unethical" finding against the HIP doctor.

Deny Insurance Choice

The HIP struck out vigorously at the Medical Society's moves, noting that "the proponents of these prohibitions are themselves the violators of the free choice principle, for they would deny the public the opportunity to have comprehensive insurance protection against virtually all doctors' bills and deny licensed physicians the right to provide such comprehensive services through prepaid group practice."

Dr. George Baehr, HIP president, pointed out that "thousands of business and industrial organizations, labor unions, hospitals, medical schools and group insurance plans would be affected by these rulings" of the New York society, if they are upheld by the AMA.

Attorneys for HIP hinted they might resort to a Sherman Anti-Trust Act case against the doctors, charged the doctors are trying to "hamper and destroy HIP for commerical, political and economic reasons wholly unrelated to matters of medical ethics."

GOP Protest

The Republican New York Herald-Tribune editorially condemned the attack on group medicine by the New York State Medical Society, warning that it is aimed at "the anxious efforts of laymen and medical men of vision to try to find ways of easing the burden of costly illness and medical care . . ."

"Under the guise of ethics," the GOP paper noted, "the State Society seeks to destroy group medical plans that have given great service at low cost to countless workers who would otherwise be unable to procure this high quality of medical care."

Consumers Saved Millions—

'Quickie' Rate Hikes Denied Railroads By Senate Vote

"QUICKIE" rate boosts were denied the nation's railroads by a close Senate vote on a measure that would have allowed the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant fast, temporary rate increases to common carriers.

The Senate voted 39-37, mostly along party lines, to return the bill to committee. Sponsor of the measure was Chairman Bricker (R. O.) of the Commerce Committee, whose law firm gets heavy fees each year for legal work for the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Bricker proposed that the ICC be directed to increase rail rates on a temporary basis within 60 days after a railroad's request although the carrier would not have to submit information to support its demand, the ICC would not have to hold a public hearing before granting the increase and the burden of proof would be shifted from the railroad to the ICC or the public.

SEN. MONRONEY (D. Okla.) accused Bricker of promoting "an obnoxious rate grab" by the railroads and labeled it a "special interest bill" that could cost consumers "tens of millions of dollars."

While struggling to ram his amendment through the Senate, Bricker admitted that "no hearings were held on the proposed substitute" and the "ICC objected to the proposal."

Within 60 days after the increase was granted, Bricker suggested, the ICC would conduct a full investigation to see if the increase was justified. If necessary, the ICC would make the increase permanent. If it held it was not, or too much, the railroads would have to make appropriate refunds "upon demand."

Murray Honored By Steel Union's Boys Town Gift

CIO STEELWORKERS of the midwestern Dist. 34 have undertaken a unique project to establish a living tribute to Philip Murray, the late president of CIO and the steel union.

At the recent district convention, a seven-man committee was established to raise $50,000 to build a Philip Murray Memorial dormitory for the Boys Town of Missouri. The dormitory will house 20 boys and their house parents during the rehabilitation period.

Auto Workers Aid Striking AFL Hatters

STRIKING AFL hat workers in Norwalk, Conn., got a $50,000 boost from the CIO Auto Workers.

Half of the amount sent the strike fund by UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will be a gift, the other half a loan to the hatters' union.

The UAW gift brings to $150,000 the support given by CIO unions. CIO Steelworkers and Clothing Workers earlier made loans of $50,000 each to the union that has waged a 10-month strike.

The strike involves employes of the Hat Corp. of America, makers of Knox, Dobbs, Cavanaugh and Dunlap hats. Union security is involved. Pres. Alex Rose of the Hatters Union charged the firm is engaged in an attempt to destroy the union.

Rose called support by both CIO and AFL unions one of the greatest demonstrations of labor unity "in our generation." The strike which began last July has aroused almost as much interest as the famous "Danbury hatters'" case of 50 years ago, a celebrated legal battle between union and management.

Give A Buck To PAC

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

SOME TEXTILE GOODS are now selling at the lowest prices in 11 years and are actually as cheap as before World War II.

Moderate-income families should take advantage of certain of these buying oportunities in early-summer sales, because textile manufacturers are moving to stop the current flow of low-priced cotton and rayon household and clothing items.

Leading mills have announced plans to curtail production because the so-called "surplus" of goods has forced down prices. The manufacturer of synthetic fabrics, Burlington Mills, has been reducing operations for some time. This curtailment, of course, further increases unemployment among textile and other production workers, and will push prices back up, to the disadvantage of your own budget.

Buying Calendar

Some of the present values are outstanding, especially in work clothes, sheets and many cotton and synthetic-fabric garments.

In work clothes, most are now priced about 10% below last year's tags. You can even find dungarees now for as little as $1.60. In sheets, unbranded muslins are selling for $1.59 to $1.79 in the 81x99 size, depending on where you buy them, while the same sheets under brand names are generally listed at about $2. This is a drop of about 20% from prices of two years ago.

Worthwhile price reductions are now appearing on major household appliances, too, in the early-summer sales. Some top-quality automatic washers are now available for as low as $200 in special sales. Canister vacuum cleaners are sale-priced down to $60. For the first time, refrigerators with automatic defrost are available in the summer sales under the $300 mark.

REFRIGERATORS: Actually most refrigerators of the same make, whether high-priced deluxe or low-priced standard, are the same basic box with the same insulation. What jumps the price is the extra features. Some features of the costlier refrigerators are merely selling gadgets with no important functions, and should not distract you from looking for the real convenience and mechanical features.

Full-width freezer chests, a valuable feature in this era of frozen foods, also enable you to take advantage of special food buys for later use, and also keep food in good condition longer than the older-style small U-shape freezing compartment. But compare actual capacity in different brands boxes of the same size refrigerator.

One chest may have 35% greater capacity than another. Shelves in the door add to the capacity of a refrigerator and thus often enable you to buy a smaller size box at a saving. Leveling screws are valuable to keep the box level for most efficient operation. But slide-out shelves and butter-conditioners, widely promoted features of some deluxe boxes, are not as essential.

SUMMER DRESSES: Hot-weather dresses need to be carefully selected because they are subjected to hard wear and frequent laundering.

Materials in which summer dresses are available are much improved, including both crease-resistant cottons and blends of rayon with the more crease-resistant newer synthetics. Prices are reasonable this year too, with street cottons available for as little as $4 in simple classic styles.

But as well as material, check workmanship in inexpensive summer dresses carefully, to make sure your new dress will look as well at the end of the day as at the beginning, and look well at the end of the summer too.

Rieve To Get 'Torch Of Hope' Award At New York Dinner

EMIL RIEVE, president of the CIO Textile Workers and a CIO vice president, will receive the 1954 Torch of Hope award from the national council of the City of Hope at a testimonial dinner June 17 in New York City.

The announcement was made by Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union, who is general chairman of the Rieve testimonial dinner committee.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther is honorary chairman of the testimonial committee. The committee also includes the presidents and other officers of many CIO international unions, and the heads of a number of state CIO councils.

Rieve will be honored on the occasion of his 15th year as TWUA-CIO president and for his nearly 50 years of service to the trade union movement and community.

Rieve has long shown concern for the health and welfare of his fellow workers and has supported the program of the City of Hope, the national medical center in Los Angeles. Its free, non-sectarian service to trade unionists has helped to save the lives of thousands of men and women suffering from catastrophic diseases.

BLS Aide Gives HCL Lowdown

The American housewife must now pay $23.83 for the market basket of groceries that cost her an even $10 back in 1939, Mrs. Aryness Joy Wickens, deputy U. S. commissioner of labor statistics, told a women's meeting in Washington.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

I'D LIKE to hold back on our regular reports of CIO election victories for this week so that I can give the fullest attention to another great problem that we face in our unions—the problem of bringing our trade union movement right into the homes and daily lives of our friends and neighbors, as well as our members.

Last week, I attended a luncheon held by CIO's Community Services Committee. I met with Chairman Joe Beirne, Dir. Leo Perlis, and the dedicated staff of men and women who are doing such an outstanding job across this country of ours. The Community Services Committee works in close cooperation with the various private and public agencies and organizations that help care for our fellow citizens in their time of need.

At this time, with so many of our own membership suffering the effects of layoffs and short work weeks, the job of the committee has increased day by day, until it has become one of CIO's major efforts.

Our trouble seems to be that we have not always recognized the vital need for this committee and its work. It's easy to forget the doctor when the family is healthy. For my own Departments of Organization and Councils, I want to say that I consider the work of CSC to have the highest priority, and I will expect every effort to be made to assist in every possible way. At state, regional and city levels, I believe it only right that CIO people volunteer every spare moment to this cause.

THE CSC WORKS with so many different kinds of organizations it would be impossible to list them all here. Recently it concluded a new agreement with the American Red Cross, concerning disaster relief work. They have the same type of agreement with such organizations as Red Feather and Community Chest groups. CSC reaches directly into the homes of our people and their neighbors and that is their great struggle.

We have always taken justifiable pride in the job we do in the plants and mills and factories, but unfortunately we have often been content to let our work stop at the company gate. We are not a business organization. We cannot shut up shop at five o'clock and say that our work is done.

The labor movement is a social movement. When we speak of bettering the condition of workers, and when we speak of improving standards of living, we have to be prepared to follow through and go straight to the heart of the matter—we have to go into the homes and into the communities.

I believe that the heart of America is in the homes. I don't believe we can touch people and bring them to a realization of their own greatness unless we recognize that fact, and unless we act accordingly. A "five o'clock whistle" trade union is not doing its job and is not doing its duty.

THROUGH THE CSC, through the other avenues in CIO which lead us into the workers homes, and their neighbors homes, we can help realize that dream which was once expressed by our late, great Pres. Philip Murray when he said that the function of a trade union was to bring a little of God's sunshine into homes, to put a carpet on the floor, and some pictures on the wall—perhaps also to bring into the home a sense of comfort in knowing that their brothers and sisters are helping them in every way they are able.

The work of CSC is of tremendous importance—I say that again. We must do all we can to advance and assist and encourage its activities.

URRWA Meet Favors Merger Of CIO Transportation Unions

By ROY GRANATA

A CALL for a large, powerful union through organic affiliation of CIO unions in the transportation field was sounded at the third national conference of the CIO Railroad Workers held last week in Washington.

The keynote for an immediate program was contained in a resolution, adopted unanimously, instructing the officers and Executive Board members to continue discussions with other CIO unions to seek means of achieving a single CIO union representing all transportation workers.

The resolution adopted by the URRWA-CIO conference follows announced CIO policy. It noted a threatening "grave national crisis" and promised to seek "to broaden the base of our representation in the field of our jurisdiction."

TALKS with other leaders in the transportation field are to be carried on under "conditions that are proper in maintaining the dignity and responsibility of our own organization," the resolution said.

URRWA officers and a subcommittee of the union's Executive Board have had several meetings with representatives of the CIO Transport Workers to explore possibilities of organic affiliation between the two groups. Results of these talks were reported to the conference.

OLD AND NEW chairmen of the CIO Railroad Workers exchange handshake at the union's conference in Washington as CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe (center) looks on. John Green (left), chairman since the rail union's chartering in 1951, resigned and was succeeded by Richard T. Leonard.

The new program will provide for continued discussions with the goal of a definite determination on the subject.

The conference's closing session received with surprise the resignation of Chairman John Green. Delegates expressed regret at his action.

Green has been associated with the rail union since 1947 when it affiliated with the CIO Shipbuilders. In January 1951, the URRWA was given an organizing committee charter by the CIO and Green became its national chairman.

CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe announced that Richard T. Leonard would succeed Green. Leonard serves as field assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and will continue in the dual capacity.

A FORMER vice president of the CIO Auto Workers, Leonard since joining the National CIO staff has assisted with the organization of the telephone workers into the CIO Communications Workers. Later he was chairman of the Insurance Workers Organizing Committee until that union was established as an international.

Riffe also announced that Eugene V. Attreed would continue as URRWA secretary-treasurer and T. A. Bloom would remain as vice chairman.

CWA Gains In Independent Phone Talks

HEALTH and welfare improvements have been negotiated by the CIO Communications Workers with independent telephone companies while the Bell System continues to stall in contract talks.

A new contract with the Harrisonville Tel. Co., Waterloo, Ill., provides for company-paid hospitalization and surgical benefits under the Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans. The company also agreed to a 5.5c average wage hike and improved vacation and holiday provisions.

In Ohio, employes of the independent Lorain Tel. Co. have had their company-paid hospitalization extended to cover dependents, with benefits liberalized. The Lorain company agreed to raise wages from 2 to 4c an hour.

Other recent CWA-CIO contract gains include pay increases at the Lexington unit of General Telephone Co. of Kentucky. Negotiations are underway with Commonwealth Tel. Co. of Pennsylvania, General Tel. Co. of the Southwest, the Rochester, N. Y., Tel. Corp. and Globe Wireless.

Buffalo Station Adds Vandercook

With the end of a long strike at station WKBW in Buffalo, N. Y., the CIO is starting to sponsor the nightly ABC radio program of John W. Vandercook on the Buffalo ABC affiliate. A new contract between the station and the CIO National Association of Broadcasting Engineers & Technicians was signed last week.

Conciliators Join Stalled Wood Union Negotiations

FEDERAL conciliators last week entered the stalled negotiations of the CIO Woodworkers, representing some 40,000 members in the Northwest, and the Lumbermen's Industrial Relations Committee representing some 700 firms.

IWA-CIO postponed a May 3 strike deadline but negotiations broke off three days later, when the employers' group repeated its old refrain of "No cost increases."

The union is seeking a 12.5c an hour general increase, correction of pay inequities on the basis of a joint job analysis, and three weeks' vacation after five years' service.

IWA-CIO bases its pay demand on the workers' increased productivity. The union claimed at its sessions with the LIRA that an employer paid $2.11 less in labor costs in 1953 than he paid in 1952 for each thousand board feet of lumber.

THE IWA BASED these figures on statistics furnished by the West Coast Lumbermen's Association, an employer's group. LIRA spokesmen disputed the accuracy of the WCLA arithmetic but refused to let IWA-CIO study its figures.

"What the employers are saying," declared IWA-CIO Pres. A. F. Hartung, "is that workers can have no incentive to help increase productivity in the industry. Whole hog or none, is the employer attitude. This indicates to the workers that they won't benefit by any efforts they make to boost production. They may as well have stayed on the same production schedule as in 1952."

The big Weyerhaeuser Corp., which negotiates separately, thus far also has refused to make a wage offer to IWA-CIO. Last year Weyerhaeuser and several other companies gave 10,000 IWA-CIO members a 5c an hour increase.

Going Up

The increased profits of the lumber and allied industries for the first quarter of 1954 over the corresponding period in 1953 show that higher wages are justified, according to the CIO Woodworkers.

Here are some of the increases in net profits after taxes: Scott Paper Co., 32%; Diamond Match Co., 15%; Coos Bay Lumber Co., 10.5%; Georgia-Pacific Plywood Co., 6%, and Rayonier Lumber Co., 6%.

Guild Morale Is High At Wilkes-Barre

THE STRIKE of the Wilkes-Barre Newspaper Guild, CIO, against the Record and the Times-Leader, Evening News is in its seventh week as the union continued to publish its daily paper, the Valley News.

With the Guild receiving support from many persons and groups in the community, morale on the picket line was high.

The Guildsmen also were cheered by the success of their paper, which they were getting out with the help of locked-out AFL printing craftsmen. Without taking into account the collector's returns, the Valley News in one day recently took in $1100.

State conciliators continued their efforts to end the strike. Guild National Pres. Joseph F. Collis is a member of the striking local.

PAA Strike Move Voted

SOME 6000 members of the CIO Transport Workers have voted to strike Pan American World Airways in support of contract demands for raises of 18c an hour for maintenance employes and $65 a month for flight service.

Although no date was set for the strike, the union's action came a month after negotiations were broken off. The old contract expired Apr. 30.

TWU members involved are stationed in seven U. S. cities, Honolulu, San Juan, Puerto Rico, and bases on four continents.

The Transport Workers also last week won the "highest bus wage in the South" in an agreement with the Houston Transit Co.

They gained a 13c an hour increase so that they will suffer no loss in pay by going on a five-day week. They will get 6c an hour raise in November to bring their pay to $1.82 an hour.

Give A Buck To PAC

Hoosier CIOers Get An Earful Of Congress

INDIANA CIO DAYS—The slogan (left) has real meaning for these leaders of the Indiana CIO delegation that came to Washington to see their congressmen. From left, they are: State PAC Dir. H. J. Noel; Reg. 3 UAW-PAC Dir. Dan Bedell; Vice Pres. Mary Salisbury, and Pres. Dallas Sells. Thomas Burke, CIO congressional liaison chief (center), instructs delegates. In right photo, Rep. Madden (D. Ind.), talks over Capitol Hill situation with CIO Legislative Dir. Robert Oliver (at right). All delegates agreed on the value of the visit.

By FRED ROSS

SOME 60 Indiana CIO members last week called on their congressmen in Washington with two problems on their minds—both arising from rising unemployment.

They backed CIO's proposals that income tax exemptions raised to $800 this year and $1000 next year, and for a federal standard for unemployment compensation that would boost the amount and duration of benefits in their state.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

For four months they have been trying fruitlessly to get Gov. George Craig to call a special session of the Legislature to boost jobless benefit rates from $27 to $45 a month and the duration from 20 to 30 weeks.

AFTER two days in the Nation's Capitol, they went home eager to tell their experiences to their councils and local unions. With few exceptions, the answers they got from their congressmen were mildly encouraging.

They went home convinced that they should tell their story to their fellow union members and prepare for the November election.

They also attended meetings at which CIO legislative leaders and Rep. Madden, the lone Democratic member of the Indiana delegation, described the congressional situation.

"In the 1954 election," Madden said, "we won't have the Korean issue. This election is going to be decided on domestic issues—on what the Eisenhower Administration did to carry out its promises to labor and the farmers."

HE RECALLED that Candidate Eisenhower told the AFL convention in 1952 that some provisions of the Taft-Hartley Law could break organized labor and a farmers' meeting at Kasson, Minn., that he believed in 90% parity. Madden pointed out that the promise to labor had not been kept and that Agriculture Sec. Benson wants to cut farm parity to 75%.

There were two members of the delegation who were unusually interested in the political situation—both of them are running for office in Elkhart County.

Mrs. Helen Bickel, a leader of the Elkhart County CIO Council, trounced her male rival for county recorder by 640 votes in the Democratic primary. The president of Local 941, Auto Workers, Sam Hayes won the Democratic nomination for Indiana House.

5-24

IUE Wins 9c In Pact With RCA

THE CIO Electrical Workers got the first big break in its current series of negotiations with electrical appliance industry companies when it reached an agreement with the Radio Corp. of America.

The new pact provides a 9c an hour package for 12,000 workers at four plants.

Most of them, 5000, are at the main plant at Camden, N. J. The agreement also covers employes at factories at Moorestown, N. J., Cincinnati, O., and Santa Monica, Calif.

SOME 11,000 production workers get an across-the board increase of 5c an hour, and salaried workers receive a 3.5% raise. An inequity adjustment averaging 2c an hour also was won.

Other improvements include hospital care for babies born to working mothers, pro-rated vacation pay for a worker who quits, a better lay-off notice and a better provision for injury compensation.

Meanwhile, negotiations continued with General Electric Corp. The Philco Corp. maintained its adamant attitude which caused 8500 IUE-CIO members to strike in Philadelphia and Sandusky, O. Issues are a wage increase, a master contract and preservation of the 8.5c an hour payment into the pension plan.

Senate Group Okays More Housing Units

ADVOCATES of low-rent housing last week scored a victory when the Senate Banking Committee voted to restore provisions of the 1949 public housing law to the housing bill. The vote was 12 to 3.

The Senate committee action went beyond the President's plan and provided for 800,000 housing units in four years.

The House last April had defeated Pres. Eisenhower's recommendation that 140,000 low-rent housing units be built in the next four years.

CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, who is chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, some weeks ago urged the Senate committee to provide two million homes a year.

CHAIRMAN Capehart (R. Ind.) announced that the committee also unanimously adopted a Democratic suggestion that it be made "absolutely impossible for builders to realize any windfall profits on government-insured mortgages."

Other Democratic suggestions unanimously adopted by the committee would extend the authority of the Veterans Administration to make direct loans to veterans, extend the farm housing program, and designate the Housing & Home Finance Agency to handle public agency loans for community facilities.

EARLIER recommendations were made to Congress to improve the FHA.

Some points had been proposed by a temporary consumers' interest advisory committee.

CIO member of the committee was Ben Fischer, National CIO Housing Committee director.

After meeting with the consumers' committee, which he named, Acting FHA Commissioner Norman P. Mason submitted recommendations to the Senate Banking Committee.

Committee recommendations which Mason forwarded to Congress included:

- Requirement that contractors submit certification of their costs instead of just prior estimates —to prevent further "windfall" profits on apartment house building.
- Enlargement and strengthening of the FHA staff.
- Establishment by FHA of an educational program to warn prospective home owners of possible abuses.

Mason also urged that "teeth" be put in the law by giving FHA authority to suspend dealers, salesman and others who abuse the home building and repair program.

The consumer committee wanted stronger regulation to curb abuses.

Knight Backs Public Power Moves

THE PROPER role of government in the development of power and water resources should not depend on slogans and theories, CIO Vice Pres. O. A. Knight told the new Hoover Commission Task Force on Water Resources and Power last week.

"Nowhere has there been a greater smokescreen of propaganda and slogans and catch-phrases spread than in the controversy over public versus private development of power and water resources, and over federal versus state versus local supervision of such development," he declared.

Knight is chairman of the CIO Committee on Natural Resources and Development and president of the CIO Oil Workers. He testified at hearings in Denver.

He pointed out that the answers should properly be found in the records of various public and private agencies in these fields, rather than catch-phrases or one-sided propaganda.

"The facts are that prior to the institution of the public power projects and the rural electric cooperatives, most of our farmers and many small town residents had kerosene rather than electric lights," Knight said. "The fact is that now millions of farmers have electric lights, appliances and machinery."

He added that the farmers have paid for this power service themselves, and that the rural cooperatives are paying off their loans in most cases in advance of the due dates.

"Cooperative, government-supported effort succeeded where private enterprise failed," Knight said. "In considering this point we have facts to study; we need not dally with theories."

Knight called on the Task Force to recommend a policy for the federal government that will "encourage active participation in the development of our natural resources, including electric power, because this will in the long range bring the greatest benefit to the greatest number."

He said such a policy will benefit all phases of private industry as well as consumers and wage earners.

"Immediate profits, immediate prices, immediate benefits must take a secondary position to the long range needs of the nation in all power and water planning," Knight said.

Other spokesmen for CIO international unions are scheduled to testify June 1 in Chattanooga, Tenn.; June 14 in New York City, and June 28 in Portland, Ore.

TVA Denied Funds For Steam Plant

The Senate last week turned down Sen. Kefauver's request for $30 million to enable the TVA to build its proposed Fulton steam plant near Memphis, Tenn.

Kefauver asked for money for the project, which the CIO has supported, in an amendment to the $5 billion independent offices appropriation. It was beaten on a voice vote.

Reciprocal Trade Program Stalled

Pres. Eisenhower has admitted that his request for a three-year extension of an amended Reciprocal Trade Act hasn't a chance of getting action in Congress this year. He is now willing to settle for a one-year extension of the act as is.

Give A Buck To PAC

The Pegler Libel Case (See Page 2)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., May 31, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 22

Tax Cut, Old Age Pay Bills Near Decision

—See Page 3

U. S. Labor Charges Russ Unions Are 'Silent Partners' In Slavery

—See Page 2

Tale of Steel Cities

"The answer is no," Pres. Mike Roberts of CIO Steelworkers Local 1331 seems to be saying, with a wave of his hands, to group of idle unionists who visited Youngstown, O., union hall to ask about jobs.

Roberts says the layoff situation in the Ohio steel center is the worst since the union was organized in 1937. Some 7200 steel workers are idle in Youngstown, and relief applications are up sharply. That's photo of the late Philip Murray, CIO and Steelworkers president, on the wall. (Youngstown story, Page 6; CIO-CSC conference acts on more aid to unemployed, see Page 7.)

IUE Plans New Home

The modernistic, glass-fronted building above will be the new headquarters home of the CIO Electrical Workers.

Plans for the $350,000 six-story building were told by IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey. The new headquarters will be located at 1126 16th St. N. W. in downtown Washington.

With approval received from the District of Columbia Zoning Board, construction will start within a few weeks. Plans for the building, authorized by the last IUE-CIO convention, are being drafted by Architect A. R. Clas. (More on IUE, p. 3.)

TWU Prepares N. Y. Strike

—See Page 11

Guild Battle In Wilkes-Barre

—See Page 12

U. S. Labor Counsels Protest—

Russ Unions 'Silent Partners' In Slavery

TRADE UNIONS in countries dominated by Soviet Russia are "silent partners in the exploitation of their own members," three of the most prominent labor lawyers in the U. S. charged last week in an open letter nailing down Communist lies about labor organizations in the free nations.

"Such unions cannot be called free," they asserted. "Indeed, they do not deserve the appellation of 'trade unions.'"

The letter was signed by Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel of the CIO; J. Albert Woll, AFL general counsel; and Welly Hopkins, general counsel of the Mine Workers. It was addressed to J. H. Oldenbrook, general secretary of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and is being circulated among European trade unionists.

Commie Attack Answered

It was prompted by an "illogical and baseless" attack on trade union rights and civil liberties in free nations made in resolutions passed at a recent meeting of the Communist-controlled Intl. Association of Democratic Lawyers in Vienna, and in a speech there by Leon Lyon-Caen, honorary first president of the Court of Cassation of France.

"In the Soviet Union and the satellite countries, there is no independence for the trade unions," the three labor lawyers wrote bluntly. "The by-laws of the Soviet trade unions make clear that these trade unions are permitted no independence.

"Certainly, there is no indication of independence or freedom for trade unions when they are, by their own bylaws, placed under the control of a party or state—even when that party or state falsely claims, as does the Soviet Union and its Communist Party, it is the friend or the representative of the workers themselves.

Far From Utopia

"No sane man can claim that the Soviet Union or its satellite countries has come close to approaching the Utopia about which its founders and leaders have spoken so ecstatically. The Soviet press occasionally, as part of official 'self-criticism,' reports of bad working conditions, exploitation, shoddy construction of workers' homes and a host of other similar matters.

"Yet, never in a blue moon do the Soviet trade unions do anything about even these acknowledged problems."

The attorneys recalled that in every country with a bona fide labor movement, the collective bargaining agreement is the major goal of union members and leaders.

"Yet," they added, "in the Soviet Union 'the agreement of the parties (in negotiating collective agreements) plays a subordinate role in the determination of the amount of wages or salaries' (I. T. Gelyakova, Labor Legislation, Moscow 1947)."

A voice for the workers in determining their wage rates is an essential of free unionism, they went on.

"Yet," they continued, "in the Soviet Union (Trud, Feb. 20, 1947) 'it is well known that the rates of wages for workers, engineering technical personnel and office employes are established only by government decisions.'"

They also pointed out that workers in the Communist states do not have the right to strike.

"Without the strike weapon, no trade union, regardless of the society in which it functions, has freedom to defend its members against repression, against attacks on the security of its organization, against economic deterioration, or to achieve effectively progress in social and economic matters," they said.

"The long history of Soviet 'self-criticism' . . . proves that without trade unions permitted to strike, abuses occur against working men and women. Yet, the trade unions, harnessed as they are to the machinery of the Communist state, make no protest."

Slave Labor Camps Cited

Slave labor camps, severe penalties for absenteeism or tardiness, and administrative laws tieing the worker to his job, the three maintained, prove that in the Soviet orbit, "the major opponent of true trade union rights and fundamental civil liberties is, in fact, the Communist Party and the Communist-controlled government."

"This party and this government," they said, "is actually the dictatorship of an elite group over the proletariat, and it treats the workers and their trade unions as a subjugated, captive manpower force."

Unions are not free, they said, if they cannot strike, if they "are controlled by a monolithic political party and have their freedom and initiative made subordinate to the will of a political dictatorship," and if they cannot work to strengthen the civil liberties and civil rights of all sections of society.

"Thus," they concluded, "the question becomes one of honesty of approach to this vital problem of trade union and civil rights."

The Pegler Trial: Hearst Lawyer Fights Last War Over Again

By AL ZACK

WORLD WAR II was being refought last week in a crowded, stuffy federal court room high above lower Manhattan, where Westbrook Pegler, the union-hating columnist, is on trial.

Still in the witness chair as the $500,000 libel suit against Pegler dragged past the two-week mark was Quentin Reynolds, noted war correspondent, TV and radio personality, and author of many books.

Under vigorous cross-examination from the Pegler camp, Reynolds told the court of many of the World War II actions he covered. The court room grew quiet and the jurors leaned forward, listening intently to the deep-voiced Reynolds as he described names and battles famous during the forties.

REYNOLDS TOLD the jury of the famed Dieppe raid of August 1942, the "dress rehearsal" for the Normandy invasion nearly two years later. As a war correspondent with the Commandos in that operation, Reynolds was aboard the command ship, a tiny destroyer which led the attacking force through the German mine fields in the English Channel.

Only the distant traffic noise, and the booming of downtown church bells, interrupted as Reynolds painted a grim word picture of the nine hours which cost the Allied forces thousands of casualties, but provided vital information needed to plan the invasion of Hitler-dominated Europe.

Then a hard, drumming voice creaked across the room. It was that of lean, white-haired Charles Henry, chief trial lawyer for the powerful Hearst interests, which are co-defendants with Pegler.

Henry pounded out question after question, all seeking to prove the war strategy was wrong, or that the political strategy of the period was erroneous.

All the time-worn Hearst disputes with Pres. Roosevelt, the New Deal Administration, and America's war-time leaders were in Henry's questions.

Federal Judge Edward Weinfeld was lenient, he told Henry on more than one occasion, but he stopped many of the questions, warning the Hearst lawyer he was wandering far afield.

Again and again, the court brought the case back to the issue to be decided by the jury of eight men and four women: Did Pegler libel Reynolds in a 1949 column which charged the correspondent with being an "absentee" from battles, a "coward," having a "yellow streak," having been a nudist, a pro-Communist, a British propagandist, etc.?

Reynolds, the record shows, was with the French forces in the early days of the war. He was one of the last correspondents to leave Paris before it fell to the Germans. He was in London during the blitz. He covered a convoy trip through the English Channel when convoys were normally suffering 20% casualties.

HE COVERED the Dieppe raid, was in Moscow during that city's fight against German armies, and covered part of the desert warfare in Africa and the Sicilian invasion. He was on Gen. Mark Clark's command ship during the Salerno invasion and coincidentally noted that vessel was anchored in the North River last week. He also covered part of the naval war in the Pacific.

Reporters covering the trial compared Reynolds' wartime record with that of Pegler. During World War I, Pegler was briefly a war correspondent, but later lost his credentials. Although he was far younger at that time than Reynolds was during World War II, there is no record of his ever having seen military service.

Pegler has been sitting silently upright in the defendant's chair, his head pushed forward, turtle-like, his back rigid in an exaggerated military pose. He has made voluminous notes, but has spoken only rarely and never smiled.

HIS ATTORNEY spent half of one day trying to prove Reynolds a coward and then abruptly changed his tactics. That afternoon he sought to prove Reynolds had used "false statements" to get a military pass from a French bureaucrat to go to the front lines.

Reynolds, reading from one of his books, recounted preparing a fake cablegram, addressed to the late Pres. Roosevelt, calling him "Uncle" and referring to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as "Aunt Eleanor."

Obviously enjoying the story, Reynolds admitted the cable was designed to "kid" the bureaucrat into giving him the pass and was never intended to be sent. But the French officer did dispatch the cable, Reynolds said with a grin, and he called it a "terrible" mistake.

However, said Reynolds, it wasn't "really a false statement," merely "journalistic enterprise" which he learned while working for Hearst before the war.

Most of the time Reynolds retained his good humor on the witness stand—even after 10 days of testimony, six of them under the rigorous cross-examination of Pegler's attorney. He lost his temper once, when Henry charged him with writing "fiction" in his account of a battle incident.

The six-foot Reynolds, his face a deep red, half-rose from his chair.

"Don't call me a liar, Mr. Henry," he flashed.

Henry and Reynolds exchanged shouts, with the witness saying to the judge, "when I'm fighting for my life, I have a right to be indignant."

Judge Weinfeld calmy told the jury to disregard the incident and placed the trial back on the track again.

As the trial moved into its third week, Weinfeld called Pegler, Reynolds and their attorneys into his chambers for a secret conference which lasted nearly an hour.

None of the conferees would discuss the incident with newsmen, and as court adjourned that afternoon the judge surprised courtroom observers with a sharp lecture to the jury.

REITERATING his earlier instructions, the judge said in measured tones:

"If any person attempts to discuss this case with you, I want you to report to me immediately."

There was no clarification of this statement. All who had participated in the conference turned aside newsmen's questions, saying they were under instructions to say nothing.

Full Quote Makes A Difference

Westbrook Pegler's counsel, in cross-examining Quentin Reynolds, often quotes sentences out of Reynold's books, "Did you or did you not write that?" snaps Charles Henry.

Reynolds attorney, Louis Nizer, often protests that Henry's quotes have been taken out of a context and drastically alter what had been written.

Nizer demonstrated this charge when the Pegler counsel asked whether Reynolds had written that the Polish people, in the area occupied by Russia early in the war, had voted for Communist rule.

The full passage showed Reynolds had written that the Commies claimed this but Reynolds added his own observation that whenever elections "were held under guns" the results were suspect.

Pegler's Long Hatred For Broun Is Key To Trial

THE KEY to the Pegler-Reynolds trial, which is getting the "cold-shoulder treatment" from most newspapers, is Pegler's long-nursed hatred for Heywood Broun, the late liberal columnist who was first president of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Broun's feelings about Pegler became evident when Pegler's counsel cross-examined Reynolds about a book review which precipitated the column which is the basis for Reynolds' libel suit.

Reynolds was asked if he hadn't incorporated every derogatory comment contained in the biography of Broun, which Reynolds reviewed in the New York Herald Tribune.

"No," said Reynolds, and he proceeded to read other material including a reference to the Pegler column defending lynching. He also read two paragraphs summing up Broun's view of Pegler.

He was a fine sports writer "who was out of his element," Broun had said. "He's as sweet a fellow you would care to meet until he sits down at the typewriter. . . . the income tax bug had bitten Pegler severely at an early age."

Give A Buck To PAC

POOCH AND PICKETS donned gas masks in long strike of CIO Auto Workers against Kohler Co. at Kohler, Wisc., after management boasted it had guns and hinted it had tear gas inside the plant. UAW Local 833 members watch Elmer Schrader put a gas mask on his dog, Duchess.

Tax Cut Bill, Social Security Near Decision In Congress

CONGRESS within the next few weeks will be called upon to face up to two major issues, each of which is potentially as explosive politically as the H-bomb.

Headed for the first test—probably sometime during the second week in June—is the new tax legislation, which thus far remains pretty much in the form originally called for by the Administration.

This bill has already passed the House and now is being readied for the final showdown on the Senate floor by the Senate Finance Committee.

Meanwhile, the House is just about to begin wrestling with the second. This is the Administration proposal for revision of the Social Security Act to broaden its coverage and benefits.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEE has just put the final touches on the social security bill and it is expected to reach the House floor in the near future.

Like the tax measure, the social security amendments will be reported under a closed rule, which will make floor changes impossible. That means that the Democrats who want to improve the bill can only do so by moving to "recommit" the measure to the committee with instructions to revise it.

All of the political pressures which the White House can muster will certainly be used in the effort to win passage of both the tax and social security programs in the form called for by the Administration.

What this means is that the Administration fight will be directly primarily against Democratic efforts at improvements rather than, as is usually the case, merely to win passage.

THIS BEING an election year, many Republican congressmen frankly admit they recognize that the Administration's tax favoritism to corporations and stock owners is poor politics. It was only strong White House pressure that kept enough Republicans in line to pass the Administration tax bill on the first showdown in the House.

To keep GOP members in line, White House lieutenants used threats of reduced patronage

"I already have Life, Accident, Fire, and Health insurance.... What I need most today is a little Job insurance!"

and other President-bestowed favors. The Republican National Committee also cracked the whip by threatening to refuse aid from the party's lush 1954 campaign fund to members who voted against the President's programs.

As a result, a Democratic effort to substitute an increase in the personal income tax exemption from $600 to $700 was beaten narrowly, 210 to 204.

This proposal would have given the typical worker a tax savings equivalent to a wage increase of more than 9c an hour, or 7.5c more in take-home pay.

The Administration Bill which passed, instead of giving the tax savings to consumers in the low and middle income brackets, would give 95% of the benefits to corporations and high income individuals.

SENATE Democrats, however, have renewed the fight against the GOP plan to favor the rich while withholding tax concessions to the great consuming public. Sen. George (D. Ga.), ranking minority authority on tax matters, is sponsoring an amendment to boost the personal exemption to $800 this year and to $1000 thereafter.

Supporters of this move point out that raising the exemption to $800 would immediately put $4.5 billion consumer dollars to work creating new demands for goods and services and would help check the downward trend in the economy.

AFTER first approving Pres. Eisenhower's social security program almost exactly as proposed, the House Ways and Means Committee reversed itself last week and voted to exclude doctors, policemen and firemen from coverage.

The committee then voted to report the bill to the floor. It probably will be acted upon during the week of June 7.

The motion to exclude doctors was made by Rep. Jenkins (R. O.) and that excluding policemen and firemen by Rep. Byrnes (R. Wis.).

THE COMMITTEE was on record as having approved inclusion of farm operators, lawyers, dentists and other professionals, and certain domestic workers under social security. It also had approved coverage for about half of the 2.6 million farm laborers not now eligible.

In other matters, the committee voted to increase monthly benefits at least $5 for a single retired worker and as much as $31 for a family, and boosted the maximum monthly family benefit from the present $168.75 to $200.

It changed the maximum amount of other earned income allowed those drawing benefits from $75 a month to $1000 a year.

THE COMMITTEE voted to increase the wage base which is subject to the social security tax from $3600 to $4200 a year. In addition, if approved a proposal to "freeze" old age insurance benefits of persons who become disabled, so that upon reaching 65 a worker disabled would become eligible for retirement benefits at the amount he would have received had he been eligible for them when disabled.

Democratic members of the committee have generally supported the Eisenhower proposals, while criticizing some as not going far enough. Their attack was leveled primarily at the failure to provide disability benefits and the need for even higher benefits.

In general, however, Democratic members of the committee have looked with favor on the President's proposals for increased benefits, a higher earnings base for eligibility, and extended coverage.

UAW Defeats UE 4 To 1 In Quad Cities Victory

DESPITE a vicious proganda campaign by the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers, the CIO Auto Workers last week won two Labor Board elections at the International Harvester Works at East Moline, Ill.

UAW-CIO swamped UE by a 4-to-1 margin in an election in the large production and maintenance unit. The vote was UAW-CIO, 1326, and UE, 311.

The CIO union routed both UE and the AFL Machinists to win the poll in the skilled crafts unit at the same plant. These victories brings to four the triumphs of the UAW-CIO in its current campaign to eliminate UE-FE from plants in the Quad Cities area, the "Little Detroit" of the farm machinery industry.

The company last week announced its intention to lay off some 700 workers at the Farmall Tractor Works in Rock Island, where the CIO union is planning to seek an election, and another 600 at Memphis, Tenn.

CWA Gains 5c In First Bell Contract

THE FIRST settlement in 1954 negotiations with the Bell System was chalked up by the CIO Communications Workers last week with a new agreement yielding an average 5.5c an hour wage increase at the Western Electric Co. manufacturing plant at Haverhill-Lawrence, Mass.

The new contract gives day workers a boost of 5 to 7c an hour, with 4 to 6c for piece-workers. The company also agreed to a full holiday on Christmas Eve—the holiday itself falls on a Saturday this year—but refused to follow suit on New Year's Eve.

Three other wage offers have been made by Bell units. Western Electric sales offered 5 to 7c an hour, for an average of 5.8c. For the small Western Electric manufacturing plant at Queensboro, N. Y., the offer was 4 to 5c for day workers, 3 to 4c for pieceworkers, plus the holiday on Christmas Eve. The Bell Laboratories offered $1 to $2.

MEANTIME, the union has been negotiating better contracts with independents. The latest was an agreement with the Ohio River Telephone Co., in Southern Indiana, which raised traffic operators 8c an hour and plant wages by 12 to 20c.

Steel Union, Small Firms Open Parleys

CONTRACT negotiations between the CIO Steelworkers and a number of medium-size and smaller basic steel producers were under way last week as parleys with the U. S. Steel Corp. went into a two-week recess.

At a series of meetings with different companies, the USA-CIO offered proposals for substantial wage increases, the guaranteed annual wage, improvements in the insurance and pension plans, and adjustment in a long series of contract clauses.

The negotiations were opened—and then recessed subject to call by either party—with the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., Crucible Steel Co., Allegheny-Ludlum Steel Corp., Inland Steel Co., Pittsburgh Steel Co., Bethlehem Steel Corp. and Republic Steel Corp.

Meetings with U. S. Steel were recessed to permit management at all levels to review the union's proposals.

CIO on ABC
Monday thru Friday
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS

IUE Turns Down GE's Wage Offer

AN INADEQUATE wage offer of 2.68%, tied to a revised contract duration clause and ignoring a proposal for the guaranteed annual wage, was rejected last week by the CIO Electrical Workers on behalf of more than 70,000 members employed by the General Electric Co.

The rejection came in a resolution by the union's GE Negotiating Committee. It described what the company called a "de luxe, chromium-plated model" in a "thin year" as offering only "a very inadequate wage increase and the long overdue granting of Saturday holidays," and ignoring other "vital economic issues."

"The wage increase itself was inadequate not only in terms of the pattern of increases throughout the industry," the resolution said, "but failed even to measure up to previous increases established in negotiations with the company."

The negotiators accused the company of making the offer as an "ultimatum" that must be accepted by June 7 and made part of a new contract expiring Sept. 15, 1955, instead of the present termination date of June 1, 1955. IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey and Chairman John Callahan of the IUE-CIO GE Conference Board called the conditions "extremely harsh."

The union also pointed out that only nine negotiating meetings had been held and that with a holiday weekend between the offer and the ultimatum date, there was "little opportunity" for bargaining.

THE WAGE offer, Carey and Callahan said, was particularly inadequate in view of the 42% increase in GE profits and 60% increase in dividend payments over last year, while the workers—20,000 fewer than a year ago—have been having the "thin year" the company talked about.

In another wage battle, IUE-CIO negotiators turned down as too low an offer of a 5c an hour wage increase by the Philco Corp., Philadelphia, where 8000 production workers have been on strike for nearly a month.

The Time Is Now

The chance of a lifetime is open right now for any worker who wants to fight back when he's pushed around, instead of folding up.

The Republican tax handout to the big money crowd is due to hit the Senate floor next week. The Grand Old Party of rich corporations and rich men call it a tax bill. Actually it's a license for great wealth to move into the Treasury with steam shovels and dig in. The rest of us are invited to hang around outside and scramble for the pennies that drop as the dollars are moved out.

To get a fair deal instead of a raw deal, every worker should write his Senators a letter telling them he wants the George Amendment to the tax bill passed, and the free loading licenses revoked. Further, he ought to tell his friends to do the same. And he ought to do these things NOW.

The George Amendment is the one that would increase the income tax exemption from the present $600 to $800 this year and $1000 next year. To the average worker, this would mean the same as a 9.5c an hour wage increase.

A couple of letters to your senators, and a few hours of persuasion spread among friends and acquaintances, may pay off handsomely.

What Goes On Here?

Frankly, we can't understand the need for an intensive loyalty investigation of Ralph Bunche, the Nobel Prize winner who is one of America's leading Negro citizens.

Hush-hush stories from New York—where he is one of the United Nations' top officials—indicate that Bunche has been grilled by a loyalty board for more than 12 hours at a time. (He managed to get time off to attend a dinner thrown by the President at the White House for Haile Selassie.)

Bunche's record shows his loyalty, love and devotion to his country. To question the loyalty of Bunche, a citizen of the U. S. and a servant of the United Nations, is to ignore his career and his outstanding service to America. They just can't be ignored.

What Goes On Here (2)?

The GOP didn't find much of an inherited mess in the Justice Dept.—but it does appear they're creating one of their own.

The Department accused Val Lorwin, a government servant of about 15 years' service, of making false statements, and the inference was raised that he was a Communist. To the many trade union officials who know Mr. Lorwin, the charge seemed absurd.

Last week, the Justice Dept. practically admitted so. It asked to dismiss the indictment of Lorwin, and fired the Justice lawyer who handled the case. That lawyer, it turned out, told the grand jury there was no point to questioning Lorwin because, as a Communist, he would use the Fifth Amendment—when the fact is that, as a longtime anti-Communist, Lorwin would not have done so.

This smacks much of proof by accusation: call a man a Communist and then not listen to his story on "grounds" that he wouldn't talk anyway.

We hope the Justice Dept. will stop this kind of nonsense. And we're glad that Val Lorwin, a long-time friend and student of labor, has in effect been cleared of the ridiculous charges against him.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS

Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII May 31, 1954 No. 22

'I Have Here In My Hand A Document—'

In Other Words—

The Case Against Wiretapping

Wiretapping proposals of the Administration threaten the historic U. S. safeguards protecting the privacy and security of the home, Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) declared in a recent Senate speech, excerpts from which follow.

By WAYNE MORSE

FREEDOM AND RIGHTS that have been long enjoyed are too often taken for granted. The decades of sacrifice with which they were earned are too soon forgotten.

Our heritage of liberty is as precious as any of the material riches and the mechanical marvels that past generations have willed. If we are not vigilant, this inheritance can be lost, not in one lawless sweep but by the erosion of what appear to be minor exceptions.

Today the right of our citizens to privacy and security in their homes, won over centuries, stands in such peril.

Wayne Morse

Atty. Gen. Brownell has recommended to the Congress that it legalize wiretapping by authorizing the interception of private telephone messages by officials of the executive branch of the government and the military department, in the investigation of certain activities broadly defined as interfering with the national security and defense.

Wiretapping is a police state method. We will do a poor job of defending democracy from the aggression of Communists and other totalitarians, if in the process we adopt as our own the methods of our enemies.

The wiretap, the rubber hose and the third degree are standard equipment of the officer with the "persecution complex," whose zeal for conviction exceeds his respect for rights. They should have no place in the activities of responsible public officials.

Adoption of the Brownell proposal would revive search and seizure practices of the type outlawed by the courts of England 188 years ago, and recognized as unlawful by the framers of the Bill of Rights amendments to our federal Constitution.

Our 4th Amendment was designed to protect personal privacy and security, and the sanctity of homes of Americans from the assaults of impatient, over-zealous and opportunistic officials. The 4th Amendment provides: "The right of the people to be secure in their homes . . ."

Wiretapping—secret listening to words spoken in the home, or surreptitious interception of a person's confidential communications to his family, friends, associates, lawyer, doctor, or priest—is an insidious kind of intrusion upon personal privacy.

The mistake of taking liberty for granted is not an uncommon one. Witness the fact that our Constitution as ratified in 1788, and as it stood on the day of the opening of the first session of Congress in 1789, contained no bill of rights.

The Rights Of The People

Congressional adoption of the Bill of Rights Amendments in 1789, and their subsequent ratification by the states, established in law the principle that in a democracy, the rights of the people are always superior to the expediencies of government officials.

Even in ancient times there were evidences of that same concept in custom and law. Biblical literature reveals a number of instances illustrative of a strong respect for the dwelling as a place which was not subject to arbitrary visitation, even on the part of official authority.

Wiretapping is non-selective. The privacies of innocent persons would be invaded, because its operations cannot be limited to the conversations of those who are properly held suspect.

Innocent persons whose lines are tapped would be without protection. In the words of Lord Camden, "The only witnesses are the trespassers."

Brownell and the other Administration proponents of wiretapping have not shown that the agencies cannot continue to do an effective job without the use of the wiretap. They have only claimed that without it the government is "handicapped in its work."

I have no doubt that some of the police have always considered constitutional limitations on the methods they may use in their work to be "handicaps." But these limitations have been what has distinguished the free state from the police state.

The trouble with "fighting fire with fire" in a case like this is that in doing so you may reduce the Bill of Rights to a heap of ashes.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ONE OF THE SPECTACULAR recent shows in this town has been the House investigation of allegedly socially subversive activities by the great capitalistic foundations bearing the names of Ford, Rockefeller, Carnegie, etc.

The Republicans running this show are not so tough as Joe McCarthy, but all of them are trying to grow up to be junior-grade McCarthys.

Case Of The Junior Joes

The chairman of the House investigating subcommittee is Brazilla Carroll Reece, onetime chairman of the Republican National Committee, a defeated candidate in 1948 for the U. S. Senate, and a faithful spokesman of all that was worst in the politics and social viewpoints of the late Robert A. Taft.

The capitalistic foundations were "investigated" a few years ago by a subcommittee headed by the late Rep. E. E. ("Goober") Cox, a Georgia Democrat of uncertain attachments. But Reece, from the Republican mountain areas of Tennessee, apparently decided that Cox had done a lousy job and that he himself was driven by a 100% American impulse to start the inquiry all over again.

Brings Up The Shock Troops

There are three facts about Reece's inquiry that thus far have attracted attention:

1. The staff director of Reece's subcommittee, one Norman Dodd, issued an original indictment of the foundations charging them in effect with being pro-United Nations, pro-education and pro-New Deal.

2. Rep. Wayne L. Hays, an Ohio Democrat, blazed with indignation, at the suggestion that being pro-United Nations and pro-New Deal was equated with subversion. Hays was strongly supported by Rep. Gracie Pfost, Idaho Democrat.

3. Brazilla Carroll Reece finally brought up his shock troops, in the form of the other two Republican members of the subcommittee, and Rep. Jesse P. Wolcott (R. Mich.) laid down an extraordinary dictat—that the "real enemy" of America is not Communism, as McCarthy claims, but the kind of "Fabian Socialism" that "destroyed Great Britain."

This is political insanity directly related to McCarthy's "20 years of treason" theme flung against Democrats.

I don't know whether Dodd, staff director of Reece's committee, was ever denied—on application—a Ford, Rockefeller or Carnegie fellowship for social studies.

I do know that Paul Hoffman, who has had a vital connection with the Ford Foundation, was a key supporter of Pres. Eisenhower before and during the Republican National Convention of 1952. One suspects that the real quarrel in Reece's committee is over the social ideas of Taft and of Eisenhower's friends.

Hoffman previously was the operating genius in charge of the Studebaker Corp. He was the first head of the Marshall Plan agency to save Western Europe from Soviet communism.

There Never Was A Plot

In Hoffman's administration, the Marshall Plan agency enlisted a number of American union leaders to talk plainly to their European counterparts. Eisenhower's White House first got rid of these union spokesmen and has only belatedly realized that it had better hire them back.

The American mind will be more healthy when all our people finally realize that there isn't any sinister "plot" by any of our accepted political leaders or foundation directors to undermine the country. There never has been.

Furthermore, "Fabian Socialism" did not "destroy Great Britain." The great political reforms that saved Britain as a democracy during the depression and as a lonely embattled enemy of Hitler during the first years of World War II were the reforms of such anti-Communists and anti-Socialists as David Lloyd George and Winston Churchill.

The New Deal was not treasonous, and the capitalistic foundations that have granted money for social studies have never been other than loyally American. The mugwumps and Know-Nothings of B. Carroll Reece's subcommittee can clamor as they please, but it still isn't unpatriotic to disagree with Reece or Norman Dodd.

★ A high Administration official, who in October 1952 repeatedly expressed his preference for the election of Adlai Stevenson, recently tried to straighten out matters with Frederic W. Collins, reporter for the Providence (R. I.) Journal.

Said the official, he had been thinking it over, and he now realized that he never had really preferred Stevenson, he now comprehended that he had always been an Eisenhower man.

Exploded Collins: "I'm in favor of new faces in the team, but does each one have to have two?"

★ Samuel Brownell, U. S. Commissioner of Education, has made stirring speeches on our need for new schools. But he was not allowed to testify on the urgency before the Senate committee considering federal aid to education. Mrs. Hobby, Secretary of the Department of Not-Too-Much Health, Education & Welfare, refused to let him testify. There was grave danger, Mrs. Hobby thought, that the federal government might be expected to do something and that would defy Eisenhower's theory that federal government is bad for the people.

The Capitol Hill Scene—

This Time School Kids Pay For 'Government-By-Postponement'

By WILLIAM MILLIS

THE TESTED techniques of the Eisenhower Administration of "government by postponement"—applied extensively through commissions and investigations in the GOP's first year in office—are being dusted off again.

This time they are being used to stall action on a problem which can't be postponed: effective federal aid to help provide better education for all of America's youngsters.

The youngsters, it seems, will just have to wait, according to Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, head of the Health, Education & Welfare Dept.—wait, that is, until Mrs. Hobby and the local school systems hold a series of conferences in each of the 48 states, and then another national conference, on school crisis facts and figures which educators and parents already know—and students experience every day.

Back in his campaigning days, Pres. Eisenhower explicitly backed federal aid to education. More recently, he has described his Administration as being "liberal where people are concerned." But that apparently doesn't extend to the 36 million U. S. school children any more than it does to the nation's workers.

Mrs. Hobby Sounds Off

Recently Sec. Hobby sounded off against federal aid to education. She even claimed it would hamper instead of help school districts expand their facilities.

U. S. Commissioner of Education Samuel Brownell so far hasn't been allowed to testify at the Senate Labor & Public Welfare Committee hearings. Last week, in a speech on "Education Is Everybody's Business" at the National Congress of Parents and Teachers in Atlantic City, he didn't mention federal school construction aid.

These indications that the Administration is preparing to give "the business" to federal aid to education brought this comment from George Guernsey, CIO Associate Director of Education, at the Senate hearing:

"It has been suggested that, in the light of the reduced budgets recommended by the Secretary and her announced opposition to federal aid for school construction now, that the department be renamed the Department of Less Health, No Education and Reduced Welfare."

One of the federal school aid bills now before Congress is sponsored by Sen. Cooper (R. Ky.), chairman of the Labor subcommittee which last week ended hearings on the problem. He has asked what amounts to a "down payment" appropriation of $100 millions annually.

CIO Asks $600 Million

Several witnesses have urged that a U. S. grant to local school districts be multiplied, and CIO has urged, as a minimum, yearly grants of $600 millions. With such funds, Guernsey testified, the nation may be able to meet the need for 600,000 additional classrooms by 1960. By that year, the nation's present school enrollment of 36 million is expected to climb to 44 million children.

At the heart of the school crisis is the inability of virtually all states, with their present resources, to finance the construction necessary to provide decent schools.

"Out of $10.6 billion needed for school construction in the U. S. today," Guernsey testified, "it is possible for the local school districts to furnish $5.9 billion."

Yet the Administration's answer to date is still another series of state and national conferences—after years of conferences and investigation and fact-finding dating back to the Hoover era and costing, according to Sen. Hill (D. Ala.), some $7 million to date.

Stalling Instead Of Action

Sec. Hobby's proposals for postponement-by-conferences, CIO warned, "is a method of stalling—more talk and no action. In the meantime, our schools become more crowded, education less adequate. To postpone any effective action at this time virtually betrays the interest of every school child."

But Mrs. Hobby's view, as voiced recently at the National Press Club in Washington, is that the $100 million Cooper school aid bill "would be the greatest deterrent to school construction."

CIO's call for action on the present school facts, instead of more stalling through investigations, has been supported by a number of school groups.

For example, the National Education Association has warned that "the facts of school building needs are abundantly clear: one out of every five schools in the nation has become outmoded, unsafe or obsolete." And the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, representing 38,000 local groups, wants U. S. action now.

The Republican Administration and Congress are stalling on aid not only for basic education but also for vocational education, in which millions of American workers have an immediate stake.

Bias Ban Adds Urgency

Dir. Robert Oliver of the CIO Legislative Committee last week urged Sen. Thye (R. Minn.), chairman of a Senate Appropriations subcommittee on labor, health, education and welfare, not only to restore appropriations for the federal-state vocational training system to last year's levels, but to allow the full $29.3 million authorized by the George-Barden Act.

The recent U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools has added new urgency to the question of federal aid to education.

So far, however, its chief effect in Congress has been to produce another demonstration of racial bigotry from Dixiecrat members.

Largely because of the court decision, the House wiped out all funds before approving the Administration's bill for a White House conference on education. Earlier, the House struck out all funds from another bill giving Mrs. Hobby an Advisory Committee on Education.

So goes "government-by-postponement" in the nation's capital. Our school needs are like other problems: The longer they're postponed, the bigger and tougher they'll be to settle.

—Herblock in Washington Post & Times-Herald

"Run Along And Shoot Pool Or Something"

Appalling Waste

Illiteracy still is "an appalling national waste" in present-day America. According to U. S. Commissioner of Education Samuel Brownell, the U. S. has eight million "functional illiterates"—persons with less than five years of schooling. In five states, they comprise from 12 to 18% of the population between 25 and 34 years of age.

If We Fail The Schools

Since its founding convention in 1938, CIO has supported federal aid to education. CIO's views were expressed recently by Pres. Walter P. Reuther in the National Parent-Teacher magazine:

"If the schools fail because we fail the schools, none of us, rich or poor, will be able to buy our way out of the century we live in or out of the challenge it offers.

"That challenge is to make democracy work and to make democracy possible, not just in a privileged and barricaded corner of the world but in all the underdeveloped and privileged sectors—wherever, in short, democracy's promise has too far outrun its performance."

N

Tale of Steel Cities

Youngstown Is Squeezed And Squeezed Hard As Layoffs Climb

(Last of two articles)

By DON SMITH
Special Correspondent

THE STEELWORKER with four children should have been happy. But he wasn't. He had just been called back to work.

"Sure I'm going back to work on Monday, but will I be there a week from Monday?"

That's part of the picture in Youngstown — uncertainty. The other part is uglier—steady unemployment and human suffering.

Steel is Youngstown, and as steel goes, so goes Youngstown and the entire economic life of the Mahoning valley in Northeastern Ohio.

A Dark Shadow

Today a dark shadow hangs over the country's third largest steel-producing area. Youngstown is in the grip of unemployment and is being squeezed hard.

The following facts show how hard:

1. A USA-CIO survey in March showed that at least 12% of the 65,000 Steelworkers in Dist. 26 were unemployed and approximately 17% were working less than 40 hours a week.

2. An estimated 7200 Steelworkers in the Youngstown area itself are out of work.

3. Applications for poor relief in Mahoning County increased 162% in the first four months of this year over the last four months in 1953. (An estimated 60-65% of relief applications in the county come from Youngstown.)

4. Steel production has been running below 70% of capacity since the first of the year as compared with more than theoretical capacity a year ago.

Of the 53 open hearths at the three largest companies in Youngstown — Youngstown Sheet & Tube, U. S. Steel and Republic Steel—only 31 are in operation.

There has been virtually no change in the employment situation since the Dist. 26 survey in March.

Slightly more than 500 workers exhausted their unemployment compensation benefits between last October and March of this year, but the big impact is expected in the next two months.

Isadore Feuer, county welfare director, is preparing for the worst.

"We figure that June and July will see hundreds more run out of benefits and then our relief load will go up astronomically," Feuer said. "Even now, I think that as far as regular unemployment is concerned the situation is the worst since before World War II."

Feuer is certain that his department will have to ask for emergency funds to meet rising relief costs before the year ends. Already this year, he added, the welfare department has had to trim its relief grants.

Union officials agree that the situation is the worst since before the war. Mike Roberts, president of Steelworkers' Local 1331, puts it this way:

"I've been in the local since we organized in 1937 and I can't compare any other unemployment situation with the one we got now.

"Our normal membership is 5800. We have 1000 out of work but with the exception of 1500 members, the rest are working only 32 hours a week or less."

The survey also disclosed that 2592 were working less than 40 hours a week at U. S. Steel, 4416 at Republic Steel and 5000 at Youngstown Sheet and Tube.

Plant Collections

Plant collections for hard-up families are common in Youngstown.

"We took up a collection awhile ago for one family, a large family that just couldn't get along on unemployment compensation," a worker said.

"Then there was another case of a man who had seven children. They lost all their furniture. Don't know where the family is now. They just dropped out of sight. They were from Pennsylvania so I guess they moved in with relatives."

After a day of job-hunting, many of the unemployed drop into Local 1331 headquarters for any encouraging word. They sit around and talk, and out of the talk comes the real meaning of unemployment.

"We couldn't afford to buy any clothes for our little girl when she made her first Communion but thank God some of our relatives were working and saw that she had what she needed," said Steelworker Bill Householder.

He had been averaging $100 a week before he was laid off. Going from $100 to $35—the maximum in Ohio—is inhuman, he said.

One of the hardest things for parents, Householder added, is "when your kids come home from school and talk about what the other kids are doing or buying. We always try to keep ours dressed as best as the next and give 'em as much as we can. It's rough to tell them no."

THE WEEKLY LINEUP—Here's a daily scene in Youngstown, the nation's third largest steel center, as unemployed workers wait in long lines at State Unemployment Compensation office for weekly check-in before receiving weekly jobless benefit.

Multiplication

The average number of workers unemployed for longer than one week in Youngstown last year during April was 866.

For the week ending Apr. 3 this year, there were 5712 claimants on the State Bureau of Unemployment Compensation rolls who had been out of work for more than one week—an increase of virtually 600%.

'I Ask For Work—They Look At Me Like I'm Crazy'

THE TULIPAMOS' fifth child, a boy, was born Apr. 1. After the boy grows up he will be told that he was born while his father was out of work.

Albert Tulipamo, 41-year-old World War II, is still out of work. He's facing his fourth month of unemployment.

The Tulipamos now have five children: Bridget, 15; William, 11; Karen, 5; Deborah, 2, and the baby.

Tulipamo was anxious to talk about his family's hardships "if you think it will do any good about making things better."

"Go take a look in the ice box," he invited. "It's practically bare. It always used to be full. You can't even ask your friends over for a decent meal. You want to tell people what it means to get along on unemployment compensation? Tell 'em it just keeps you breathing. Yeah, just keeps you breathing!"

The Tulipamos live on the second floor of an old frame house. They use two bedrooms in the attic. They pay—or did pay—$75 a month for the six rooms.

"We have a good landlord," Tulipamo said. "He knows we can't pay the rent so he's not pressing us."

However, the holders of the mortgage on Tulipamo's car are not so understanding.

"They're pressing me and I don't know how long I'll have it," he explained. "I only use it to look for work."

Tulipamo has been looking for work almost every day since he was laid off.

"I go into a place and ask for work," he said, "and they all look at me like I'm crazy. They tell me they got their own people out of work."

Sub-Basement

A family of five can draw no more than $35 a week under Ohio's unemployment compensation law.

Ohio allows $30 a week and $2.50 a week for no more than two children. That means a family of five can draw $140 a month in unemployment benefits.

A family of five on relief in Youngstown can draw an estimated $160 a month. In other words, Ohio's unemployment benefits do not even match poor relief standards!

COMPENSATION PROBLEMS are explained by Pres. Mike Roberts of CIO Steelworkers Local 1331. He says "I can't compare any other unemployment situation with this."

JOBS OR NO JOBS, babies still come, and the Albert Tulipamos' fifth child was born while the CIO Steelworker was laid off. Jobless benefits, he says, "just keep you breathing!"

Factory Job Hirings Fall

A GRIM OUTLOOK for jobless industrial workers was indicated last week by the Bureau of Labor Statistics report on labor turnover during April.

The factory hiring rate was the lowest for any April since the BLS began collecting statistics in 1930. The layoff rate, up but slightly from March, was the highest for any April in five years and nearly three times the rate for April 1953.

Citizen CIO—

More Help For Jobless Is Sought By CSC

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

MORE HELP for Citizen CIO when he is unemployed or "under-employed" featured week-long discussions of officials and staff members of the CIO Community Services Committee at their conference in Washington.

Panel meetings and general sessions attended by more than 70 delegates from every part of the nation compared notes and employment trends. Almost without exception they reported serious and growing unemployment.

Emphasizing that CIO has definite responsibilities towards its unemployed members, the conference directed its attention to finding methods to help those without jobs or on short time.

CIO-CSC Dir. Leo Perlis presided at the conference, which was addressed by union officials, top men in government, social workers and others.

Pact With Red Cross

A high point of the conference came when Perlis signed a statement of understanding between CIO-CSC and the American Red Cross, spelling out the terms of cooperation between the two organizations in the event of disaster. Ray T. Schaeffer, director of national disaster services for the Red Cross, signed for his organization.

The mutual assistance pact provides that CIO-CSC will make available to the ARC its physical facilities and manpower where possible and feasible. To implement the agreement, CIO-CSC will undertake a program of interpretation and education with the Red Cross furnishing instructors and materials.

In return, Red Cross personnel will be informed of CIO's history, policy and programs. Effective liaison will be maintained by both groups at the national level.

Food Surplus Aid

Assistant Sec. of Agriculture John H. Davis told the conference that the U.S. now has approximately $7 billion in farm surpluses on hand, almost half of which are owned by the government or on which federal loans have been made.

The surpluses are mainly in wheat, cotton, dairy products and vegetable oils. Some of this is available for distribution to those in need.

He recalled that during the depression of the 1930's the government had a stamp plan for distribution of food to the needy.

"If we again had a situation where unemployment increased by several million very suddenly, we might have to go back to a federal program," Davis said.

Howard Davis, also from the Agriculture Dept., detailed the manner in which surplus commodities can be made available to those in distressed circumstances. The federal government operates through state channels to see that the ultimate recipients have been certified by the proper local agencies as in actual need.

In his keynote speech, Perlis called on CSC members to be "red ants" in the field of social services.

"We must," he declared, "be ourselves and stimulate the entire community to do more and more to meet the needs of the people."

Voluntary Agencies Fail

The larger CIO-CSC theme calls for meeting immediate needs, Perlis said, but it also calls for the taking of several additional steps.

"Voluntary social services have failed to raise their voices in this period of mounting unemployment. We in CIO-CSC must be free to move around inside our larger theme and insist that they do speak out," he declared.

Perlis said he would like to have Community Chest executives and social workers go on "Come-See" tours arranged by CIO. He added:

"I would like those people to see our plants, our local union halls and the homes and neighborhoods of our members. Perhaps then they would join us in our larger theme and state frankly that voluntary health and welfare services cannot meet the needs of our unemployed.

Need For Action

"Perhaps then professional social workers would speak out and say that the needs of the great masses of unemployed workers is a government responsibility and must be met through government action."

Arch Mandel, labor participation director of the Community Chests and Councils of America, answered a question from the floor with an admission that many professional social workers still keep labor at arm's length.

That attitude is not as prevalent now as formerly, Mandel said, but he urged the labor staff representatives to "get involved" in the Council of Social Agencies where "the real decisions in social work are made." That, he advised, is the way toward "more democratic agencies and better communities."

COMPARING NOTES on activities in their areas, this Massachusetts group reported to CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe at the Community Services conference. Left to right, Ronald Orcutt, Gemma Itzo, Riffe and Berry Aronson, Bay State CSC chairman.

WORDS OF PRAISE for the activities of CIO-CSC staff members and delegates to the Washington conference were voiced by CSC Chairman Joseph A. Beirne, who addressed an evening session. He said they wielded an influence for good out of all proportion to their numbers.

Recognition

Vice Pres. A. T. Jones of the CIO Communications Workers has been elected a vice president of the United Defense Fund. He had been an executive committee member for several years.

The UDF is the agency for financing national health and welfare services "made necessary by the defense effort." It includes the USO and five similar groups.

Riffe, Beirne Praise CIO-CSC For Telling The Union Story

THE VALUABLE work of CIO's community services staff people won commendations from CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe and Joseph A. Beirne, CSC chairman and head of the Communications Workers.

"Just as we have brought the message of CIO to the plants and mills and factories across the land, we have to bring the message of trade unionism into the communities," Riffe told the delegates.

"Your work extends beyond the union's membership," Beirne reminded a later session, "and reaches to the basic element in our society—the family."

PROGRAMS can be made in Washington, Riffe said, but unless the people understand and approve of them, they are meaningless. He pledged himself and his staff to work even more closely with CSC members.

The community cannot cut itself off from labor, Riffe said, and labor cannot live apart from the community. More and more, he related, CIO leaders are becoming community leaders, demonstrating their good will by good works.

Beirne told the delegates that "no greater gift has been given a human being than that which permits him to lead and to help others."

He said the union of today is vastly different from the unions of 20 years ago in outlook.

"TOMORROW'S union, if it is to have any kind of recognition or effect upon our lives, will be a union which will devote much of its time to what we look at today in the community services committee," said Beirne.

"The beginning and end of a union is not within a plant or an industry. Those unions and those union leaders who think otherwise are inviting corporate totalitarianism in the U. S. which would eventually erase the needs for unions.

"Those whom you influence will be thinking in broader terms and they are the people in whose hands will rest the future of trade unions in our democracy."

NEW METHODS and techniques in community service work were studied by the more than 70 delegates to the annual conference. How to help the unemployed in their areas was an important topic in the discussions and workshop sessions that were crowded into the week-long affair.

NEW PACT for "cooperative relationship" between CIO and the American Red Cross was approved during the conference. CIO-CSC Dir. Leo Perlis (seated, right) signed for CIO and Ray T. Schaeffer for the Red Cross. Standing are Julius Rothman (left) and Max Rote.

Looking To November—

Iowa's Gillette Is Friend of Farmer, Labor

(Eighth in a series about outstanding senators and their 1954 campaigns.)

By MILTON PLUMB

AGRICULTURE Sec. Ezra Taft Benson's attempt to drive a wedge between labor and farmers by saying that city people will rebel unless firm price supports for agricultural products are discontinued gets no support from Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.).

"Certain elements persist in trying to drive a wedge between labor and farmers on the premise that their interests are hostile," Gillette said. "As a matter of fact their interests are inextricably interwoven."

Now seeking re-election to his third full term in the Senate, Gillette for many years has been one of the foremost Senate champions of the consumer. He is the author of a resolution, co-sponsored by 27 other senators, to establish a Select Committee of the Senate on Consumer Interests.

Union Shop

Sen. Gillette practices what he preaches about the basic unity between labor and farmers.

The Senator owns and operates his own farm near Cherokee, Ia., where he tests many of his agricultural theories in practice. All of his hired help are members of organized labor.

The Price Spread

That measure was tabled last year by the Senate Banking Committee, and Gillette conceded this Congress "will let it die in its pigeon hole." Meanwhile, despite growing unemployment and falling farm income, prices to consumers have stayed close to record heights.

Gillette, who headed a Special Agriculture Committee which looked into price spreads in the 81st Congress, points out that there are three cost factors in the production of consumer goods—wages, the price of raw materials, and the charge of the middle man for processing and distribution.

"Our investigations showed that it is the last factor toward which remedial measures must be directed," Gillette says. "It is to the interests of both the farmer and labor to eliminate these charges where they are exorbitant or due to faulty methods."

Gillette's consumer resolution was an outgrowth of the investigations by his committee. The main objective of his inquiry was to find ways of promoting greater utilization of farm products.

No Real Surplus

"Current agricultural problems are not so much a question of production controls as they are a problem of distribution," Gillette concluded. "Even in times when agriculture is in heavy production, there is no surplus if it can be channeled to areas that can consume it at home and abroad."

In two areas of action efforts to achieve such distribution can be most effective, he believes. These are:

Elimination of unjustified and unnecessary charges on distribution between the producer and the ultimate consumer.

Development of new markets at home and abroad, and news uses for farm products.

Gillette's committee scored a notable success in the latter field when it led in developing the new synthetic rubber industry, which has since met one of the nation's major defense needs. A report by a commission headed by the veteran public servant Bernard Baruch gave Gillette and his committee prime credit for the development of this industry.

This work came within the scope of his inquiry because synthetic rubber requires "butadiane" for its manufacture. This substance is produced from alcohol, which in turn is produced either from petroleum or any vegetable product.

The Consumer Pays

The new industry, accordingly, opened a vast new market for farm products. One other project, undertaken by his committee with the same aim, was an investigation into the use of alcohol as a motor fuel. This research is still continuing.

In regard to the other phase of his study, however, Gillette feels that "under the Eisenhower Administration there has been a failure to pursue the inquiry into price spreads. The result is that the consumer is paying increased prices."

Born in Cherokee, Ia., on Feb. 3, 1879, Gillette was graduated from Drake University as a bachelor of laws in 1900 and immediately entered the practice of law and politics. He served as county prosecuting attorney, member of the Iowa Senate, and in 1932 was elected to the U. S. House of Representatives. After a second House term he was elected to the Senate in 1936 and re-elected in 1938 and 1948.

Besides his leadership in the synthetic rubber field, Gillette has worked to improve and aid agriculture in many other ways.

Among other major accomplishments to his credit have been enactment of legislation during the depression to lower the interest rates on farm mortgages and, more recently, his work to develop soy beans as a new major crop in the Midwest.

In addition, Gillette has, as former chairman of the Senate Elections subcommittee, worked tirelessly to reform election laws. As a member of the Senate Small Business Committee, he was a pioneer sponsor of anti-monopoly legislation.

Among major successes were his so-called oil "divorcement" bills, which separated the ownership of pipelines and barges by producers and marketers and aided small oilmen.

It was Gillette's hard-hitting report, as chairman of another Senate subcommittee, which first exposed the international coffee cartel and the market manipulations which have sent the price of America's favorite beverage soaring.

As far back at last February, he called on the Administration for immediate action on setting up a surplus food disposal plan which would make government-held food stocks available to elderly and unemployed citizens unable to afford an adequate diet.

Foreign Affairs

Despite his active domestic interests, Gillette's major field of action is, and has been, in the field of foreign affairs. The late Pres. Roosevelt named him one of seven senators on the committee which drafted and studied proposals for the creation of the United Nations. He also was one of three senators who formulated the program of the UN Food and Agricultural Organization.

As a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Gillette has worked for the development of an effective world organization for peace and sucurity. He strongly supports the Point Four program and others designed to improve the economic well-being of the nations of the free world.

In the present Congress, Gillette has been one of the most vigorous critics of the Administration's foreign policies which, he charged, led the nation into a "diplomatic disaster" at Geneva and weakened the anti-Communist front "all over the globe."

He criticized especially the tendency of the Eisenhower Administration to conduct foreign policy without regard to the UN and was the first to demand that the war in Indo-China be brought before the UN for collective action.

HOT POTATOES—Fairness and honesty enable Sen. Gillette to keep high respect of his colleagues. At left, he joins Sen. George (D. Ga.) in shaping Democratic stand on foreign policy and right, presides at 1952 hearings on demand by ex-Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) that Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) be ousted from the Senate.

Contrasting Voting Records

Election battle lines in the Iowa Senate contest this November are already clearly drawn. No primary contest is expected in either major party on June 7.

To oppose Sen. Gillette, Republicans have chosen Rep. Martin (R. Ia.) of Iowa City. In the 82nd Congress, Martin was credited with one "right" and 15 "wrong" votes in The CIO News Voting Record.

The latter included votes against increased old-age and survivors benefits, public housing, public power funds and the mutual security program. He voted for anti-labor amendments to the Defense Production Act.

In the same Congress, Gillette was credited with 10 "right" and three "wrong" votes.

Martin's record in the 81st Congress was scored entirely "wrong" in the 1950 Voting Record. He voted for the anti-labor Wood Bill, to weaken the minimum wage law, and against the Point 4 program. Gillette scored nine "right," three "wrong" in that Congress.

In the Republican 80th Congress, Martin gave undeviating support to the Taft-Hartley Act while also supporting cuts in Interior Dept. appropriations for land reclamation projects to aid farmers in the Missouri and Columbia River basins and near big western dams like Bonneville and Central Valley.

HIGH COUNSEL—Responsible minority program as it is shaped in Senate Democratic caucus is part of Sen. Gillette's responsibilities in the present Congress. Here, he confers with Democratic Sens. Lehman (N. Y.), Hunt (Wyo.) and Holland (Fla.) on party strategy.

INTERNATIONAL LEADER—Sen. Gillette's leadership in many phases of foreign affairs dates back many years. This picture was taken in 1945, when he was serving as president of the American League for a Free Palestine, as he conferred with Zionist leaders.

3-In-1 RWDSU Formed At Convention

"ONE BIG UNION" was built last week by 1000 cheering delegates to the convention of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union at Atlantic City.

The merger of three unions into one more than doubled the membership of RWDSU-CIO. Officials and delegates referred to the new, larger organization as "CIO's fastest-growing union."

Amalgamation of the three unions brought RWDSU's membership to approximately 140,000, slightly more than half of which is in locals in Metropolitan New York and New Jersey.

TO THE original 70,000 members of RWDSU were added approximately 60,000 from the independent Distributive, Processing & Office Workers of America. Another 20,000 from the CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers completed the merger.

There was complete unanimity as officers were elected to lead the union until its next convention in 1958. Max Greenberg, president of RWDSU since January, was the uncontested choice for president. Greenberg formerly headed the Retail Union of New Jersey, an RWDSU affiliate.

Martin Kyne, veteran RWDSU official, was elected secretary-treasurer. Jack Paley, leading officer of DPO, was named executive secretary.

Elected executive vice presidents were Alvin Heaps, Arthur Osman and Alex Bail. Heaps had been secretary-treasurer of RWDSU since 1948. Osman was a founder and the only president of DPO.

BAIL had been president of Playthings Workers until a special convention last week, when the union voted to surrender its charter to CIO and become part of the new union on a local-by-local basis.

The merger, Greenberg told the convention, "was no accident." He said nearly three years of patient work, understanding and "a willingness to subjugate personal interests" had made it possible. Greenberg scored those who saw in the merger "a Communist plot to dominate our union." He recalled that the Daily Worker, organ of the Communist Party, attacked the amalgamation as a "betrayal of our members."

GREENBERG declared it was "essential that our local unions unite around the basic principles of CIO and participate in every phase of CIO activity." He pledged his union to "share in the work of CIO on legislation, on political action, on civil rights and wherever else we can be of service."

A new constitution provides for orderly disaffiliation from the international by any local.

During discussion of the constitution's adoption, Vice Pres. Joseph McCarthy of New York City said the RWDSU has always been an anti-Communist union.

"It always will be anti-Communist and there is no place in our union for Communists," he said.

LEADERS of three unions in merger at Atlantic City symbolize bond with CIO in mass handshake (from left): Pres. Alex Bail, Playthings Workers; Pres. Arthur Osman, Distributive, Processing & Office Workers; CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, and Pres. Max Greenberg of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union.

CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe brought the official greetings of the CIO to the convention and urged the delegates "to carry on the good work you have started."

He mentioned the vigorous activity of DPO leaders in "cleaning up" their union and said, "welcome back to CIO." Riffe mentioned briefly the possibility that another group numbering about 15,000 might soon merge with RWDSU.

Gov. Robert Meyner of New Jersey paid tribute to Greenberg's service as a member of the State Mediation Board and also to that of Assemblyman Frank Meloni, a member of the RWDSU executive council.

"Don't be afraid to be a doorbell ringer," Meyner said in calling for heightened political action. "Get active in politics, join your city and county committees and there will be less disparagement of politicians."

Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council condemned the do-nothing attitude of the Eisenhower Administration.

"SALESMANSHIP has taken the place of statesmanship and plati tudes the place of action," he stated.

A convention feature was the memorial service to the late RWDSU Pres. Irving Simon, who died last September. Members of the Simon family were presented with a portrait of the union head and other tokens of the esteem in which the veteran leader was held.

Herbert Hill, representing Pres. Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, praised the union for its leadership in interracial integration in the South, where it has approximately 20,000 members.

OTHER SPEAKERS included Pres. Paul Krebs of the New Jersey CIO Council and CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann.

Strikers in Port Arthur, Tex., and Gadsden, Ala., were saluted, and a substantial contribution to their strike funds was made by the large Canadian delegation.

Williams, Moody Backed By Michigan CIO-PAC

SUPPORT for Democrats G. Mennen Williams for Governor, Blair Moody for U. S. Senator and Philip Hart for Lieutenant-Governor were voted by the Michigan CIO Political Action Committee.

The three offices are the only state-wide posts to be contested in the Aug. 3 primary. Williams is unopposed in his fourth term bid. Both Hart and Moody face possible primary competition.

Williams has had CIO support for each of his previous campaigns. Despite a GOP majority in his Legislature, he has been able to put much of his liberal program into effect and has used his veto power to prevent special interest bills from becoming law.

MOODY was named to the Senate by Gov. Williams to succeed the late Sen. Vandenberg. He made an enviable reputation as a freshman Senator. He won combat pay for Korean veterans, advanced the St. Lawrence Seaway bill and opposed the McCarran Immigration Bill.

Hart is a World War II infantryman and held several important State posts. He was named "outstanding federal administrator of 1953" by the Federal Business Association.

High Level Hells Canyon Dam Sought

A PLAN for comprehensive development of the Columbia River Basin with a high level dam at Hells Canyon was described as "one of the greatest in the world" by Michael W. Straus, U. S. reclamation commissioner from 1945 to 1953.

Straus told a Federal Power Commission hearing he was opposed to three low dams at Hells Canyon sought by the Idaho Power Co. on the Snake river. He said the comprehensive plan was drawn in 1947 and he advocated a high dam in 1950.

Straus, who resigned when the Eisenhower Administration took over, said "the Reclamation staff is not the same as when I was there" and it was "following the comprehensive power plan very modestly."

Long Hatters Walkout Ends

THE 10-MONTH strike of the AFL Hatters against the Hat Corp. of America, Norwalk, Conn., to which several CIO unions gave financial aid, was settled last week.

A tentative three-year agreement worked out at a series of sessions in the chambers of Superior Court Judge Elmer W. Ryan at Bridgeport was approved at a union mass meeting in Norwalk and by the company's board of directors. The walkout started last August in protest against the firms runaway shop plans.

The CIO Auto Workers gave the strikers $25,000 and loaned the union an additional $25,000. The CIO Clothing Workers and Steelworkers each advanced the AFL affiliate $50,000 loans.

Policing Of T-H Affidavits Is Proposed

A LOOPHOLE in the Taft-Hartley Act's non-Communist affidavit provisions would be closed by a bill introduced by Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Douglas (D. Ill.).

The bill will permit the National Labor Relations Board to police the affidavits by denying services to a union if an officer refuses to answer questions under oath about his signing or if he has been convicted of swearing falsely. The Supreme Court recently ruled the NLRB now lacks such power.

While the measure is aimed at "exposing and ousting any Communist officers of unions," Humphrey pointed out that safeguards are provided against "penalizing innocent victims" who belonged to such unions.

Instead of immediately revoking a union's compliance, the bill would require the NLRB to notify the union first that its compliance will be revoked unless the union officer is unseated from his position within a 30-day period.

"In this vital area affecting our nation's security and our nation's labor-management relations," Humphrey said, "we need to build on our past experience and on our careful reasoned study. We must understand that the American trade union movement has done a most effective job of ridding itself of Communist influence."

Knight Urges Oil Pay Hike; Plea On Tin Smelter Won

PRES. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers believes the union should open a drive for a general wage increase.

He will make that recommendation to the OWIU-CIO's Policy Committee when it meets in Cleveland June 4, after the union's special convention opening June 1.

THE ABILITY of the companies to pay higher wages is shown by a survey made by OWIU-CIO's Research and Education Dept. of all aspects of the 1953 business of 24 companies as compared to the 1952 business.

It revealed that sales were up 5.8%, profits before taxes were up by 9.8% and after taxes higher by 9.1%. The firms had profits after taxes of 11.2% on every dollar in sales in 1953, compared with 10.9% in 1952.

The survey showed that the companies employed fewer people in 1953 than in the preceding year. As has been true for several years, the companies continued in 1953 to make almost as much money in net profits after taxes as they paid out in wages and benefits to employes.

HIGHER profits also were shown by company reports for the first quarter of 1954 compared to the corresponding period of 1953:

Texas Co.: 1954, $50,848,438 or $1.85 a share; 1953, $42,681,803 or $1.55 a share.

Standard of New Jersey: 1954, $146 million or $2.41 a share; 1953, $126 million or $2.08 a share.

Gulf: 1954, $1.55 a share; 1953, $1.45 a share.

A RESOLUTION keeping the U. S.-owned tin smelter at Texas City, Tex., in operation for another year was unanimously approved last week by the Senate Armed Forces Committee.

The Eisenhower Administration had announced plans to close the smelter, only one in the western hemisphere which can treat the low-grade Bolivian ore, on June 30.

In testimony before the committee, Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers strongly supported the resolution, which was sponsored by Sen. Johnson (D. Tex.). The Senate may act this week. OWIU represents workers at the smelter.

Knight called the projected closing "short-sighted economy," and maintained that the smelter is a "sound investment" in security. In case of war in the Far East, he pointed out, the U. S. can get badly-needed tin only from Bolivia.

If the smelter is shut next month, he continued, many Bolivian mines will be forced to close.

Their continued operation, Knight said, is as essential to the Bolivian economy as to U. S. security. If they remain open and their ore is purchased by the U. S., he explained, the present anti-Communist government will be strengthened and its long-range development plan for the benefit of all Bolivians can continue.

Give A Buck To PAC

Ship Engineers Plan Drive For Approval Of Hiring Halls

A 19-POINT legislative program highlighted by a drive for legalization of bona fide hiring halls was approved by delegates to the 78th national convention of the CIO Marine Engineers in Berkeley, Calif.

Legislation the ship engineers also seek includes a long-range shipbuilding program, maintenance of U.S. Public Service hospitals for seamen, erection of legal barriers to transfer of U.S. ships to foreign flags, codification of the shipping laws and modernization of maritime laws, U.S. support of Intl. Labor Organization treaties, and "continued opposition to governmental policies aimed at destroying the American merchant marine."

The delegates voted for constitutional changes aimed at broader representation at the national policy-making level of the MEBA; at more effective contract enforcement, and at strengthening of organizing campaigns.

Specifically, the convention voted to expand the membership of the seven-member national executive committee so that the business manager of each local will be an ex officio member. Another member may be named in locals of fewer than 300 members.

THE CHANGE, according to the resolution, is intended to achieve "as broad a representation of the membership in decisions and activities in behalf of the national organization" as is possible. The new set-up will be effective July 1.

The convention decided to release the secretary-treasurer from routine administrative duties in order that he may devote more time to the contract enforcement program—which has paid off the membership in dollars and cents—the organizing program among Atlantic and Gulf Coast tanker crews, which has made good headway, and negotiations.

The delegates also instructed the NEC to meet at least once every four months, and approved a change from annual to biennial conventions after the 1955 convention in New York.

The convention approved construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway and voted to bring national and local officers under any pension plan won from the shipowners by having the union contribute on their behalf.

BLS Index Dip Will Pare Annual Auto Wage Boost

THE COST of living slipped two-tenths of 1% during the month ended Apr. 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported—just enough to cost about one million members of the CIO Auto Workers 1c of the 5c an hour wage increase they otherwise would have received June 1.

The figure was nudged down from 114.8 in mid-March to 114.6 largely by the impact of reductions in federal excise taxes which became effective Apr. 1.

The main cuts passed on to customers were on telephone rates, household furnishings, sporting goods and transportation fares. Otherwise, BLS said, the index reading probably would have remained at the March level, with a small increase in food costs offsetting a drop in clothing prices.

The drop in the index means that UAW-CIO members in the auto and aircraft fields who were due to get a 5c an hour annual automatic pay increase because of increased productivity will get only 4c.

UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther "welcomed" the drop in living costs despite its effect on the scheduled June 1 wage increase, but said it was "unfortunate" that the sag comes mainly from lower taxes rather than from lower prices for consumer goods.

With the slash in the excess profits tax, corporate profits have so swollen that industry has the "responsibility" of lowering prices, he added.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS index:

Period	Index		Period	Old Index	New Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1953:	Jan. 15	190.3	113.9
1943 monthly average	123.6		Feb. 15	188.6	113.4
1944 monthly average	125.5		Mar. 15	188.8	113.6
1945 monthly average	128.4		Apr. 15	188.3	113.7
1946 monthly average	139.3		May 15	188.8	114.0
1947 monthly average	159.2		June 15	190.9	114.5
1948 monthly average	171.2		July 15		114.7
1949 monthly average	169.1		Aug. 15		115.0
1950 monthly average	171.2		Sept. 15		115.2
1951 monthly average	185.9		Oct. 15		115.4
1952 monthly average	190.6 (old index)		Nov. 15		115.0
1953 monthly average	114.4 (new index)		Dec. 15		114.9
1954 monthly average	114.9	1954:	Jan. 15		115.2
			Feb. 15		115.0
			Mar. 15		114.8
			Apr. 15		114.6

Liquor Ad Ban Rapped As 'First Step' To Prohibition

CIO CHARGED a bill to ban advertising of intoxicants is "the first step" to restoring prohibition.

In a statement presented to the House Commerce Committee, Thomas Burke, chief of CIO congressional liaison, said::

"The objectives of this bill are not simply to purify advertising.

"Step by step, and the bill is but the first, sponsors of this legislation would restore prohibition to America without undertaking the necessity of consulting the American people about it at the ballot box.

"The proper processes of democracy will thereby be presumably avoided."

The bill was condemned as a "backdoor approach to prohibition" by Joseph E. Brady of the CIO Brewery Workers, and also was denounced by Pres. Harry Sayre of the CIO Paperworkers.

The bill would make it illegal to advertise beer, wine and liquor in newspapers, magazines and on the radio. The bill was introduced by the late Rep. Bryson (D. S. C.).

Keep Jersey Rent Curbs, CIO Urges

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council last week urged continuance of State rent control because of the shortage of low-rent housing.

State CIO Counsel Sol D. Kapelsohn testified before a hearing by two legislative committees that the State's rent control office "found a continued housing shortage, pointing out the low vacancy rate of 1.2% in rental quarters and the long waiting lists for apartments."

He also said that the rent control office reported "the vast majority of (new) housing is only available at high rents far above the means of the average wage earner in need of housing."

Kapelsohn spoke in favor of S-175, which he characterized as a measure "designed to protect . . . the needs of the State community." He opposed another measure, A-201, which he said would tend to set up the State Director of Rent Control as "a fourth branch of government."

Fine Arts Bill Set For Hearing

A House Labor subcommittee has been named to hold hearings on the bill by Rep. Howell (D. N.J.) to establish a National War Memorial Fine Arts Commission and to provide extended federal assistance to all branches of the arts.

Named to the subcommittee by Labor Committee Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.) are Howell and Reps. Bosch (R. N.Y.) and Young (R. Nev.). Hearings are due to begin June 8, with the CIO scheduled to testify.

Food Price Index Sets New Record

The Dun & Bradstreet food price index rose by 7c to an all-time high of $7.46 in the week ended May 25.

The new high replaces one of $7.42 that had stood since Mar. 30, and reflects an increase of 15c in two weeks. The advance was led by increases in the prices of coffee, tea and cocoa.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

Your Buying Questions

BOOKS ON FORMULAS: "You mentioned two books containing formulas for toiletries and other products. Where can I obtain them?"—Mrs. L. R., Gary, Ind.

Answer: The books Mrs. L. R. and others have asked about are: "Henley's 20th Century Formulas and Trade Secrets," by Hiscox, published by Norman W. Henley Publishing Co., 254 W. 54th St., New York, at $4, and "The Home Book of Money Saving Formulas" by Doring. The Doring book is out of print, but both it and the Henley book may be found in many public libraries. Another book which gives formulas with special emphasis on automotive products (different types of motor oils, lubricants, etc.) is "Ketcham's Automotive Handbook and Buyers' Guide," sold by Charles J. Ketcham, P. O. Box 55, Barberton, Ohio, at $2 (mimeographed).

RUG CUSHIONS: "I now have ordinary rug padding and would like to make a change but was told sponge padding was not advisable; that hotels, etc., cannot use it on account of fire hazard."—Mrs. T. S., Jr., Lyndhurst, O.

Answer: Rubber latex or sponge rubber rug cushions have some definite advantages in resiliency, durability (won't pack down) and cleanliness (won't create dust from deterioration as does cushioning containing fiber). Rubber does burn, of course, and some states don't permit rubber cushioning to be used in public buildings. In a home it might be susceptible to fire risk from an outside source like electrical wiring. Much depends on how and where it is used and the adjacent fire hazards. Another good type of cushioning that is fire-resistant is all-hair cushioning.

In the 32 or 40-ounce weights in which most people buy it, it is quite resilient if not so much so as the rubber. If you feel you need more resiliency, hair cushioning also is available in 48-ounce weight, but this costs more. All-hair cushioning doesn't create the amount of dust that the lower-cost fiber-and-hair pads do, and is very durable.

LAWN MOWERS: "The most important points for a long-lasting easy-operating hand mower are: a fairly heavy mower to start with and ball bearings of adjustable type for the reel to give best service and lightest operation. The reel should have four supporting webs from shaft to blades, either of heavy gauge steel or malleable cast, with the reel blades riveted on to give the reel a rigid shape retention.

"The best bottom bar is one of heavy cast iron for rigidity, with a good spring steel cutting blade either riveted or bolted to it. Some manufacturers who make a big to-do about having ball bearings in their mowers have sadly neglected some more important items of construction. I speak from 14 years of experience in selling and repairing lawn mowers."—L. E. Mc., Las Vegas, Nev.

Answer: Other authorities confirm the good points Mr. Mc. makes about what to look for when buying a lawn mower, especially that a really good mower has four spiders holding the blades on the reel and has ball bearings in the reel that adjust automatically to take up wear.

ROTARY-TYPE DANGER: "You might like to comment on the danger involved in using rotary-type power lawn mowers. One man I know almost cut off the end of his foot with one of these. Since that time we have learned of several others having similar accidents. What seems to happen is that on anything but flat ground it is easy to slip one's foot into the mower blade, with disastrous results. Rotary mowers are cheaper than others but this one hazard should, I think, put them in the not-recommended class."—A. H., Washington, D. C.

Answer: In general, reel-type power mowers seem more suitable for the average homeowner's use, although the cost is more than the rotary type. We are indebted to this reader for pointing out the additional hazard of rotary mowers. Some models are better shielded by guards against this hazard, but it must always be guarded against if you already own a rotary mower.

Ike's Business Team Lags On Initiative To Fight Slump

THE EISENHOWER Administration of businessmen is showing "a surprising lack of initiative and enterprise" in combating the recession, Sumner H. Slichter, Harvard economist, declared last week.

"I believe that this recession will go down in history," he said in a speech in Washington, "as one in which the people will conclude that the Administration failed to act with proper initiative and vigor in adopting anti-recession measures."

Slichter said he "suspects" the Treasury was more interested in balancing the budget than in halting the drop in employment and production.

"Certainly it is not easy to find evidence that a rise of two million in unemployment has aroused as much concern in the Administration as the possibility of a deficit in the cash budget," he observed tartly.

He noted that unemployment also represents "a kind of deficit," and said he would rather accept a deficit of $2 or $3 billion in the budget than two million workers unnecessarily unemployed.

Spokesmen have said that the Administration will act "if and when action is needed," he recalled, "but the level of unemployment which the Administration regards as justifying action seems to be considerably higher than the people will find tolerable."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

I FELT LAST WEEK that I was present at one of the greater moments in the history of CIO, when I attended the convention of the new, revitalized Retail-Wholesale Workers Union.

Delegates representing 138,000 members gathered at Atlantic City. A new constitution was adopted. A new and challenging organization program was laid out to bring the benefits of trade unionism into this vast field.

Pres. Max Greenberg and his fellow officers share our heartiest good wishes, and deserve our efforts to cooperate with them in every constructive manner within our command. The workers in our distributive industries may yet turn to this convention date as a milepost in their struggle to achieve economic justice and security.

The past few weeks have seen great strides in organization of the unorganized. Our unions are planning new campaigns, new efforts. Notable among these is the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association-CIO, one of the oldest unions in the nation.

With the vigor and enthusiasm of a healthy organization, MEBA-CIO has outlined a broad organizational effort throughout the areas of our inland waterways and rivers. This action was taken at their recent convention in Berkeley, Calif., where my assistant, Bill Smith, reports that some 50 delegates gathered to push forward the program of the executive officers. Strong support for CIO's program was shown in these deliberations, and I am hopeful that practical means of cooperation can soon be worked out to bring the full power of CIO to the side of these brothers. Accordingly I have called a conference June 3 to consider the program, and have asked representatives of MEBA to sit down with their brothers in the NMU to talk over the matter.

CIO'S STEELWORKERS lead this week's victory report with seven elections in which workers chose USA-CIO to represent them in collective bargaining. The results: Alcoa Aluminum Co., Port Lavaca, Tex., 504 for USA-CIO to 393 AFL; Reynolds Aluminum Co., Arkadelphia, Ark., 355 USA-CIO to 137 AFL; Murray Gin Co., Dallas, Tex., 99 to 92 for USA-CIO (this election gives USA-CIO bargaining rights for most of this plant—it involved a small unit); Universal Mfg. Co., Bossier City, La., 166 to 35 for USA-CIO; American Can Co. (warehouse), Oakland, Cal., 40 to 20 for USA-CIO; Allied Ordnance Corp., New York City, USA-CIO 22 to 3; American Can Co., Newark, N. J., USA-CIO 407 (better than two to one victory).

In another basic industry, CIO's Chemical Workers are moving ahead. Pres. Elwood Swisher and his directors and staff report the following victories: F. S. Royster Guano Co., Atlanta, Ga.; Reichold Chemical Co., Ballardvale, Mass., American Cyanimid Co., Laboratory Dept., New Orleans, La.; American Cyanimid Co., Luling, La.

CIO's Insurance Workers crushed a company attempt to break their union in Metropolitan Life of Pennsylvania. The election involved close to 1900 employes. The Insurance Workers also scored at Provident Life of Philadelphia, by a vote of 45 to 0, according to a report from CIO Reg. Dir. George Craig.

BROTHER TOM McCORMICK, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Oil Workers, sends the following good organizational news of his union; Canadian Chemical Co., Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, 205 to 44; Monsanto Chemical Co., Avon, Cal., 46 to 27; National Can Corp., Cleveland, O., 35 to 28; Sinclair Refining Co., Hammond, Ind.

On top of their report of a victory at the Square D Co., Los Angeles, Calif., where Tony Rios was in charge of the campaign, the CIO Electrical Workers report another very significant victory at Westinghouse Electric Co., Huntington, W. Va. This was the last remaining local union in that area under the Communist-dominated UE.

A report from Bill Edwards advises that the workers of A. C. Lawrence Leather Co., Ashland, Ky., have also cast off the shackles of Communist domination and chosen CIO as their bargaining representative. The vote: CIO 68, Fur & Leather 31.

Retail-Wholesale was organizing as well as convening the past few weeks. They beat off an attempted raid at Adams Bakery, Portsmouth, O., and won new bargaining rights at Seljan News Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.

CIO's NABET won at Sterling TV Co., Inc., New York City, as well as at the largest independent station in Los Angeles, KTTV. CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin L. De Shetler reports NABET also won at Santa Barbara, Cal., TV station KEYT (a 100% victory). CIO's Syd Rose handled the KTTV campaign.

The CIO Furniture Workers won at Carpet Servicing Co., Bronx, N. Y., while CIO's Woodworkers were running up major victories at Spangler Lumber Co., Bly, Ore., and Puget Sound Pulp and Timber Co., Ketchikan Pulp Co. Div.

CIO Brewery Workers won the drivers unit at Ward Baking Co., Tampa, Fla. The CIO Auto Workers came through with a major victory at New Bedford Defense Products Co., a division of Firestone, New Bedford, Mass.

New Job Benefit Claims Decline

New unemployment compensation claims in 12 key states dropped in the week ended May 15 after a rise the week before, the Wall Street Journal said a survey indicated.

Total new claims were 203,240, compared to 215,623 the previous week and 126,232 in the comparable week in 1953. The survey covered New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Texas, Michigan, Pennsylvania, California, Massachusetts, Illinois, Oregon, Washington and Missouri.

N. Y. Transit Workers Prepare To Strike In 'Fight For Life'

THE CIO Transport Workers last week moved toward a show-down strike vote against the state-created New York City Transit Authority, which operates the city-owned transportation system.

TWU-CIO Pres. Michael J. Quill said a strike is "the only road open to bona fide trade unionists—to fight for the life of our union and its members."

The executive board of TWU-CIO Local 100, which represents most of the 44,000 system employes, set the strike deadline at June 14.

This action was taken after the authority arbitrarily rejected the recommendations of the fact-finding board named by Mayor Robert F. Wagner to end a long contract dispute between the union and the authority.

THE LOCAL began polling its members on acceptance of the strike call at shop gate meetings last week, and balloting will continue through this week. In view of the workers' temper, approval of the walkout is regarded by TWU-CIO leaders as a certainty.

The agency rejected the committee's recommendation that a 6.5c an hour increase, retroactive to Jan. 1, be given now, and a 7.5c an hour hike be added on Mar. 15, 1955.

Instead the authority proposed increases of 5c to 12c immediately for most of the employes, but made no commitment on a future raise.

THE AUTHORITY also cast aside the recommendation to conduct a representation election, which likely would have given Local 100 sole bargaining rights for all system employes and eliminate some 13 small splinter unions.

The agency also refused to consider the fact finders' proposal for an arbitrator and a two-year contract. It also decided that it was going to operate without a memorandum of understanding with the local.

"This means," Quill said, "the Transit Authority members have decided to wipe out the Transport Workers Union from all the subway lines of the city and go to the jungle days of dog eat dog."

Quill, Pres. Matthew Guinan and Sec.-Treas. Ellis Van Riper of Local 100 and other union leaders appeared last week in a half-hour TV show to present TWU-CIO's story to the public.

In another move, Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, and John F. O'Donnell called a meeting of lawyers of CIO affiliates for June 4 in New York City. The purpose is to decide what action should be taken in the event that the agency makes good its threat to get an injunction against the strike under the Condon-Wadlin Law against public utility strikes.

Mediation Board Acts On Airline Dispute

The National Mediation Board last week intervened in the prolonged dispute of Pan-American Airways with TWU-CIO over the terms of a contract to replace one which expired Apr. 30. Some 6000 TWU-CIO members have voted a strike, but no date has been set.

TELL THE STORY—On strike 12 weeks, CIO Transport Workers employed by the Winston-Salem, N. C., bus and cab companies pass out leaflets on strike issues during the afternoon peak in the city's downtown area.

12-Week Walkout—

'Just A Little Longer For Victory,' Say TWU Strikers

By JOE KUTCH

"We think we have the companies licked if we can hold ourselves together just a little longer."

That's what the Winston-Salem, N. C., bus and cab drivers, members of Local 248 of the CIO Transport Workers, said as their strike against the Safe Bus Co. and the Camel City Cab Co. entered its 12th week.

The local tried hard to avoid the walkout. The members hit the bricks Mar. 4 after two months of negotiations during which the firms repeatedly turned down all demands for a wage increase, insisted on dropping the check-off and requested that switchboard operators be dropped from the union.

The outlook is grim, and the strikers are depending for support from other unions. So far they have received good backing. TWU-CIO locals throughout the country and CIO members in Winston-Salem have rallied to their support.

The workers are fighting for a 10c an hour wage raise, a demand which the firms have countered with a request for a wage cut including a 6% reduction in cab drivers' commissions.

It was not until May 5 that the firms were able to get a few scab drivers by paying them a $1 an hour and buying them uniforms. The busmen had to buy their own uniforms out of their pay which ranges from 69c to 90c.

The strikers reported that the public is shunning the scab-operated buses. Management personnel are riding their own buses in an attempt to create the illusion they have passengers. As a service to the public, TWU-CIO members have been operating a jitney service.

CIO Field Rep. Dominick Spasbo is helping TWU-CIO local officers, Pres. Richard T. Perry and Sec.-Treas. W. H. Roberts, in the strike situation.

PAC Moves To CIO Building

The CIO Political Action Committee moved last week from 1346 Connecticut Ave. to the National CIO headquarters at 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington, D. C.

UAW'S 1.5 Million Members Sets Record, Mazey Reports

THE CIO Auto Workers—with approximately 1.5 million members—"is the largest free trade union in the world," according to UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey.

In his report on the audit for 1953, made by a certified public accountant, Mazey said that the union's dues-paying membership remained high despite unemployment at Chrysler, Nash, Kaiser, Studebaker, Willys and Packard, and in the agricultural implement industry

This was offset by the organization of new plants and increased employment at General Motors and Ford.

The net worth of UAW-CIO, Mazey reported, was at the highest figure in its history—$20,011,745.45, a gain of $5,781,018.23 over the figure at the end of 1952. He said the union's total liquid assets "are still inadequate."

"We must continue to build adequate resources that will assist us in achieving our 1955 collective bargaining program with the least amount of sacrifice on the part of our members," he concluded.

All Labor Gives Hand To Guild Strikers

THE PRESS IS NOT ROLLING—CIO Newspaper Guild strikers (left) picket the Wilkes-Barre dailies, which suspended publication. As a service to community (center) the strikers—faced with great difficulties—prepare "copy" for their own daily. Strike leaders (right) "make up" paper: From left, Local Pres. Carl Pesavento; John Malloy, Guild "publisher"; ANG Pres. Joseph F. Collis, himself a striker.

By FRED ROSS

EIGHT MONTHS ago, when the CIO Newspaper Guild selected Joseph F. Collis as president, he took office with a warning of tough times ahead.

His prediction was that "we will be faced with many attacks from publishers." Now that warning has come true in his own local at Wilkes-Barre, in the sick hard coal country of Pennsylvania.

For the past nine weeks, the Wilkes-Barre Guild has been on strike in a fight for survival against the city's daily newspaper monopoly, publishers of the morning Record and evening Times-Leader & News.

Wilkes-Barre and surrounding Luzerne County are in the heart of the anthracite mines. They still call him "King Coal," but the monarch is ailing, and many of the mines are closed.

The Wilkes-Barre Publishing Co., which publishes both dailies, is a healthy economic entity. Outside of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, it is one of the wealthiest newspaper properties in the State.

Until 1947, it paid a $25 a year dividend on each share of stock. In that year it was so prosperous it decided to give its stockholders 100 shares for each share held.

As ANG-CIO Pres. Joseph F. Collis, assistant managing editor of the Record and himself a striker, put it:

"Stock dividends of two or three shares for one share happen occasionally, but 100 for one is probably a new high in generosity to stockholders."

This prosperity is not being shared with the employes. As Collis pointed out:

Pay Raises Needed

"Figures issued by the U. S. Labor Dept. in 1951 indicated that a city family of four needed $3779 a year to lead normal lives. Lots of WBNG members are not earning the $3779 average needed to raise families in decent American standards."

Despite the company's prosperity and the newspaper workers' needs, the firm is trying to take from the Guild all the gains won in years of collective bargaining and strikes in 1937 and 1938-39.

The company wants to break the union. With that aim in mind it is trying to force the Guild into compulsory arbitration on every grievance. It also is attempting to weaken union security clauses. And if that were not enough, its top wage offer ranges from $1 to $1.50 a week.

The Guild made every effort to avoid the strike and to settle it. It met with management 21 times until it struck Apr. 8. Since then, the Guild has met with the company 13 times. But the firm's stalling tactics have thwarted all efforts to settle the walkout.

The Guild strikers are good union people. Many are the sons and daughters of coal miners who won economic and other gains by years of bitter struggle with the mine operators.

They also like their community. Out of loyalty to the community they decided to get out a daily—the Valley News—which now has 20,000 circulation.

It is a desperate struggle to get out the paper and pay strike benefits, which are traditional in the newspaper industry. Benefits for the strikers average $4000 a week.

Union Solidarity

Two factors have helped the strikers. One is union solidarity. They have received moral and financial support from the national Guild, its locals and members, the AFL printing craftsmen—who are locked out—and CIO, AFL and Miners locals.

Besides $25,000 from ANG-CIO, the local has received some $9400 in contributions. In addition to giving money, CIO, AFL and Miners locals and members and union-minded citizens have helped in many ways.

This help is an example of CIO-AFL unity where it really matters—like the AFL bus drivers who give encouraging words to the striker-passengers, and the AFL Teamsters who refuse to make deliveries at the plant.

Merchants have lent a television set for strike headquarters and an electric refrigerator and other equipment to the commissary, where two meals and sandwiches are served daily to pickets and strikers assigned to other duties.

The other strike-aiding factor is the Valley News, which has helped keep the community back of the union. It takes a lot of money to keep a newspaper rolling off the press, particularly when the Wilkes-Barre Merchants Association pressures members not to advertise.

Collis summed up the situation:

"With God's help, our own courage and knowledge and our solidarity with the CIO, AFL and Mine Workers locals, we can, we will, we must win this strike."

Insurance

Two officials of the struck Wilkes-Barre dailies have indicated that the papers have strike insurance. "I'd be very foolish to say we don't have insurance," one of them said.

Veto-Holding Publishers Are Split Six Ways From Sunday

THE WILKES-Barre Publishing Co. — publisher of the city's only daily newspaper—is a house divided against itself—divided three ways.

Until 1939, there were three newspapers, the Record, Times-Leader and The Evening News. At that time they merged, with the four owning families getting the stock of the new corporation.

THEY ARE the Smith family, which published the Times-Leader; the Hourigan families of the Evening News and the Johnson and Powell families of The Record. Each of these groups is represented by two members on the board of trustees, and any trustee has a veto.

"The power to veto is the real cause of the Wilkes-Barre newspaper strike," according to Pres. Joseph E. Collis of the CIO Newspaper Guild, one of the strikers.

"One faction of the group operating the Wilkes-Barre Publishing Co. is on strike against the other factions. And until the publishers settle the strike in their own ranks, there is little prospect for the publishing company ending the strike of the Wilkes-Barre Newspaper Guild.

"WE SEE three groups which warred on each other for years trying to resolve their differences for their economic benefit. But there still was some distrust born over years of intense competition and so they decided that nothing could be done unless there is a unanimous vote by six voting trustees representing three factions."

Collis added "there is suspicion in the minds of some Guild members that one of the factions in the publishing company is in a deliberate, planned strike to force out at least one other faction of the highly profitable company."

"CHOW" LINEUP—Mrs. Martha Thomas, commissary chairman, serves hungry Wilkes-Barre Guild strikers.

House Unit Sets Welfare Fund Inquiry

A SPECIAL nine-member House Labor subcommittee early in June will launch an investigation into union welfare funds and their administration to determine whether abuses exist and if new regulatory legislation is needed.

Pres. Eisenhower urged Congress to undertake such a probe earlier this year. A Senate Labor subcommittee under Sen. Ives (R. N. Y.) also is investigating the same subject.

THE HOUSE probe will be under the chairmanship of Rep. McConnell (R. Pa.), who said he will undertake a "through study and investigation of welfare and pension funds established pursuant to collective bargaining agreements."

McConnell said that he thinks most such funds are "soundly devised and well administered." He added that his subcommittee is interested in the effectiveness of state laws in protecting these trust funds, which the Federal Reserve Bank estimates now amount to about $17 billion.

After Rep. Wier (D. Minn.), a subcommittee member, asked and got assurances from the Republican leadership that there will be "no duplication" by any other House committee, the House voted unanimously to give the subcommittee $75,000 for operating expenses.

Teen-Agers' Voting Bill Turned Down

ANOTHER Eisenhower proposal, this one to amend the Constitution so 18-year-olds could vote, has been smacked down by the Senate.

The vote was 34 to 24, far short of the two-thirds majority of those present and voting. Senate debate centered on the issue of states' rights, an issue made hotter by the recent Supreme Court decision banning segregation in public schools.

The latest Administration defeat was believed to have been as the result of poor planning by GOP leaders. A number of advocates of the President's proposal were absent from the capital when the vote was taken.

The Pegler Libel Case (See Page 2)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., June 7, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 23

House Hikes Old Age Benefits

—See Page 3

CIO Backs Bill Improving Jobless Pay

—See Page 3

The Answer Is 'Yes'— With a wave of hands and of placards, CIO Transport Workers at the 207th St. shop in Manhattan give an enthusiastic "yes" vote to strike ballot called in deadlock with the Transit Authority. Workers at most big installations of New York City's transit system have voted, and the vote has been unanimous for strike action on June 14 unless the agency agrees to contract recommendations set by Mayor Robert F. Wagner's fact-finding board. Last week the Mayor and City Council urged the Transit Authority to reconsider its flat rejection of the fact-finders' proposals. Wages, union representation, and formal contracts are the main issues. With the agency moving for an anti-strike injunction, TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill says that the transit workers face a "fight for the life of our union and its members."

'Voluntary' Defense Labor Planning Urged

—See Page 2

On Flanders' Field, Joe Shadows Adolf . . .

THE ANTI-COMMUNISM of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) "so completely parallels that of Adolf Hitler as to strike fear into the heart of any defenseless minority," Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.) declared last week in a speech on the Senate floor.

In his second biting and bitter attack in three months, Flanders accused McCarthy of spreading "division and confusion wherever he goes," and noted what he said was "the foreboding he inspires in our fellow-citizens of Jewish blood and faith."

"In seeking the origin of this foreboding," he added, "I have been led to remember the part the Senator played in the investigation of the Malmedy massacres, and the strange tenderness he displayed for the Nazi ruffians involved."

Flanders' blast came during a week that saw Pres. Eisenhower strike back at McCarthy for the latter's move to invade the executive branch of the government. The Vermonter described it as a discussion of "the colossal innocence of the junior Senator from Wisconsin."

"I am not using the word 'innocence' in the meaning of freedom from guilt for no question of guilt is involved," said Flanders.

"Rather the meaning is that of the blithe heedlessness of the young, who blunder innocently into the most appalling situations as they ramble through the world of adults. Perhaps the best illustration of this kind of innocence is to be found in the cartoon series, 'Dennis the Menace.' "

Pointing out that not only the Jews "had reason to be troubled," he recounted some of the difficulties of McCarthy staff members with Protestants, and charged that "Dennis the Menace had driven his blundering ax deep into the heart of his own church," the Catholic Church.

"His success in dividing his country and his church," Flanders continued, "is paralleled by his unparalleled success in dividing his own party . . .

"He has achieved the incredible success of persuading Republican Senators into a detailed and relentless search for some significance evidence of subversives in the Republican Administration—and this in an election year."

The "real heart of the mystery," he said, "involves the personal relationships of the Army private (G. David Schine, former McCarthy staff member), the staff assistant (Roy M. Cohn), and the Senator."

"At times he seems anxious to rid himself of the whole mess," Flanders said of McCarthy, "and then again, at least in the presence of his assistant, he strongly supports the latter's efforts to keep the Army private's services available.

"Does the assistant have some hold on the Senator? Can it be that our Dennis, so effective in making trouble for his elders, has at last gotten into some trouble himself?"

Flanders recalled that in every country where the Communists have taken over, they began by creating "division and confusion."

"What we are now seeing is another example of economy of effort and expansion of success in the conquest of this country for communism," he said. "The preliminary campaign is successfully under way.

"One of the characteristic elements of Communist and fascist tyranny is at hand, as citizens are set to spy upon each other. Established and responsible government is besmirched. Religion is set against religion, race against race. Churches and parties are split asunder. All is division and confusion.

"Were the junior Senator from Wisconsin in the pay of the Communists, he could not have done a better job for them.

"This is colossal innocence, indeed."

New Defense Planning—

Favor Voluntary Manpower Controls

MANPOWER mobilization in the event of any emergency involving the U. S. will be through voluntary measures.

With tension mounting in several parts of the globe and American involvement a far from remote possibility, the program now under study by top Administration officials is of direct importance to workers and their unions.

A 19-page report entitled "A Manpower Program for Full Mobilization" has been prepared by the National Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee. This is now under scrutiny by Dr. Arthur S. Flemming, top man of the Office of Defense Mobilization.

FROM HIS OFFICE it will go to the National Security Council, the super policy-making body, for review and possible adoption as the answer to America's mobilization needs.

Twenty months of study went into the report and there was considerable compromise on some aspects of the problem. The committee was unanimous, however, in its opposition to national service legislation and other similar controls.

Effective manpower administration, the report said, "lies not in controls but in measures which stimulate and help labor and management to exercise their patriotism, responsibility and skills. This principle of voluntarism should not be compromised."

The committee took note that several of our World War II allies adopted compulsory manpower controls without first giving voluntary methods a reasonable trial. Their study indicated that the U. S. voluntary manpower program was far superior to the compulsory program used in other countries.

"GIVEN the opportunity, the incentive, and the responsibility, men have always produced more under freedom than under compulsion. Power to compel is no substitute for intelligent leadership," the report says.

The committee discounted the argument that the hazard of atomic attack on the U. S. is a compelling reason why planners can no longer depend on voluntary cooperation of Americans to preserve the nation in time of danger.

"We are convinced," the committee stated, "that only the self-imposed discipline of free men and women facing a situation of ultimate danger can give the nation the stability and flexibility it must have to survive.

"We are equally convinced that no authoritarian program imposed on citizen groups traditionally accustomed to meeting critical problems through cooperative efforts could succeed in meeting the manpower problems of an extreme crisis."

In essence, the program is similar to that announced by Pres. Truman in January 1951 during the Korean fighting. Its one salient difference is the junking of government manpower controls.

LABOR MEMBERS of the committee disagreed with management representatives on two key issues: conversion unemployment and the public employment service.

Special benefits should be paid to workers idled by conversion to defense or war production, the labor members argued. And under full mobilization, the problems of fulfilling manpower requirements would be so interrelated that the state public employment services will have to be combined under federal direction, union spokesmen maintained.

CIO Members

CIO representatives on the National Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committte were Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg and Sec. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio State CIO Council. Associate Research Dir. Katherine P. Ellickson was a labor alternate member.

Pegler Pouts In Court Room As Witnesses Call His Column False

By AL ZACK

WESTBROOK Pegler, the union-hating columnist, sat pouting in a Manhattan court room last week as a parade of witnesses call a columnful of Peglerisms false.

Led by the widow of Heywood Broun, a man he long hated, the witnesses calmly devastated Pegler's claims contained in a 1949 column, now the subject of a $500,000 libel suit. The suit was brought by Quentin Reynolds, famed war correspondent and author, who was the prime target in Pegler's column.

Only 13 persons sat in the jury box as the trial went into its fourth week, after a series of events which had courtroom spectators buzzing. Prior to the Memorial Day weekend, Federal Judge Edward Weinfield had called a long secret conference in his chambers, attended by Pegler, Reynolds and their attorneys.

Thereafter, he sternly instructed the jury to report to him any "attempts" by others to discuss the case with them. Later that week, a full day passed without hearings, while the judge conferred at length with the principals and their counsel and, later, with each of the jurors separately.

WHEN COURT resumed after the long holiday recess, Juror No. 2 was not present. He was William M. LeFevre of New York City, who Judge Weinfield said had been "discharged" by the court with consent of both sides.

The judge ordered one of the two alternates to step up into the vacant spot. The alternates hear the case but do not participate in the jury's deliberations unless one of the original jurors is displaced for some reason.

One of the major witnesses for Reynolds, who testified last week, was Mrs. Connie Broun, widow of the founding president of the CIO Newspaper Guild and one of the nation's best known liberal columnists.

Pegler, in his column attacking Reynolds, had charged the war correspondent had proposed to Mrs. Broun as they were riding to the cemetery to bury her husband. Later, Pegler said, after Reynolds had "made an artificial reputation for bravery" he had spurned her.

Mrs. Broun, a small, brunette who testified in a calm, low voice, denied completely the Pegler claims. Reynolds never proposed to her in the funeral car, she said, or at any other time. He was a good friend during her husband's lifetime and still is a good friend, she said.

Mrs. Broun testified that she had never told anyone the story Pegler attributed to her and that Bishop Fulton J. Sheen was also in the family car en route to the funeral.

Sometimes her voice sank so low that the judge repeated her answers for the benefit of Pegler's attorney, but her voice was quick, sharp and clearly audible as the questions touched on another Pegler charge: that Reynolds and others practiced nudism at the Broun home.

"Never," she said when asked about the charge.

PEGLER'S CHARGE that Reynolds was a coward, an "absentee war correspondent" with a "yellow streak" were as firmly denied by a number of other witnesses who served with Reynolds on the battlefields and in the combat zones of World War II.

Included in this group were Col. "Jock" Lawrence, Gen. Eisenhower's hand-picked public relations chief during the war and at the SHAEF headquarters in Paris when the NATO army was being put together.

Lawrence said only a "handful" of correspondents had anything like Reynolds' record of 30 months in combat areas. He told of Reynolds' persistent efforts to go on a Commando raid, even after Lord Louis Mountbatten, Commando chief, had personally warned him of the dangers.

Other corespondents, who had gone through bombing raids with Reynolds and had served with him on command ships during bloody invasions, testified that his reputation for "accuracy, integrity, courage, objectivity and loyalty" was "of the very highest."

Lord Mountbatten was a witness "in absentia," with a sworn deposition made in London being admitted in evidence. One of Reynolds' legal staff took the stand to read the answers into the record.

SPECTATORS smiled broadly at the questions and answers: "What is your name?" With a sheepish grin, a self-conscious shrug and a typical New York accent, the witness replied, "Louis, the Earl of Mountbatten." He was, he said, "the second cousin" to King George.

The British nobleman praised Reynolds' reputation, lauded the bravery of all who took part in the raid and added he wouldn't compare the bravery of one man "when all were brave."

RICHARD CHAPLIN, assistant publisher of Collier's, testified that the magazine bought more than 300 Reynolds articles over a 17-year period, paying him about $350,000. After the Pegler column was published, Chaplin testified, Colliers' didn't buy a single Reynolds' piece.

When he suggested to Louis Ruppel, Colliers' editor, that they buy a Reynolds' story, Ruppel said: "What's the matter with you, haven't you read Pegler?"

Chaplin told the jury no other reason had ever been given for dropping Reynolds after 17 years during which he had been the magazine's most valuable writer.

Example

Westbrook Pegler, in the time when he isn't glowering at witnesses in Room 906 of the Federal Building, writes a daily column, using a literary broadaxe on anybody he doesn't like.

Last week Pegler wrote of Pres. Eisenhower: "Pres. Eisenhower's palace guard are pro-democratic and the President's own remarks on social security are those of a man who belies his Republican label by expounding Marxian heresy."

"ONE OF THE BEST FRIENDS" organized labor has had in the Detroit area, Rev. Raymond S. Clancy (left), head of the Catholic Archdiocesan Labor Institute, was honored by CIO and AFL at a testimonial dinner. Above, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther (center), also president of the Auto Workers, presents him with an honorary life membership card in the UAW-CIO as Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey looks on.

Social Security Aid Upped By House Vote

THE EISENHOWER Administration's program of limited improvements to the Social Security Act, increasing benefits and extending coverage, has been passed by the House in virtually the original form and sent to the Senate, where floor action is expected as soon as the omnibus tax bill is disposed of.

The bill, approved as it came out of the House Ways and Means Committee, was passed by an overwhelming vote of 355 to 8.

Five of the opponents were Texas Democrats—Reps. Lucas, Teague, Burleson, Fisher and Regan. The others were Reps. Robeson (D. Va.), Hoffman (R. Mich.) and Wint Smith (R. Kan.). Reps. Howard Smith and Tuck, Virginia Democrats, were tallied as "present but not voting."

THE CIO has repeatedly said that the Administration bill is good so far as it goes, but that it does not go far enough. Specifically, it does not include the important proviso in the Lehman-Dingell Bill, which the CIO supported, making workers permanently disabled eligible for retirement benefits regardless of age.

The overwhelming approval of the bill by House Republicans touched off a flood of congratulations from Democrats on the fact that the GOP members were finally climbing aboard the the New Deal bandwagon.

"There is much joy in bringing the wayward into the fold," declared Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.). "It is gratifying to see the Republicans finally seeing the light," said Rep. Forand (D. R. I.).

Provisions of the bill include:

COVERAGE: Addition of between nine and 10 million workers to those eligible for old age benefits, including farmers and some farm workers and virtually all professional and self-employed people except physicians, and state and local government workers not covered by pension systems.

BENEFITS: Pensioners now receiving benefits, two months after the law is signed, will get increases ranging from $5 a month up, with proportionate increases for dependents and survivors; individual benefits, now $25 to $85 a month, will go to $30 to $98.50. Workers retiring in the future, now due to get $25 to $98.50, will get $30 to $108.50. The maximum family benefit is increased from $168.75 to $200.

TAXES: Beginning Jan. 1, 1955, social security taxes will be levied on the first $4200 of annual earnings, instead of the present $3600. Rates, stepping up from the present 2% to 4% in 1975, remain unchanged.

TEST: Pensioners will be allowed to earn up to $1000 a year without loss of benefits compared to the present $75 a month.

"A Point of Order, Mr. Chairman . . ."

THOSE WORDS above have nothing to do with the Army-McCarthy hassle. They're the title of a new pamphlet on taxes published by the CIO Legislative Dept.

The pamphlet tells the story of what happened at a recent union meeting when the facts about the Administration's tax proposal were brought home to the members. The phony arguments that tax relief should go to stockholders and corporations were exposed in the light of the workers' own experience.

CIO's proposals for tax relief for the people—where it belongs—are presented. They point out that that personal exemptions would be raised to $800 this year and to $1000 next year. That would be the equivalent of a 9.5c an hour increase in wages.

With Senate action due early this month, the pamphlet concludes with advice for every union member: "Tell your Senators you support the George Amendment—it's just, it's wise, it's needed."

CIO Pushes Drive For Tax Exemption Boost

THE CIO in Washington and in the field this week mobilized an all-out effort to assure passage of the George Amendment which it called "a fair, equitable and efficient" tax measure to aid the U. S. economy.

Sponsored by Sen. George (D. Ga.) the amendment would lift personal income tax exemptions to $800 this year and $1000 next year, thus putting the equivalent of a 9.5c hourly wage increase in the pockets of working people.

Ranged against the amendment is the full pressure of Administration forces, which favor granting tax relief only to the wealthy stockholders and corporations. The timetable of the Senate Finance Committee, studying the 875-page tax measure, is studded with postponements of controversial points.

HIGHER exemptions for those in the low and middle-income groups have been sidetracked in favor of a clear line for removal of the misnamed "double taxation" of stock dividends and higher depletion allowances for producers of domestic minerals.

Only a mounting barrage of searching questions from liberal Democrats on and off the floor about possible defense budget needs has kept the latest billion-dollar bonanza for stockholders from easy sailing.

With uneasy tension in several quarters of the earth and the possibility of U. S. intervention in Southeast Asia, liberal forces have embarrassed Administration spokesmen with queries on how another handout for corporations and a handful of individuals can be justified.

Despite this, the Finance Committee moved another step closer to rewarding corporation campaign friends with a recommendation to exempt publicly regulated companies such as railroads and utilities from the 2% penalty tax on consolidated tax returns.

CIO, AFL Meet On No-Raid Pact

An important meeting of the CIO-AFL Unity Committee will be held in Washington this week to put into effect union-by-union approval of the no-raiding agreement.

Headed by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany, the two labor groups will meet on June 9. They will exchange ratifications by international unions of the no-raiding pact.

A meeting of the CIO Executive Committee is planned in Washington on the same day.

IUE Wins Big Plant In Columbus

BARGAINING rights for a new Westinghouse appliance plant in Columbus, O., have been won by the CIO Electrical Workers.

IUE-CIO defeated the AFL Electrical Workers by a count of 775 to 356, with 13 votes for no union. The AFL Machinists failed to win representation rights for two small groups of skilled workers.

The election victory was hailed by IUE officials as significant since Westinghouse plans to concentrate its appliance manufacturing in Columbus and to employ 10,000 eventually.

The plant will be the Westinghouse chain's equivalent of Appliance Park, the General Electric Co. plant in Buechel, Ky., where IUE scored an impressive victory several months ago.

IUE already represents approximately 50,000 Westinghouse workers and the additional 1300 members gives added strength to negotiations with the chain.

(More on IUE, Page 11.)

Back On The Job

Labor Sec. Mitchell is back at work after two week's rest. He entered Walter Reed Army Hospital May 17 for a physical checkup, and later went to his New Jersey home for a rest.

13c Pay Award Won On Airline

A 13c an hour wage increase has been awarded 6100 members of the CIO Transport Workers employed by American Airlines under the terms of an arbitration board's ruling. The agreement also froze 16c in cost-of-living increases into the basic wage structure.

Jobless Pay Standards Bill Supported By CIO

A BROADLY-sponsored bill to improve unemployment compensation standards in the states was introduced in both branches of Congress last week and was promptly given strong CIO support.

Originating with Rep. Forand (D. R.I.), the measure was introduced with 80 cosponsors in the House and nine in the Senate. It provides that maximum primary benefits for covered workers be at least 50% of the full-time weekly wage up to a ceiling of 66.66% of the specific state's average weekly wage, and increases the duration of payments to 39 weeks.

The standards set in the bill would be compulsory for the states. If it becomes law, a state which fails to comply would lose funds the federal government provides to pay the cost of administering its unemployment compensation machinery.

Principal sponsors in the upper house were Democratic Sens. Douglas (Ill.), Kennedy (Mass.) and Humphrey (Minn.).

CIO endorsement of the Forand Bill came from Pres. Walter P. Reuther. He said it "provides substantial improvements," and will have CIO backing "even though the bill does not go as far as we believe necessary."

If enacted, he estimated, it would boost the national purchasing power by about $2 billion a year.

"This strengthening of our economy at a time when our national income continues to shrink is a matter of most urgent importance," he said. "Congress should act on this as a non-partisan matter."

He recalled that in his Economic Report to Congress last January, Pres. Eisenhower described unemployment insurance as a "valuable first line of defense against recession" which "needs reinforcement" by improvements he spelled out.

"NOW, five months later, no state has complied with the President's recommendation," Reuther said. "Only four states have acted at all.

"What the states have had an opportunity to do and have failed to do should now be done by congressional action.

"Unemployment, as the Congress recognized in the Employment Act of 1946 as well as in the Social Security Act of 1935, is a national problem.

"National action is needed now to check the continuing drain on the national economy as a result of inadequate unemployment compensation payments, which have been exhausted for hundreds of thousands of unemployed workers so that they are now compelled to apply for inadequate relief payments."

The health of our economy and the general welfare "require enactment of an adequate unemployment compensaton law now," he declared.

Happy Days

Hypocrisy of the Mississippi Legislature on the subject of prohibition came in for comment before the House Interstate Commerce Committee by Joseph E. Brady, coordinator of state councils for the CIO Brewery Workers. Said Brady:

"In Mississippi, a dry state, the first thing they hand you in a good restaurant is the liquor menu. There the state collects a black market tax on liquor. So the wets have their liquor, the drys have their dry law, and everybody's happy in Mississippi."

A Step To Real Security

Wouldn't it be wonderful if every American could look forward to retiring some day with real dignity and real financial independence?

Very few workers have that prospect these days. That's why we need to keep on improving the Social Security program to bring it into line with 1954 living costs.

Last week the House of Representatives, with only a few dissenting votes, approved the Administration's old age insurance bill. It's a good bill as far as it goes; it could go farther—and the Senate has a chance to do just that.

The important thing about the House vote of 355 to 8 was the recognition that Social Security—despite the U. S. Chamber of Commerce campaign against it, and the free-wheeling Curtis investigation a few months ago—is here to stay. As Rep. Forand (D. R.I.) observed, "it is gratifying to see the Republicans finally seeing the light on this program."

The half-a-loaf social security bill voted by the House, as CIO has pointed out, falls short of provisions of the Lehman-Dingell Bill in several important points. One is the lack of provision for disability benefits for the sick or disabled. Another is the lack of sufficient pensions for the chronically ill. And the basic pension increases should be higher.

Why not write your Senators to tell them your views about social security?

Dept. Of Understatement

According to a news report in the New York Times, Republican leaders are "showing a growing apprehension" over the failure of the Republican Congress to carry out the legislative program of the Republican President. They say Ike is in for "real trouble."

With considerable understatement, the GOP-supporting Times added editorially:

"The leaders of neither house of Congress have anything to boast about. If they expect to have by the time the Republicans face the country in November, they had better get a move on."

What Goes On Here?

The strange contradictions of the government's "security" program were demonstrated once again last week.

On one hand, Dr. Ralph Bunche was heard and quickly cleared of unspecified loyalty charges.

On the other hand, the Atomic Energy Commission's Security Board cleared Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer as a "loyal" citizen and then barred him from further atomic energy work. That in effect is ruling you're guilty when you're found innocent.

What Now, AMA?

Henry Kaiser, the industrialist, says that plans such as his firm has sponsored in highly successful form on the West Coast, are the best way to avoid "socialized medicine." Patients pay a relatively small monthly fee, and get excellent medical, clinical and hospital service.

The AMA will, we feel sure, "answer" Kaiser. But they'll have difficulties.

They consider a sponsor of such a plan to be a "socialist"—though industrialist Kaiser doesn't easily fit the category.

But the AMA has made nonsensical statements, without logic, before. We're betting they can do it again.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS
Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.
Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII June 7, 1954 No. 23

Distracting—To Say The Least

In Other Words—

A Unionist Reports On Asia

The article following is condensed from a report by Solomon Barkin, research director of the CIO Textile Workers, on a trip to the Far East under the State Dept. exchange program. He visited Australia, New Zealand, Japan, India and the Philippines.

By SOLOMON BARKIN

AN AMERICAN trade unionist visiting foreign countries in Asia and Oceania can truly serve our nation and its trade union movement, as well as the anti-Communist movement abroad.

Our current efforts at communication with and aid to one another are frustrated by our lack of knowledge and the distances involved. American diplomats are too preoccupied with official responsibilities and circulate in government and business circles far removed from the mass of the people really to help.

Barkin

Even American trade unionists serving in official positions may be eyed suspiciously by local persons and are hamstrung by official limitations and policies. An American trade unionist moving and speaking freely can build the bridge of understanding, bring a direct message of fraternal interest and help establish the base for mutual assistance.

In every country I visited, workers and trade union leaders wanted to know concretely how we live, what our jobs are like, what our trade unions are, and how we realize our achievements. They want to familiarize themselves with our experiences and compare them with their own. Everywhere, they eagerly press for the most minute details about our way of life and our battle to achieve it.

The Asian worker most often cannot comprehend a description of the life and activities of the American union because they are so far removed from his own experience. He therefore asks for comparisons with the problems he faces. Often, we had to go back to the life of the worker in earlier decades, in crowded slums and company towns, to re-tell our struggles and achievements and to align our history with their current life.

Australian and New Zealand workers want more direct and detailed comparisons. Their standards and ways of life are so much like ours that they want to evaluate the differences carefully. Is it true that the standards of the American worker have forged ahead at a more rapid pace since the end of the war?

The vast range of wages, working conditions and benefits in the U. S. between the highly organized and profitable industries and the unorganized and low-wage ones is difficult to present to workers and trade union leaders in countries where uniform regional and national rates and conditions prevail, and the differences between the national minimum and the pay rate for the most skilled are very small.

They look askance on our system of piecemeal improvements through plant or company negotiations when they have been able to establish high standards, relatively uniform for all, through a combination of government regulation and awards through national or state arbitration courts.

They cannot comprehend the aggressive and effective opposition to unionism in some regions in the U. S. in view of the government's boast abroad of our system of collective bargaining.

All of these challenges and questions must be met frankly with honest trade union answers.

Labor's Role In Politics

A common question put by workers and union leaders throughout the world is why American unions are so relatively free from political parties. In some Asian countries, political activity has been accented because they have recently gained independence, and workers' well-being is being determined by their influence in the new governments.

In other countries, political parties have been the instruments of the political ambitions of specific economic classes. A higher degree of class consciousness exists. They lament our lack of sophistication, and are not reassured by the story that our pattern has served us and that the future will have to dictate a new course.

A visit of an American trade unionist to a foreign country is a full assignment, as so many have questions to ask and want to learn about us from people they have come to trust as bona fide unionists.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE TIME WILL COME unless the present course of events is reversed when anybody who raises his voice in defense of Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer may himself be dragged before a "loyalty" board or a congressional committee, belabored with questions based on "information" from secret files, and find himself labeled as loyal and trustworthy but nevertheless a "security risk."

The time will come when Ward V. Evans, a member of the special security board of the Atomic Energy Commission, may be hauled before the 20th Century American witch-hunters and required to explain, on penalty of professional and personal disgrace, why he refused to concur with the AEC board's majority about Dr. Oppenheimer.

Let the issue, therefore, be expressed plainly now:

The 2-to-1 majority that ruled against Dr. Oppenheimer's "clearance" for "secrets" made one basic point: that in issues involving security any "doubts" must be resolved in favor of "the government."

This is a foul and sinister doctrine.

Who is "the government" of the United States?

It includes you and me; 160 million other people; the members of the Atomic Energy Commission; the members of the AEC's special board. It includes, also, Dr. Oppenheimer.

I mistrust private citizens, suddenly set in a position of power over another citizen, who jabber as if they think that they—and they alone—have any concern for the Republic.

I mistrust and doubt security boards that have the effrontery to pass down decisions resolving personal "doubts" in favor of "the government"—as if Dr. Oppenheimer were not himself a citizen who has made distinguished contributions to "the government" far beyond anything contributed by those who condemned him, Pres. Gordon Gray of the University of North Carolina and Thomas A. Morgan, a retired industrialist.

Source Of Many Evils

The doctrine that all "doubts" about security clearance must be resolved in favor of "the goverment" is the source of almost all the evils that trouble us about McCarthyism.

A confirmed witch-hunter can kill, professionally, thousands of scientists, teachers, union leaders and intellectuals—provided that the witch-hunter is allowed to get away with the theory that each victim must be presumed guilty until he proves himself innocent.

This theory is exactly what was affirmed by the board that ruled on Dr. Oppenheimer. The majority admitted that the physicist who built the atomic bomb was loyal, a close-mouthed keeper of secrets. But, said Messrs. Gray and Morgan, he couldn't explain to their satisfaction everything they wanted explained about intellectual concepts and professional associations.

He had no "enthusiasm" for the hydrogen bomb.

He obviously had little enthusiasm for the whole loyalty-security program of "the government," with its enormous abuses of individuals.

Well, neither do many others, who are not physicists. And as a Washington reporter of politics, I am vividly aware of the fact that if Pres. Truman had not issued his loyalty directive in 1947, the Republican 80th Congress would have passed a law making things worse. Things have been getting worse, ever since, without a law.

The Right To Reputation

A man uncondemned of crime has a right to a livelihood, to a reputation for decency, as well as freedom from a jail cell.

I remember clearly that a former Attorney General, the Daugherty of Harding's Administration, pleaded the Fifth Amendment in a criminal trial in 1924 and escaped prison by virtue of two hung juries, and yet was held guilty in the minds of many of his countrymen.

The issue then, however, was an allegation of overt acts of fraud and corruption—not thoughts, associations, intellectual concepts, political or moral viewpoints.

If Dr. Oppenheimer has been guilty of any crime, let him be indicted by a jury of his peers, like any other citizen, and be given the right of trial before a federal court in which the prosecutors would be forced to disclose any evidence in support of the "doubts" of Gordon Gray and Thomas A. Morgan.

Dr. Oppenheimer did not plead the Fifth Amendment.

He should be considered innocent, in regard to his future livelihood and reputation, until he is proved guilty—and the sinister doctrine that "the government" somehow has had the privilege of overriding the personal rights of individual citizens should be repudiated.

The Atomic Energy Commission, sitting as a final appeals board above Gordon Gray's board, has the last clear chance to reverse the abominable majority decision on Dr. Oppenheimer.

Washington Window—

Joe's Losing His Political Oomph; GOP May Drop 50 House Seats

By Public Affairs Institute

SEN. McCARTHY'S ability to swing elections to candidates of his own choice has been highly overrated, a new Public Affairs Institute study by Louis H. Bean concluded. Bean, a noted political analyst, also reported:

- Mid-term elections usually cost the party in power from 25 to 30 seats in the House of Representatives;
- The 10% drop in business activity in the last year, with its accompanying unemployment, could cost the Republicans another 20 to 25 seats in the House;
- The Administration's farm program, along with present agricultural price trends, may further reduce the number of Republican seats in the House;
- Effect on elections of the international situation and the threat of war cannot be judged at this time.

The new PAI pamphlet is called "Influences in the 1954 Mid-Term Elections." Bean's statistical studies of factors which influence elections receive wide recognition. He was one of the few analysts to predict Pres. Truman's victory in 1948.

Joe's Barnstorming Record

The author was asked to make a study of major factors in the 1954 elections including an objective statistical study to prove or disprove McCarthy's influence in the forthcoming congressional elections.

Bean analyzed the 12 states in which McCarthy campaigned in 1952. In all 12 states, he says, "Democratic candidates were not as a rule hurt by McCarthy's charges against them but, possibly, even helped by five percentage points."

In Connecticut, where McCarthy is given credit for the defeat of Sen. Benton (D.), Bean finds otherwise. "Here, too," he says, "if he had any influence in the state it must have been to Benton's advantage." Benton ran 1.7 points better than Adlai Stevenson, Democratic presidential nominee.

McCarthy's effort to unseat Sen. Kilgore (D.) in West Virginia is listed by Dr. Bean as an example of the Wisconsin senator's lack of influence. Kilgore ran ahead of his ticket in every county where McCarthy campaigned against him as well as in the state as a whole.

In his own state of Wisconsin in 1952, McCarthy received less votes than any of the seven major candidates. He received 110,000 votes less than Pres. Eisenhower and was 189,000 votes below the top man, Sec. of State Fred Zimmerman. Bean questions whether McCarthy would have been elected without running on Eisenhower's coattail.

THE END MAN—Chart from Louis H. Bean's new report on "Influences in the 1954 Mid-Term Elections" shows Sen. McCarthy's influence in his home state. In 1952 vote in Wisconsin, his popular vote trailed Gen. Eisenhower and state office candidates.

Bean reports that the Gallup polls in January and April of 1954 bear out findings of his election studies. "As of April, 1954, McCarthy's possible influence reflected in the Gallup Poll had fallen to the point where, if he influenced two persons to vote for a Republican Congressman or Senator he would drive five others away, most likely into the Democratic column."

Maine Poll Cited

The author also reports a recent poll conducted by the Boston Post on the Maine senatorial election. Sen. Margaret Chase Smith, a strong McCarthy foe, is being opposed by Robert L. Jones with McCarthy's backing.

Voters in nine industrial districts were asked whether they were for or against Senator McCarthy with the following results:

For McCarthy	40.5%
Against McCarthy	41.1%
Undecided	18.1%

The second question was whether they favored Smith or Jones:

For Smith	85.5%
For Jones	10.6%
Undecided	3.9%

"It is clear," Bean says, "that what people think about McCarthy's investigations has practically no bearing on their attitude toward election candidates."

(Next week: Economic influences on the congressional elections.)

Book Review—

Freedom's Case Versus Security

TWO CENTURIES ago Benjamin Franklin, a jealous guardian of a new nation's rights, declared: "They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety."

In "Freedom, Loyalty, Dissent," Henry Steele Commager re-examines this premise, finds it as valid today as it was when the printer-statesman pronounced the words.

Prof. Commager, of Columbia University, takes a practical, pragmatic view and directs his readers to the necessity for freedom in an American society.

Free Enterprise In Ideas

The Ohio-born educator and historian hammers at the proposition that Americans must preserve and encourage the exercise of freedom of inquiry, investigation, dissent, association, education, science, literature and politics. This freedom, in all of its forms, must be allowed to develop, not as any abstract right but as an essential to continuity of American tradition.

The government "which most scrupulously protects and encourages complete freedom of thought, expression, communication, investigation, criticism is the one which has the best chance of achieving security and progress," the author says.

Discussing free enterprise in ideas, Prof. Commager reminds us that "a nation that silences or intimidates original minds is left only with unoriginal minds and cannot hope to hold its own in the competition of peace or of war."

Although some of Commager's essays were written six years ago, they have a terrible relevance in terms of contemporary events.

Prof. Commager points a warning finger to the emergence of new patterns of Americanism and of loyalty. This new loyalty, the author contends, is above all, conformity.

"It is the uncritical and unquestioning acceptance of America as it is—the political institutions, the social relationships, the economic practices. It rejects inquiry into the race question, or socialized medicine, or public housing, or into the wisdom or validity of our foreign policy.

"It regards as particularly heinous any challenge to what is called 'the system of private enterprise', identifying that system with Americanism. It abandons evolution, repudiates the once popular concept of progress and regards America as a finished product, perfect and complete.

"It is satisfied with membership in respectable organizations and, as it assumes that every member of a liberal organization is a Communist, concludes that every member of a conservative one is a true American. It has not yet learned that not everyone who saith Lord, Lord shall enter into the kingdom of Heaven. It is designed neither to discover real disloyalty nor to foster true loyalty."

—E.A.K.

"Freedom, Loyalty, Dissent," by Henry Steele Commager, Oxford University Press, 114 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y., 155 pp., $2.50.

'Operation Truth'—

URW Parleys Spark A Political Revival

By BILL ABBOTT
Special Correspondent

THE CIO Rubber Workers have begun an all-out campaign for political education.

Under the direction of Sec.-Treas. Desmond Walker, a hard-working education team has held political educational conferences in more than 25 cities in 11 states.

The URW team, besides Walker, includes district directors and members of the union's education, legal and FEPC departments.

Its standard equipment is the new CIO-PAC film strip, "Everyone Gives to Political Action," a political fact book prepared for Rubber Workers by the education department, and easy-to-read voting records of area congressmen and senators.

Walker

The purpose of these conferences is to inform a core of politically-effective leaders, who will be able to mobilize their locals and communities behind CIO-supported candidates this year. Labor-backed candidates for Congress have participated in the discussions at the schools.

Walker calls the project "Operation Truth," because every major state and national political issue is brought out and fully discussed by those attending the conferences.

He believes that before any truly successful action can be taken the local union leadership must be informed and trained to achieve the results needed to win this November.

Praised By Senators

URW political educational conferences have drawn praise from such legislative leaders as Sens. Kefauver of Tennessee and Sparkman of Alabama.

In Eau Claire, Wis., one old-timer, a member of U. S. Rubber Co. Local 19, told Joe Glazer, URW educational director, that he hadn't seen such an inspiring program since the days "Old Bob LaFollette talked to us about the big steals of the lumber and railroad barons."

In Goodrich Local 194, Clarksville, Tenn., 40% of the membership gave dollars to PAC before the drive had officially begun.

After a discussion on Texas oil money pouring into the State to beat Sen. Kefauver one member gave a $10 bill to PAC. "I can't afford it," he said, "but I can afford Kefauver's defeat a lot less."

Enthusiasm is running so high in Iowa that URW members traveled over 100 miles to attend one of these meetings. In Ohio, Rubber Workers journeyed 35 miles to attend an area conference.

The idea gained big impetus last March in Cleveland when delegates from all over the nation gathered to decide the union's economic policy. Year after year this "little convention" had talked strictly bread-and-butter unionism. Wage, hour, pension and insurance policies and demands were decided grass-roots style after every delegate had his say.

But this year, before the meeting was hardly under way, Matt Wojciechowski, president of Buffalo Local No. 188, asked permission to talk about political action.

"This is your meeting Brother Wojciechowski," replied Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, "you don't have to ask us if it's all right to discuss political action. It's just as much a part of our economic program as anything else." Thereupon Wojciechowski proceeded to rip the hide off the present Administration in Washington.

Things Are Looking Up

Then delegate after delegate spoke up; each emphasized the absolute need for an aggressive political action program in '54. The result of this spontaneous move was a strong resolution, the first of its kind passed at a meeting to discuss wages—a resolution which placed PAC on an equal footing in the URW program with wage increases and the guaranteed annual wage.

The response to this new look in PAC has exceeded all expectations. As many as four conferences a week have been held, and new film strip projectors have been ordered to meet the increased demand.

CIO leaders from other unions have attended the meetings, and URW instructors have put on the program before Democratic party clubs and other community groups. Ministers, state government and city officials, small businessmen, university professors, and newspaper editors help make up the total of community representatives who have been connected with the program.

As one delegate to a conference in Erie, Pa., put it, "there's a real political revival in the air, and we're going to do everything we can to make the most of it."

LEARN PAC KNOW-HOW—Students at a political education conference of the CIO Rubber Workers at Akron examine PAC film strip, "Everyone Gives To Political Action." From left, they are Paul Grow, Local 298, Ravenna, O.; Jack Hurst and Clara Montigney, Local 179, Garrettsville, O., and Bill Abbott, URW Education Dept.

PLANNERS—Dir. Rex Murray of URW-CIO Dist. 1 helps local union officers plan an area political education school. From left, they are A. L. Vandenburg, Local 179, Garrettsville, O.; Mary Wolff, Local 39, Ravenna, O.; James Best, Local 399, Middlefield, O.; Murray, and Francis Blair, Local 298, also of Ravenna, O.

11 Locals Join 100% PAC Roll Of Oil Workers

FOUR MORE LOCALS joined the 100% PAC honor roll of the CIO Oil Workers in April, according to OWIU-CIO Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick.

This brings to 11 the total of the union's locals that have collected a dollar or more for PAC from every members. The April additions were:

Brownfield, Tex., Local 457; Burrton, Kans., Local 475; Bishop, Tex., Local 495, and Hercules, Calif., Local 587.

Chicago CIOers Trained As Effective PAC Precinct Leaders

CIO STAFF representatives learned how to be effective precinct leaders at a recent two-day institute in Chicago co-sponsored by the Cook County, Ill., CIO-PAC and the Labor Education Div. of Roosevelt College.

The program is part of a plan designed to establish an effective, year-round precinct-level political organization in each congressional district in the county.

The organization is meant to supplement the work of the Cook County CIO Council's union counselling service.

"We have been very effective in handling the problems of members at the plant," said Robert Levin, administrative assistant to Council Sec. Ellsworth Smith, "but there is an additional need for a permanent service to handle the community problems affecting workers where they live."

Council Staff Rep. Larry Keller pointed out that "community problems are greater than those of the plant."

"A MAN spends only one-third of his time in the plant, but two-thirds of his time in the community," he said.

The leaders who participated in the institute will conduct similar courses in each congressional district in the county. The entire program has as its aim the extension of the Cook County PAC objective—"to advance and promote the general welfare by political action"—to insure the election of good officials and the passage of good laws through precinct level organization.

Topics under discussion ranged from "Where is Political Action Most Effective?" to "How a Bill Becomes Law." One session was devoted to demonstrations by representatives of the Independent Voters of Illinois of right and wrong ways of canvassing a precinct.

POLITICAL ACTION leaders in Cook County, Ill. (Chicago), discuss ways to help constituents with personal problems. Cook County IUC staff men Larry Keller, seated, and Paul Iaccino lead session during two-day institute for precinct leaders.

PAC Buck Drive Goes Over Top In 16 Steel Locals

CIO STEELWORKERS local unions in the Harvey, Ill., area have racked up an enviable record in their PAC dollar drive with 16 out of 28 locals reporting better than 100% participation.

Three of the 16 locals raised twice as many dollars as they have members, with Local 2590 exceeding 275%. The balance of the local unions were well over the half-way mark in individual contributions.

The well-organized drive brought a total of $6170.50 in voluntary PAC dollars, according to Subdistrict Dir. Sam E. Perish of USA-CIO Dist. 31.

N

"ECONOMY" VS. SKILLED WORKERS—For still another year, GOP "economy" is threatening adequate funds for vocational education of young workers. Such schools now train millinery workers (left), teach industrial skills (center) and (at right) provide upgrading classes.

YOUNG WORKER in Chicago gets training in machine work.

CIO Joins Battle Against GOP's Drive To Cut Vocational Schools

FOR THE SECOND YEAR in a row a battle looms in Congress over the Administration's proposals to slash appropriations for the federal vocational education program.

The battle will center on the George-Barden Act fund, passed by Congress in 1946, which authorizes assistance payments to the states for vocational training.

At issue is the Administration's announced intention of turning this program over to the states. Welfare Sec. Hobby made this clear a year ago, Pres. Eisenhower reaffirmed it in his budget message in January. Last year's attempt to scuttle the program by a 25% budget cut was defeated after a vigorous debate in the House.

Pending Slash Protested

A lesser but equally significant cut is proposed in the new federal budget being studied by a Senate sub-committee. CIO, the National Farmers Union and other groups interested in retention of the vocational education program under federal auspices are fighting against any cut in U. S. aid.

"We must have more and better, not less and worse, vocational education as part of a larger and better education package," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wrote M. D. Mobley, executive secretary of the American Vocational Association, Inc.

Reuther noted that America's school population increases at a rate of 7500 a day or more than 2.5 million a year, while our technology develops with increasing rapidity.

He cited the statement of Sen. George (D. Ga.), co-author of the vocational education act, that "we must see to it that our school population has the teachers, the buildings and the equipment to develop the fullest potentials of each, boy, girl and adult willing to go on learning."

Yet, Reuther said, for the second year running, the Administration has recommended a cut in funds for vocational education.

"This means less vocational education, fewer teachers, fewer schools, classrooms, shops and farms and less, inferior and obsolete equipment for the education and training of the skilled industrial workers and farm men and women of tomorrow," Reuther noted.

"Most alarming," Reuther went on, "is the reason given for the recommended cuts: Our present federal-state system, tried, tested and successful, is to be destroyed, little by little, and the full responsibility and costs put upon the states, local communities and, quoting from Pres. Eisenhower's 1954 budget message, 'private enterprise'."

Reuther said local communities cannot and will not do the job. He predicted that federal standards of teaching, buildings and equipment would be swept away and up to 51 standards would be substituted.

"If private enterprise were to take over education or any part of it," Reuther continued, "it would not be free, it would not be public, it would not be education; it would tend to become narrow drilling of robots, with no education in the economic, social and political facts of life, or with an evil substitute of slanted indoctrination, depriving the trainees of confidence in themselves, each other and their government."

Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.) called upon Sen. Thye (R. Minn.), chairman of the appropriations subcommittee, to restore the cuts so the vocational education program may be continued at least at its present level. He pointed out that state funds to operate school programs are already critically short, resulting in the reduction of teachers' salaries and the loss of vocational teachers.

Stalling Protested

If the Eisenhower Administration continues its stalling on federal aid to school construction, it will "sabotage our future as a great and free country," Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) told a Senate Labor Committee hearing on bills to finance school construction.

"Let us no longer break faith with our children by postponing action which Congress must eventually take if the citizens of the future are to be prepared to save democracy as we know it," he urged. "Let us move ahead with the job of saving our schools and thus of saving the nation."

AVIATION mechanics is studied first-hand in Pittsburgh.

HOME ECONOMICS and child care training also are featured.

FORESTRY and agriculture also are studied in the farm areas.

"MORE AND BETTER, not less and worse" vocational education is what CIO supports "as part of a larger and better educational package." Such schooling includes nurses training (at left), practical experience in retail selling at a model store (center), and learning of building trades.

OWIU Approves Union Merger Proposal

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

ANOTHER major step toward an enlarged union in the nation's petroleum industry was voted overwhelmingly last week by the CIO Oil Workers.

Meeting in a two-day special convention at Cleveland, the OWIU approved—by a margin of 73,000 to 881—plans for creation of the enlarged union sometime later this year.

A convention last February, attended by the CIO union, numerous independent oil unions and AFL local groups, had paved the way for creation of the new Oil & Chemical Workers International Union.

THE OWIU became the first group to ratify plans for the enlarged unions.

Numerous independent unions are expected to vote on the issue in coming months. The first such poll was scheduled among 1300 workers at Sugar Creek, Mo., on June 4, when they voted whether to bring their group—a local of the Central States Petroleum Union—into the OCWIU.

Pres. O. A. Knight hailed the forthright decision of the OWIU as "paving the way for a stronger bargaining position for every oil worker in the U. S. and Canada."

Noting that he was "pleased at the outcome" of the OWIU convention vote, Knight told reporters he "looks forward to ratification of the plans for the enlarged union by a number of the independent unions during the months ahead."

Knight, who has played a leading role in the process of bringing together the widely-scattered labor groups in the oil industry, said that creation of the enlarged union "will mean dollars and cents in the pocket of every oil worker, through the stronger bargaining position we can attain against the multi-million dollar oil companies."

The economic facts of life in the nation's oil industry were spelled out by a resolution passed by the special convention.

NOTING that a few decades ago, oil companies were small and independent, the OWIU pointed out an "entirely different picture" in existence now.

"These early-day individual producers and refiners have become merged into vast and wealthy corporations," the union said.

"We do not oppose technological improvements in any industry, but we do recognize that we no longer bargain with single employers whose economic existence depends upon the small area where the workers ordinarily live and work."

"We must of necessity bargain with an entire industry on the other side of the table when we sit down in any collective bargaining conference," the union declared. "Workers must recognize that the oil industry has become a virtual monopoly. . . .

"For all of these reasons, we know that we cannot serve the best interest of our membership when our unions remain isolated and wholly independent of one another. To be entirely effective, we must merge united on the same basis that management has merged its collective bargaining strength."

CREATION of an enlarged union, the resolution said, would add to the general effectiveness of the workers' organization—both in terms of collective bargaining and general service to the membership.

The two-day meeting at the Hotel Hollenden in Cleveland was held in executive session to permit full and frank discussion of the issues involved. Pres. Knight gave a detailed report to the delegates, and every aspect of the plans was discussed for several hours.

STRICTLY BUSINESS—Attention of 200 delegates to the special convention of the CIO Oil Workers was demonstrated on these faces as union ratified plans for oil union merger.

SPECIAL convention of the CIO Oil Workers hears Pres. O. A. (Jack) Knight report on oil union merger talks.

The convention of the enlarged union is scheduled later this year if a sufficient number of unions ratify the plans and program. In the event that ratification is slow in coming, the OWIU will hold its regular convention during the last two months of 1954.

An OWIU Wage Policy Committee meeting was scheduled after the special convention to map the union's bargaining plans for this year's contract negotiations.

Plan Urged By Heller To Block Crash

AN ANTI-DEPRESSION bill with provisions similar to CIO's program for full employment and prosperity, has been introduced by Rep. Heller (D. N.Y.).

Heller's bill sets forth a program of "remedial legislation" to strengthen unemployment insurance, broaden social security, increase the minimum wage, extend tax reduction to low-income groups, provide for low-rent housing and establish a program of public works.

About the same time the measure went into the hopper, the Commerce Dept. reported that the national income dropped in April for the sixth month in a row.

IT ESTIMATED wages, salaries and other forms of personal income during the month were at the annual rate of $282 billion, a drop of $1 billion from March and of $5 billion from the peak last October. Cuts in earnings of farm hands and industrial workers in metal, machinery and transportation equipment was the principal factor, the department said.

Heller said his bill could be regarded "as being in the nature of a blueprint for action to strengthen our economic system." He calls his plan "a series of corrective measures to help maintain full employment, broaden economic protection, expand purchasing power and continue a high standard of living."

The Congressman urged adoption of the anti-depression measure as effective means to deal with the situation "while we still have the opportunity to save our economy, and not wait until the process of deterioration has made heavy inroads."

The bill calls for raising the minimum wage from the present 75c per hour to $1, for raising personal income tax exemptions from $600 to $800, for authorization to construct 400,000 low-rent housing units within four years, and for a $3 billion appropriation for public works.

CIO on ABC
Monday thru Friday
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS

Bunche Is Quickly Cleared After Federal Loyalty Hearing

A FEDERAL loyalty board has quickly cleared Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, former Nobel Peace prize winner, of unspecified charges against him.

Questioning of the top-ranking spokesmen for Negro opinion in this country was described as "shocking" and "an unseemly farce" by Pres. Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

White called Bunche "not only a great and distinguished American but a great and distinguished citizen of the world whose entire career has been dedicated to the preservation and enlargement of human liberty."

BUNCHE is chief director of the United Nations Dept. of Trusteeship and is slated to become the second ranking administrative officer in the U. N.

Pierce J. Gerety, chairman of the loyalty board, announced after two sessions with Bunche a unanimous decision to clear him. He added that "there is no doubt as to the loyalty of Dr. Bunche to the government of the United States."

DR. RALPH J. BUNCHE

Bunche was first questioned at a session lasting 12 hours. The following day he was a special guest of Pres. Eisenhower at a White House dinner for Haile Selassie.

UAW Pamphlet Tells How Bishop Ended Church Bias

THE CIO AUTO Workers have just issued a new pamphlet dealing with one community's simple solution to the controversial problem of racial segregation in the churches.

Titled "Souls Don't Have Color," the pamphlet tells the story of how Bishop Vincent S. Waters, head of the Catholic diocese of Raleigh, N. C., ended church segregation in the tiny town of Newton Grove, N. C., which had two Catholic churches — one for white and one for Negroes.

Three weeks later, the pamphlet relates, Bishop Waters issued an edict forbidding segregation in all Roman Catholic churches within his diocese. In that order, Bishop Waters, a native Southerner, said:

"I am happy to take the responsibility for any evil which might result from different races worshipping God together. But I would be unwilling to take the responsibility of those who refuse to worship God with a person of another race."

William H. Oliver, co-director of the UAW Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Dept., who announced publication of the pamphlet, said that "in view of the recent momentous Supreme Court decision, actions such as those of the Catholic Church depicted in this pamphlet take on added importance as shining examples for others to follow."

IN A foreword, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther noted that "where churches practice discrimination, schools also generally do"

"Poor education standards follow for white and Negro children alike," he added.

"Churches are the conscience of communities. They have the moral power to end this moral wrong. The battle for a better world—a world of peace, freedom and justice—never will be won without brotherhood."

"Souls Don't Have Color," UAW-CIO Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Dept., 8000 E. Jefferson Ave., Detroit 14, Mich.; free.

Complacency Called Real Threat To Business

ADMINISTRATION complacency about unemployment has had more serious effects on private enterprise than the "government competition" which conservatives criticize so often, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers said last week.

Potofsky's remarks were contained in a letter to Rep. Frank Osmers (R. N. J.), the sponsor of a bill designed to take the government out of every conceivable type of "competition" with private businesses.

"So long as our government accepts and acts promptly on its responsibilities under the Employment Act of 1946," Potofsky wrote, "and so long as our businessmen devote themselves to maximizing production and distribution of goods and services, private enterprise has little reason to fear fair competition from any quarter."

Osmers' bill alleges that government activities of any sort "tends" to destroy initiative and reduce the ability of citizens to pay taxes.

But, Potofsky pointed out, expanded government economic activity has come about largely through "changing conditions which made it necessary." In many cases, he said, "the public is best served by governmental rather than private enterprise. This does not . . . inevitably increase the cost of government."

CLOSING exercises of Asian Trade Union School of ICFTU at Calcutta heard farewell address by Shahzada Syed Mohd Zafar (speaking, left), student from West Pakistan, and speech by Michael Ross (right), CIO representative to the ICFTU.

Labor's World—

Labor Warns Schuman Plan Must Up Living Standards

REPRESENTATIVES of the free unions concerned with the European Coal & Steel Community found things to praise and to criticize when they got together recently to appraise the results of the first year of existence of the dramatic experiment in a limited form of economic unity.

The Committee of 21, through which the workers have representation in the plan, called the appraisal meeting in Luxemburg, inviting all interested unions, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the international metalworkers' and miners' trade secretariats, and the Schuman Plan's governing body, the High Authority.

Recognizing that markets have been stagnating since the community began operating and that it is not yet part of a full European economic community geared to full employment and economic expansion, the union leaders recognized that the High Authority had established a common market for coal and steel during its first year, and that it had eliminated some obstacles to such a goal.

It also approved the community for the increase in trade in the two commodities between the countries involved, and the fact that the unions had had the possibility of participating in High Authority activities which led to the results.

ON THE CRITICAL side, according to an article in the ICFTU monthly publication, Free Labor World, the Luxemburg conference "could not declare itself completely satisfied" with the progress made toward improved living and working conditions, the wiping out of national differences in such standards, and the stabilization and expansion of markets.

"The conference (delegates) . . . do not hesitate to rejoice at the progress which, thanks to the activities of the High Authority, has been made," the Free Labor World reported. "At the same time, they temper this praise with constructive criticism, and set social targets which the community can and must attain."

ILO

The international conference of the Intl. Labor Organization got under way last week in Geneva, Switzerland, with the CIO represented among the labor advisers by Michael Ross, CIO representative to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions; Elmer Cope, CIO Steelworkers, and Alexander Barkan, CIO Textile Workers.

Shortly before the meeting, Dir. Gen. David A. Morse announced that a proposal approved by the last conference to increase the size of the Governing Body from 32 to 40 members had been ratified by the member nations.

Under the new setup, the body will be composed of 10 worker members, 10 employer members and 20 government members. Russia, which joined the ILO recently after years of vilifying it, is expected to get one of the governing body seats given the 10 countries of "chief industrial importance."

Austria

The Austrian Federation of Trade Unions and the Wood Workers Union have endowed a credit fund to help workers purchase new low-cost, modern furniture on the installment plan. The furniture, mass produced, is sold at a low cost made possible by simple models, avoidance of expensive frills and finishes, and use of domestic woods. Twenty Vienna furniture dealers are selling it on a basis of 30 monthly payments.

The Ladies Get It Easier—Relatively

The ladies, bless 'em, are finding life easier and easier under the beneficent rule of communism, according to reports siphoned through the Iron Curtain by the anti-Communist Free Europe Committee.

No longer will the girls in Bulgaria have to push those heavy old three-wheeled wheelbarrows with great, big loads. The government has decreed that henceforth, they needn't push a load of more than 220 pounds.

In Czechoslovakia, the ever-lovin' government is thinking of packing sugar in smaller sacks; the 200-pound size has been giving the ladies too tough a time. And the Polish government, the great big Red softies, have ruled that after the fourth month of pregnancy women in the merchant marine can go on "reserve" status.

Ross Pledges ICFTU Help In Malaya

DEMOCRATIC trade unions throughout the free world will give direct financial assistance to the Plantation Workers Union in Malaya, according to word taken to the workers themselves by Michael Ross, CIO representative to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Ross made the announcement in Penang, where he had gone on a mission for the ICFTU. The funds come from the ICFTU Regional Activities Fund, set up to help struggling unions in underdeveloped countries grow strong.

THE ACTION was taken because the ICFTU found the Plantation Workers "structurally sound and a stabilizing factor to the rubber industry in Southeast Asia," Ross said.

The morale of members, he said, has been severely shaken by an arbitration award, based on a drop in the price of rubber, which cut wages by a larger amount than the employers had proposed during direct negotiations with the union.

"Where there is still an emergency," he commented, "it is politically unsound to weaken a responsible organization which is definitely on the side of freedom."

NLRB Bars Fur Union

THE SERVICES of the National Labor Relations Board have been denied the Fur and Leather Workers Union, expelled from CIO five years ago as Communist-dominated.

The NLRB action was taken after the union re-elected Ben Gold as president last month despite his conviction on a charge that he falsified a non-communist affidavit required by the Taft-Hartley Act. Gold has appealed a prison term of one to three years.

It was the first time any national union had been barred from the board's processes. Other unions may now seek elections among workers represented by the Fur & Leather Union and the latter is barred from a place on the ballot.

Give A Buck To PAC

Scott Wins Over Dixiecrat Attack

DESPITE injection of the Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation into the campaign by his chief opponent, former Gov. Kerr Scott won the Democratic Senatorial nomination in North Carolina over incumbent Sen. Lennon.

The Scott forces charged Lennon's supporters with circulating reprints of a "phony" newspaper advertisement saying Scott worked for non-segregation. Similar tactics caused the defeat in 1950 of former Sen. Frank Graham, whom Scott had appointed.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wired congratulations to Scott, saying "working men and farmers especially have every reason to rejoice with you and the people of your great state. We in the CIO are sure that you will make a great contribution in statesmanship and service to our nation and to the free world."

SCOTT'S victory was assured when Lennon conceded after unofficial returns showed Scott leading the seven-candidate field by a majority of 4178 votes. His total of better than 310,000 votes out of 613,000 cast was the biggest vote ever cast for a candidate in a North Carolina primary.

Scott had strong support from farmers and labor groups in the state, and one of his strongest assets was conceded to be a 14,000-mile road-building program during his four years as governor.

His victory is the third for Southern liberals in recent weeks. The others were primary victories for Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) and for James E. Folsom, who won the Alabama gubernatorial nomination in the same primary.

Other Primaries

Atty. George Huddleston, Jr., of Birmingham won the Democratic nomination for the Alabama 9th Congressional Dist. seat being vacated by Rep. Battle.

In South Dakota, Joe Foss, Marine World War II ace, won the Republican gubernatorial nomination by nearly two to one.

The Democratic gubernatorial primary in Nevada was won by former Gov. Vail Pittman over a field of four other candidates.

PHILIP O'ROURKE

CIO Leader Seeks House Post In West

A VETERAN CIO maritime unionist, Philip O'Rourke, is running for Congress in the California primary election this week.

O'Rourke, national vice president of the CIO Radio Association, is seeking the Democratic nomination in San Francisco's 4th Dist.

O'Rourke has AFL and CIO backing in his campaign against Rep. Mailliard (R.) in the gerrymandered district which for years sent former Rep. Franck R. Havenner to Washington.

Another unionist, Rep. Shelley (D.), former president of the San Francisco and California AFL, likewise has joint labor backing in the adjoining 5th Dist.

The San Francisco CIO Council aided in mobilizing campaign workers for O'Rourke's campaign.

The ARA officer is a naval veteran of the last war, and had served on a number of municipal and civic agencies. He has campaigned on a strongly-liberal platform.

PAGE ONE AWARD of Newspaper Guild of New York is presented to Edward R. Murrow (right), CBS radio and TV newscaster, by Pres. Arthur Rosenstock at the annual Page One Ball of the ANG-CIO local. Murrow was cited "for distinguished contributions to the adult and responsible use of broadcasting as a major medium of information and entertainment for the American people."

You And Your Money—

FTC Gagged, Muzzled By New GOP Plan; Mead Protests

THE FEDERAL TRADE Commission, set up to be the consumers' watchdog, has just been gagged and muzzled by the GOP Administration.

A new streamlining of the FTC has just been announced by its chairman, Edward F. Howrey, Eisenhower-appointed corporation lawyer who often battled the commission before he became its head. Howrey boasts that the reorganization represents "a major change in both concept and structure."

The overhauling job followed recommendations of a management survey group hired last October. The most significant changes affecting consumers are the abolition of two major bureaus.

The lone liberal and the only dissenter investigated and prosecuted monopolistic practices. The other, the Bureau of Anti-Deceptive Advertising, protected the public against fraudulent and misleading advertising claims. Both are doomed under the GOP's reorganization plan.

Their functions, drastically curtailed, will be combined in a new Bureau of Investigation and Litigation. The old units had their own investigative and prosecuting staffs.

The CIO News' prediction last September that "rough times appear to be ahead for consumers and small businessmen" is coming tragically true.

Under the excuse of budget cuts, the Republicans hacked and slashed at bureaus within the agency designed to protect the buying public. Employes with the best records for fighting monopolies were fired and replaced with those who had long differed with FTC policies.

The lone liberal and the only dissenter from the latest shift in FTC emphasis is Commissioner James M. Mead. He opposed the current reorganization and made the point that the Republicans with their management surveys tend to ignore.

"The reorganization of a government agency involves not only drawing lines on a chart but it also involves human beings and human relationships," Mead said.

He recalled that the FTC was overhauled in 1950 in line with suggestions made by distinguished members of the Hoover Commission. The FTC's efficiency was increased, he said, employe morale was high and a backlog of work was all but eliminated.

Mead's objections went all but unheard. The policy of let-the-buyer-beware now is the official standard of the revamped FTC. In recent rulings it has softened its attitude towards regulation of advertising claims, eased requirements for firms listing the content of their products and cut to the bone the staff which polices business practices.

Important Rulings

In two important recent decisions, the Federal Trade Commission:

• Set aside the 1952 false advertising findings against Philip Morris cigarets, and ordered new hearings and evidence on claims that the cigarets are less irritating than other brands. The new hearing was set after a U. S. Court of Appeals set aside an FTC cease and desist order.

• Announced a series of technical rules banning "torch sweaters" and other "highly flammable," synthetic articles of clothing. The rules supplement a new law, effective July 1, which prohibits the manufacture or sale of any apparel which is "so highly flammable as to be dangerous when worn by individuals."

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

NOWADAYS A CAR OWNER out to buy a tankful of gas is bombarded with many claims of new magical ingredients and new total power for auto fuel. He has to thread his way through a lot of magic-sounding names from TCP to A-D, and including ETC, RTG, 5-D and other alphabetical slogans.

An ordinary person can hardly tell from all the semi-mysterious slogans and initials what the hullabaloo is all about.

The Lowdown On New Gasolines

For example, you've been hearing: "Anti-Carbon!" (That would be nice, but how does it work?) "Extra-High Octane!" (But is it any higher than the other company's gasoline, and anyway, do I need it for my car and terrain?) "No more wild ping!" (What's that?)

There are two reasons for this high-pressure campaign:

1. Several new gasolines have been introduced in an attempt to cure some present troubles of modern high-compression auto engines, and permit the building of even higher-compression engines that would give us more miles to a gallon of gas.

2. But also behind the high-pressure advertising for the new gasolines, is an attempt "to wean motorists away from regular to the more expensive premium gasoline," as Business Week magazine commented. Your particular car may not need to be weaned yet, and may do very well on the lower-cost regular gas.

The reason for the new gasolines is that cars, especially those with high-compression engines, have been having trouble with gasoline. They have been suffering from a new phenomenon called "pre-ignition," and a tendency for spark plugs to foul, thus robbing the motorist of power and fuel.

Pre-ignition is different from "knock." Pre-ignition is an explosion of the gas in the combustion chamber before the spark gets a chance to fire. In contrast, "knock" is an explosion after the gas is ignited. Instead of a slow burn utilizing all the fuel, towards the end of the charge an explosion releases the energy all at once. Both "knock" and pre-ignition are wasteful of gas.

One of the causes of pre-ignition in modern high-compression engines is the very tetraethyl lead which was added to gasoline to stop "knock." This lead is added to both regular and premium grade gasolines, but in greater quantity to the premium grade.

The use of a large amount of lead in gasoline causes an accumulation of lead salts in the engine. After the engine has run a few thousand miles it also accumulates carbon. Together the lead and carbon deposits make a hot surface when you've been running your car under load or dragging through city traffic. That surface becomes hot enough to ignite the gas before the spark does.

The result is, a modern high-powered car may be subject to a new phenomenon called "wild ping," which is an erratic loud crack sometimes occurring at low speed. Or the engine may tend to thud when you open the throttle after a slow trip through city traffic.

Something Else Added

Different refiners have sought to solve this problem in different ways. Some gasoline companies, notably Shell, have added tricresyl phosphate (TCP) to gasoline. The phosphate compound neutralizes the deposits of lead salts, and also helps stop spark-plug fouling (which afflicts older engines as well as the high-compression ones). That's why you've been seeing so much advertising about "TCP." There is scientific evidence that tricresyl phosphate does neutralize such deposits. The only thing is, there is some fear it may in turn leave other deposits of its own.

If you have a car with high-compression ratio (more than 7 to 1) and drive under the heavy traffic and hill conditions described above, and have actually experienced the various signs of pre-ignition described above, then it is certainly worth trying several tankfuls of TCP gas or several tankfuls of the new high-octane gases without TCP, to see if they actually help. Or if you have experienced much spark ping fouling, that is, if your car is a "spark plug eater," it would certainly be worth trying a gas that has a phosphate compound added.

If you don't have a high-compression car (ask a dealer in your make to tell you the compression ratio), or any of the ills described above, then you can save more money than ever by sticking to regular gas.

It would even pay to try different brands of regular grade to see if there is any noticeable difference in the mileage you get, and also the performance when accelerating and on hills.

Here Are Tips For Teen-Agers On Landing That First Job

THE JOB outlook for the 700,000 high school graduates who will enter the labor market in June is described as "generally good" by Labor Sec. Mitchell, but he noted that competition may be keener in some fields.

The U. S. Dept. of Labor has released a job guide listing 74 occupations employing large numbers of boys and girls under 21. Distribution will be made at all public employment offices, to 27,000 high schools and to national youth and guidance groups.

Teen-agers this June will find opportunities in clerical and sales jobs among the most promising, the guide shows. The service occupations like fountain clerk, parking lot attendant, nurse's aide and hospital orderly also offer good job chances.

Employment as helpers to craftsmen in the building trades will be good, the guide says, and "reasonably good' for beginner jobs as auto mechanic and auto body repairman helpers.

Radio servicemen jobs will be scarce but TV serviceman helper chances will be better. Refrigeration and air conditioning mechanic's helper jobs are expanding, but with only "limited opportunities" for beginners.

Job chances for beginners in factories will vary with business and industry conditions. Farming will offer "good opportunity for temporary jobs" during the growing and harvesting seasons.

Copies of the "Job Guide for Young Workers" may be obtained from the Supt. of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., for 30c each.

CIO IS ON THE AIR—Ed Lashman of the CIO publicity staff (left) plugs the nightly radio broadcasts of John W. Vandercook, CIO and ACWA-sponsored commentator, to delegates at the Clothing Workers convention. From left, they are William Watson of the New Jersey cleaners and dyers, Fred Lark and Andrew Canadat of the New York cleaners' group.

Rieve Award To Be Given By Reuther

THE TORCH of Hope award to be given Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers at a testimonial dinner in New York on June 17 will be presented by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther as honorary chairman of the National Labor Council of the City of Hope, the national medical center near Los Angeles.

The council gives the award annually to an outstanding individual in public life who has made significant contributions to labor and the community. Rieve also is a CIO vice president and chairman of the CIO Economic Policy Committee.

In a letter of greeting and testimonial, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said "Emil Rieve is a great trade unionist," and praised the "bold and imaginative leadership" Rieve has given the CIO Textile Workers.

THE SPEAKERS' list includes many CIO leaders. Among them are CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, and Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock of the TWUA, who also is chairman of the dinner committee.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner of New York City will be another speaker. Pres. Joseph N. Curran of the CIO Maritime Union is general chairman of the affair. Several score CIO leaders are co-chairmen or members of either the executive committee or sponsoring committee.

¿Habla usted espanol?— Now Wage-Hour Agents Do

TWENTY WAGE-HOUR investigators in the Metropolitan New York area have completed a course in Spanish as part of the Regional Wage-Hour Div. campaign to bring the benefits of the Fair Labor Standards Act to workers of Puerto Rican origin, Acting Reg. Dir. Frank J. Meunch said last week.

A "substantial proportion" of the violations disclosed through investigations involve Puerto Ricans, Meunch said, The Spanish-speaking investigators will be able to communicate readily with such workers, and safeguard them against exploitation which in the past has been facilitated by their unfamiliarity with English.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

ONE OF THE DISCUSSIONS at the meeting of CIO's Organizing Committee last week concerned the "climate" for organization, the attitudes of workers. Does the majority of unorganized workers want a union, or realize the need for one?

I personally don't believe there has ever been a time when workers could not be educated in the reasons why they must have the benefits of trade unionism. But as the unions have pushed forward in one great wave of organization after another, selfish and shortsighted employers have developed new techniques for defeating union organization. These techniques must be considered and overcome.

A union has no product to sell. We can't go to a man and hand him a contract the way you'd give him a cake of soap. Before the worker is ready for the union he has to go through a time of searching his own mind and heart for the answers to some serious questions.

The organizer has to make the worker ask himself: "Can I protect my family without a union?"

The worker has to ask himself: "Can I expect to be treated with dignity and respect without a union?"

THE WORKER has to come to believe that the union, the brotherhood of workers, is not only a weapon to win wages and settle grievances, but is also an institution dedicated to the welfare of all men and women, all across this country and the world. In other words, before he can really be called a union man, the worker has to do a considerable amount of thinking.

Thinking is not always a quick process. We don't come to real basic principles by just reading them in a book. I believe that is why sometimes the work of organizers does not show its result for a matter of many years. That is why I believe there is no such thing as a lost strike, or a lost organizing campaign.

In the South, right now, our unions are organizing plants where we have carried on as many as three and four campaigns without immediate results. But we have left behind us there, with each attempt, a group of workers thinking about their future, thinking about the lessons of the trade union movement.

It may go more slowly than we wish, but we are seeing the fruits of all that labor and all those sleepless nights and struggles. And I believe we are building strong unions of convinced workers.

I REALLY DON'T understand what people mean by a "climate" for organizing. If the union is right today, it is right tomorrow and any day.

What we have to guard against is not that the "climate" is right or wrong so far as workers are concerned, but that we don't let ourselves grow weary or falter in our efforts, and that we don't seek short gains in the place of real progress.

We should seek new techniques and methods every day, but we should never forget that unions are made of human beings, and that inside a worker there is only one real desire that he needs to express—through his union, if need be.

That is his desire to make his way for himself and his family with dignity, in some security, and in such a manner as to bring a measure of the good things of life, both material and spiritual.

New England Mill Backs TWUA On Wage Minimum

ONE MILL-owner has joined the CIO Textile Workers' fight for a $1.20 Walsh-Healey Law minimum wage for the woolen and worsted industry, North and South.

Hayward-Schuster Woolen Mills of East Douglas, Mass., has asked a federal court in Washington to let it intervene in support of the right of Sec. of Labor Mitchell to set an industry-wide minimum for mills which get government orders.

Early in May an injunction was granted by a Washington judge to 36 woolen and worsted mills that blocked institution of the $1.20 rate. These firms argued that the U. S. cannot determine a single nationwide minimum but only prescribe minimums for different localities.

AN ARBITRATOR last week ruled that 1400 TWUA members at Botany Mills, Passaic, N. J., should take a 9.5c an hour wage cut. The company had asked for a 16.5c slash in wages.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve blamed "lack of imagination—even lack of interest" on the part of the federal government for the economic decline of the woolen and worsted industry.

"A whole industry is crumbling away," Rieve said, "depriving thousands of workers of their livelihood, without a finger being raised by any responsible party."

Steel Strike Aid Urged

FINANCIAL support for striking CIO Steelworkers at the South Beloit plant of the Besly-Welles Co. has been requested by the Wisconsin State CIO Council.

USA-CIO Dist. 32 Dir. Walter Burke said the strike "is the most vicious experienced by any local union in the district since 1937." Local 2394 walked out Apr. 16 after contract negotiations broke down. The firm has been under contract since 1943.

Since the strike began the company has refused to bargain, tried a back-to-work movement, attempted formation of a company union and employed a bagful of legal tricks to obtain injunctions.

Detroit Hit As Hudson Shifts Work

DETROIT, staggering under the impact of mass unemployment, received a further blow last week when the American Motors Corp. announced that Hudson assembly and body-building operations were being moved to Nash plants at Milwaukee and Kenosha, Wisc.

The CIO Auto Workers immediately moved in to protect the rights of the 4600 workers whose livelihood will be affected by the move—many of them employes with high seniority. There appeared little likelihood that they will be able to follow the jobs to Wisconsin save in a few special cases.

The rest of the present Hudson force, a total of 8600, will remain on the firm's Detroit payroll. They will build engines and other parts, do service parts operations, and engage in defense work—plus whatever additional work the company is able to line up for them.

The jobs of the 7000 employes who have been laid off in the last year appeared gone forever.

AMERICAN MOTORS is the new firm formed by the recent merger of Hudson and Nash, which are now its separate divisions.

The transfer of operations will take place gradually and will be fully effective when work begins on Hudson's 1955 models, in about six months.

"The only thing we can do is to fight for the best possible deal for Hudson workers," said Claude Bland, recording secretary of UAW-CIO Local 154.

"Those that have continued on auto production have worked only 52 days this year—10 in January, six in February and 12 each in March, April and May. So you can see this thing is hitting workers who didn't have many pork chops on the table to begin with."

William E. Solenderger, UAW-CIO social security consultant, said the 600 pensioned Hudson workers and those eligible for retirement will be assured of their pensions.

"The plan is funded, so there's more than enough to take care of them," he explained.

THE WORKERS were told of the shift by personal letter after company officers had conferred with UAW-CIO officials, including Pres. Walter P. Reuther, and officers of the different locals affected. Reuther made no comment after the meeting.

The UAW-CIO had bad news about jobs from another part of the country, too. The Chrysler Corp. announced that its Dodge plant at San Leandro, Calif., a $15 million postwar construction plant, will be closed because of a "strongly competitive market." About 1600 of the 2700 employes, members of Local 884, will be affected, as well as another 1000 laid off within the past few months.

However, at Evansville, Ind., Chrysler recalled 440 UAW-CIO members to two plants after posting a 22% increase in production.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

McCreedy Succeeds Scholle As CIO Region 7 Director

APPOINTMENT OF Herbert McCreedy, a veteran in CIO activities, as director of CIO Region 7 was announced last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

HERBERT McCREEDY

McCreedy, an early member of CIO Auto Workers Local 412, succeeds August Scholle, who had held the regional directorship for several years. Scholle, a member of the CIO Glass Workers, resigned so he could run for reelection as president of the Michigan CIO Council. Under CIO rules, he could not seek the elective office while serving as regional director.

The region is composed of the states of Michigan and Indiana.

"Brother Scholle has served with distinction," Reuther said in announcing McCreedy's appointment.

"He has performed a vaulable service to the CIO from the inception of our organization, and his resignation as regional director to seek reelection to the presidency of the State CIO Council will deprive the CIO of an effective staff person."

Reuther said that arrangements have been made so that Scholle will be available to the CIO for special assignments.

IUE Strikers Reject Philco Offer As 'Strikebreaking'

SOME 8000 striking Philco employes, members of the CIO Electrical Workers, rejected a management offer of a 5c hourly increase by unanimous votes as the strike entered its second month.

Locals 101 and 102 in Philadelphia, where 7500 are out, and Local 701 in Sandusky, O., with 500 on strike, backed IUE-CIO Dist. 1 Pres. Harry Block's denunciation of the proposal as "strikebreaking."

In a statement to the press which was not given to union negotiators, Philco declared it had proposed to the union officers that the strikers take a secret vote, conducted by an outside agency, on the 5c offer.

Block said the company had no moral right to make such a proposal unless it was prepared to pledge in advance that it would abide by whatever increase the workers said was fair if they voted down the nickel.

Block said the current Philco average wage of $1.61 an hour is far behind the industry average and that the Sandusky plant trails even that figure with an average of $1.54.

Philco claimed its 5c proposal was "fair" in the light of what other employers were doing. Block said, however, that the recent IUE-CIO settlement with RCA was based on 5c to 15c an hour, averaging 9c.

HE CLAIMED that Philco workers deserved more, both in the light of company profits and because the employes got no wage increase in 1953 while the industry pattern was 7c-8c.

"Philco owes us between 4.5c and 5c for 1953," Block said, "and on top of that it owes us at least the industry pattern as it is developing in 1954 bargaining."

URW Sets Big Four Contract Talks For 108,000 Workers

SCHEDULES for contract talks with the Big Four rubber companies to negotiate new agreements covering 108,500 employes have been announced by Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers.

The union's major objectives are a substantial wage increase, the guaranteed annual wage and "adjustment of inter and intra plant inequities."

Goodyear negotiations, after a recess, will resume on June 22 in Cincinnati. Ten plants employing 30,000 are located in Akron and St. Mary's, O., Los Angeles, Muncie, Ind., New Bedford, Mass., Topeka, Kans., Jackson, Mich., Windsor, Vt., Gadsden, Ala., and Lincoln, Neb.

Goodrich talks, which began May 25 at Cincinnati, cover 18,000 employes in nine plants. They are located at Akron and Marion, O., Tuscaloosa, Ala., Miami, Okla., Cadillac, Mich., Oaks, Pa., Los Angeles, Clarksville, Tenn., and Riverside, N. J.

Firestone-URW discussions will begin June 16 at Cleveland. Some 25,500 workers are involved at eight plants in Akron, O., Los Angeles, Memphis, Tenn., Des Moines, Ia., Noblesville and New Castle, Ind., Fall River, Mass., and Pottstown, Pa.

CONTRACTS covering 19 U. S. Rubber plants employing 35,000 will be the subject of negotiations starting June 22 in New York City. The plants are located at Detroit, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Providence, Woonsocket and Bristol, R. I., Indianapolis, Ft. Wayne, Misawaka and Washington, Ind., Chicago, Chicopee Falls, Mass., Eau Claire, Wis., Naugatuck, Conn. (3 plants), Passaic and North Bergen, N. J., and Milan, Tenn.

The URW also announced the appointment of Joseph B. Emmons as Director of the union's District 1 to replace R. C. Murray, who resigned.

People Of The Valley Voice TVA Backing

By MILTON PLUMB

THE HOOVER Commission Task Force on Water Resources and Power—many of whose members are on record as opposing TVA—"learned a thing or two" last week from the people of the Tennessee Valley at hearings in Chattanooga.

As expected, virtually all private power companies in the states served by TVA turned out to attack the Tennessee Valley Authority as "socialism" and demand that they be given exclusive rights to sell power in the area.

But the people of the valley swamped the Task Force with their protests against private company "propaganda." When the hearings were over, there was no room for doubt that the people of the region are overwhelmingly—and unchangingly—behind the TVA program.

Speaking for the CIO, Paul R. Christopher, director of Region 4, rejected as "totally false" what he called "the present Administration's repetition of the long-discredited charge of the private power companies' progaganda lobby that the TVA is socialism."

"The more than six million men and women in our organization see in the TVA a philosophy and ideal that we can embrace with wholehearted enthusiasm, not only as it applies to the valley of the Tennessee River but to the general development of our power and water resources throughout the entire nation," Christopher said.

POINTING OUT that the TVA program is carried out in partnership with state and local agencies, he declared:

"If the Administration is really sincere in its announced philosophy of wishing to turn the development of power over to local agencies, it should have no quarrel with TVA—which has carried this principle of federal administration in partnership with local agencies farther than any previous federal activity."

Christopher said that the "lesson" the example of TVA could teach is that "dams cannot be built for purposes of either water control or power without also vitally affecting such other factors as navigation, flood control, malaria control, recreation, stream sanitation, fishing, forestry, agriculture and industry."

Eisenhower Administration power policies were criticized as retarding the development of needed sources of power. Christopher warned that "every reduction in power potential which takes place, such as for example the recent cuts in appropriations for TVA, will curtail the future growth of American industry and employment."

"Organized labor's concern here is thus immediate and vital," he said. "The simple facts are that, in the face of our growing population and the need to increase the gross national product, any delay in developing our power potential points directly to job curtailment and ultimate economic disaster."

Christopher pointed out that in the first sessions, the Eisenhower Administration and the Republican 83rd Congress "acted directly to seriously curtail the nation's future power supply from hydroelectric sites." He said that out of a total of 22 Army Corps of Engineers power projects, three had been totally eliminated and the other 19 "slowed up" seriously by appropriations cuts of 34%.

"The reduction in funds will delay by years the delivery of power that is already needed to meet shortages," he charged.

Reflecting the strong support of the TVA by the people living in the region, many prominent political leaders appeared to back its program and condemn statements by members of the Task Force attacking it. That leading political opponents stood side by side on this issue indicated that GOP attacks on TVA may be a thorn to Republican political prospects in the region for many years.

Among those appearing in support of TVA, for example, were Tennessee Gov. Frank G. Clement and his opponent in this year's gubernatorial race, former Gov. Gordon Browning, who both gave the valley development their unqualified support. And "Big Jim" Folsom, recent victor in the Democratic primary for governor of Alabama, told the Task Force he was there to help Clement "fight the battles of TVA."

ALTHOUGH Gov. Lawrence Wetherby of Kentucky was unable to appear personally, he filed a statement with the Task Force making clear his support of the TVA program.

The Chattanooga hearings were the third in a series of five scheduled throughout the country. Spokesmen for the CIO viewpoint are also scheduled to appear at subsequent hearings in New York on June 14 and 15 and in Portland, Ore. on June 28 and 29.

The Task Force is one of several similar units set up by the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch to look into federal administrative practices and functions and recommend economies.

The Commission is headed by former Pres. Hoover. Admiral Ben Moreell, chairman of the board of the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., is chairman of the water and power task force.

"SAVE TVA"—That's the refrain that witnesses before the Hoover Commission's Water and Power Task Force kept repeating last week in Chattanooga. CIO Reg. Dir. Paul R. Christopher (left) charged the GOP Administration with "moving backward against expanding resource and power development." At right, Tennessee Gov. Frank Clement (D.) defended TVA as "typically American and democratic."

Ike's TVA Stand Rapped

Pres. Eisenhower was strongly criticized by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) for having departed from the "spirit, the letter and the clear intent of the TVA Act" in failing to reappoint Gordon R. Clapp as chairman.

Hill said the President ignored requests that he talk personally with Clapp before deciding whether to reappoint him "and all the while the Washington lobbyist for the power monopoly was freely predicting that Clapp would not be reappointed."

"Failure to reappoint Clapp is a clear reflection of the change in the President's feeling about TVA," Hill said.

L-9

Senate Votes Tin Smelter Operation

THE SENATE approved by a voice vote a resolution calling for continued operation of the government-owned tin smelter at Texas City, Tex., for another year.

The resolution, sponsored by Sen. Johnson (D. Tex.), now goes to the House. It states that meanwhile a congressional inquiry will be made into the advisability of establishing a permanent domestic tin smelting industry. Johnson guided it through an Armed Services Subcommittee and on the Senate floor.

Retention of the smelter, the only one in the western hemisphere which can treat low grade Bolivian ore, had been urged by Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers. About 800 OWIU-CIO members work in the plant.

Knight called the closing, advocated by the Eisenhower Administration, "short-sighted economy" and said the smelter was a "sound investment" in security. He noted that in case of war in the Far East the sole tin supplier to the U. S. would be Bolivia.

Chairman Malone (R. Nev.) of the Senate subcommittee opposed any attempt to close or "wreck" the smelter.

A State Dept. spokesman said the Administration's decision to close the smelter was "carefully considered" because the government would be "in competition with private suppliers."

'Give 'Em Fair Trial And Then Hang 'Em' Guides Hearing, TVA Supporters Charge

MEMBERS of the Hoover Commission Task Force walked into a hornets' nest of an aroused citizenry in Chattanooga. For the first time in the current series of hearings, they heard both their qualifications and motives challenged face to face.

This mood confronted the Task Force from the outset, when Gov. Frank Clement, leading off the list of 57 witnesses, said:

"We have a realistic notion of the viewpoint and prejudices of the members of this board."

Mayor George R. Dempster of Knoxville, appearing as president of Citizens for TVA, was even more blunt. Reading a long series of attacks on public power by members of the Task Force, he said the fact that they were now sitting as judges of the TVA program reminded him of the county judge who, when asked what he was planning to do to a certain defendant, replied:

"I'm going to give him a fair trial and then hang him."

Task Force Chairman Ben Moreell, in the face of these and similar protests, read into the record a statement that "I was the one who proposed the names of the members of this Task Force to Mr. Hoover."

He said that he had not taken into account their previous views on the power controversy, but had insisted that the men he chose be leaders in the community, have integrity, be in sympathy with the commission's objectives to "effect economies" in government, and "have an open mind." He maintained they were all ready to be convinced.

Clement, too, detailed the anti-public power record of 11 Task Force members, including Moreell.

"We are mindful of the fact that the Hon. Herbert Hoover, who heads the Commission, vetoed one of the early TVA bills when he was President," Clement said.

Clement said that "insofar as we have been able to discover," not one member of the Task Force has expressed "either an understanding of, or a sympathy for, public power as a competitive force in the field of private electric utility monopoly."

Despite these attacks, Moreell presided over the hearings in a way that allowed complete freedom of speech for TVA advocates.

REA Fund Boost Won By Democrats

SENATE Democrats won a fight to add $35 million to the proposed loan authority for the Rural Electrification Administration after charging the Administration with trying to "sabotage" REA.

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) offered the amendment to the Agriculture Dept. appropriations bill boosting the authorization from the $100 million approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee. The Administration had asked for only $55 million.

The vote was 42 to 40 to hike the appropriation to $135 million, the same figure as last fiscal year. There were 35 Democrats, six Republicans and Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) voting for the amendment. Only three Democrats voted with the Republicans against it.

During the heated debate, Douglas charged that REA officials had been guilty of "tacit sabotage" against REA cooperatives. He said REA Administrator Ancher Nelsen, an Eisenhower appointee, has shown himself as "unfriendly" to farm cooperatives seeking REA loans.

Though electricity has now been carried to most farms, the bigger REA loans are needed to meet increasing power demands and to give REA cooperatives a "bargaining weapon" to get lower rates from power companies, Douglas said.

Tear Gas Town (See Pages 6 and 7)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., June 14, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 24

CIO, AFL Set No-Raid Pact

—See Page 3

An Historic Day For American Labor A major step toward unity in the American labor movement was taken last week when CIO and AFL ratified the No-Raiding Agreement at a meeting in Washington. Shown at the ceremony are (left to right) AFL Pres. George Meany, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. The pact represents agreement by 29 of the CIO's 33 unions and 65 of the AFL's 111 organizations not to pirate each other's members. (See story on Page 3.)

Ladies' Day On The Picket Line Singing union songs, more than 2000 women and children walk the picket line at the Kohler Co. plant in Sheboygan, Wis., where Local 833 of the CIO Auto Workers has been on strike 11 weeks. Many of the women are members of the UAW-CIO Women's Auxiliary 316, which has more than doubled in size during the walkout and has played a leading role in keeping the strikers' morale high. The auxiliary members have shouldered many strike chores. (See Pages 6 and 7.)

Stop Stalling On Layoffs, Reuther Warns

THE CIO demanded last week that the Eisenhower Administration stop sitting "complacently on the sidelines shirking its responsibilities under the Employment Act of 1946."

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther pointed to the highest postwar unemployment figures for May and warned "it is time to abandon dangerous wishful thinking."

"Continuing unemployment in the face of the unfilled needs of the American people for decent housing, for adequate schools, for hospitals and for other necessities is economically insane and morally wrong," Reuther declared.

He said the Administration "shirked" while "millions of workers remain unemployed and other millions live in fear of joining those who are already jobless."

MEANWHILE, new optimistic forecasts and predictions came from Dr. Arthur F. Burns, chief economic adviser to Pres. Eisenhower. Burns, in his first press conference since taking on his job a year and a half ago, said there are prospects of "an early upturn in business activity."

At the same time, he conceded that four million people may be unemployed by July but expressed doubt that the number would reach 4.5 million.

Reuther demanded again that the Republican Administration "step up to its responsibilities under the Employment Act by taking steps to increase mass purchasing power and employment."

"Specifically," he said, "we urge increases in income tax exemptions, unemployment compensation benefits and duration, and minimum wages, and a quick start on volume construction of urgently needed homes, hospitals, schools, highways and other public works."

Unemployment can no longer be brushed off as an isolated local problem, Reuther said. He cited the Labor Dept. classification of 127 localities as areas of substantial labor surplus in May 1954 compared to only 34 in May 1953.

He said the increase in employment figures for May in large part reflected the upturn in seasonal farm work and the return to farms of people who abandoned hope of getting jobs in cities.

Reuther also noted that the official unemployment figures did not include 2.4 million workers involuntarily on short workweeks in May and a 36% increase between April and May of those on temporary layoff.

"FULL EMPLOYMENT in peacetime is possible, practicable and imperative," Reuther said.

Burns' self-styled "chronic optimism" was based on signs of depleted inventories, recovery in consumer buying and expectations of continued government spending at very high levels. He also said a boom in construction was encouraging.

(Housing construction is going no faster than last year and at no better pace than the average of the last five years.)

Burns' forecast of four million jobless by July was made just before he said any unemployment over two or 2.5 million is something "to be taken very seriously by the government and the country."

He said that if business failed to take a definite upturn in the near future and remained at present levels for five or six months, he would be worried and the government should take some serious steps.

What The New Figures Show—

A less-than-seasonal gain in employment was reported last week. Here are highlights of U. S. Labor Dept. and Commerce Dept. reports:

UNEMPLOYMENT in May was the highest figure for that month since World War II. It totalled 3,305,000, more than double the total a year ago.

BASIC FACTORY production and employment are still going down. In May factory employment dropped by 193,000 from the previous month.

SEASONAL expansion of farm and construction employment was reflected in a gain in total employment figures. Total employment was 61.1 million, up 500,000 in a month, but below figures for previous years. And the May decline of 160,000 unemployed, the government noted, was "smaller than usually occurs at this time of year."

MORE FACTORY cities are moving onto the list of critical unemployment areas. Seventeen more areas—including Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Buffalo and Grand Rapids—were added to the list of areas with 6% or more of the labor force unemployed. There now are 124 such areas.

PERSONAL INCOME and earnings of Americans are declining. On an annual rate basis, the April figure was $900 million below March. Man-hours of work dropped in 10 out of 11 major durable goods industries and in seven of 10 non-durable industries.

Prospect

Another sharp increase in unemployment in Michigan is predicted as the auto industry shuts down for annual model changes.

From the present state total of 208,000, the jobless figure may climb to 300,000, according to a warning to Gov. G. Mennen Williams' Emergency Industrial Production Commission.

Unemployment in Detroit itself, now at 132,000, may go as high as 200,000, it was predicted.

In Detroit, some 3000 workers each week are exhausting unemployment compensation benefits, sending relief rolls climbing. Welfare applications are up 700% over a year ago, and another $250,000 has been asked to aid destitute families.

Jobless Pay Standards Fight Carried To Congress By CIO

THE FIGHT of the CIO on behalf of the Forand Bill to improve federal unemployment compensation standards was carried directly to Congress last week.

1. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wired the 81 House members who co-sponsored the measure introduced by Rep. Forand (D.-R. I.), urging that they testify in its favor at hearings under way before the House Ways and Means Committee.

2. CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, appearing before the same committee, asked that "you set federal minimum standards for benefits, for duration and for disqualification, and that you adopt the other provisions in the Forand Bill."

In his telegram to the 81 representatives, Reuther pointed out that "unemployment continues at high level while work-week and earnings shrink for those still employed."

"We urge you as a co-sponsor . . . to appear in those hearings in support of HR 9430 (the Forand Bill) because it will strengthen purchasing power to the extent of $2 billion a year, is vital in fighting and reversing the drift from readjustment to recession to depression," he said.

CAREY TOLD the committee that it is not enough to cover more workers or make the other changes proposed by the Eisenhower Administration and incorporated in a bill sponsored by Rep. Reed (R. N.Y.), the committee chairman—even though "the expressed intention of this measure is good."

"The Reed Bill would do nothing for the great majority of American workers," he said bluntly.

No Change

The great big spots on that industrial leopard, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, haven't changed a bit, a spokesman made clear before the House Ways and Means Committee last week.

The C. of C. representative, Frank B. Cliffe, Pittsburgh, vice president of the H. J. Heinz Co., urged the committee to turn down Pres. Eisenhower's request that unemployment compensation coverage be extended to protect virtually all workers.

"The Administration has recommended substantial improvement in the protection afforded but says, 'Congress need not act—let the states do it.' Only three states have raised maximum benefits since Pres. Eisenhower urged them to do so last January.

"ONLY three state legislatures are still in session. The rest will not meet again until next year.

"It is your responsibility to improve unemployment benefits just as surely as it was the responsibility of Congress in 1935 to enact the social security law which brought the federal-state system of unemployment compensation into existence."

Carey said the Administration may continue to wait on the states to act, but meantime about 40,000 workers are exhausting their benefits each week and more than two million employes are continuing to receive them. The average payment, he added, is less than $25 a week.

"Are you going to say to those people, 'Let's see what the states may do next winter?'" he demanded.

"If the members of Congress want to go home without doing anything for these unemployed people, in the face of these facts, we will do what is necessary to help place responsibility and secure remedy."

In a brief analysis of the Forand Bill, Carey showed that it would raise weekly benefits to most jobless workers in most states by $10 to $20 by setting the maximum primary benefit at no less than two-thirds of the state's average weekly wage.

The bill also would make benefits payable for at least 39 weeks compared to a present maximum of 26 weeks established in only three states, he said, and would ease many "oversevere" disqualification provisions that some states have set.

"Every dollar thus paid out would promptly swell lagging buying power and thus help maintain economic production," he added. "Such money is not lost to the Treasury. Higher incomes mean higher tax collections, too."

CAREY RIDICULED employers who claim wage earners "will not have an incentive to work" if they get more than a $25 weekly average when they cannot find jobs.

"This is nonsense," he declared. "The majority of CIO members have definite seniority rights. If the company for which they worked calls them back, they must go or forfeit their rights.

"The incentive that is lacking in our society is the incentive for management to provide steady jobs in ever-growing numbers. We want jobs, not pay for idleness."

The Senate's Tax Bill—

Favors For The Few And More Swats At Labor

MORE TAX favors for the wealthy and a new swat at workers' wallets are contained in the Administration's tax bill tentatively approved last week by the Senate Finance Committee.

The committee will take a final look at the bill, almost identical with the House-passed version, on June 18 but few, if any, changes are likely before it is debated a few days later.

Here are the highlights of provisions voted last week:

1. Tax relief for holders of corporation stocks, earnestly recommended by the Eisenhower Administration, was approved by a 9-4 committee vote with one Senator abstaining. The GOP maintains that easing taxation on stock dividends will spur investment and encourage plant expansion. Almost $1 billion in tax relief would be afforded wealthy families.

2. The committee gave workers no such consideration. A new gimmick aimed at low-income groups proposes taxation of sickness and accident benefits when these are received as compensation for loss of wages. Such benefits are not now taxed and the House measure does not carry this provision.

CIO voiced an immediate protest against the latest assault on workers' incomes. Pres. Walter P. Reuther in telegrams to the Senate Committee members urged reconsideration of their action.

He warned that to take 20% "out of these small sickness and accident payments to millions of American workers . . . will adversely affect the stability of collective bargaining agreements with many thousands of employers."

As expected, the committee took no action on the proposal of Sen. George (D. Ga.) that personal exemptions be raised to $800 this year and $1000 next year. CIO endorses the George Amendment as a means of aiding the U. S. economy through higher purchasing power. Action on this amendment is expected when floor debate starts.

House Raises Labor, Health Funds For '55

SOME CUTS made by the Appropriations Committee in fiscal 1955 funds for the Labor and Health, Education, Welfare Depts. were restored when the $1,970,378,761 appropriations bill was approved by the House last week.

By a vote of 139 to 56 the House restored a $10 million slash in federal aid for hospital construction thus meeting Pres. Eisenhower's $75 million request.

In all changes, an additional $5,093,500 was tacked on to the bill. Chief among these were moves by Reps. Abbitt (D. Va.) and Fogarty (D. R.I.) to up vocational education funds by better than $3 million and appropriations for vocational rehabilitation by $2 million.

BEFORE the vote, Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, had sent congressmen a telegram warning that "important functions of Labor Dept. are again being threatened by slashed appropriations recommendations."

Labor Gains Seen Under No-Raid Pact

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A SOLID foundation for peace in the American labor movement and ultimate unity of its two major branches was laid on June 9 when top officers of the CIO and AFL ratified the long-pending No-Raiding Agreement in Washington.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther signed on behalf of 29 CIO unions which had authorized him to do so in writing. Pres. George Meany, likewise armed with authorizations, signed on behalf of 65 of the 111 AFL unions. The agreement became effective upon signing and will expire Dec. 31, 1955.

The unions which authorized signing of the peace pact represent between 10 and 10.5 million of the estimated 16 million organized American workers.

Reuther told a press conference that the CIO signed on behalf of between four and 4.5 million of its members. All but four internationals had authorized him to act on their behalf—the Steelworkers, Lithographers, Newspaper Guild and Shipbuilders being the exceptions. He predicted the Newspaper Guild would sign soon.

Cole Is Umpire

Immediately upon signing the agreement, Reuther and Meany announced the appointment of David L. Cole, one of the country's outstanding arbitrators and a former director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, as impartial umpire.

Calling the occasion "an historic day for American labor," Reuther and Meany in a joint statement said:

"This agreement represents a cease-fire. During the truce, the joint AFL-CIO Unity Committee will go to work on the manifold problems involved in bringing about a merger of the two major labor federations into a single, united labor movement . . .

"We are confident that this goal, so beneficial to the workers we represent and to the nation as a whole, can be accomplished before the truce expires.

"Our confidence is based upon the expectation that the successful operation of the no-raiding agreement will usher in an era of good feeling and cooperation in the labor movement; that the signatory unions will gain substantial benefits from the cessation of hostilities, and that they never again will want to go back to fighting and raiding each other."

CEASE-FIRE pact in internecine warfare of American labor, the long-awaited No-Raiding Agreement between CIO and AFL, became effective on ratification June 9. Seen (left) in final check of details are AFL Pres. George Meany (left) and CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther. Members of AFL-CIO Unity Committee who attended the ceremony are at right.

A subcommittee of the AFL-CIO Unity Committee, headed by the respective presidents, was set up to persuade non-signing unions to agree to the terms. It also will work on long-range unity problems.

"Our next step," Meany explained, "is to implement this agreement. Some AFL unions which have not acted are waiting on board meetings or conventions. Some have not signed because they are in what they believe are difficulties. The subcommittee will try and work out these differences."

Major AFL holdouts were the Teamsters and the Carpenters.

The two presidents said that "the over-all job of the committee, of course, is labor unity." They expressed confidence that they can get the non-signers to act.

"I'm confident that the soundness of what we are doing will be so demonstrated," Reuther said, "that in due time a large number of the unions which have not signed will see the wisdom of doing so.

"This is the most important single step in history toward working out the differences in the labor movement. I think that people will look back on this day 10 or 20 years from now as an historic occasion."

The subcommittee will meet frequently during the summer to consider problems involved in inducing additional unions to sign, the presidents said. The full AFL-CIO Unity Committee will try to meet early in October, after most union conventions have been held, to ponder the next step toward merger—a step which Reuther said will be made easier by the "kind of climate" established by the No-Raiding Agreement.

Questioning by reporters about possible violations of the agreement and Cole's role as impartial umpire disclosed that under the pact, a local union which feels the agreement has been violated by a local or international in the other national center complains to the secretary-treasurer of his own center. The two secretary-treasurers then will attempt to resolve the issue.

Based On Good Faith

If they fail, it will be laid before Cole—not for a determination of jurisdictional lines, but for a decision, on the basis of the facts, as to whether or not the accused union is guilty as charged. Each signing union has pledged itself to cease violating the pact if it is found to be doing so. There is no procedure for bringing persistent violators into line.

"This document is worth no more than the good faith of the signatories," explained Meany, "and I've complete confidence in that."

Reuther and Meany explained the agreement was signed to expire Dec. 31, 1955, so as to give the two federations and the unions involved a chance to live under it. The experience, they predicted, will prove beneficial enough so that there will be no question of its renewal.

The No-Raiding Agreement

(Continued on Page 10)

Cole Is Named As Pact Umpire

APPOINTMENT of David L. Cole, former director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, as impartial umpire under the CIO-AFL No-Raiding Agreement was announced by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany upon signing of the compact.

"Cole is one of the country's leading experts on labor-management relations," the two presidents said in a joint announcement.

"His long record of service to government in the realm of labor-management relations, and his service as impartial arbitrator for a number of unions and industries, has been recognized as outstanding.

"The unions of the AFL and CIO can be certain that with Cole serving as the impartial arbitrator of their No-Raiding Agreement, they are assured of a sympathetic understanding of their problems and needs, and fair and honest decisions on the cases that may come before him.

"On our part, we pledge to Cole our complete cooperation in seeking to make the No-Raiding Agreement a complete and permanent success—for the benefit of organized labor and the nation as a whole."

Cole has been active in labor relations since he began practising law in Paterson, N. J., in 1926. He has served as chairman of the New Jersey State Board of Mediation and on a World War II Regional War Labor Board, as well as on many presidential boards in labor disputes.

DAVID L. COLE
Named no-raid umpire

No-Raid Text: 'This Cease-Fire Is Practical Approach To Unity'

Following is the text of the statement issued by the AFL-CIO Unity Committee upon ratification of the No-Raiding Agreement by a majority of affiliates of both organizations:

THIS IS an historic day for American labor. The first constructive step toward labor peace and a united labor movement since 1936 has been taken here this afternoon.

Sixty-five unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and 29 affiliated with the Congress of Industrial Organizations have signed a two-year no-raiding agreement.

This agreement represents a cease-fire. During the two-year truce, the joint AFL-CIO Unity Committee will go to work on the manifold problems involved in bringing about a merger of the two major labor federations into a single, united labor movement.

Some of these problems are relatively simple. Others are extremely intricate and difficult, because of jurisdictional overlapping, long-standing animosities and structual differences in the various industries and unions affected. All such obstacles, however, can and should be overcome, by negotiation in good faith and a common determination to achieve labor unity.

We are confident that this goal, so beneficial to the workers we represent and to the nation as a whole, can be accomplished before the truce expires.

Our confidence is based upon the expectation that the successful operation of the no-raiding agreement will usher in an era of good feeling and cooperation in the labor movement; that the signatory unions will gain substantial benefits from the cessation of hostilities, and that they never again will want to go back to fighting and raiding each other.

We are mindful of the fact that during the past 18 years repeated efforts to heal the breach in the labor movement have ended in failure.

In each instance, continuing hostilities made the task of the peacemakers impossible.

This is a new and more practical approach. For the first time, it permits the negotiation of labor unity in an atmosphere of peace.

The no-raiding agreement signed today remains open for further signatures by unions from both parent organizations. This committee is not disappointed because we do not have 100% subscription to the plan at the outset. We anticipate that virtually every union involved in jurisdictional strife will come in within a reasonable time.

A special subcommittee will proceed at once to attempt to iron out minor differences which at present stand in the way of securing a substantial number of additional signatures to the agreement.

Labor in modern America can no longer afford to be divided. We cannot waste our strength and substance in civil war while the enemies of human progress step up their attack on us on the economic, political and legislative fronts.

Ours is a growing country and labor must grow with it. We have a solemn duty to organize the unorganized, instead of raiding each other's members. The signing of the no-raiding agreement today will permit us to concentrate our energy and our effort on this basic trade-union goal.

The No-Raid Agreement

All of organized labor, and the country as a whole, should benefit tremendously from the ratification of the No-Raiding Agreement by 65 AFL unions and 29 CIO affiliates.

Raiding has proven to be a costly and usually unsuccessful practice.

It has resulted in a net change of only a comparative handful of workers from one union to another. It has been a process costing thousands of dollars. And the general public has had no reason to cheer labor's internal warfare.

As Pres. Meany of the AFL and Pres. Reuther of the CIO pointed out, the no-raiding agreement represents a cease-fire. It also is a symbol of the readiness of the CIO and AFL to compose some of the differences that have separated them during recent years.

During the months ahead, the CIO and AFL Unity Committees will work on the many problems involved in bringing about a merger of the two organizations. It won't be easy, and may be slow. But the No-Raiding Agreement is a practical achievement that should hasten the process.

Maury Maverick

Maury Maverick, former mayor of San Antonio and congressman from Texas, will perhaps be best remembered for his constant war on that particular brand of official language which he called "gobbledygook."

But that was only one of his achievements. As independent as his name implies, he was also a New Dealer who fought for the people's interests against the special interests. He was a fast fighter, and a smart one.

His death last week removes from the ranks of the country's liberals a colorful and a courageous man.

Strike On the Subways?

CIO Transport Workers appear to have been getting a curious run-around in their efforts to carry on peaceful and constructive collective bargaining with the New York Transit Authority—which runs the city-owned subways and elevated lines in the country's biggest metropolis.

The TWU clearly represents the vast majority of the workers. The union has, time and again, appealed for an orderly system of bargaining.

In reply, it has received evasions and legalisms from the Transit Authority.

New York transit workers, and the transit-riding population, would be better off if the Authority got down to the common-sense business of solving problems with the union—instead of multiplying problems by trying to ignore the union.

In its struggle for the worker's rights, the TWU has the support of CIO members everywhere.

Joe's Facts Fall Down

Joe McCarthy's voting record through the years shows him to be an enemy of labor, not its friend. On the great majority of labor bills, he has voted wrong.

So when Joe becomes an "expert" on labor—as he did before the TV cameras last week—he's on unfamiliar ground. He accused Stuart Symington, known as a highly fair and honest employer, when he headed Emerson Electric Co., of making deals with Communists.

It was a lie—as CIO Sec.-Treas. Carey pointed out—and the facts just didn't add up. But that's nothing unusual for Hit-and-Run-Joe.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS

Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII June 14, 1954 No. 24

Forging A New Link

In Other Words—

Some Thoughts On Returning Home

(Chalmers Roberts, Washington Post newsman who also writes the Washington Roundup column for The Guild Reporter, CIO Newspaper Guild paper, recently returned from four months in Europe and the Middle East. Excerpts from a recent column, which he suggests might be titled "Some Thoughts on Returning Home to America," follow.)

By CHALMERS M. ROBERTS

A VISIT to 10 nations and a newspaperman's seat at both the Berlin and the Geneva conferences proved to this reporter beyond any shadow of doubt that the non-Communist world is both wary of what we will do with our muscle and frightened at the state of our mind, the mind which will decide what we will do.

Across the Atlantic and beyond the Mediterranean they do not see the choice as we so loudly proclaim it—for or against communism. Some do, of course. Others are under the spell of Marx and nothing we can do will change them.

But it is the vast middle group that makes the difference and these are the people, the friends, the would-be friends, we are losing or are in peril of losing.

Out Of Pandora's Box

It is the compulsion of time, spurred by the Pandora's box out of which has come the atom, which makes doubly difficult the American problem of how to exercise the world leadership so unwanted by so many of us and yet so unavoidable.

Yet when the enemy forces on us a choice in a strange land of rice paddies and colonialism we cannot decide whether to retaliate in any form. Our friends are afraid we will strike only that massive blow and drive civilization to extinction.

For the truth is that many of our friends are more afraid of us than they are of communism.

The American reaction used to be what might be called the doctrine of major and minor premises. Communism is the major threat to democracy and the major premise in countering it is that communism respects only force—hence, we must be strong of muscle.

The minor premise is that we must work in a positive way to win the uncertain, the unconvinced, the wavering millions.

This is the essence of Point Four in Latin America and Africa and Asia. This is the essence of righting the wrongs in our own house and why the historic Supreme Court unanimous decision against public school segregation will, in the end, be more important to us in our role in the world than anything we have done since assuming our position of leadership.

Half The Job

Yet much we have done of late has been concerned only with the major premise and has neglected the minor premise. Arms for Arab nations more angered at the Jew than the Communist. Public clamor by leaders who demand that Asian nations choose sides between Washington and Moscow. Talk of preventive war and that we can afford no more Koreas. Disgust at the snail's pace of the United Nations. Wrath at seeming contrary stands by our allies and calls for cutting off aid to those who will not toe our line.

Coming back to America to find one's homeland entranced by a sordid quarrel before the television cameras is not a happy homecoming. Yet, if it serves to begin the end of McCarthyism, of man's suspicion of his neighbor, of forced compliance to false standards, it will have been worth the public humiliation we have suffered in every land this side of the borders of Communist despotism.

We must face up to our position in the world. We cannot find an alibi, as so many of us are doing, in a decision by the British or the lack of a decision by the French. We cannot operate on a theory of all or nothing, of "you're with us or you're against us," of go-it-alone or of do-it-alone.

We much cleanse our democracy at home and practice it abroad.

It is easy to be mawkish as the returning voyager glimpses the Goddess of Liberty in the morning sunlight. Yet we must recapture what she stands for, what the lilting words of "Oklahoma!" and "America the Beautiful" mean to us, what history says our destiny can surely be.

And we must do it now.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

MOST OF OUR PEOPLE do not know it, but the Eisenhower Administration has twice been on the brink of direct American intervention in the Indo-Chinese war.

The White House won't confirm it, the State Dept. refuses to talk about it, but in the newspapers there have been two stories that, on the circumstantial evidence and in the absence of direct denial, are highly persuasive.

How Close To War In Asia?

Chalmers Roberts of the Washington Post, in a copyrighted report, said that the second plan called for Pres. Eisenhower to go before Congress on Apr. 26, demand the power of intervention, and send American carrier and land-based bombers to strike at Ho Chi Minh's Vietnamese rebels outside Dien Bien Phu on Apr. 28.

Columnists Joseph and Stuart Alsop, whose sources in this town are excellent, wrote a little earlier that the plan advanced by Adm. Radford, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, called for the use of atomic weapons against the massed anti-French forces.

The Alsops did not cite any source for their story, but there is nothing in Radford's background and character that makes it improbable. The admiral is known to be an all-out advocate of a China blockade and a pushing American military policy in Asia.

Roberts cited numerous instances of White House conferences with key congressmen, with the names of people present, giving an extraordinary amount of detail. If even one alleged detail had been inaccurate, some congressmen would have screamed a denial—but there have been no denials.

These are shocking stories—not because the Eisenhower Administration was seriously considering the intrusion of American force in Indo-China but because the policy line was short-sighted and because the President, apparently, spent his time in "agonizing reappraisals" rather than in making firm decisions that he could take to the people.

Let us get the issue perfectly clear: Pres. Eisenhower, who rode into power partly because he exploited the people's weariness with "Truman's war" in Korea, was almost persuaded in April to plunge into a far more desperate war in Indo-China, where the simple issue of aggresison was much less clear. It is still suggested, by Republican leaders, that we may go to war within 30 days.

That Unhappy Land—

This reporter is not going to argue that a President who tries to take the nation into war is necessarily wrong.

Wilson and Roosevelt were right, in World Wars I and II, in carefully teaching the nation that we could not safely allow the collapse of Britain and France across the Atlantic.

Indo-China is different.

The war in that unhappy land is, fundamentally a colonial war, in which the majority of the people—it is apparent and unfortunate—seem to sympathize with Ho Chi Minh, the Communist and Nationalist leader, rather than with the French.

It is freely speculated, by many non-Communist observers, that in the event of a free and honest election, Ho Chi Minh would be chosen as Vietnam Chief of State—and that the French-appointed leader, Bao Dai, who at present is lolling on the Mediterranean coast, would be overwhelmingly defeated.

We have had a babble of doubletalk from Vice-Pres. Nixon, Sen. Knowland, Sec. Dulles, and sundry other figures, about what we could or should do with ground forces or atomic devices.

The other side of the coin is one that is impressive to some of us—that the French tried to hang on to their "empire," nonsensically, when the British, after World War II, freely gave up their claims to Pakistan and Burma, and the United States gave up the Philippines and gave dominion status to Puerto Rico.

I am mistrustful of the Radford idea that we can handle things in Indo-China, or anywhere else in Asia, by a bombing strike, with or without "little" atomic devices.

The issue in Asia is only secondarily military. It is primarily political, and the politics is the urgency of the people to get rid of the white man's colonial overlordship, French or American.

If Pres. Eisenhower thinks it is his duty to take us to intervention in Indo-China, he should express his reasons plainly and answer our doubts, rather than let military and civil subordinates experiment with alternate shock treatments and frightened withdrawals.

Remembrance Of Things Past

A congressional aide was entranced with memories of the past as right-wing Republicans argued recently that a great expansion of our Social Security system was fraught with danger and ill-considered expenses. So he went back to the Congressional Record for Aug. 12, 1935, when general debate opened on the original Social Security bill.

He found the ranking Republican member of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rep. Treadway of Massachusetts, making just about the same arguments for delay that right-wing Republicans flirted with this year.

Said Treadway in 1935: "The only fair way that old-age assistance and unemployment compensation should be made policies of the federal government is after a disinterested commission, composed not only of college professors, members of the 'brain trust' and New Dealers, but people of experience and judgment, have studied the problems for an indefinite period and reached conclusions that could be recommended to the Congress."

Right-wing Republicans, it can be remembered, despised college professors even in 1935. They also opposed Social Security.

Washington Window—

Economic Decline Adds To Demo Edge In Midterm Congress Races

By Public Affairs Institute

THE MAJOR FACTORS which will influence the 1954 midterm congressional elections point to the return of the Democrats to power, Louis H. Bean, noted political analyst, predicted in a study just released by the Public Affairs Institute.

In the study, "Influences in the 1954 Mid-Term Elections," Bean said that while there are a number of influences, Republican loss of seats will be due largely to two factors which always hurt the party in power:

1. The economic downturn and unemployment; and

2. The normal voter apathy in midterm elections.

Many complex factors influenced elections in the last 100 years, he said. However, he saw the business factor as "consistently dominant." The only possible exception would be in prosperous 1952 where an unusually popular presidential candidate was elected from a party out of power but even then he could pull only a slight majority in Congress.

Economics And Elections

Here is what has happened since 1858 as a result of economic downturns: The Democrats lost control in 1858—a year of depression. They regained it in 1874, after the great financial and industrial crash of 1873. The Republicans took over in 1894 after the financial and industrial collapse of 1893.

Democrats were returned to power after the depression of 1908 but their strength fell with the depression of 1914 and they were finally voted out with the depression of 1920. Following the great boom of the 1920's the great collapse ushered in the vast unemployment of the 1930's.

"When booms turn to busts and full employment turns to unemployment and misery, the party in power—be it Democratic or Republican—is usually turned out," Bean observed.

The second major factor is midterm elections themselves which, Bean declared, "usually mean some sort of setback for the party in power. He explained: "Certain congressional and senatorial seats, won with the help of a Presidential campaign, are endangered in the midterm elections when voter interest flags and when glowing Presidential campaign promises have given way to disappointments."

"Somebody must have been riding Peterson again."

The author reported analysis of 23 midterm elections over a 92-year period, 1854 to 1946. Ten of these elections took place during economic downturns. The party in power lost ground in every one.

Thirteen of the elections took place during rising business activity. The party in power still lost ground in all but one of these elections. The single exception was 1934, when the Roosevelt momentum carried on from 1932.

GOP Is Losing Strength

Public opinion polls since the 1952 election, Bean reported show a substantial number of voters are uncertain how they would vote between Pres. Eisenhower and Adlai Stevenson. "However," he said, "their answers indicate a definite falling off in Republican strength since 1952."

How many seats does Bean expect the Republicans to lose? On the average the party in power has lost 25 to 30 House seats in midterm elections. To this the PAI author would add 20 to 25 more seats as a result of the present economic downturn and unemployment.

The Republicans presently have a margin of only three votes in the House. They can hardly afford to lose any seats if they wish to maintain control.

Vandercook Comments—

Another Sacco-Vanzetti Case

(The decision of the security board against atomic scientist J. Robert Oppenheimer brought the charge from CIO-sponsored Commentator John W. Vandercook that the board was out to "get" Dr. Oppenheimer. Excerpts from the ABC broadcast follow.)

By JOHN W. VANDERCOOK

THE ATOMIC ENERGY Commission—as all executive agencies must—reported to Congress on its accomplishments. The record of those accomplishments, set down in a document running to 108 pages, is formidable.

The timing of that report of the brilliant achievement, of the triumphant success, of the first, the greatest—and certainly until now by the far most advanced program of atomic research and discovery in the world—could scarcely be more ironic.

For the man who did most to lift, by the strong sinews of his mind, the American atomic energy program to the summit it now occupies, has been condemned, perhaps forever, to live in outer darkness. In a kind of limbo, Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer must remain cut off from the work at which he served his country so magnificently and, therefore, may make no further contributions to that work, however much we all may lose by that prohibition.

In these enlightened times we do not burn at the stake those who have once consorted with heretics and have toyed with stupid heretical opinions. We just give them a light going-over with a blow torch so their minds and souls are withered and their reputations are deformed.

To find a parallel to the action of the two members of the AEC personnel security board in barring Oppenheimer from AEC classified information, one has to go back to the Sacco-Vanzetti case. Then, too, good men, men of "standing in their community," sniffed the climate of opinion and cowered before it, instead of heeding the higher dictates of their hearts and heads.

The two specially appointed judges say that they tried not to be swayed either by the opinion that "reason, or fairness and justice, have been abdicated and their places taken by hysteria and repression," nor by the opposite view that "loose and pliable attitudes regarding loyalty and security have prevailed to the danger of our society and its institutions."

That resolve, of course, would be admirable. Did it not lead to this disastrous, this truly incredible conclusion? I quote—fully, and in no way out of context: "Thus, they feel that this proceeding presents the unrelinquishable opportunity for a demonstration against communism, almost regardless of the facts developed about the conduct and sympathies of Dr. Oppenheimer."

Epitaph Of An Era

We shall be lucky if that statement becomes a pitiful curiosity—and not the epitaph of our era.

Dr. Oppenheimer—Mr. Gray and Mr. Morgan tell us—was to be "got." As a gesture against communism, this man was to be offered up for sacrifice "almost regardless of the facts developed" about his conduct and his sympathies—or, that is to say, his guilt or innocence.

That is not a demonstration against communism. It is a demonstration of what is most contemptible about it—it's disregard of the individual; the elevation of the imagined interests of the state over the rights of any of its citizens.

Prof. Ward Evans says, more briefly, "Oppenheimer hates Russia . . . To deny him clearance now for what he was cleared for in 1947, seems to be hardly the procedure to be adopted by a free country . . . I think our failure to clear Dr. Oppenheimer will be a black mark on the escutcheon of our country."

The Kohler Situation: Women Help And So

Tear Gas Use Hinted By Cop

By FRED ROSS

A VIOLENT anti-labor past has caught up with Henry Vollrath Kohler. He is president of Kohler Co., one of the leading manufacturers of bathroom fixtures, where Local 833 of the CIO Auto Workers has been on strike 11 weeks.

Aroused by Kohler's anti-union activities, which span more than a score of years, the Sheboygan, Wis., community of some 50,000 persons is backing the 3300 strikers. The plant is at Kohler Village, a company town near Sheboygan.

On one side are the Local 833 members and the people of Sheboygan and surrounding towns where these workers live.

On the other side are Kohler, his henchmen and a "hard core" of 250 scabs.

Back in 1934, when Kohler was a vice president of the company, he helped the firm's "private army" of plant guards and village police break an AFL union—which culminated in a blood bath that left two dead and 47 wounded.

A company union reigned supreme until 1952, when the workers revolted and voted for the UAW-CIO in a National Labor Relations Board election. Even then Kohler's opposition was so intense several months were required to negotiate an initial agreement.

Basic Contract Issues

And this year Kohler failed to agree to a new contract by the time the old one expired and Local 833 struck.

The strike issue is to bring the contract up to standards of other UAW agreements—on seniority, arbitration, pensions; health, maternity and accident benefits, union security, and pay.

Negotiations were resumed only after Kohler himself revealed the possibility that the company would use tear gas to settle the "labor problems" as it had done in 1934.

He admitted at a hearing before the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board that he had carried a 10-inch club as he went through the picket line. He also boasted there were several hundred clubs and some kind of guns in the plant —and he suspected there also was tear gas.

Kohler's "suspicion" proved true. Sheriff Ted Mosch of Sheboygan County—acting on orders from state authorities after a whitewash probe by Dist. Atty. John Buchen—confiscated 375 rounds of tear gas. Almost half of the projectiles had lethal heads, and there were two riot guns.

They were seized at the Kohler Village police headquarters, where they had been removed from the plant.

WERB members plainly were shocked by Kohler's testimony. They said in an official report:

"With all the legislation on the books today, both state and federal, aimed at protecting not only the rights of employes and employers but the rights of the public as well, it seems inconceivable that in a forward-looking community in a state as progressive as the state of Wisconsin any employer would find it necessary to resort to self help by means of arms, ammunition and tear gas bombs.

"There is no possible justification for an employer today to resort to the use of such means in any strike."

In the face of this stinging criticism, Kohler clung to his favorite weapon. Several days after the gas was confiscated, Kohler Village Police Chief Waldemar Capelle admitted to this reporter there was tear gas at the police headquarters of the company-controlled town.

Still Have Tear Gas

"Sure, we have tear gas as authorized by law," Capelle said.

Local 833 reported in its nightly radio program that a check showed police had no tear gas in two neighboring small towns.

"Wouldn't you rather have us use tear gas that inconveniences a person for a short time than a rifle?" the chief asked.

Local 833 members are confident of winning the strike. As UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther predicted in a speech at recent rally:

"The Kohler management can't win because it is wrong. Kohler management can't win because all the power that money can buy will not match the power of the workers who are united in a righteous cause. And I say the Kohler workers are united in a righteous cause."

The local has limited its pickets at all gates and has abandoned mass picketing to induce management to talk.

The strikers are kept busy by round-the-clock picketing seven days a week. They are fed at the commissary at strike headquarters and on the line.

Strikers also are cheered by statewide union financial support rallied by the Wisconsin CIO Council, which also supplied a sound truck and other services.

When they are not busy with their various strike activities, Local 833 members attend union-provided movies and economic and political discussion meetings. A movie show is put on every Saturday morning for strikers' children.

Auxiliary Is Active

A large share of the credit for the strikers' solidarity should go to UAW Ladies Auxiliary 316, whose president is Mrs. Cora Wieseckel. Her husband is an active picket and she worked at the Kohler plant during World War II.

The auxiliary is approaching the 200-member mark, with more than half of the membership joining since the strike began, she said.

"The jobs done by auxiliary members include helping to keep picket duty books, to get out and distribute the daily strike bulletin, and serving at the strike headquarters kitchen," Mrs. Wieseckel said.

Daily UAW broadcasts and frequent full page ads in the Sheboygan Press have helped rally community support for the strikers.

CIO and AFL unions have given some $10,000, sympathizers $1000, and—per-

SOLIDARITY—Women's Day (left) saw more than 2000 members, wives, children and sweethearts of members of Local 833 of the CIO Auto Workers on the picket line at the Kohler plan polka for fellow pickets. Veterans of '3

MRS. CORA WIESECKEL heads rapidly growing UAW auxiliary.

JAW-JUTTING Herbert Kohler, company head, testifies on weapons.

CONFER—Kohler and Ed Biever, works manager, talk things over.

TEAR-GAS SEIZED—Sheriff Ted Mosch (right) loads Kohler Co. tear gas, while Village Police Chief W. G. Capelle and Dist. Atty. John Buchen watch.

Does Community As UAW Pickets Stand Firm

t. Paul Gaul (center) played a lively
34 strike (right) were on the line again.

The Gals Help

More than 2000 picketed the Kohler plant in a recent Women's Day demonstration. Pickets were the wives and daughters of strikers, many of them members of CIO Auto Workers Auxiliary 316.

Also on the line were friends and children of the strikers—some of whom made paper carnations for their mothers on the line.

haps most remarkable of all—merchants and businessmen $4000.

Four stores are pledged to give $10 to $25 weekly for the duration of the walkout.

A prominent business man summarized why the merchants are supporting the strikers:

"Kohler Co. is a one-man operation whose relations with its workers and the community were never friendly. The union's conduct of the strike has been fair, but two company actions outraged the business community's inherent sense of decency and fair play.

"Before the strike began Kohler Village passed an ordinance designed to limit the use of sound trucks. The business men also were shocked by the company's refusal to cooperate with the union in a three-day no-picketing, no-production truce on Easter weekend proposed by the Sheboygan Ministerial Association."

GUARD'S TOWER (in circle) looms ominously on Kohler plant roof.

'Night Of Terror' In '34 Recalled

"It was truly a night of terror, ghastly terror, the like of which this community has never seen and never hopes to see again.

"The menacing silences, broken by the shrieks of gas shells flying through the air, the cries of wounded and the injured, the horrible threats will stand out vividly in the memories of those who witnessed the frightful happenings of the evening of Friday, July 27, 1934."

Thus a Sheboygan newspaper reported the massacre by 250 plant guards and special Kohler Village police which resulted in the death of two young men and the injury of 47 persons.

AFL Strike Recalled

The tragedy occurred when the police fired rifles and tear gas into a crowd of 5000 consisting of striking members of AFL Federal Labor Union No. 18545 and sympathizers.

Twenty years have passed, but the tactics of the Kohler Co. remain unchanged.

The union was formed in August 1933 to eliminate a long series of grievances. These included charging employes for defective work and laying off occupants of Kohler "model" village for protesting deductions for payments on their homes that took most or all of their pay.

The local voted to strike after long efforts to negotiate which was climaxed by a meeting with Walter J. Kohler, Sr., then president of the Kohler Co.

Herbert V. Kohler, now company president and a half brother of the former president, was then a vice president. Edmond J. Biever, works manager, and Lyman Conger, industrial relations director, are both participating in the current negotiations, and were with the firm in 1934.

Herbert Kohler played a leading role in strike-breaking in first strike, according to Walter J. Uphoff, now on the staff of the University of Wisconsin. He wrote for his master's thesis a story of the earlier strike, which has been issued as a book.

Tear Gas Tossed

On the first day of the strike, Herbert Kohler accompanied Chief of Police Jack Case when the latter pointed a gun at Peter Horn, picket captain, and said:

"In the name of the law, will you let those cars of coal into the plant!" "No, not until you get a permit from our committee," Horn replied.

Case then threw some gas bombs at the pickets to disrupt the line so the train could get into the plant. Prepared for gas, the pickets held vinegar-soaked sponges over their noses, caught the bombs and threw them back as Case and Kohler fled into the plant.

Biever, who was assistant chief of the village police, admitted at a coroner's inquest he was in charge of some 80 men armed with gas guns. He said his men followed his orders to fire into a railroad bank.

"It is hard for me to comprehend," Uphoff wrote, "as many people being wounded if the above testimony is accurate." In a chapter on the riot, he concluded:

"Although the company lawyer told me that they could produce affidavits to prove that there was shooting from the side of the pickets, no deputy was shot and I found few spectators who would say there was any shooting from the mob."

An Old Story

Walking the picket line at the Kohler plant was not a new experience for Fred Ross of the The CIO News.

While on a visit to Wisconsin in 1938, Ross joined the line of the AFL union. Two weeks ago he again picketed with three former AFL pickets, who now are members of Local 833, CIO Auto Workers.

PAY RAISE NEEDED—This is the family of Elmer Barts, Kohler striker. He needs wage hike so he doesn't have to do odd jobs and wife can quit work.

With 10 Children At Home, Striker Says Raise Is A Life Or Death Matter

THE NEED for a raise was simply a matter of arithmetic for Elmer Barts, skilled worker at the Kohler plant.

He has 10 children, ranging in age from two to 15 years old, and is buying his seven-room home near Kohler Village.

There are 12 mouths to feed, payments on the house, the cost of shoes and clothing, and gas, light and fuel bills.

A veteran of the Pacific campaign, Barts added up his expenditures for every two weeks. They amounted to almost $190, and during the same period—before the strike began—his average pay was $180.

"My wife and I had to work," he said. "I did odd jobs after work and weekends, and my wife worked nights at a plastic plant while I kept the children."

During the strike Mrs. Barts has been working days, coming home in time to take care of the children while her husband did his evening stint on the picket line.

"We are working only part time at the plastics plant," Mrs. Barts said. "I earned only $21 this week.

"Arnold and I are back of the UAW-CIO and want it to win a pay raise. Then I could quit work."

MRS. ELMER OSKEY, wife of a chief steward, on job at strike canteen.

Up To Date

A teacher in St. Nazianz village in the Kohler plant vicinity is using the daily strike bulletin in his current events class —so his pupils can get both sides of the story.

STATEWIDE CIO SUPPORT is assured Pres. Allan J. Graskamp of UAW Local 833 (center) by State CIO Pres. C. M. Schultz (left) and big locals.

Industrial Relations Work—

Howard Receives $25,000 Murray Grant

HOWARD University in Washington will establish a three-year Philip Murray Chair in Labor Relations to expand the school's teaching and research work in the field of industrial relations.

The work will be made possible by a $25,000 grant from the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation to one of the nation's leading Negro universities.

The gift was presented on June 4 to Howard's Pres. Mordecai Johnson by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, at the school's annual banquet for recipients of its honorary degrees.

THE $25,000 contribution will permit Howard to maintain the chair for a period of three years. The university proposes to develop plans for future financing of the chair after that time has passed.

In announcing the grant, Carey voiced pleasure at the university's belief that "the increasing importance of the general problem of labor relations in American life makes it very desirable that we give greater emphasis to this work."

Talking to the 300 persons present at the dinner—which ended Howard's Commencement Day—Carey said:

"It is fitting that Howard University was the institution selected for the establishment of this chair in the name of Philip Murray.

"No institution has contributed more toward the successful legal revolution that we are experiencing—a legal revolution that is making our Constitution color-blind — a revolution that has developed the law into a tool of social precision in accomplishing this objective."

The CIO officer said that America's free trade unions have been "a mighty force" in helping break down the barriers of discrimination in the federal, state and city governments.

Noting that an estimated two million Negroes belong to the unions, Carey added:

"They have helped teach their fellow workers that all workers gain from equal job opportunities—not only those who have been subjected to discrimination.

"Most unions have now learned that their economic postion is strengthened under equal standards of pay, hiring, upgrading, promotion and layoffs."

CREATION of a Philip Murray Chair of Labor Relations at Howard University in Washington was made possible by a gift of $25,000 from the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation. CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, right, presents the check to Howard's Pres. Mordecai Johnson during ceremonies at the university's 86th commencement.

But, he said, gains in the fight against discrimination have been accompanied by "new and more subtle" efforts to keep Negroes from jobs or from more skilled classifications. He continued:

"These are the kinds of problems that present themselves for solution. These are the kinds of problems that we hope Howard University will apply its collective wisdom and skills toward giving us concrete and practical answers."

Pres. Johnson of Howard—who had once conferred an honorary degree on the late CIO president — expressed his deep appreciation on behalf of the university.

He said the Philip Murray Chair would be established this fall, and that the Murray Foundation grant "would strengthen us where we are weak."

REPRESENTING the Philip Murray Foundation at the banquet, in addition to Carey, were Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel and director of the Foundation; John Brophy; George L-P Weaver and Harry Read, assistants to Carey; and Henry C. Fleisher, CIO publicity director.

Other Foundation grants will be announced soon. Gifts totaling about $350,000 have so far been presented to Providence Hospital, Washington; the American Association for the United Nations; Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor; the National Religion & Labor Foundation; and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Labor's World—

ICFTU Continues Regional Work, Hits African Curbs

CONTINUATION of the Regional Activities Fund Committee, to which the CIO has already contributed $150,000, was voted by the executive board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at its recent meeting in Brussels.

The fund was set up in 1951 to provide help for struggling trade union movements in underdeveloped countries. The executive board determined to ask affiliated organizations and the international trade secretaries for further contributions to keep the work going.

Michael Ross, CIO representative to the ICFTU, represented the CIO at the board meeting. This was followed by the first meeting of the consultative committee which includes the board and ITS representatives.

In another important move the board established two new committees. One will consider proposals for revision of the United Nations charter, with special reference to abuse of the veto power and the participation of non-self governing territories in UN work.

The other is a permanent committee on forced labor, which will collect further documentation for presentation to the UN and the Intl. Labor Organization, and will continue the ICFTU's study of a possible world labor boycott of goods produced by slave labor.

A PROPOSAL to establish an ICFTU international college in or near Brussels was approved, and an appropriation was made to get it started.

Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek was instructed to file a complaint with the ILO charging violation of the right of free association by South Africa, and to make strong representations to insure full trade union rights for workers in Morocco, where an ICFTU mission will make a study of the problem.

FOA

Research directors for two CIO unions will leave next month to set up education and research programs for free European trade unions.

E. E. Phelps of the CIO Oil Workers and Woodrow Ginsberg, Rubber Workers, have been given a year's leave of abense by their internationals to work for the Foreign Operations Administration.

Business Agent Joseph Hanley, of the Lynn, Mass., locals of the CIO Shoe Workers, has arrived in Brussels as an FOA adviser on labor matters to the Belgium shoe productivity project.

Spanish Union Hits U. S. Envoy's Talk

The Spanish General Workers Union in Exile has called the attention of the CIO to the "unlimited damage to us, the real Spanish democrats and sincere friends of the American nation," by U. S. Ambassador James C. Dunn in a recent speech at Bilbao.

Dunn was quoted as saying that agreements between this country and Franco Spain "make those two powers not only friends but associates."

In a letter to Pres. Walter P. Reuther, the exiled union asked that the CIO "make known . . . the damage done to the Spanish people and democracy oppressed by Francoism."

Davidson Named New Head Of CIO Press Conference

RAY DAVIDSON of the Oil Workers was elected chairman of the CIO Editors & Publicity Directors Conference at a New York meeting June 5.

He succeeds Harry Kranz of the New Jersey CIO Council.

Robert Bollard of the Illinois CIO Council was elected vice-chairman, and Henry C. Fleisher, CIO publicity director and editor of The CIO News, was re-elected executive secretary.

About 30 union public relations people attended the semi-annual meeting for a discussion of political action problems in the 1954 elections, union use of radio and television, and developments in the labor news service field.

Davidson, a native of Texas, worked on an number of newspapers throughout the Southwest before joining the staff of the OWIU.

CIO Challenges Decision Curbing Right To Strike

THE RIGHT of unions to strike under wage reopening clauses was defended by CIO attorneys in an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court for review of a lower court's decision.

CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg said a decision by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis, Mo., "affects the right to strike under more than half of the collective bargaining contracts, covering millions of workers, now in effect in this country."

To allow it to stand, Goldberg maintained, would, in effect, "write into every contract a no-strike clause for the duration of the agreement."

THE DECISION involves Local 3 of the CIO Packinghouse Workers in Cedar Rapids, Ia., which struck in March 1948 under a wage reopening clause in their contract with Wilson & Co. The contract did not contain a no-strike clause.

The Circuit Court held that the union had no right to strike under the contract during its life. It based its ruling on language in Section 8 (d) (4) of the Taft-Hartley Act and held that the strikers lost their status as employes and were subject to discharge.

Goldberg asked the high court in his petition for a writ of certiorari to review the matter. He described the lower court's ruling as "probably erroneous" and "unreasonable and detrimental to stable labor relations." The Supreme Court will act on the petition at its fall term.

CIO lawyers also have intervened in a matter involving the independent Association of Westinghouse Salaried Employes which has a contract at East Pittsburgh and Homewood, Pa., over an individual wage suit.

Baltimore Takes Lead In School Integration Moves

BALTIMORE, Md., may become the first major city in the nation to end segregation in its public schools.

The Baltimore school board has voted unanimously to end segregation by the time the schools open in the fall after they heard a letter read from City Solicitor T. N. Biddison declaring that the Supreme Court decision invalidates the portion of the city code requiring separate schools for Negroes.

Although the District of Columbia Board of Education had earlier adopted a policy statement promising to eliminate discrimination, and is expected formally to order the start of an integration program, at least one legal action will stand in the way.

Conflicting views of Washington organizations became apparent when:

1. The all-white District Federation of Citizens Associations voted to intervene before the Supreme Court in the fall when argument is heard on the mechanics of integration if the Board or Superintendent of Schools takes any action to fix rules for school integration.

2. The District Congress of Parents and Teachers removed all racial bars to membership in its 64 member PTA's. The PTA body also voted to pull out of the Citizens Federation because of its maneuvering to block school integration.

CWA Signs 2 More Pacts

THE CIO Communications Workers have signed two contracts providing pay raises and other benefits of more than 6c an hour for some 7500 Bell System employes.

One agreement won for 6200 workers in Western Electric Sales, a package totaling 6.6c an hour, upgrading of workers and an additional holiday.

Another contract gave a general wage increase averaging 6.4c an hour to 1250 Bell Laboratories employes, plus additional increases of $2 to $5 a week for some through job reclassification.

Judge Strikes Out Testimony—

Hatred Dominates Pegler's Defense Case

By AL ZACK

HIS SHOES squeaking loudly and his arms filled with documents Westbrook Pegler, the union-hating columnist, last week walked to the witness stand to testify under oath.

It was the first time in his more than 20 years of venom-filled writing that Pegler had faced a judge and jury.

The red-faced, stocky columnist testified in an odd, strangled voice and in a matter of minutes his testimony was as filled with hate as the column that brought him to Room 906 of the Federal Building in New York City.

There a federal jury is hearing evidence in a $500,000 libel suit brought against the Hearst writer by Quentin Reynolds, famous war correspondent, author and radio-TV personality.

First Low Blow

Pegler told the court he was a constant reader of metropolitan papers and delivered his first low blow. He said he read the liberal New York Post only rarely but, he added, "I see the Post more frequently than I do its companion piece, the Daily Worker."

Judge Edward Weinfeld, his voice crackling, ordered that insult stricken from the record and Pegler's fat cheeks puffed out in a familiar pout.

Key to the trial was a 1949 biography of Heywood Broun, founding president of the CIO Newspaper Guild and a famous liberal columnist who died in 1949.

Pegler's hatred for Broun was apparent every time he mentioned his name. Pegler scowled in anger when Weinfeld eliminated all references to the dead columnist, except those that also referred to Reynolds.

Pegler's brow wrinkled and he thrust his head forward angrily when the judge likewise refused to let Pegler testify about his admitted hatred for the ANG.

The judge ruled that Broun was not on trial nor was the Guild an issue. Pegler's attorney, Charles Henry, sought in vain to introduce scores of photostats and documents from the well-stocked Hearst library. Only those on which Pegler relied for information were admitted and the judge instructed the jury repeatedly that these were introduced for a narrow purpose.

Weinfeld said he admitted some of these documents so the jury might consider them as evidence of malice or lack of malice on Pegler's part. They were not evidence, said the court, of the truth of the Pegler claims.

Reynolds had reviewed a Broun biography for the New York Herald Tribune, a staunch GOP organ which Pegler calls "leftist." Pegler insisted that the Herald Tribune favors left-wing books and left-wing book reviewers and they chose Reynolds.

Reynolds had earlier noted that just before reviewing the Broun biography by Dale Kramer, he had reviewed a novel by Cardinal Spellman for the same newspaper.

'Evidence' Is Banned

But the judge excluded all of Pegler's "evidence" about the Herald Tribune, pointing out that the paper was not a party to the libel suit. Pegler's testimony that he believed Kramer to be "a Communist" was angrily ordered stricken from the record by Weinfeld.

In the Pegler column that resulted in the suit, Broun and Reynolds were linked by Pegler. Reynolds, the columnist wrote, "imitated" Broun's attire.

Pegler told the jury that Broun was "filthy, unpressed and uncombed. He went around with his fly open and looked like a skid row bum."

Pegler was led through a long series of questions dealing with his charges that Reynolds was a "coward" with a "yellow streak" and had been an "absentee war correspondent." The trial record shows Reynolds spent some 30 months in the front lines or combat zones during World War II.

War Service Record

Pegler's long explanation was that "so far as I know" Reynolds never "got into the war" although he was "large, healthy and athletic." The union-hating columnist claimed that evidence of his charge could be found in a Reynolds book that he left the scene of one invasion "before the beaches were secured."

Pegler also attempted to prove his charge that Reynolds had engaged in nudism and had walked nude along a Connecticut road "with his wench" by testifying to an alleged conversation with Broun in 1932.

The judge admitted the testimony after admonishing the jury that they should consider it on a limited basis and that it was "not proof" of the truth of the charge.

Pegler then turned to another charge, one which had been flatly denied earlier by Mrs. Connie Broun, widow of the late ANG president. Pegler quoted Mrs. Broun as telling him that Reynolds had proposed to her on the way to her husband's funeral and later snubbed her.

Mrs. Broun said the report was not true and that she had never told that story to Pegler.

Pegler then advised the jury that Broun was "a liar, not a boastful liar but an abusive liar." With that, Pegler looked at the high ceiling and smiled slightly for the first time since the trail started.

Defense Witness

Before the defendant took the witness chair for what promised to be a long period, with a stiff cross-examination to follow the tender leading of his own counsel, a former editor of Collier's had testified for the defense.

Reynolds wrote for that magazine for 17 years prior to the appearance of Pegler's 1949 attack but has not had an article published by them since then.

Louis Ruppel, who went from editing Collier's, with three million circulation, to the twice-weekly Mill Valley, Calif., Record, with 4000 circulation, said he was responsible for dropping Reynolds.

But, Ruppel testified, he had never read the Pegler column and it had not caused him to drop Reynolds. This testimony directly opposed that of Richard Chaplin, former assistant publisher of Collier's, who had earlier told the jury that Ruppel had refused to run Reynolds's stories because of the Pegler column.

The Reynolds case had been concluded with a deposition from Capt. Harry Butcher, wartime naval aide to Gen. Eisenhower and author of a post-war book on Ike. Butcher testified to Reynolds' courage, ability as a writer and personal stature at the Eisenhower headquarters.

Press Coverage

The New York Post, incidentally, is still the only big town newspaper regularly covering the Westbrook Pegler trial.

Oliver Pilat, Post staffer, writes almost daily accounts of the trial which involves two noted newspaper figures and a half-million dollars—but which is receiving the silent treatment from the daily press.

The major wire services, the Associated Press and the United Press, are filing running stories of the trial but only British newspapers, where Quentin Reynolds is a favorite, are regularly using this copy.

TWUA Voices Plea To Army On Uniforms

RENEWED pleas for acceleration of procurement of uniform cloth for the Army's new uniform were made last week by Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers.

Rieve wired Assistant Defense Sec. Fred Seaton to remind him that on Apr. 27 Seaton had promised to "reply within a few days" to Rieve's proposal that the procurement program be stepped up.

"The woolen and worsted industry remains in the worst slump in its history," Rieve told Seaton. "With every passing week additional thousands of workers exhaust their unemployment benefits. The economic damage to woolen and worsted communities is cumulative and threatens to leave permanent scars."

Employment in the industry is only one-third of the 1951 peak, Rieve noted.

OPERATIONS in 11 mills of the American Woolen Co. in New England are expected to resume shortly with settlement of a six-week strike. The main feature of a three-year agreement is a reduction of 9.5c an hour in the basic hourly rate.

TWUA-CIO Sec.-Treas. John Chupka described this as a "substantial compromise." The walkout began when the company demanded a 21.5c wage slash.

Maverick—That's What Texas Liberal Was—Is Dead At 57

A PIONEER Southern liberal, former Rep. Maury Maverick, Sr., died last week in San Antonio, Tex., of a heart ailment. He was 57.

A native Texan, he got into politics in 1929 in a fight against the Ku Klux Klan and the San Antonio political machine, and was elected Bexar County tax collector.

During two terms in Congress, beginning in 1934, he was a consistent New Deal supporter and led a group of young liberals who frequently carried the ball in the House for the late Pres. Roosevelt's legislative program.

He was responsible for two additions to the American vocabulary—the liberal House bloc he headed became known as the "Mavericks," the cattle country term for an unbranded calf. In addition, he was the first described long-winded official language of the kind commonly used in government documents as "gobbledygook."

After he left Congress, where he established a firm reputation as a friend of labor, he served as Mayor of San Antonio. In 1952 he was one of the leaders of the "loyal" Democratic forces which opposed the "regulars" led by Gov. Allan Shivers at the party's national convention.

During World War II he headed the Smaller War Plants Corp. A son, Maury Maverick, Jr., is a member of the Texas House of Representatives.

MAURY MAVERICK, SR.

Michigan CIO Leader Dies

Bernard (Ben) Probe, former secretary-treasurer of the Michigan CIO Council and a pioneer member of Dodge Local 3 of the CIO Auto Workers, died of a heart attack at the age of 45.

Probe, who was also active in Democratic Party affairs had been engaged in private law practice in recent years. He is survived by his wife, Marion, two children, Judith and Kenneth, and four brothers.

Yorty, Condon Win In California Demo Upsurge

A SHARP gain in votes for liberal Democratic candidates marked last week's California primary election, as several CIO-supported candidates won state and congressional nominations.

For the first time, California voters went to the polls under a modification of the state's cross-filing system. Republican candidates also were entered in the Democratic primary, and Democrats on the GOP ballot—but under a new law, their party designations were added.

The result was that victories in both primaries—common in the past—were few and far between, and that hard-fought campaigns are ahead for the general election.

Among the victors, including several supported by the State CIO-PAC:

U. S. Senator: Rep. Yorty won the Democratic nomination and will oppose Sen. Kuchel, Republican incumbent, in the fall.

Governor: Richard Graves won the Democratic nomination and will oppose Gov. Goodwin Knight, GOP incumbent.

State Offices: Atty.-Gen. Edmund G. Brown, Democratic incumbent, won both party nominations.

Congress: Eighteen Republican and 10 Democratic incumbents won their own party nominations, while four congressmen won both nominations. Among the winners were James Roosevelt and Rep. Condon (D.).

Legislature: State Sen. Jack B. Tenney (R. Los Angeles), who campaigned on an all-out anti-Semitic platform, was decisively defeated in the GOP primary.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

Stark Award Fund Planned

THE LOUIS STARK Memorial Fund is being established and contributions are currently being received to provide a living memorial to the late labor reporter and New York Times editorial writer, it was announced by Merlyn S. Pitzele of Business Week and Joseph A. Loftus of the Times.

A group of fellow newspaper men and associates from universities and political life have opened an account in a New York bank for donations and counsel is preparing the necessary legal papers.

Tentative plans for use of the fund call for an annual award of a gold portrait medal of Stark and a $1000 stipend to an individual who has made a significant contribution in the field in which Stark was prominent.

OWIU Policy-Makers Urge 5% Wage Hike, No 'Threats'

A BARGAINING program aimed at a 5% general wage increase or its equivalent, with no "loaded gun" on the negotiating table, was approved by the Policy Committee of the CIO Oil Workers at a meeting in Cleveland.

The committee directed bargaining units to apply the amount "as desired,' with the understanding that greater demands may be made where justified.

"It is the hope of the Policy Committee that this increase may be secured through amicable collective bargaining and through a demonstration of farsighted industrial statesmanship on both the management and labor sides of the table," the committee added.

"On many occasions, our employers have told us that they resent having to bargain 'with a loaded gun on the table,' by which they mean bargaining under the pressure of strike threats.

"THEREFORE, on this occasion, we propose to 'unload the gun' and enter negotiations with an advance commitment not to strike for this increase.

"The Policy Committee hereby requests each bargaining unit to negotiate . . . as quickly as possible and practical under their contracts and the law, but that the bargaining units refrain from taking strike votes or in any other way using strikes or other threats in connection with this wage program."

The committee maintained oil industry workers are entitled to a pay boost for three reasons—their increased productivity, the increased productivity of the economy in general, and their present wages, which are too low for the skills required.

It recounted that despite a steady decline in jobs in the industry, "the volume of production, the volume of sales and the net profits" of the employers "continue to increase."

Gains Seen Under No-Raid Pact

(Continued from Page 3)

really had its genesis at the conventions which elected Reuther president of the CIO in succession to the late Philip Murray, and Meany head of the AFL as successor to the late William Green. Both declared they could see no reason why organized labor in the U. S. should be divided into two major groups.

In January 1953, they had lunch together in Washington and discussed resumption of the long-recessed unity discussions. The two executive boards met a few weeks later and named committees to conduct the talks. The first session was postponed because of the death of CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, and was finally held on Apr. 7. It was decided to work on a no-raiding agreement as the first move.

Talks continued. Agreement in principle was reached in May, and a preliminary agreement was initialed in June. Further talks were held and in December the CIO and the AFL themselves made the first major move by agreeing to a no-raid pact covering their directly-chartered locals.

During the past few months, several CIO and AFL unions in the same or similar industries have reached agreements among themselves not to raid each other.

The agreement signed last week pledges the 29 CIO unions not to raid the 65 AFL unions, and vice versa. This, as Meany pointed out, is the equivalent of "some 1800 no-raid agreements."

CIO unions ratifying the no-raid agreement were: Auto, Barbers, Brewery, Broadcast Employes, Clothing, Communications, Department Store Workers, Electrical, Furniture, Chemical, Glass, Government and Civic Employees, Insurance, Marine Engineers, Maritime, Oil, Packinghouse, Paperworkers, Radio Association, Railroad, Retail and Wholesale, Rubber, Shoe, Stone, Textile, Transport, Transport Service, Utility and Wood Workers.

AFL affiliates who signed were: Agricultural Workers, Airline Dispatchers, Aluminum Workers, Asbestos, Barbers Bill Posters, Shoe, Bricklayers, Broom Makers, Building Service Employes, Cement, Chemical, Cigarmakers, Cleaners and Dyers, Railway Clerks, Retail Clerks, Coopers, Diamond Workers, Distillery, Doll and Toy, Electrical, Elevator Constructors, Metal Engravers, Photo Engravers, Fire Fighters and Flight Engineers.

Also: Garment Workers, Bottle Blowers, Granite Cutters, Hatters, Horse Shoers, Insurance Agents, Jewelry, Lathers, Letter Carriers, Longshoremen, Machinists, Maintenance of Way Employes, Marble Polishers, Butcher Workmen, Molders, Musicians, Paper Makers, Plasterers, Plumbers, Metal Polishers, Sleeping Car Porters, Railway Mail Handlers, Postal Supervisors, Postal Transport Association, Plate Printers, Bus Drivers, Railway Patrolmen and Roofers.

Also: Railroad Signalmen, State-County and Municipal Employes, Stereotypers, Stove Mounters, Switchmen, Teachers, Telegraphers, Textile, Tobacco, Wire Weavers and Flint Glass Workers.

CIO Members

The CIO members of the AFL-CIO Unity Committee are: Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, Communications Workers; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran, Maritime Union; Pres. O. A. Knight, Oil Workers; Pres. David J. McDonald, Steelworkers; Pres. Michael Quill, Transport Workers; Pres. Emil Rieve, Textile Workers; Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, Clothing Workers.

GOP Should Put 'House In Order'

Pres. Eisenhower was advised to put his "economic house" in order before the fall elections. The admonition came from Pres. Daniel J. Riesner of the National Republican Club who presented Eisenhower with an honorary life membership at a White House ceremony.

Mitchell Hails CIO-AFL Pact

Labor Sec. Mitchell praised the CIO-AFL no-raiding pact, calling it "a pact between free unions in a free country."

"The Government does note with great gratification this further evidence that the working men and women of America can solve their own problems without governmental interference or intervention," he said. "This is the free American way. It is a refreshing and satisfying contrast with the compulsion and controls in many other lands."

Senate Unit Votes Power Give-Away

ANOTHER legislative step to give away the nation's power resources—this time at Niagara Falls—was voted out by the Senate Public Works Committee last week.

The committee approved a bill by Sen. Case (R. S. D.) giving the Federal Power Commission responsibility for determining whether public or private interests will build the huge Niagara Falls power plant.

However, the key "public preference" clause—giving public power distributors first call on power from the Niagara project—was struck out of the measure.

The committee's approval of the bill, according to press reports, was by a 7 to 6 vote.

THE CIO-supported Lehman Bill, providing for public power preference, was rejected by the Senate committee, along with other Niagara measures introduced by Republicans.

In recent testimony, CIO representatives warned that GOP give-away bills would result in "fastening high monopoly rates" on the Middle Atlantic and New England states.

Under FPC determination as provided in the Case Bill, the agency might license the New York State Power Authority to build the $40 million Niagara power plant. New York's Gov. Thomas E. Dewey has called for such construction, with power distribution by private utilities.

Another give-away proposal, already voted by the House, would give Niagara power development to five big private utilities.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

BEHIND all the articles and speeches you are witnessing urging you and your family to use more milk and milk products, is the strange and serious story of a milk industry which has become badly disorganized by an over-abundance of milk, and the failure of Agriculture Sec. Benson's recent attempt to curtail government purchases of milk products by lowering the support price.

'Too Much Milk'—Or Not Enough Buyers?

All through June you will see his almost-desperate effort by government authorities and the milk industry to get you to buy more milk products. The fact is, despite the recent reduction in milk support prices, farmers produced more than a billion pounds more milk than a year ago in the first quarter of this year.

During the last few months, the annual rate of milk production has been in the neighborhood of 130 billion pounds. But the public has been consuming it at the rate of less than 120 billion pounds. Thus more and more milk has been going into the production of butter, cheese and nonfat dry milk solids. But because the public isn't able or willing to use up all of these products, the government is again having to buy up the surplus and store them away.

We're Paying Twice

Currently the government is trying various ways to unload these huge surpluses: trying to sell them abroad, giving them to schools and charitable institutions, experimenting with the addition of dry milk to poultry and animal feeds. We're even trying to give the milk back to the cattle!

This chaotic situation affects you in two ways: First, you pay more for milk products than if some method could be used to aid farmers other than by removing "surplus" products from the market. Secondly, you pay in taxes when the government buys up and stores these products.

What's the answer? Obviously—to reduce the price of fluid milk so moderate-income families will use more in that form, and so there won't be this surplus which the dairy manufacturers buy up cheap and convert into surplus manufactured products, which the government then has to buy.

The strange fact is that despite the greater production of milk, the retail price is about the same in most parts of the country as a year ago, and is even a half cent higher in some large cities. In fact it will start going up again in November when the flush season is over.

NOW GET THIS: Consumers are being required to pay the same price for milk, or a little more, than a year ago. But dairy manufacturers are buying the "surplus" milk—that which is not sold as fluid milk—for 14% less than they paid a year ago. This low-cost surplus milk, which currently costs the manufacturers little more than half the price of the same milk when sold for drinking purposes, is then manufactured into ice cream, cheese and other products.

Passing Up Food Bargain

The root of the whole chaotic problem is the system that sells the same milk at two prices: a higher price if it's to be used as drinking milk, a much lower price if it is to be used for manufacturing.

We as consumers are passing up a great food bargain in not using more fluid milk, and in not taking advantage of the new lower price of cheese.

If the price was reduced, low-income families would naturally use more. But even at present prices, families should spend a greater proportion of their food money for milk, and less for the higher-priced meats, to get maximum good nutrition at least expense.

(Coyyright 1954 by Sidney Margolius.)

Consumers Get A Break In Natural Gas Rate War

CONSUMERS won a rare victory in the fight to keep natural gas rates down when the Supreme Court ruled that producers who sell to interstate pipelines are subject to Federal Power Commission regulation.

"Protection of consumers against exploitation at the hands of natural gas companies was the primary aim of the Natural Gas Act," said Justice Sherman Minton in an opinion for a 5 to 3 majority.

"Attempts to weaken this protection by amendatory legislation exempting independent natural gas producers from federal regulation have repeatedly failed, and we refuse to achieve the same result by a strained interpretation of the existing statutory language."

The case in point involved the huge Bartlesville, Okla., Phillips Petroleum Co. The FPC ruled in 1951 that Phillips was not subject to commission jurisdiction. The State of Wisconsin and four cities where the gas is marketed won a reversal in the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

At first the Supreme Court refused to review the case, thus affirming FPC regulation of gas producers. After numerous states urged reconsideration, the court reversed itself and agreed to hear arguments.

During the Truman Administration, a bill exempting gas-producing companies passed both the House and the Senate but was subsequently vetoed by Truman.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

THE TAX PROBLEM now before the nation may not be the direct concern of our organizing effort, but no organizer can let the opportunity pass to help the workers across this country of ours by carrying on a program of education in the basic issues.

The plain fact is that CIO is proposing a tax reduction for all people, a tax reduction in terms that will bring an immediate pay raise to every American worker.

CIO is calling for increasing personal income tax exemptions to $800 a year, as a first step toward helping the great mass of our people and as a means of putting more purchasing power in the hands of the consumers.

CIO's tax program would mean an increase of about 9.5c an hour in pay for workers who are the heads of average families.

Consider how hard we have struggled for similar wage increases in our collective bargaining. CIO's tax battle is a battle for all the people. We want to put the same effort into it we put into our struggles for our membership.

LAST WEDNESDAY, we signed the historic no-raiding agreement with the American Federation of Labor. We firmly believe this is a great step along the highway of organization of the unorganized. It means we can concentrate our entire energies on the problems of those workers who are still without the benefit of union organization.

We have long recognized that raiding is wasteful and has little effect, if any, on the relative strength of our two great labor organizations.

We earnestly hope we can look forward to the creation of a new age of labor organization. We deal, day by day, with human beings in our work. We know that all the problems that arise cannot be settled by what is written down in black and white, and that patience and tolerance are needed to make real and lasting progress.

I will expect that every representative of CIO, the regional directors and their staffs, will give every possible assistance to our international unions in their task of carrying out our solemn agreement.

REG. DIR. MICHAEL MANN reports eight CIO representation election victories in his area. The Auto Workers scored in three: Kem Manufacturing Co., Fairlawn, N. J.; L. A. Dussol & Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., and Regal Tile Board Corp., Brooklyn. The Steelworkers won at Moldcast Products, Inc., Newark, N. J., and the Wah Chang Smelting & Refining Co. of America, Glen Cove, L. I.; the Electrical Workers at the Arma Corp., Garden City, N. Y., and the Wilcolator Co., Elizabeth, N. J., and the Clothing Workers at the Ideal Bathrobe Co., Brooklyn.

From Reg. Dir. George De Nucci we learn of victories by the CIO Retail-Wholesale Workers at the Ohio Valley Baking Co., Middleport, O., and by the IUE-CIO at the Westinghouse Electric Corp., Columbus, O., where IUE beat out the IBEW-AFL and the IAM-AFL by better than two to one. The plant will eventually employ 7000 workers.

Reg. Dir. Frank Cronin reports complete returns on the UAW-CIO victories in two bargaining units of the International Harvester Co., East Moline, Ill., where the UAW drove out both the FE and the IAM. More than 1800 workers took part in the balloting.

4 Maritime, Shipbuilding Unions Now In Parleys

FOUR CIO maritime and shipbuilding unions are now in negotiations in New York City.

Three of them, the Maritime Union, the Radio Association and the Marine Engineers are discussing or have presented their demands to the American Merchant Marine Institute, which represent the Atlantic and Gulf Coast shipowners. All these contracts expire June 15.

The Marine & Shipbuilding Workers have given their demands to the Bethlehem Steel Co. and about 30 other shipbuilding concerns. Bethlehem is usually the bellwether of the industry, and involved in the negotiations are eight East Coast shipyards.

Here are the details of the demands:

NMU: One month's vacation after one year's service irrespective of whether it has been with more than one company, $1 instead of 60c a day for welfare benefits and pensions, and elimination of the differential between the West and the East Coast for unlicensed engineers and deck hands.

ARA: Longer vacations, ending inequities, and an increase in the present 60c a day payment by the operators for welfare benefits and pensions, which are not now included in the contract.

MEBA: Increased vacations, greater number of engineers on some ships, and pensions through increased contributions by the shipowners to the welfare fund. Contract involved covers dry cargo ships.

IUMSWA: A 21c an hour increase in base pay, a guaranteed annual wage, an employer-financed health, welfare and insurance fund; higher pensions, longer vacations, additional paid holidays, stricter observance of seniority, and other benefits.

CIO on ABC
Monday thru Friday
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS

CIO Backs Transit Workers As New York Strike Nears

CITYWIDE labor support for a pending strike of the CIO Transport Workers against New York City's transit system was mobilized last week at a meeting called by the City and State CIO Councils.

The strike was scheduled to being on June 14 over the rejection by the state-created Transit Authority of a proposal for a contract with the TWU-CIO Local 100, which represents most of the 44,000 system employes.

More than 400 CIO local leaders, representing 500,000 members in the city, adopted with a roar of approval a resolution laying the blame for the pending strike squarely on the shoulders of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey and the authority he created.

The resolution said the state body's arbitrary refusal to engage in collective bargaining made the strike "inevitable." It said the authority's action demonstrated that "it is intent on destroying the union in order to go back to the old jungle days."

SEC.-TREAS. Ellis Van Riper of Local 100 said it will "take more than the Republican Governor and his five stooges (the authority) to take our union away from us."

Pres. Louis Hollander of the State Council condemned the state body's action in seeking an injunction under the Condon-Wadlin Law, which outlaws public utility strikes. He vowed that "we will lead the picket line and challenge the injunction because we won't go back to slavery."

The meeting named a special eight-man committee, headed by Hollander, to take action "to throw the full support of the half million members of the CIO in New York City behind TWU in its life and death struggle."

Michael J. Quill, president of TWU-CIO and of the New York City Council, told a television audience the union will have on hand during the strike 100 bus drivers to provide emergency services. He also said he has pledged the authority a 1000-man emergency crew to keep the subway equipment ready for use the moment the strike is over.

ON THE PLEA of City Labor Commissioner Joseph E. O'Grady, the Supreme Court in Brooklyn last week postponed for two days a hearing on the authority's action for an injunction in order that the union and the state body might have an opportunity to settle the dispute.

The authority has modified its original rejection of a fact-finding board's proposals. It agreed to discuss wages, but it remained adamant in its rejection of the fact finder's recommendation for a contract, impartial arbitration and a representation election, which probably would give Local 100 sole bargaining rights.

LEGAL SUPPORT for the CIO Transport Workers' demand for a contract with New York City Transit Authority was voiced by a panel of lawyers on a TV program. From left: Herbert DeVarco, Jay Darwin, David Feller, John F. O'Donnell, TWU counsel, William Isaacson and Asher Schwartz.

CIO Attorneys Supporting TWU In Fight For Contract

LEGAL support was given by CIO attorneys in the fight of the CIO Transport Workers to obtain a contract with the Transit Authority for New York City's transit employes.

At a meeting in New York, lawyers for CIO and its international affiliates declared "there was no basis in law for the authority's decision" in rejecting the proposed contract.

Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel, said the attorneys would request the permission of the court to intervene in support of the union against the injunction forbidding the strike, which the authority was seeking.

"Without discussing the legal issues before the court we question the good faith of the authority in bringing the suit at this juncture," Goldberg said.

"The action of the Transit Authority defies the most elementary principles of sound labor relations. The authority itself created the present crisis.

"This crisis would not exist but for the authority's unreasonable refusal to meet with the union on a fair basis. It now seeks to capitalize on the crisis, which it created, by injecting into the dispute the most discredited of anti-labor tactics—the anti-labor injunction."

N. Y. CIO Urges Legislature Act On Jobless Pay

THE NEW YORK CIO council last week urged that unemployment compensation be improved by the special session of the Legislature which it said was called "to rescue the Long Island Rail Road from financial difficulties."

Pres. Louis Hollander and Sec.-Treas. Harold J. Garno wrote Gov. Dewey that the present law is inadequate, and urged that maximum benefits be boosted from $30 to $36 weekly plus benefits of $4 weekly for dependent up to three, and the duration be extended from 26 to 39 weeks.

"If the Legislature can be summoned into special session," they wrote, "to rescue the Long Island Rail Road from financial difficulties, surely it cannot ignore the dangerous sagging of our whole economy and the distress being inflicted on hundreds of thousands of unemployed workers and their families."

I-H Local Moves To Join UAW

A majority of 1000 employes of the Richmond, Ind., plant of International Harvester voted last week to join the CIO Auto Workers, ditching the Farm Equipment division of the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers.

Steel Union's Assets Climb By $1.9 Million In Six Months

THE NET WORTH of the CIO Steelworkers increased by $1,919,645 in the six months ended Dec. 31, 1953, according to the 23d semi-annual audit of the union's books.

Representing the excess of resources over liabilities, the net worth stood at the end of last year at $15,758,439, compared to $13,838,793 as of June 30, 1953.

Meanwhile, USA-CIO resumed negotiations with the U. S. Steel Corp. and other steel companies.

In a report to local unions covering the six-month period, Pres. David J. McDonald, Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel and Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes said that charters have been issued to more than 2600 locals with a total membership of approximately 1,180,000. This includes members exonerated from dues and assessments under the USA constitution, they said.

The audit showed total income of $10,446,280, and expenses of $8,526,634 during the six months.

The income included $20,319,637 from initiation fees and dues, of which $10,121,063 was refunded to local unions. Other sources of income included $104,041 from investments, $140,215 in gains on sales of securities, and $3442 net from rental of land and buildings.

McDonald said negotiations with U. S. Steel had entered the "shirt sleeve" stage. He added he was "very hopeful we will reach a settlement in advance of the contract expiration date" on June 30.

'Stop Playing Politics, Act On U.S. Housing Needs,' CIO Warns GOP

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

CONGRESS and the Eisenhower Administration were challenged last week "to stop playing politics and worse" with the nation's housing needs.

CIO Housing Dir. Ben Fischer told the 23rd annual session of the National Housing Conference in Washington that "the time has come after years of study . . . to supplement talk about housing with urgently needed action."

"Talk is always appropriate and necessary," Fischer said, "but talk is no legitimate substitute for action."

America's slums "still stand and get worse," Fischer charged. "Substandard housing increases steadily and, in certain large cities, with alarming speed."

THE BUILDING industry is not fully employed at its job of providing new dwellings for America's families, yet the national economy cries out for the shot in the arm a full housing program could give the country, he said.

Fischer declared minority families "have special housing problems exceeding those of all other groups. But the growing verbal concern is not yet matched with significant new housing opportunities for members of the minority groups."

The special needs of American middle-income families were cited by Fischer. These families, he said, "can choose between a very wide selection of automobiles available in any color and on most liberal terms. And while the choice of radios, TV sets, refrigerators and countless other goods is very appealing, the housing industry has apparently almost no interest in this great bulk of our people."

"THERE IS almost no choice of homes," Fischer maintained, "because new housing is not built and financed in a manner which meets the needs of millions of moderate income Americans."

Despite the fact that a housing mortgage is more substantially backed than almost any other loan, present home finance terms are "restrictive, reactionary and snobbish," according to Fischer.

He charged that "those who advocate slum clearance and urban redevelopment and at the same time oppose low-rent public housing are trying to deceive the American people and abuse the residents of the slum areas."

Fischer urged legislators and the Administration to "come clean" on the public housing issue.

"Either we will have a substantial public housing program—35,000 units a year is a drop in the bucket—or we will not clear slums and relocate slum dwellers. Those who oppose public housing are defenders of the slums—no matter how piously they may shed tears about the shame of blighted cities," Fischer said.

HE TOLD the conference that CIO favors the private enterprise system but, he went on, "a sound housing program which will enable plain people to buy and rent new homes will strengthen that system and will produce more opportunities for private profit in the home construction and building material industries than have ever existed before."

Fischer called for "long-term mortgages with low interest rates and low down payments" that would bring average monthly payments within reach of the average family. "The risk is nominal, the dividends in terms of full employment, national prosperity and a well-housed population are limitless," he said.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) warned that "when home building lags, the economy fails to expand as rapidly as before and all of us lose. Let us pray that this is not a prelude to a new 1929. Let us never forget that housing construction reached a peak in 1925, from which it declined unnoticed to the collapse of 1929."

Rep. Yates (D. Ill.) told the conference those "who contemplate with satisfaction the current rate of home building"—a million units a year—"are not facing grim reality." Yates said nearly 900,000 new households are established each year in the U. S. At the same time approximately 300,000 housing units are destroyed.

Housing Bill Faces New Hurdles

Three high hurdles stand between the housing bill and the President's desk.

The Senate-approved measure, widely different from the House version, now goes to a conference committee where the public housing sections must be decided. The compromise version will go back to both branches for more debate before final voting.

The Senate took less than three hours to push through the Administration's omnibus housing bill with its provision for 35,000 public housing units a year for four years. The House earlier had knocked out all new public housing provisions.

A move by some southern Democrats to kill public housing in the Senate, because of the recent Supreme Court decision against school segregation, was blocked.

Also to be resolved by the conference committee are the problems brought to the fore by the housing scandals which broke early in April after the House voted on its version. Frauds in government-insured building and improvement loans and in mortgages for apartment developments were uncovered.

THE TIME has come for action, not speeches, CIO Housing Dir. Ben Fischer told the National Housing Conference sessions.

The McCarthy Hearing—

Symington's Integrity Defended By Carey

"OUTRIGHT LIES" were charged to Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) by Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers as he demanded a chance last week to "correct misstatements" made at the Army-McCarthy hearings.

Carey, who also is CIO secretary-treasurer, sent a lengthy telegram to Chairman Mundt (R. S.D.) of the Senate subcommittee asking for an opportunity to discuss relationships between Sen. Symington (D. Mo.), a committee member, and the union at the Emerson Electric Co.

The union head's name got into the hearings after McCarthy had accused Symington of making a "deal" with William Sentner, an official of the United Electrical Workers and an admitted Communist, to settle a strike at the plant in 1943.

SYMINGTON was head of the firm, which was under contract with UE Local 1102, during the war. Carey headed the UE until his defeat by the Communists in 1941 and became president of the IUE-CIO when it was formed in 1949.

Carey said that in the first place, there was no strike at Emerson Electric in 1943.

In the second place, he added, "while the national UE was a Communist-controlled organization, Local 1102 has a long record of anti-communism and opposition to Red leaders like Sentner," and "was one of the founding locals of the anti-Communist IUE." It expelled Sentner from membership in 1948, he said.

"This opposition was known and publicized as early as 1939," he added.

RELATIONS between Symington and Local 1102 "were of an extraordinarily high and amicable level throughout the period of Symington's presidency," Carey stressed.

He claimed McCarthy "grossly and deliberately lied" in accusing Symington of the Sentner deal, and charged him with attempting "viciously and immorally" to use Sentner "as a bludgeon against Symington."

Workers at both Emerson Electric and at Colonial Radio, Buffalo, N. Y., which Symington had headed in 1934, can testify that they came to know Symington "not only as an eminently fair and reasonable employer but also as a man with an absolutely incorruptible character and approach to human relations," he declared.

Carey said his testimony to Symington's "high moral and ethical standards" was not only his own "but the opinions of thousands of union employes of Emerson Electric and Colonial Radio who know the man and his unquestionable integrity."

He said that McCarthy's attack on Symington's role as an employer at Emerson "is also . . . an attack on the union members employed by that company."

AT A PRESS conference, Carey criticized the National Labor Relations Board for its failure to act on the IUE's request for new union representation elections at General Electric plants in Schenectady, N. Y., Erie, Pa., Newark, N. J., and Bloomfield, Ind.

Workers at those plants are now represented by the UE, Carey said. The delay in NLRB decisions on new elections is creating difficulties for IUE-CIO in its effort to "fight communism," he added.

Tar Heel Judge Named Senator

Sam J. Ervin, Jr., associate justice of the North Carolina Supreme Court, has been appointed by Gov. Umstead (D.) to fill the U. S. Senate seat of the late Sen. Hoey (D. N.C.).

High Court Upholds Curb On Lobbyists

CONSTITUTIONALITY of the U. S. law regulating lobbying in Congress was upheld by the Supreme Court last week in a 5-3 split decision.

The ruling reversed an appeals court decision invalidating the statute largely because of what was described as its indefinite nature. Chief Justice Earl Warren, in a majority opinion, declared the act meets the constitutional requirements of definiteness.

The law applies, he wrote, only to those who "solicit, collect or receive contributions of money or other things of value, and then only if the principal purpose . . . is to influence passage or defeat of legislation." The majority rejected the government's contention that expenditures must be reported even if funds are not solicited or received.

THE LAW was upheld as a survey showed six organizations have reported to Congress that they spent more than $500,000 during the first three months of the present session, and 10 others that they spent more than $20,000 each.

The six: National Association of Electric Companies, $127,746; National Milk Producers Association, $83,302; General Electric, $76,124; Employers Labor Relations Information Committee, Inc. $67,462; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association, $64,533, and Association of American Railroads, $56,832.

'What? That's Certainly Not News!'

WHEN ONE of the nation's top economists criticizes the Eisenhower businessmen's Administration for lack of business initiative in dealing with the problems of recession, it's not news to Ohio's one-party press.

The economist was Sumner H. Slichter of Harvard. What he told a group of businessmen in Washington was that this recession "will go down in history as one in which the people conclude that the Administration failed to act with proper initiative and vigor in adopting anti-recession measures."

"Certainly it is not easy to find evidence that a rise of two million in unemployment has aroused as much concern in the Administration as the possibility of a deficit in the cash budget," he said.

That might be news in some circles, but says the Ohio CIO Council's newsletter, "the one-party press in Ohio wasted no time in protecting its readers from such harsh words."

In Columbus, all papers ignored the talk except the Ohio State Journal which deleted criticisms of the Administration and reported only that Slichter felt the bottom of the recession had been reached. The Cleveland Plain Dealer followed the same "fearless reporting" tactic.

The Cleveland Press did report the criticism, but buried it in a five-line item in a column of news briefs following a story about a French movie star who frightened a burglar away from her home.

This, says the Ohio CIO Council, was the same day Cleveland Press Editor Louis B. Seltzer told the Inland Press Association in Chicago, "the right of the people to know is more sacred today than ever before."

Berlin — a Year After (See Page 7)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., June 21, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 25

IUE Drives For 10 Big GE Plants

—See Page 2

John Smith
1850 Sunnyside Drive
June 1, 1954

Dear Mister Senator,

I see by the newspapers that the Senate is considering a new tax law for next year and I want to let you know what me and the Mrs think about it. Taxes are pretty important to us.

We think the present $600 a person exemption is much too low and that Senator George has the right idea in raising it to $800 now and $1000 next year. It was all right when we were fighting a war but now that the war is over we should raise that personal exemption so that people can have more money to buy the things they need.

It seems to us that this new tax bill does these things for big corporations and stockholders. I wonder if they need it as bad as we do. Factories aren't any good without customers and me and the Mrs aren't going to be good customers if we don't have some money to spend.

We figure that if we had another $12 a month to spend, and I guess we would if you allowed $800 each for me, the Mrs, Jane and Johnny, we could either buy the new range or the refrigerator we need bad for the kitchen. That would be good for everybody. We sure hope you vote for it when it comes up.

Sincerely,
John Smith

Schenectady Coming Up—

IUE Drives For 10 GE Plants

CLEANUP ORGANIZING campaigns have been started by the CIO Electrical Workers at all General Electric plants not now under IUE contracts, with representation election petitions filed for 10 plants with 49,000 workers across the nation.

ELECTED — Treas. James Callaghan of the CIO Electrical Workers Dist. 4 used union organizing drive techniques in successful campaign for Newark, N. J., councilman-at-large.

Activity centers on GE's main plant in Schenectady, N. Y., with its 20,000 employes. The National Labor Relations Board has ordered an election there within the next 30 days, as well as at the lamp plant in Newark, N. J., where 1000 are employed.

The IUE-CIO meanwhile scored another significant election victory at a Sylvania plant in Batavia, N. Y., currently employing about 700 with a potential work force of 2500.

THE DRIVE against GE shops still outside the IUE fold snowballed after Local 301 in Schenectady voted overwhelmingly to leave the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers and to join the CIO affiliate several months ago.

Desperate attempts by leaders of UE, expelled from CIO several years ago for adherence to the Communist line, failed to halt the NLRB from ordering representation elections for GE workers. The five NLRB members held that UE's contract was no bar to an election.

Besides the Schenectady and Newark plants, where elections have been ordered, IUE has petitioned for NLRB elections at Erie, Pa., where 9000 are employed; Bloomfield, N. J., 1200 workers; Ontario, Calif., 1200; Cincinnati, O., 60; Auburn, N. Y., 500; Rome, Ga., 100; Long Island City, N. Y., 30; Scranton, Pa., 325.

The Rome plant is a new GE installation and is currently unorganized.

THE VICTORY at the Sylvania plant in Batavia last week was hailed as significant by IUE leaders. The vote tally: IUE, 402; AFL Machinists, 32; no union 115.

Considerable help was given to IUE's organizing drive by CIO Auto and Steelworkers in the vicinity. A local Catholic priest assailed the company for its low wage policy.

Starting wages were 96c an hour but were raised to $1 when IUE started its organizing campaign. Before the election the company took large newspaper ads and radio time to inform the workers they did not want the union.

IUE Gains 9c Pay Hike At Philco

A PACKAGE increase of slightly more than 9c an hour was won by the CIO Electrical Workers last week as a six-week strike ended at Philco plants in Philadelphia and Sandusky, O.

The 8000 strikers voted by a 2 to 1 majority to ratify the new Philco agreement and end the walkout that began May 1. Locals 101 and 102 in Philadelphia and Local 701 in Sandusky were involved.

A 3.5% wage increase was granted by the company which had made no wage offer at the time negotiations broke off and the strike began. The percentage increase calls for a minimum of 6c an hour for all workers.

The tie-in with Social Security payments was eliminated in the contract's new pension section. The previous arrangement reduced the firm's contribution to the pension system.

EMPLOYES' insurance protection, paid for by Philco, was broadened in the new agreement.

In addition, strikers were paid for the Memorial Day holiday.

IUE-CIO Vice Pres. Harry Block, who is also a member of the CIO Executive Board, said the settlement figured out to a 6.5c increase in wages, another 1.5c on the pension plan, .65c holiday pay credit and the balance in insurance improvements.

The union charged Philco was a "stalking horse" for a general anti-union drive, and appealed to other unions for financial aid on the ground that it was the Philco workers today, but it could be other unions tomorrow. Union response was generous, and came from both CIO and AFL affiliates.

Steel Wage Parley Set

PRES. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers last week called an important wage policy meeting, in the midst of major contract negotiations with U. S. Steel Corp. and other basic steel products.

The USA-CIO Executive Board and International Wage-Policy Committee meetings were set for June 22 in Pittsburgh.

During the week, subcommittees representing the union and U. S. Steel management held a series of bargaining meetings. The basic steel contracts expire on June 30.

'Ideal Father Of '54' Is A CIO Man

MOST ANY week of the year, you can ask Everett Kassalow a tough or simple economic question, for example: "How many high school and college youngsters are going to have to look for jobs this summer?"

And you'll likely get the answer immediately if not sooner from Kassalow, who is associate director of research in the CIO Research and Education Dept.

Last week was an exception: Things were a bit hectic for Kassalow and family after his selection as "Ideal Father of 1954" for the Washington area in a contest sponsored by the Washington Post & Times-Herald.

Kassalow, who is 36 and the father of three, was nominated as a "super daddy" by his daughter, Allyn-Sue, in a letter to the Post. Here's her winning nomination:

"He is real tall and kind. We have three children: Bruce, 6, Gerald, 2-years 11 months, and me, Allyn-Sue, 8½.

"A little after dinner every night Daddy teaches Bruce, all our friends, and me how to play baseball. Sometimes there are 10 kids around. Daddy knows more about baseball than some of the men on the radio.

"On Saturday he takes us all to the library, to the doctor and shopping. Many times we have a private date on Saturday with Daddy. Then he takes us to lunch.

"Sometimes we don't behave too well. Then Daddy says he is not going to take us again. But then the next Saturday comes and he changes his mind. You can see Daddy is a real pal.

"Daddy always takes us to picnics, to carnivals, to the theatre like to see 'Oklahoma' and the ballet and 'South Pacific.'

"He is very kind to our friends and lets us have dinner guests most any nights. He even cuts their meat.

"He is a neat and super Daddy, and we love him very much."

As for Kassalow—in the midst of a round of radio and TV shows, movies and dinner at the Statler — he insisted he's "always in business" and ready for that next economic question.

DOING WHAT COMES NATURAL—With cooling drink, easy chair and paper, Everett Kassalow, CIO associate director of research, relaxes after being named "Ideal Father of '54." All attention are his wife, Sylvia, sons Bruce and Gerald, and daughter Allyn-Sue, who named him a "super daddy." —Washington Post & Times-Herald Photo

GOP's Drive For Wiretap Approval Meets Growing Senate Opposition

MOUNTING opposition to the Administration's proposals to legalize wiretapping was signalled as both liberals and conservatives attacked the GOP measure in Senate floor speeches.

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) put his objections on constitutional, moral and practical grounds. And he also sounded a warning about the possibility of producing "doctored" recordings of wiretaps.

Sen. Johnston (D. S.C.) affirmed his personal repugnance for what he called "legalization of eavesdropping." He also suggested that the notion—advanced by Atty.-Gen. Brownell—that wiretapping is necessary for national security is "bait for the gullible."

Morse said that should the Supreme Court today hear a case directly dealing with prosecution for wiretapping, he believed it would be held in violation of the Fourth and Fifth Amendments to the Constitution. The Fourth Amendment section he referred to prohibits unreasonable seizures and searches. The Fifth Amendment section prohibits forcing an individual to testify against himself.

MORSE ALSO recalled that in 1940 J. Edgar Hoover termed wiretapping "archaic and inefficient" and said the Justice Dept. had abandoned the practice. But in 1949, Morse noted, Hoover said "it is no secret that the FBI does tap telephones."

The conclusion Morse drew was that since the Justice Dept. was violating the Communications Act prohibition against wiretapping, "it is not an impartial witness in this matter" but is "a partisan with dirty hands."

Johnston said he was opposed to all proposals to permit wiretapping currently before the Senate Judiciary Committee, of which he is a member.

"Everyone of them does gross violence to my concept of the democratic way of life. Not one of them makes the slightest contribution to a freer way of life," he said.

JOHNSTON SPOKE to the point that wiretapping limits personal freedom, and said "any act reinvesting the state with rights enjoyed by free men is a step toward fascism, communism, statism, or some other ism foreign to my conception of Americanism."

"Take away from man a single right won through years of perseverance," Johnston said, "and a justification will soon be presented for withholding or diminishing other rights."

Johnston said that he doubted that wiretapping was "required" although it was "desired."

"It assists a lazy, indifferent, or overzealous detective or police enforcement officer," he noted.

No Compromise

Discussing the proposal of Atty.-Gen. Brownell to legalize wiretapping, Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) noted that a congressman supporting the measure quoted Nazis prosecuted in the war criminal trials as saying they would use the weaknesses of the democratic processes to win.

"The position in which the Nazis found themselves at the time of the trials," Morse pointed out, "proves the fallacy of that argument. The fight against nazism was won without a compromise of our democratic principles. The fight against communism must be won—will be won—without resort to police state methods."

Tin Smelter Bill Is Approved

The CIO-supported bill for continued government operation of the nation's only tin smelter at Texas City, Tex., last week was approved unanimously by the House Banking Committee. Piloted through the Senate by Sen. Johnson (D. Tex.), the bill is backed by the CIO Oil Workers.

C Of C Aims High In Dollar Drive

"GIVE A BUCK TO PAC—the job you save may be your own" is more than just a slogan sparking voluntary dollar drives in CIO unions. In Indiana, it's a matter of fighting a General Motors $25-a-head PAC drive to block unemployment compensation improvements.

The facts came to light when E. B. Newill, GM vice president and general manager of its Allison Div. of Indianapolis, put on his other hat as president of the Indiana Chamber of Commerce to write Hoosier businessmen tapping them for $25 contributions to support the C of C's "legislative program."

The Region 3 office of the CIO Auto Workers reproduced the GM letter, which was written on company letterhead, as a leaflet which noted that the Chamber was out to "do everything to deprive you of food and clothing when you are unemployed through no fault of your own."

What perturbed the GM executive was that, in his own language, "demands from labor unions have already been made calling for the revision of Indiana's unemployment compensation law to boost benefits from the present maximum of $27 a week for 20 weeks to more than $65 a week for as long as 6 months."

The purpose of the $25 businessmen's PAC, the GM official wrote, is to present "great and complex" issues to the public "forcibly and understandably."

But the GM and C of C boss did give unionists a left-handed pat on the back that should encourage collection of PAC bucks. The drive to boost unemployment benefits, he wrote, "should be of vital concern to every businessman since unions are acquiring more skill and 'know how' in gaining public as well as the legislators' favor in such matters."

GOP Tax-Favors Bill Near Senate Floor Fight

By Press Associates PAI

THE ADMINISTRATION'S massive, 875-page tax bill, designed to revise the federal tax structure and loaded down with favors for big business, is scheduled for debate shortly on the Senate floor.

With the Senate Finance Committee now putting the bill in final shape, GOP leaders expect that the House-approved bill will come up in the Senate this week.

The bill carries about $1.4 billion in tax cuts for corporations and individuals in its first year of operation, and the great bulk of the benefits will go to higher income groups.

The biggest tax cut in the bill goes to corporations—and individuals if they should happen to own plants or large equipment. The provision would permit much larger tax write-offs in the early years of the life of the plant or equipment.

THE TREASURY says that it will lose about $375 million the first year under this provision. Democrats dispute this, estimating that the loss will be considerably higher, reaching as high as $2 billion in two years.

Another hotly debated provision would reduce the personal income taxes on dividends received by stockholders. It is estimated that this benefit will reduce Treasury revenues by $240 million in fiscal 1955.

Senate Democrats are planning a number of amendments to the bill to give bigger tax breaks to the lower and middle income groups. Most of these amendments have the support of labor.

ONE KEY amendment will be introduced by Sen. George (D. Ga.) to increase personal income tax exemptions from $600 to $800 this year and up to $1,000 next year.

The George proposal would put something like $8 billion a year into the hands of those who will purchase goods. The Senator believes that this would create badly needed purchasing power, spur business activity and reduce the number of jobless throughout the nation.

The House, in passing the bill, restricted debate. There will be no such restriction in the Senate. Observers estimate that it will be debated at least 10 days to two weeks.

ABOUT 40,000 WORKERS are exhausting their jobless pay benefits each week, CIO Sec. Treas. James B. Carey (left) told the House Ways and Means Committee in urging passage of a bill sponsored by Rep. Forand (D. R. I.), with whom he is talking before testifying for higher unemployment compensation.

UAW Supports Drive To Up Jobless Benefits

CONGRESS last week was asked to "exercise responsibility to assure that unemployment compensation laws are more than laws in name only" by the CIO Auto Workers.

In a statement before the House Ways and Means Committee, the UAW-CIO urged passage of H.R. 9430 which provides substantial improvements in the federal-state system of jobless payments.

The bill, introduced by Rep. Forand (D. R.I.) and 80 other members, calls for primary benefits of at least 50% of a worker's full time weekly wage with a 66.6% ceiling and increases the duration to 39 weeks.

Experts estimate this would add about $2 billion to the nation's purchasing power.

"Recognition of the role of unemployment compensation in strengthening the whole economy is not a labor-inspired idea," the UAW noted.

"As stated by Pres. Eisenhower in his Economic Report to Congress, 'unemployment insurance is a valuable first line of defense against economic recession.' The President pointed out that when unemployment compensation benefits are 'set at appropriate levels they can sustain to some degree the earner's way of life as well as his demand for commodities,'" the UAW said.

IN NEW JERSEY, the State CIO Council "wholeheartedly" endorsed the bill, which has that state's six Democratic Congressmen as co-sponsors.

Undersec. of Labor Arthur Larson testified that all regularly employed workers should get jobless pay coverage to "avoid dividing our working people into first and second-class employes."

Larson noted that the present law does not levy unemployment taxes against employers with fewer than eight workers. Employes of such small firms, Larson said, are second-class employes who when they lose their jobs cannot collect unemployment compensation and may have "to go on relief or beg from relatives."

Open Shop Drive Fought In Louisiana Legislature

AN OPEN SHOP "right to work" bill faces another test in the Louisiana Legislature this week when the House Capital and Labor Committee makes its report.

Organized labor and other liberal groups won a partial victory last week when the bill was referred to committee after proponents tried to have it considered by the House as a committee of the whole.

Typically restrictive in its provisions, the Louisiana proposal prohibits the union shop, maintenance of membership and the checkoff.

The Senate earlier voted down five suggested amendments, refusing "to change a comma" before approving the measure.

A SIMILAR BILL was passed by the Louisiana Legislature in 1946 but was vetoed by Gov. Jimmie Davis. Opponents of the current bill claim it is designed to benefit the wealthy sugar planters and opens the way to "an influx of cheap labor, wetbacks and Puerto Ricans."

CIO and AFL unions have joined forces to combat the measure which is being supported and publicized by business firms and trade groups.

Aiding the unions is the Catholic Committee of the South through its unit in the New Orleans Archdiocese. Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel advised the Senate committee considering the bill that it was "reactionary, insincere" and "makes a mockery of the constitutional right to organize for the common good and welfare."

THE BILL'S "right to work" title, the Archbishop continued, "is a misnomer because it denies what it pretends to give," and actually frustrates the right to work by "exposing labor to lose security, a decent standard of living and humane working conditions."

Rev. Louis J. Twomey, S.J., of Loyola University, represented the Archbishop at legislative hearings and pointed to the "fearful probability of our world being plunged into its most devastating war. . ."

"The crisis of crises is upon us. Do not, I beg you, intensify this crisis by adding the 'right to work' bill to the already towering burden of economic and social maladjustments which even now threaten the stability and even the survival of all we have known and loved," Father Twomey said.

Another bill under consideration by the Legislature would prohibit farm labor strikes during the cane sugar harvest season.

More Free Time For Facts Forum Hit

THE MUTUAL Broadcasting System has drawn the fire of the National Issues Committee for allowing free time for production of a second public affairs program to Facts Forum, the Texas-oil sponsored tax-exempt foundation which has been described as presenting "both sides of one side" on controversial questions.

In a letter to Mutual Vice Pres. Herbert C. Rice, NIC Executive Director Don Pryor indicated that by permitting Facts Forum to produce the program Reporters Roundup as it had already done with State of the Nation, the network had seriously overweighted its programming with an extremist point of view.

The NIC, of which Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is chairman, announced it would file a complaint in the matter with the Federal Communications Commission.

NIC's board includes a number of CIO officials and representatives: CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve, CIO Textile Workers Washington Rep. John Edelman and CIO Auto Workers Washington Legislative Rep. Donald E. Montgomery.

Pryor's letter took exception to the Facts Forum claim that it presents "both sides" of public issues. "This appears to be based upon the assumption that there are only two sides to public questions and that these are represented by extremes of Right and Left," the letter said.

"There can be no greater disservice than to convince a large segment of the public that there is no place to go except to one extreme or the other."

A number of Mutual stations, including WWDC in Washington where the program originates, have cancelled Reporters Roundup on the ground that it can no longer be considered unbiased.

'Things Are Different'

"Uufortunately, things are different"—laments an official of the government employment service in Baltimore—as reported by the Baltimore Sun.

More school kids and graduates are signing up for jobs. But this year, the number of probable jobs to be filled through the Baltimore employment office will be down from 2000 a year ago to about 1000.

"All their lives these youngsters heard there were jobs aplenty," says the government official. "But this year, unfortunately, things are different."

We can only hope that some GOP officials read the story. When CIO talked about unemployment, when CIO warned that there would not be enough jobs for the kids looking for work—we were called "gloom and doom" boys.

But unemployment can't be wished away—and the statistics show that it is still a major U. S. problem.

Perhaps the GOP politicos will tell the school kids not to mention their lack of jobs; it might, you know, destroy businessmen's optimism.

A Dangerous Bill

It's to be hoped that the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service will give careful study to H. R. 9713, introduced by Mrs. St. George—the very conservative New York Republican.

The St. George Bill would let the Postmaster General prohibit use of low-cost second and third-class mail rights for books and papers "containing material contrary to the best interests of the United States."

Ostensible purpose of the bill is to stop Communist publications from getting cheap postage. But the guide posts are very vague indeed.

As the Washington Post has noted, the appointment of a man like Sen. McCarthy—or even Roy Cohn—as Postmaster General could lead, under this bill, to denial of second class mail privileges to the Washington Post, or the New York Herald-Tribune or Post. Or for that matter, to The CIO News or any other labor paper which somebody decides is printing "material contrary to the best interests of the United States."

So we hope the House Committee will give the St. George Bill a long second look.

CWA's Convention

A word of fraternal greeting is in order on the occasion of the annual convention of one of America's most sprightly unions, the Communications Workers of America.

Some 2500 delegates from 728 local unions are meeting in Cleveland. They traveled there from 46 states, three Canadian provinces and the territory of Hawaii. As CWA points out, it has members "in more cities and towns than any other union in the world."

But CWA is not a union weakened by dispersal. Under the leadership of Pres. Joseph A. Beirne and its other officers, it has developed a strong cohesiveness. It is respected at the bargaining table, and respected on the picket line.

CWA's service to labor and the community is known wherever its locals exist. The men and women of the communications industry can well be proud of their big and growing union. And we in the CIO wish CWA another fine year of accomplishment.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS

Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII June 21, 1954 No. 25

The Elephant Feeds The Peanuts

In Other Words—

. . . And Just Plain Gobbledygook

When Interior Sec. McKay took to television to tell Oregonians that "it wasn't him but some other fellows who scuttled the federal power program," Richard L. Neuberger, Democratic candidate for U. S. Senate from Oregon, refuted the Secretary. Excerpts from his speech follow.

By RICHARD L. NEUBERGER

SEC. McKAY'S speech consisted of half-truths, quarter-truths and just plain downright gobbledygook.

For example, when he said that all he wanted was the Federal Power Commission to decide what kind of development should take place at Hells Canyon, he did not tell you that he himself had withdrawn the claim of the federal government to that great hydroelectric site on the boundary of our own state.

Nor did McKay tell you that he had announced publicly his own preference for the Idaho Power Co. over the United States government in the right to generate power in Hells Canyon.

You heard McKay speak of the wonderful benefits to come to our region because of the Libby Dam project in Montana, which he now claims to be promoting with all his might and main. Did he tell you the same comprehensive 308 Report of the U. S. Army Engineers, which advocates Libby Dam, also favors a high federal dam in Hells Canyon?

McKay's Words vs. Deeds

McKay came before you, proclaiming his fealty to "actual kilowatts" and not "conversational kilowatts." And then he picked for his new start in the Columbia Basin the one project which cannot even be gotten under way until emissaries of the U. S. and Canada have worked out a detailed and intricate series of negotiations—negotiations which could divert to another country some of the substantial benefits which McKay claims for Libby Dam.

If McKay wants to know the name of a magnificent hydroelectric power site where no such international complications are involved, I will be glad to tell him. The name of that site is Hells Canyon.

In his radio and TV show, McKay told you that there are no "For Sale" signs on federal power projects. But power projects can benefit farms and factories and homes only if there are transmission lines to carry this energy across the countryside. The Secretary of the Interior did not inform you that there already is a "Sold" sign on an important and strategic Bonneville transmission line which stretches into the Oregon city of Klamath Falls.

In the Interior Subcommittee of the Senate, Sec. McKay and his partner in this cause, Sen. Cordon (R. Ore.), conducted a bargain-basement sale to the California-Oregon Power Co. of the line. Instead of low-cost federal power, Klamath Falls and that region now have a 16% rate increase saddled on the farm, home and business users of energy in that area.

When we consider what has happened to the previously successful federal power program in the Northwest, is it any wonder that Purcell L. Smith, head of the private utility lobby in Washington, D. C., was able to brag that his organization got its money's worth for the $547,789 which it spent to influence legislation and government policies last year?

Recently I was in Helena, Mont., where I spoke on a program commemorating the 150th anniversary of the great expedition of Meriwether Lewis and William Clark. We looked out over the Pacific slope where rise the tributaries which swell the mighty Columbia. I thought of that bygone day when the first of all westbound Americans claimed these vast natural resources for future generations.

They did not take possession of this treasure-trove for any selfish group or greedy minority. They were thinking of all the men, women and children of future generations.

The CIO Presents
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS
every weekday evening
on the ABC Network

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE THIRD and final Republican attempt to whitewash the McCarthy-Army hearings was a success, and Joe was allowed to get out alive. The opinion here is that he remains a terrible problem for the Senate and a sinister threat to the leadership of the Eisenhower Administration.

Whitewash—And Still A Threat

The whitewash—applied through the device of a 4-to-3 vote to hear no witnesses except the four "principals" and the McCarthy staff director, Francis Carr—will presumably produce two reports from the Mundt subcommittee.

Sen. Mundt and his Republican colleagues will make a report treating the whole quarrel between McCarthy and Army Sec. Stevens as a friendly and regrettable misunderstanding, a mere exchange of banter among friends that was mistakenly taken seriously for a moment.

The three Democrats, comprising the minority, will file a blistering dissent saying that either McCarthy and Roy Cohn are liars or Sec. Stevens and Army Counsel John G. Adams are liars and coddlers of Communists. They will naturally point out that Pres. Eisenhower, so long as he allows Stevens and Adams in his official family, must be deemed to be coddling officials who coddle Communists.

There will be some resignations and departures of lesser figures, but no resignation of the Senator from Wisconsin, who no doubt is rejoicing that he has managed to handle his chief problem child, Roy Cohn, while destroying the Mundt committee procedures by filibuster and bluster.

The techniques of Sen. McCarthy in confronting any challenger are a proper subject for both psychiatrists and students of public affairs.

The techniques are primarily those of terrorism and savagery, of intimidation by the simple violence of assault or by shameless exploitation of any fact that can be twisted into appearing as a skeleton in a closet.

The Waning Forces

Let's run the roll on the way McCarthy was allowed to treat his inquisitors:

Ray Jenkins, counsel for the subcommittee, obviously was appalled to hear himself suddenly attacked by McCarthy for "bragging" that he was a hot criminal lawyer. Jenkins, a poor stick for the Republicans to try to beat Sen. Kefauver with in the forthcoming Tennessee election, defensively protested that he had never had a high opinion of himself—and subsided, from that moment, as a force in the hearings.

Sen. Dworshak of Idaho, a Republican of pro-McCarthy instincts, tried to act for a moment as a nonpartisan judge and was violently assailed by McCarthy, who said he had "picked" Dworshak for the subcommittee and now wished he had picked someone else. Dworshak subsided as a nonpartisan factor.

Sen. Mundt of South Dakota, thrust reluctantly into the role of acting chairman of the subcommittee, never dared to gavel down McCarthy's filibusters framed in the guise of questions or points of order and personal privilege. But McCarthy treated him constantly with an attitude of contempt—and late in the hearings, when Mundt simply walked out and forced the recess.

Sen. Symington of Missouri, who used to be a Republican businessman serving as president of the Emerson Electric Co. in St. Louis, had to deal for years with Bill Sentner, a self-acknowledged Communist who happened to be top-ranking St. Louis officer of the United Electrical Workers, then certified by the National Labor Relations Board as bargaining agent for Symington's employes. McCarthy exploited the bargaining between Symington and Sentner to imply that the Senator willingly played with Communists.

A Turning Point In History

Symington consulted a wise political friend, Clark Clifford, about the "problem" Sec. Stevens had brought him in disclosing the brutal insistence of McCarthy in attacking the Republican Eisenhower Administration, just as he previously attacked the Truman Administration, for "coddling Communists." McCarthy distorted this into proof that Clifford, a "lawyer for the Democrat party," had addled poor Sec. Stevens into bringing charges.

Joseph N. Welch, the able Republican Army counsel for the hearings, was quickly recognized by McCarthy as a threat. When the moment came, he smeared Welch by smearing a junior in Welch's law firm—Frederick Fisher, a Republican—for having briefly been a member of the National Lawyers Guild, termed "subversive" by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Welch's cry—"Have you no decency, Senator?"—may eventually prove a turning point in our history. It has not been so proved at present. McCarthy grinned with delight as Welch, disgusted and physically nauseated by the grossness of the assault, turned away and refused to continue any cross-examination of Roy Cohn.

Roy Cohn, McCarthy may justifiably have felt, was the weak link in his defense. Touch Cohn on the nerve center about Pvt. G. David Schine and an explosion results. Cohn was close to an explosion against Sen. "Scoop" Jackson, Washington Democrat, who in a series of questions to McCarthy ridiculed Schine's pretensions about being an expert on Communism and psychological warfare.

The only persons on the subcommittee and its lawyers whom he did not assail were Sens. Dirksen (R., Ill.) and Potter (R., Mich.), a legless veteran of World War II.

McCarthy remains as Pres. Eisenhower's principal hair shirt.

Washington Window—

Score Card Is Bleak To Date On Ike's 'Progressive Program'

By Public Affairs Institute

THE 83RD CONGRESS still has a long way to go before it enacts into law what Pres. Eisenhower calls his "progressive, dynamic program."

Whether much of the program will ever be enacted is the subject of hot, partisan dispute.

This session of the 83rd Congress has been meeting for five months. It is expected to have a little over a month more of life—until July 31. Last week GOP leaders said they hope to adjourn then.

Since January the White House has forwarded to the Congress some 230 proposals for legislation. Of these 36 are considered of major importance. The outcome of these major proposals will shape the record on which the Republicans will face the voters in November. Here is the score card to date:

Major Administration Proposals	36
Enacted Into Law	7
Passed by Both Houses of Congress	1
Passed by One House of Congress	10
Still in Committee	15
Legislation Killed	3

The most heralded accomplishment of the Administration is the passage of the St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty. This had been sought by U. S. presidents for 50 years. This year, however, the power sections of the proposal were separated from the seaway provisions, an action severely criticized by public power groups.

Little Chance Of Passing

Other successful Administration bills were the Korean defense pact, authorization for an Air Force academy, $2 billion grants in aid for highway construction, extension of excise tax rates, postponing corporation income tax cuts and increasing the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corp.

The Senate killed two proposals of the Administration. One was amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act, labeled by labor as "making a bad act worse." The second proposal would have lowered the voting age to 18.

Here are some of the Administration-backed bills given little chance of passing: three-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Acts (the President now wants only one year), Eisenhower farm program, statehood for Hawaii, low-rent public housing, federal reinsurance for private health plans.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

And It's Getting Late

The Administration has saved for late in the session some key and bitterly opposed proposals. These include general revision of the tax structure, attacked by Democrats as benefiting high income groups too heavily. Also included is the $3.5 billion foreign aid program, revision of the Atomic Energy Act, revised housing program and extension of unemployment compensation coverage.

There seems little doubt that the Administration hopes to slide much of its program through a weary, election-minded Congress in the "dogdays" of the Washington summer. This technique has worked in the past.

This year, however, the Republicans are outnumbered in the Senate, while the GOP Republican margin in the House is only three votes. Measures can just as easily be killed as passed by hot, weary Congressmen.

Whatever the outcome, you will undoubtedly hear the words of Pres. Eisenhower repeated: "Unless the Republican party can develop and enact such a program it does not deserve to remain in power."

Joe's Finances Questioned Again

ANSWERS NOW to the long-unanswered questions about Joe McCarthy's free-wheeling finances were demanded last week by Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.), who promptly got cracked over the knuckles for his efforts by the Senate Republican leadership.

Flanders raised the questions McCarthy refused to answer when a Senate Elections Subcommittee looked into his finances some two years ago. And the Vermont Republican said McCarthy, by seeking to be "sole private eye, prosecutor, judge, jury and sentencer," is "fighting communism with fascism."

Flanders' demand that McCarthy answer the $64 questions or else be stripped of his Senate investigating committee chairmanships was quickly condemned by GOP Majority Leader Knowland (Calif.) and press dispatches said Republican leaders planned "a parliamentary mousetrap play" to block the proposal.

Knowland Uses Whitewash

Knowland claimed that any Senate move against McCarthy was "not justified," that Flanders should have consulted first with the GOP leadership, and that the whole issue was a "mistake"—which amounted to a 99.44% endorsement of McCarthy. And the Wisconsin Republican—who has been condemned several times by Flanders—shouted "viciousness," "senility," and "get a man with a net and take him to a good, quiet place."

What Flanders argued was that McCarthy was in contempt of the Senate as a whole by his refusal to answer the repeated invitations of the Elections subcommittee of the 82nd Congress to testify on his high-powered monetary operations and relations with big Washington lobbyists.

Just before the Eisenhower Administration took office, that Senate group filed a report asking a lot of questions about McCarthy's finances, which were forwarded to the Justice Dept. The report itself has been suppressed (except for reprints)—and there has been no action by the government on McCarthy's fiscal affairs.

The same questions were raised again by Flanders in a Senate speech:

- "Whether, under the circumstances, it was proper for Sen. McCarthy to receive $10,000 from the Lustron Corp."
- "Whether funds supplied to Sen. McCarthy to fight communism or for other specific purposes were devoted to his own use."
- "Whether Sen. McCarthy used close associates and members of his family to secrete receipts, income, commodity and stock speculation and other financial transactions for ulterior motives."
- "Whether Sen. McCarthy's activities on behalf of certain special interest groups, such as housing, sugar and China, were motivated by self-interest."
- "Whether loan or other transactions Sen. McCarthy had with the Appleton (Wis.) State Bank or others involved violations of the tax and banking laws."
- "Whether Sen. McCarthy violated federal and state Corrupt Practices Acts in connection with his 1944-46 senatorial campaigns or in connection with his dealings with Ray Kiermas," a McCarthy staff member.

For raising anew the unanswered questions on McCarthy's finances, Flanders said he received several harassing and threatening phone calls.

A second resolution to strip McCarthy of his committee chairmanships came at week's end from Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.). Lehman's motion cited a nine-point bill of particulars in which, the resolution said, McCarthy has "abused the authority" delegated him.

The Lehman move suffered the same "mousetrap" fate as the Flanders proposal. Knowland referred it, too, to the Rules Committee, of which McCarthy is a member and his supporter, Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.), is the chairman.

Furniture Workers Finish Rout Of Commies

By GERVASE N. LOVE

FOUR YEARS AGO this month, the CIO Furniture Workers, at their sixth biennial convention in Chicago, revolted against the Communist domination of their union and drove red leaders out of office.

Last week, at their eighth biennial convention in Cleveland, they completed the rout.

After 20 speakers and two hours of surprisingly restrained debate, they passed a constitutional amendment barring anyone "who is a member of the Communist Party, any Fascist organization, or any other totalitarian movement," from holding or being a candidate for any international office or executive board post.

Only 10 of the 175 delegates, representing workers in every part of the country, voted against the proposal. The approval was another demonstration of the strength of pro-CIO forces within the union, led by Pres. Morris Pizer and reflecting overwhelming rank-and-file sentiment.

The Furniture Workers was the only one of the international unions charged with being Communist-dominated as a result of the 1949 National CIO convention—also held in Cleveland—which purged itself and remained loyal to the CIO.

The half-dozen speakers who opposed the amendment branded it an evidence of McCarthyism possible of "loose" construction and application, and a source of "disunity" within the union.

Protect The Union

Those who spoke in favor of it centered their arguments around the contention that such a clause was advisable, if not necessary, to protect the union from another seizure of top offices by Communists or others who take orders from the outside.

Pizer, recounting his personal experiences in "trying to keep the Communist Party from ruining this organization," told the delegates they must make sure that "never again shall this union be ruled by Communists."

"This convention has the right to protect this organization against people who take orders from the outside and violate their oaths of office," he said.

The delegates, confronted by almost continuous high heat and humidity, heard distinguished speakers and passed a series of policy resolutions meeting the twin challenges of the national economic situation and conditions in a rapidly changing industry. They also unanimously approved a constitutional change setting future conventions for May instead of June.

In one major resolution they called for a 35-hour week—a reflection of the industry's bulging profits and increasing productivity over the past few years, and a steady decline in job opportunities. A 35-hour week would provide at least 30,000 jobs in furniture and bedding manufacture, it was explained.

The convention gave enthusiastic approval to the CIO full employment program. It noted that increasing the minimum wage from 75c to $1.25 an hour would mean pay increases for 135,000 of the 300,000 workers in the industry and serve as a brake on a growing runaway shop movement.

Support Housing

Another resolution called for a housing program of two million new units a year with at least 200,000 low-rent public housing units. Speakers pointed out that construction of new homes means purchases of furniture and consequently jobs for UFWA-CIO members.

Other resolutions urged a stepped-up political action program, affiliation of all locals with appropriate CIO councils, repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, continued public control of atomic energy, and a national health insurance program.

Speakers included CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, National CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll; William J. Smith, assistant to CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe; Executive Sec. Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, UFWA Counsel Harry Weinstock, and David Ramsey, union economist.

Carey Is Speaker

Carey noted that he spoke on June 16—the 21st anniversary of the passage by Congress of the National Recovery Act, including the now-famous Sect. 7-A which the late Sen. Wagner (D. N.Y.) made the basis of the Wagner Act.

He recalled that in 1933, only about 2.5 million workers were organized, and that there was no organization whatsoever in the mass production industries.

"Today," he added, "a 2.5 million-member labor movement would be blown away by the winds of reaction."

He hailed the AFL-CIO No-Raiding Agreement as spelling out an AFL-CIO program "that will benefit all unions." He also commended the UFWA for its support of the CIO full employment program, and told the delegates of Pizer's role in CIO anti-discrimination work.

Carey, also president of the CIO Electrical Workers, said that since his union was born at the Cleveland National CIO convention in 1949, it has grown to be the third largest CIO affiliate. It has won 34 National Labor Relations Board elections since Jan. 1 and will be involved in elections covering 47,000 members of the United Electrical Workers "we're going to take into the IUE-CIO by July 15."

Kroll, pointing out that elections are decided by votes which "are counted one by one," urged the delegates to work for competent and liberal officeholders at every level of government.

"Merely because you're comparatively small in numbers," he told them, "is no excuse for not doing what the CIO and your officers ask you to do."

Need Political Action

Pointing out that most of the convention resolutions require political action to become effective, he added:

"You have to organize yourselves to get out every possible vote. You have to ring doorbells, distribute literature, talk up the issues. You don't win elections by wearing out the seat of your pants. You win elections by wearing out your shoeleather."

Smith told the delegates their union can be "proud" of having been "in the vanguard of CIO organizing in the South," and commended the UFWA-CIO for "jumping into the thick of the fight with what money and manpower you had."

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther was scheduled to address the closing session of the convention.

WELCOME to CIO Furniture Workers' convention is extended at left to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, (right) by UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer. Women delegates, reflecting industry conditions, were few, but among them was Mrs. Mildred Lashin (center foreground, right photo), Bridgeport, Conn., a member of the Committee on Local Unions. Shown with her are Bradie Waugh (left), Logan, O., and Raymond Hadden, Walden, N. Y.

Victories

Sixty-eight National Labor Relations Board elections involving nearly 9000 workers were won by the CIO Furniture Workers since the last convention in 1952, Pres. Morris Pizer and Sec.-Treas. Fred Fulford said in their report to the Cleveland convention.

About 90% of all members are covered by group health, welfare and insurance programs, most of them in the union's Insurance Fund. Nearly 14,000 members are covered by international or local union pension programs.

Reason

One of the reasons the CIO Electrical Workers rejected General Electric's inadequate 5c an hour wage offer was that it would have frozen pay rates for 15 months despite the possibility of armed conflict and a jump in living costs, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the Furniture Workers.

"We can't look to the Administration in Washington to protect us," said Carey, who also is IUE-CIO president. "They can't handle McCarthy much less Malenkov."

Furniture Jobs Toll Hits One Worker In Every Six

ONE OF every six workers in the country's furniture industry is unemployed and additional tens of thousands are working part time, the CIO Furniture Workers' convention was told.

The whole character of the industry is changing, according to reports by Pres. Morris Pizer and Sec.-Treas. Fred Fulford and an analysis by David Ramsey, union economist. The emphasis is on increased productivity and fewer jobs, they said.

"Our industry last year was just recovering from its own 1951-52 over-production slump when it was again hit hard in the second half of 1953 by the general decline in the economy," the officers reported.

"Large-scale unemployment created serious problems in our work of organizing the unorganized. Open shop employers, encouraged by the reactionary program of the Eisenhower Administration, fought us with everything in the Taft-Hartley book."

The officers and Ramsey said that from an industry in which the bulk of production has come from small shops, furniture is being increasingly concentrated.

Heavy investments by bank and other financial interests, they explained, have resulted in mergers and formation of large companies which are introducing labor-saving machinery on an increasing scale.

One result, Ramsey said, is that hundreds of long-established small shops have been forced out of business because they lack the capital required to buy the new, modern machinery they must have if they are to remain competitive.

Sugar Import Cut Hits Consumers, Cubans Warn

BILLS being considered by congressional committees would cost the taxpayers several million dollars by increasing the subsidy for domestic sugar growers.

That was brought out at a news conference held at National CIO headquarters by two representatives of the Cuban labor movement who came to this country to protest the measures, which would correspondingly decrease sugar imports from the island.

They are Alfredo Amigo and Joaquin Beceiro, spokesmen for the Cuban Confederation of Workers (CTC) and its affiliate, the National Federation of Sugar Workers (FNTA).

Bills before the House Agriculture and the Senate Finance Committees would subsidize the growth of an additional 300,000 tons of cane and beet sugar, the former in Louisiana and Florida, and the latter in Idaho.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther last Apr. 5 wrote Agriculture Sec. Benson to object to any reduction in sugar imports from Cuba, a position also taken by AFL.

The Cuban union leaders and Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee, pointed out that reduction of the Cuban quota would strengthen the Communists in the island's labor movement.

THE CUBANS said that a reduction in the sugar quota also would cut into Cuban imports from the U. S., which amount to $475-$500 million annually.

The sugar industry's position is that the amount of processing tax collected by the government on domestic sugar more than equals the subsidy, which now amounts to $80-$100 million. However, the industry does not point out that the tax is passed on to the consumers.

FREE LABOR throughout the world remembers June 17, 1953, when the workers of East Berlin rose against Communist oppression. At left, they march German Republic flags through Brandenburg Gate; right, unarmed, they attack one of the tanks the Soviet used to quell them.

BARRIER marking border between East and West Berlin went up in flames.

CIO Praises East Berlin Workers For Rising Against Soviet Rule

IT HARDLY SEEMS only a year ago that the workers of East Berlin flared up against the brutalization of their Communist oppressors in one of history's most dramatic demonstrations of freedom's hold on mankind.

Already June 17, 1953, has gone down as one of the great days in the often bloody annals of the labor movement. The workers of the United States and England, of Japan and India and the Gold Coast and Peru and the rest of the free world, cherish it as they do their own great days.

For it was the workers of East Berlin—the steel makers and auto workers and chemical workers, the machinists and carpenters and masons—who briefly threw off their chains and gave Soviet Russia, with all its military and political might, its worst days since the end of the war.

The gallant gesture brought death to some, wounds to others, long prison terms to many. To those who survived it meant, at best, a slight loosening of the chains that Russian tanks and artillery clamped back on after a few glorious days of freedom.

Failure Of Dictatorship

But it proved one thing beyond any doubt—that the life of a worker behind the Iron Curtain, Communist propaganda to the contrary notwithstanding, is a life of brutality and terror and privation, and that behind the Iron Curtain it is, in fact, the Iron Fist that rules.

The CIO, through Pres. Walter P. Reuther, sent its salute to the heroes of the June 17 uprising in a message to Ernst Scharnowski, head of the West German Trade Union Federation in West Berlin.

The demonstration and those that followed it in other parts of Soviet-controlled Eastern Europe, said Reuther, "was a heartening reassurance of the essential failure of the totalitarian dictatorship."

"These demonstrations, springing directly from the hearts of the East German workers, were heard 'round the world'," he wrote.

"They proved—and the proof has never been seriously challenged by the Communist propaganda agents—that the workers hate the harsh and inhuman policies of the Soviet Communists and their anti-labor puppets in the Soviet Zone of Germany.

"June 17 was a trade unionists' day—when working men and women took the lead in fighting for decent wages and working conditions, for the bread, peace and freedom that are the goals of democracy-loving people everywhere."

Reuther emphasized that the CIO has not forgotten the epic occasion.

"We treasure the memories of June 17," he said. "We value the great inspiration which that day has given to the worldwide fight against totalitarian dictatorship.

"We of the CIO pledge to the freedom-loving people of every section of Germany our support . . . We intend always to be at the side of German workers in their march toward just and humanitarian objectives."

What prompted the East Berlin uprising? Not the fire of freedom that smouldered in every East German breast—that burst into flame only after the demonstration was under way. The West German Government, perhaps unconsciously, might have summed it up in a White Paper it published a few weeks later.

"There was a shortage of everything, even of dry bread," it said.

How Many Killed?

How many workers in East Berlin and other parts of the Soviet Zone of Germany gave their lives for freedom in the uprising last year will probably never be known—but hundreds of them chose death before slavery.

Soviet Russia said 25 persons were killed and 388 injured, but the figures are farcical. The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, in a recent memorandum circulated to member nations of the UN Economic and Social Council, reported knowledge of 569 East Germans killed during the uprising, plus an unknown number later executed by the military, and 1744 wounded.

WREATH from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther honors strikers slain by Reds.

ICFTU Congress welcomed Gunther Eckstein, East Berlin strike leader.

TINY refugee from East eats in West Berlin shelter as Reuther watches.

HUNDREDS of thousands of men and women who had suffered too much besieged Soviet Government building (left) and virtually wrecked it. At right, grim strikers gaze in somber silence as Russia rolls up its armed might, including tanks, to subdue the demonstrators.

Arrogant Pegler Squirms On Witness Stand

By AL ZACK

WESTBROOK Pegler, the union-hating columnist, was obviously the most uncomfortable man in lower Manhattan last week.

He was angry, arrogant and bossy. And he was squirming, embarrassed, defensive and sneering as well.

For Pegler, it was a new experience. He was occupying the witness chair under cross-examination as a defendant in a $500,000 libel suit. The suit was brought by Quentin Reynolds, famed war correspondent, author and radio and TV star, after a Pegler column in November, 1949.

Reynolds attorney, Louis Nizer, was snapping questions at the columnist who has enjoyed more than 20 years of hate-filled writing without ever being challenged. Pegler at times was ducking and weaving like a punch-drunk fighter, but Nizer never let up in his attack.

Inside of three minutes, Pegler had been trapped by Nizer and his odd, strangled voice hit a new high pitch.

Denial Exposed

The day before, Pegler had examined with minute care a large batch of photostats handed him by his lawyer, Charles Henry, the chief trial lawyer for the Hearst interests.

Pegler told the court he had "relied" on the photostated clippings when he wrote his column, although some of the clippings were seven years old at the time Pegler had attacked Reynolds.

Nizer handed Pegler a batch of clippings, asked if he had "relied" on these. Two of them Pegler handed back, denying they had formed a base for his column. Dramatically, Nizer dragged out the exhibits which Pegler had identified a day earlier. Two of the clippings were exact duplicates of the ones Pegler had just denied ever using.

The red-faced, pouting columnist half rose from his seat to demand that Nizer walk away from the witness stand and conduct his questioning from the other side of the courtroom. In the tone of one lecturing to an erring child. Federal Judge Edward Weinfeld explained to Pegler that he couldn't order Nizer around.

Minutes later, Pegler's stocky, tightly-dressed figure stiffened again as Nizer once more challenged his reliability as a witness. Pegler had earlier testified that he had "relied" on an item in a Brooklyn Catholic newspaper in reaching some of the conclusions on which he based his Reynolds column.

More Contradictions

Nizer read a series of sworn questions and answers, taken in 1950 during a pre-trial examination. At that time, Pegler testified he had first seen the Brooklyn paper after the suit had been filed against him, not before he wrote the attack on Reynolds.

With a snarl, Pegler said he "didn't remember" that testimony. With a sneer he characterized a Reynolds article as a "fake and a fraud" but he blustered there was no conflict in his testimony despite the sharp differences between what he said in 1950 and what he said in the courtroom.

A few minutes later, Pegler tried to argue with Nizer. He claimed the testimony given in pre-trial examination wasn't "under oath" because he hadn't signed it. Patiently, Judge Weinfeld told the jury and Pegler that a man's oath "to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth" holds from the moment he raises his right hand, not from the time he affixes his signature to the verbatim transcript.

Nizer read from a column by the late Damon Runyon, beloved Hearst columnist, and asked Pegler if he had "relied" on that in preparing his column about Reynolds. "No," snapped Pegler, And then he said Runyon wasn't "an honorable man, a man of integrity" when he wrote about Reynolds.

WESTBROOK PEGLER
The Hearst columnist (center) glowers as he leaves federal court in N.Y.C.

Running through a hefty batch of items favorable to Reynolds, Nizer drew from Pegler the admission that the union-hating columnist had not "relied" on a single item favorable to Reynolds, but had "relied" on any unfavorable items he could lay his hands on.

Facts Unchecked

Attacking the newspapering ability of many of his Hearst associates, who had praised Reynolds, Pegler said they "didn't check their facts" before writing about the war correspondent. But under searching cross-examination, he admitted he didn't check his column with anyone, didn't make any calls or refer to any documents when he wrote the November 1949 column which had brought him to court.

Before turning Pegler over for cross-examination, his attorney had sought to introduce a 1947 smear campaign against Reynolds which had backfired. The court allowed no hearsay evidence into the record but did allow a full-page newspaper advertisement which Reynolds had written to be read into the record.

In this ad, Reynolds had answered a flock of charges leveled by an up-state New York school superintendent who had received his "information" from the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, which claimed to have "derogatory" material about Reynolds from the files of the House Un-American Activities Committee.

In the ad, Reynolds quoted a friendly, personal letter from FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover, who said Reynolds had "never been the target of an FBI probe." Hoover said he knew Reynolds to be a "confirmed liberal" and Hoover repeated his observation that liberals were among "the most effective foes against communism."

In the same ad, Reynolds named a number of prominent Americans, including Hoover, as character witnesses. Chief among these was Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, who Reynolds knew personally during World War II.

Attacked By Reds

Reynolds also noted the Communist Daily Worker had regularly called him a "warmonger."

During direct examination Pegler was asked his views of Reynolds' political persuasion. "I understand him to be nominally a member of the Democratic party and so far to the left as to be almost out of the party," Pegler snapped.

All In The Family

Editorials in the New York Daily Mirror, top Hearst tabloid, cannot be relied upon.

That advice came last week from Hearst Columnist Westbrook Pegler, who also advised that other Hearst writers are not reliable.

In Pegler's mind, this was proven by the fact that the Mirror and the Hearst writers had editorially praised Quentin Reynolds, while Pegler had attacked him.

Lewis Cleared

Fulton Lewis, Jr., the ultra-conservative radio commentator, last week won a directed verdict of acquittal in a criminal libel case brought against him in Maryland.

The court ordered the acquittal when the state's key witness refused to testify and claimed the protection of the Fifth Amendment.

Still pending against Lewis is another criminal libel charge, scheduled for trial shortly.

PAC Goals Raised By Michigan CIO

AN INTENSIFIED political action program and a per capita tax increase to pay for it were approved by the 900 delegates to the 15th Michigan CIO Council convention in Grand Rapids.

And politics as a theme ran throughout the convention as speakers hammered home the point that gains won at the bargaining table can be sustained or lost in city, state or federal law-making bodies.

Pres. August Scholle, speaking on the convention's full employment resolution, said that political action is the only cure for the present unemployment crisis.

He hit out at the "callous and indifferent attitude" of the Republican Party toward the problem and accused the GOP of believing that "unemployment is a good thing because it creates competition for jobs."

The "how-to-do-it" of politics was spelled out for the delegates by Mrs. Esther Murray, CIO-PAC field director, who emphasized women's role in political action.

The Eisenhower Administration was accused of "officially sponsoring a campaign to make the city worker believe that the farmer is his enemy" by Charles Brannan, former Agriculture Secretary.

Brannan charged that Agriculture Sec. Benson's farm program is "designed to ruin farmers" just as the Taft-Hartley Act was "designed to roll back labor's gains under the New Deal and the Fair Deal."

Both domestic and foreign policies of the Republicans were assailed by CIO Auto Workers' Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey. He stressed that political action is the only way possible to straighten out domestic difficulties and to develop a foreign policy dedicated to the cause of peace.

MICHIGAN'S Gov. Williams (D.) charged that "Washington is not concerned as long as economic troubles are confined to industrial workers, dirt farmers and little businessmen. Washington will act only when the economic downturn begins to be seriously manifest in the profits of big business."

Scholle and Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins were both re-elected by three to one margins.

HUDDLE—Michigan CIO Council Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins (left), re-elected to tenth term, confers with Pres. August Scholle, re-elected to eleventh term. Both won by 3 to 1 votes.

5 Guildsmen Get Scholarships

FIVE OF the 1954 Nieman Fellowships awards for a year's study at Harvard Univ. have been won by members of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

They are: Samuel D. Zagoria, Washington Post reporter and former president of the Washington Guild; Arch Parsons, Jr., UN correspondent for the New York Herald Tribune; Guy E. Munger, Jr., assistant state editor of the Greensboro, N. C., Daily News; Selig S. Harrison, Associated Press foreign correspondent; and Piers B. Anderton, San Francisco Chronicle telegraph editor.

In the 17 years that newspapermen have been awarded the fellowships for a year of background study, 120 of the approximately 200 winners have been Guildsmen, many of them active in Guild affairs at the time.

The fellowships were established under terms of the will of Mrs. Agnes Wahl Nieman, widow of Lucius W. Nieman, founder of the Milwaukee Journal. The expressed intent of the bequest was to "promote and elevate standards of journalism in the United States."

Unions Rap Brownell On Wetbacks

THE NEWLY announced program of Atty.-Gen. Brownell to cure the "wetback" problem has just made "the disease more virulent."

That's what the U. S. members of the Joint U. S.-Mexican Trade Union Committee said last week of Brownell's plan to extend border recruitment of Mexican farm labor for U. S. "factory farms."

Brownell said his program was part of the Eisenhower Administration's plan for farm contract labor. At the Joint Committee's meetings in Mexico last month, delegates unanimously opposed any extension of border recruiting.

The U. S. union members said:

"The politically-potent big growers to whom Brownell and the White House gave heed on this question of border recruitment—growers who are major supporters in California of Vice Pres. Nixon and Sen. Knowland, the Senate majority leader, and who include as a very large grower himself, Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas—understandably want an excess of cheap labor within easy reach just across the border."

24 Unionists Leave On Scandinavian Tour

TWENTY-FOUR CIO members from every section of the U. S. and Canada and from a number of international unions left the U. S. last week for the third annual CIO Scandinavian Labor Education Workshop.

The party took off from Idlewild Airport in New York City for three weeks in Europe as guests of the Trade Union Federations of Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

Members of the workshop team were selected by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research and the Dept. for International Affairs, which sponsor the annual visit to the Scandinavian countries.

Before the departure the group held orientation sessions in New York and were addressed by Victor G. Reuther, director of the International Affairs Dept., and Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Affairs Committee.

BETTY M. SKARING
A West Coast aircraft worker and a . . .

The team members were nominated by their international unions or by CIO state or city councils. Previous team members have shown the value of such workshops in promoting international understanding.

Local leaders who have been connected with the program have demonstrated their growing awareness of world affairs through speaking to union and community groups on their experience in meeting workers in other countries.

This year, CIO received a grant from the United Nations Economic, Social and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to promote travel to other nations.

The following are the team members, with their union affiliation and home towns:

Steelworkers: Melvin Brandenburg, Local 1262, Indianapolis, Ind.; William S. George, USA-CIO staff, Youngstown, O.; Jacob Mathos, Local 1913, Homestead, Pa.; Lester Reynolds, Local 1964, Hickman Mills, Mo.; Archie Authier, Local 3647, Montreal, Que.; Reginald Gisborn, Local 1005, Hamilton, Ont.; S. Brodsky, Winnipeg, Man.; Joseph Svutella, Local 4601, Olean, N. Y.

Rubber: Guido Camuso, Local 243, Lawrence, Mass.; Vincent T. Donohue, Local 232, Toronto, Ont.; Magne Repaal, Local 19, Eau Claire, Wis.

Electrical Workers: John J. Welsh, Local 113, Philadelphia, Pa.; Matthew Stevens, Local 410, Irvington, N. J.; James Fraser, Local 1121, Chicago, Ill.

Clothing Workers: Annette D. Fabrizio, Local 475, Jersey City, N. J.; Doris James, Local 62, Essex, Mo.; Elsa Jefferson, Local 602, New Orleans, La.

Auto Workers: Betty M. Skaring, Local 148, Long Beach, Calif.; Robert J. Ormsby, Local 669, Paterson, N. J.; Thomas Lazzio, Local 300, Paterson, N. J.

Paperworkers, Robert Haynes, Local 1000, Monroe, Mich.; Oil Workers, John Milasich, Local 210, East Chicago, Ind.; Retail-Wholesale, Intl. Rep. Frank E. Meloni, Camden, N. J.; Brewery, Patrick Hurrell, London, Ont., (a member of a local industrial union affiliated with the Canadian Congress of Labor).

REGINALD GISBORN
. . . Canadian engineer are on CIO's Scandinavian tour.

Labor's World—

Russ Labor Boss Boasts Of Factory Speedup Drive

FREE LABOR'S frequent charge that Russian "trade unions" betray the interests of their members were borne out last week when Nikolai M. Shvernik, top man in the Soviet labor "movement," told them substantially the same thing.

In a keynote address to the 11th congress of the Russian unions in Moscow, he took them severely to task for not prodding four ministries he sharply criticized for failures.

Radio Moscow quoted him as charging the Building and Oil Ministries with "systematically failing to fulfill" the goals set for them by the state. The Ministries of Agriculture and State Farms, he complained, had fallen behind in their housing construction for workers.

Shvernik, chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet until Marshall Stalin's death and a close associate of Premier Malenkov, told the union delegates that it was their job to set the ministries straight.

In addition, he said, the unions must "increase Socialist competition, strengthen labor discipline and eliminate formalism in their approach to daily problems."

(Russian "Socialist competition" and "labor discipline" add up to what are known in this country as the speedup, stretch-out and company unionism.)

Hungary

The CIO has protested to the Hungarian Minister in Washington the reported addition of 15 years to the prison term of Anna Kethly in Hungary.

Her continued imprisonment, wrote Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Affairs Committee, is "a mockery of the professions of democracy and treason to the aspirations of the workers for a better life."

South Africa

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has protested to the Intl. Labor Organization that native workers in the Union of South Africa are being deprived of their trade union rights.

The ICFTU said that barring native Africans from the protection of South Africa's basic labor law and the ignoring of trade union rights in the Native Labor Act threatens the trade union rights "most other workers still enjoy." The complaint asserted that these conditions are in violation of the ILO Constitution and its Philadelphia Declaration, as well as running counter to ILO treaties.

He Won't Bargain, So Boss Is Fined

They do things differently in the Philippines, according to the Free Worker, publication of the Federation of Free Workers.

When the Tay Heng Enamel & Aluminum Wares Factory, Inc., of Manila, ignored a request to bargain with a newly-organized FWF union, the workers filed unfair labor practice charges and a strike notice. Company representatives appeared at a government-called conciliation session but refused to bargain, so the firm was hailed into court and fined 50 pesos for violating the Labor Act.

Labor Press Service Starts

A NEW labor press service—Press Associates, PAI — began operations last week, with The CIO News among the initial subscribers.

The new agency is an affiliate of the Public Affairs Institute, economic research center in Washington which is largely supported by U. S. unions.

"Washington Window," the weekly PAI column published frequently in The CIO News, is a part of the news-feature-photo service. Editors are Alexander Uhl and Harry Conn.

'Ugly Gap' In U. S. Civil Rights Record Condemned By Reuther

By DON SMITH

THE U. S. must capture the moral leadership of the world to win the peace, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told Wilberforce University graduates at the Ohio school's 96th commencement.

He strongly criticized this country's civil rights record and said "there is a serious moral gap between America's noble promises and its ugly practices in the field of civil rights."

Reuther, who received an honorary degree of doctor of humanities, told the commencement audience of 1200:

"Peace is the only adequate defense against the H-bomb, and to win the peace we've got to dedicate ourselves to making the better things of life available to people all over the world.

"We've got to provide more leadership in the world. What good are all our material resources unless these material resources are devoted to a moral purpose?"

Reuther said that "our task is not only to stand before the world as a great and rich country, but we must also stand before the world as a great moral power and use that moral power in the interest of the whole human race."

REUTHER, who is also president of the CIO Auto Workers, pointed out that "no other country has the resources we have, yet we are not the symbol to the rest of the world that we should be. And one of our weak spots is our civil rights record."

"There is more Jim Crowism on Sunday mornings in America than on any other day in the week," Reuther said in reference to discrimination in churches. "Christianity is not just something you believe in, but something you must practice seven days a week.

"Civil rights may be a minority problem in the United States, but in the struggle for men's minds throughout the world, it is a majority problem."

Reuther attacked the position of Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina on segregation in public schools, noting that Byrnes said that if the Supreme Court outlawed segregation in schools, his state would abolish its public school system.

"How would you like to argue that position against Communists before an Asiatic audience?" he asked. "That's why we're losing Asia."

He urged the United States to use its material wealth and resources to fight for "a better tomorrow."

"If, for example, we had the moral courage to use our surplus foods to fight hunger and poverty all over the world, it could be a more powerful force than all the H-bombs in the world," Reuther said.

He added that "we must get down off our high, pious plateau and get out and help the people of Asia. We must show the people that the kind of world we are building is a world in which you can have both bread and freedom . . . without putting any soul in chains."

"We need to show the world that we know how to achieve full employment and full production in peacetime as well as in war. That's the great challenge that faces us," Reuther said.

He also paid tribute to Wilberforce, calling it a "living symbol of courage and dedication to the people who have fought the good hard fight."

Citation

In conferring the honorary degree of doctor of humanities on CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Wilberforce University Pres. Charles L. Hill read a statement outlining the CIO leader's activities for which he was honored.

Singled out in the statement Dr. Hill read were such attributes as "contender for the principles of justice, truth, equality and social righteousness for all peoples" and "tireless advocate of national and international democracy."

HONORED—CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther kneels to receive honorary degree of doctor of humanities from Wilberforce University Pres. Charles L. Hill (at extreme right).

You And Your Money—

'Hoax' Of Coffee Shortage Has Cost Us $600 Million More

THE COFFEE SHORTAGE is a "hoax" which swindled U. S. consumers out of an estimated $600 million a year in unnecessary price increases.

So charged Rep. Sullivan (D. Mo.) noting that "our government has sat with its hands folded and has done nothing."

Mrs. Sullivan recalled to the House that she drew attention Jan. 18 to the soaring price of coffee and demanded an investigation.

The President, she said, announced a probe by the Federal Trade Commission. A subcommittee of the Senate Banking Committee started a highly-publicized inquiry. But, the gentlewoman from Missouri reported, nothing has been heard from them five months later. Meanwhile, coffee prices continue to rise.

Minimum Prices Fixed

Even as Mrs. Sullivan was speaking, Pres. Vargas of Brazil issued a decree fixing minimum coffee export prices on the basis of 87c a pound delivered aboard ships at Brazilian ports. The same coffee sold the day before for 83c.

More liberal loans on crops were announced in the same decree to give Brazilian growers "greater resistance" so they "could hold out until they get what they consider a fair price" in view of the current shortage.

However, the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture said there would be no shortage of coffee in this country and that Brazilian declines would be offset by larger plantings elsewhere. U. S. stocks on hand are actually larger than ever but the price has spiralled as though a genuine shortage existed.

Mrs. Sullivan said hoarding and speculation on the coffee market were at the bottom of the price gouge. She said the coffee exchange should be under the same regulations as other commodities. A bill to accomplish this was passed unanimously by the Senate months ago but has been successfully buried by the House Agriculture Committee.

"Action to protect the American consumer against price hikes that have taken coffee off some breakfast tables" was demanded by Mrs. Sullivan.

"The Dept. of State washed its hands of the whole business in a letter to me on Jan. 26 professing that there was nothing it could do about the matter," she told the House.

"Now the Dept. of Agriculture comes forward with the facts to show that the whole thing has been a fraud," she concluded.

FTC Trims Sails To Aid Business

"THE EXPENSE and inconvenience to business" will henceforth be a factor in the investigative work of the Federal Trade Commission, said the agency whose original function was to protect U. S. consumers.

FTC Chairman Edward F. Howrey, the Eisenhower appointee who earlier battled the commission as a corporation lawyer, has announced sweeping changes in the FTC compliance program and procedures.

His program calls for a systematic and selective review of the FTC's 4000 cease and desist orders and 8000 stipulation-agreements to cease and desist as well as some 2000 trade practice rules.

HOWREY announced the FTC had adopted a special committee's recommendation against indiscriminate continuous use of either periodic special reports or annual reports from concerns involved in compliance cases.

"While we are determined to take every reasonable step to bring about compliance with our orders," Howrey said, "the expense and inconvenience to business and their economic consequences must be weighed in the balance with the public interest.

"We have decided that the extraordinary investigatory powers of the Commission should be used only where clearly required to protect the public interest."

FTC has also worked out closer liaison with the Food and Drug Administration, an agency of the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare. The objective of the new agreement is to correlate more effectively and avoid duplication of work in protecting the public against faulty advertising or adulteration of food, drug or cosmetic products.

CSC Backs Red Cross Blood Bank Appeal

THE CIO Community Services Committee has pledged its full support to the American Red Cross in plans to help meet the country's constantly expanding blood needs.

CIO-CSC Chairman Joseph A. Beirne assured Ellsworth Bunker, Red Cross president, that CIO field representatives would be encouraged to assist the 45 Red Cross regional blood programs and interpret them to the CIO membership.

In a conference at the Red Cross national headquarters in Washington, Beirne, who is also president of the CIO Communications Workers, noted that CIO members make many things. But, he said, "despite all our great industrial know-how and skill of our workers, we cannot make blood. Blood comes from only one source—the human being."

"We know," Beirne continued, "the Red Cross is now building a program to meet expanding civilian needs and provide a blood resource for whatever emergency may confront our nation. We dedicate our efforts to those ends."

Bunker expressed hope that the "action of the CIO will be emulated by other organizations in our nation." He added that "only by the widest group participation can the program we envision be firmly established."

The CIO-Red Cross plan points out that "CIO unions in many sections of the country have developed plans with Red Cross regional centers." That cooperation will now be extended to meet increasing needs for blood.

CIO COMMUNITY SERVICES Chairman Joseph Beirne (left) listens as Dr. David N. W. Grant, director of the Red Cross blood program, explains how human blood is bottled for emergency use. Beirne pledged full CIO support to Red Cross Pres. Ellsworth Bunker (right) in meeting U. S. need.

Benson Overridden On Dairy Supports

The House Agriculture Committee voted to override Agriculture Sec. Benson and boost supports for dairy farmers by about 6.5%. The committee voted 22 to 6 to put in the farm bill a mandatory requirement that dairy price supports be hiked to 80% of parity, effective Sept. 1.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

WHERE TO FIND a livable house at a price within reach is still the hardest problem for a moderate-income family. From all parts of the country, letters tell the same story of fading hope that houses will get cheaper.

From Chicago, Mrs. J. R. writes: "Do you think houses will ever get lower? For the last three years my husband has said wait, they are going to be cheaper next year. But each year they are about $1000 more."

From Long Island City, N. Y., Mrs. F. B. writes: "We would like to buy a house, not a new one. According to business reports, prices of older houses are dropping, though I cannot see it. Should we wait until later or go looking now?"

Close Look

The Federal Trade Commission is taking a close look at the coupons decorating the backs of some flour and soap packages.

The agency said applications for complaints have been filed against a number of major food firms. The major complaint is that the coupon offers help to reduce competition.

Here are the facts we have been able to get on the trend of housing prices:

★ Prices for older houses on the average have come down a little from their peak. But the downturn so far has been small compared to the big rise. Prices of existing houses rose on the average of 244% from 1945 to 1952. Since '52, they have dropped an average of only 6.5%.

Continued large-scale building of new houses will force down prices of older ones still further. Those built just before World War II and immediately after are firmest in price. Those over 15 years old have come down more sharply.

Price firmness of existing houses depends much on the desirability of the location, and how anxious the owner is to sell. Thus, finding comparatively good value in an older house requires extensive shopping and bold negotiation. One authority advises never offering more than 80% of the asking price; you can always come up.

★ Prices of new houses are still very firm. Tags on those under $12,000 have remained practically unchanged for the past eight months. Actually, costs of building materials and construction have come down a little. The Bureau of Labor Statistics index of materials prices soared from an index figure of 61.3 in 1945, to 119.9 in '53, and this year has dropped to 119.2.

Improvement in construction techniques has also helped trim the cost of building a house. For example, the Dow Service index indicates that a house which cost $7000 to build (not to buy), in 1945, went up to approximately $10,000 in '50, $12,000 in '52 and is now down to about $11,000.

But you couldn't buy it for $11,000 near a large city. For while the cost of building the house has receded, the cost of land around the rims of the cities has gone up drastically in recent years, and is still going up.

★ The third potential saving is to buy a two-story or story-and-a-half bungalow with expansion attic, rather than the one-story ranch-type which comprises over half the dwellings built since the end of World War II.

This department received some angry letters from readers who prefer the one-story type when we made this statement before. Certainly ranch houses are an attractive style. But the fact remains that a two-story house nearly square in shape enables a builder to enclose more floor area with less wall area, and it is the amount of wall area that most affects cost of a house.

Too, a two-story house doesn't require a large lot. An FHA investigator reported after a visit to one development of new ranch houses, that they were so closely spaced a "rancher standing in his living room could watch the eggs frying in his neighbor's kitchen."

(Copyright 1954 by Sidney Margolius.)

'Miss And Mrs. U. S. Voter' Target Of UAW Auxiliaries

POLITICS, not pots and pans, occupied the attention of CIO Auto Workers Reg. 3 Women's Auxiliaries at a recent all-day conference in Evansville, Ind.

The 69 delegates representing seven auxiliaries devoted their day to discussing "Miss and Mrs. American Voter's responsibilities on the political front," said Mrs. Catherine Gelles, International Rep., UAW-CIO Women's Auxiliaries.

They unanimously adopted a resolution on women's role in political action calling for "year-round political action programs" and urging "each auxiliary to set up active political action and legislative committees to work with the local unions to promote a political action program."

The importance of participation in the political life of the community by CIO women was stressed by National CIO Auxiliaries Pres. Lillian Sherwood. She warned that anti-labor groups conduct well-organized campaigns to mobilize women as voters and campaign workers.

"In many instances," she said, "these campaigns are attempting to reach into industrial communities and affect the wives of CIO members and women workers of the CIO."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

ON MY VISIT to the Tennessee CIO Council in Memphis last week I was greatly impressed by the great job in political action that had been done by our people and their friends. The State of Tennessee can take pride in the men it has sent to the Senate of the United States and in its many fine representatives in the House.

In spite of the political machines of East and West Tennessee, the people of that State have always managed to express their political wisdom through the high calibre of men they have chosen as their political leaders.

The State CIO has played a major role in helping the people of the State of Tennessee in their political affairs. A word should also be said for their Gov. Frank Clement, a good and decent man who has served his people to the best of his ability, and who addressed our Council meeting. The entire function was inspiring and I was certainly glad to take part.

CIO CONTINUES to move rapidly on the organizational front, and Reg. Dir. George DeNucci this week reports three important drives won in his region. DeNucci reports that the Steelworkers have beaten back an attempted raid at Heekin Can Co., Cincinnati, O., by a vote of 360-103.

In two other elections, the Auto Workers were victorious at the W. Bingham Co., Cleveland, O., by a vote of 147-13, and the Buffalo Weaving Co., Alliance, O., by a 43-0 vote.

Elwood D. Swisher, president and organization director of the CIO Chemical Workers, reports a significant representation election victory at Linde Air Products Co., Kittanning, Pa., another division of Carbide and Carbon Corp., by a vote of 106-3. John Boyd and Peter Aversa worked on this campaign, Swisher states.

THE NEWSPAPER GUILD has added two new units to its organization, all departments of the Kensington, Pa., Guide and the Portland Oregonian Promotion Dept.

NABET continues its organizational progress on the West Coast, according to word from Reg. Dir. Irwin De Shetler. The victory came at an election held for employes of Television, Inc., with Rep. Syd Rose in charge.

Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst advises of a UAW-CIO victory at Doleman Lamp Co., Wichita, Kans. More than a thousand workers were involved in the election. UAW won by better than two to one.

The CIO Oil Workers, through Sec.-Treas. Tom McCormick, report a fine election victory at Phillips Petroleum Co., Arco, Ida., by a vote of 142-3.

Strike Vote Turns Pay Cut Demand Into 6c Boost

IT TOOK a strike vote to do it, but Local 1037 of the CIO Paperworkers turned a management-proposed wage cut into a 6c hourly package increase during recent negotiations.

The Harvey Paper Products Co. at Sturgis, Mich., had proposed working condition changes equivalent to a 3c an hour pay cut. What the UPA local won was a flat 5c raise plus 1c to 6c in adjustments for a third of the work force, according to Rep. Darrell King.

At American Coating Mills Div. of the Robert Gair Co. in Elkhart, Ind., UPA members were forced into a three-week walkout but the result was a 12c package boost which better than doubled management's previous top offer.

UPA Pres. Harry Sayre, a former worker at the Elkhart mill, hailed the victory and said it was "particularly significant since this was the first time in the history of our union that we were seriously presented with the alternative of accepting the company's final offer or having it put into effect for those employes who would accept."

Atomic Wage Hike Proposed

A PROPOSED 6c hourly wage boost for 4500 atomic energy production workers, members of the CIO Chemical Workers, will be taken under advisement this week by the local unions involved.

The President's Atomic Energy Labor Relations Panel, headed by Cyrus S. Ching, former Federal Mediation Service chief, made the recommendation for the across-the-board increase retroactive to Apr. 15.

The wage dispute is between the Carbide and Carbon Chemicals Co., which operates the plants for the government, and UGCCW Local 550 at Paducah, Ky., and Local 288 at Oak Ridge, Tenn.

Tanker Bill Changes Hit

THE CONFERENCE of American Maritime Unions has protested a bill which would authorize the government to build 20 tankers.

Twelve CIO and AFL unions belong to the CMU, including the Maritime Union, Radio Association and the Marine Engineers.

A House Armed Services subcommittee voted out the bill after rejecting a Senate-passed measure favored by CMU which would provide for the chartering by the government of the tankers. CMU fears that under the subcommittee measure the vessels would be operated by the Military Sea Transport without union personnel.

Transit Workers Open Talks As State Board Capitulates

THE CIO Transport Workers last week were bargaining for most of the 44,000 employes of New York City's transit system after a strike was averted.

The strike was scheduled to begin after the state-created Transit Authority altered its position. Hailing the victory, the local announced:

"The Transit Authority has agreed to collective bargaining on (the local's) full 15-point program, the final agreement to include a signed contract, exclusive representation, impartial arbitration and (better) grievance procedure."

The Authority has consistently retreated during the dispute, which began when it rejected the report of the fact finding board set up by Mayor Robert F. Wagner to avert a strike last Dec. 31. Local 100 accepted the report, provided the authority also accepted it.

FACED WITH the strike threat and a pledge of support for TWU from the half million members of the New York City CIO Council, the Authority modified its position. It agreed to discuss wages, but continued to reject the major recommendations of the fact finders. Local 100 called for bargaining on its original 15-point program.

In announcing the action averting the strike, TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill said the local's executive board had voted "an indefinite cancellation, not a postponement." He said that the union and the state board were "still a long way apart, but we will close the gap, I hope."

"We expect to continue the daily sessions until we reach an agreement," Quill said. He pointed out that the strike threat was caused by the Authority because "there is no program amongst themselves and no unity."

TWU Wins $1 Million In Airline Hike

THE CIO Transport Workers have negotiated a new contract with the Pan American World Airways which puts an additional $1 million a year in the pockets of the union's members in wage increases and fringe benefits.

The airways employs some 6300 TWU-CIO members. Ground employes gained a 6c an hour across-the-board increase. Stewards, stewardesses and pursers obtained a $7.50 a month pay increase with their required hours of work cut from 85 to 70 a month.

TWU-CIO won time-and-a-half for overtime for flight personnel and claimed it was the first airline union to win such premium pay for this category of workers. The contract was ratified by an eight-to-one vote.

Return Trip To GM

Roger M. Kyes, who resigned recently as the Defense Dept.'s deputy secretary, is returning to General Motors as a vice president, director and member of the top-ranking operations policy committee.

WARM WELCOME—John Mullen (left), CIO Steelworkers PAC director, Lorne Nelles (center), acting director USA-CIO Dist. 36 and CIO Executive Vice Pres. John Riffe smile appreciatively for Tennessee CIO Council delegates Wanda Smith, CIO Electrical Workers, and Betty Barber, CIO Clothing Workers.

Tennessee CIO Votes To Expand PAC, Save TVA

By PAUL HARDING

REPUBLICAN schemes to "dismember" the Tennessee Valley Authority were the chief concern of the 15th convention of the Tennessee CIO Council in Memphis.

With virtually every speaker touching on the subject, the approximately 425 delegates, officers and visitors clearly indicated that the people of Tennessee are not going to submit willingly to wrecking of the multi-purpose facility.

ISSUES which drew next most attention were:

1. Unemployment and failure of the Eisenhower Administration to take effective remedial measures.

2. Inadequate teacher pay schedules and need for additional school facilities.

3. A 3c per capita tax increase to finance an expanded PAC program.

CIO Reg. Dir. Paul Christopher of Knoxville led the attack on the national Administration's attitude toward TVA. "TVA is in danger," he warned, "along with the whole region it serves.

"There's an old saying," Christopher recalled, "that if you want to cripple a region you shut off its power. You won't have new plants without power and you won't have new jobs without power."

Christopher reminded the delegates that Candidate Eisenhower in 1952 promised that "TVA will be taken care of . . . strengthened . . . made more effective," but that after he took office in 1953 he termed TVA "creeping socialism."

CIO EXECUTIVE Vice Pres. John V. Riffe told the delegates of CIO's efforts to prod the Republican Administration into action on unemployment. The answer from the White House, he said, was that in effect things are not bad; there are only a few million people unemployed.

But Riffe reported that "more relief is being handed out than was given at the depths of the depression."

Lorne Nelles of Atlanta, Southern CIO director and acting director of CIO Steelworkers Dist. 36, also warned of the danger of the unemployment situation and declared, "all situations of this kind are man-made and can only be corrected by the efforts of men."

James Hardin, CIO Auto Workers representative, of Memphis, was unanimously elected president of the Council. William Frazier, Steelworkers, Chattanooga, was unanimously elected first vice president and will succeed Hardin.

Correction On PAC Institute

A story in the June 7 issue of The CIO News concerning a PAC training program sponsored by the Cook County CIO Council of Chicago, erroneously stated that the PAC institute was "meant to supplement the work of Cook County CIO Council's union counselling service."

Actually the Community Services Committee people at the PAC Institute served only as "resource" speakers at one of the 12 panel discussions conducted by the institute.

CWA Settles Another Pact

WAGE increases of 5-7c an hour for day rate workers and 4-6c for piece workers have been won by the CIO Communications Workers in a contract at the Lincoln, Nebr., plant of Western Electric.

The settlement, the fourth this year with Bell System units, covers 850 workers and provides that the Friday before Christmas will be observed as a holiday this year.

The four settlements cover 11,000 workers in the manufacturing-research arm of the telephone industry. Bargaining sessions for nine other Bell units covering 75,000 workers now are under way and 19 other contract parleys are scheduled before late summer.

CIO Warns Task Force—

'Power Monopoly Strangling New England'

By MILTON PLUMB

TWO SPOKESMEN for National CIO last week gave the Hoover Commission Task Force on Water Resources and Power a first-hand account of the economic strangulation which results from high electric rates imposed by a private power company monopoly.

Pointing to the six New England states as the only major U. S. geographic region where "there is not a single federal power development of any kind," Solomon Barkin cited U. S. Census figures showing that the area's power costs are 52% higher than in the country as a whole, 80% more than in North Carolina and 246% higher than Tennessee's.

Barkin, research director of the CIO Textile Workers, charged that the private utility monopoly has held back development of New England's rich potential of hydro-electric power and, by foisting "the highest electric rates in the country" on the region, has restricted household and industrial consumption. (See adjoining story.)

Also speaking for CIO was Stephen G. McMullen, member of the national executive board of the CIO Chemical Workers and the union's Niagara Falls director. He blasted Eisenhower Administration power policies for failing to require preference in electric sales from the proposed Niagara power development to public and cooperative systems.

McMullen noted that the House passed a bill to turn the project over to five private electric companies and that the Senate has before it a bill for New York state development without the "usual public preference clause."

He warned that either would "eliminate the yardstick effect of the project and leave private monopoly in a strong position to maintain high rates and restrict consumption."

"We are concerned with the fact that these local community systems throughout the region of New England, New York and Pennsylvania must pay from two to three times as much for their wholesale power supply as do similar non-profit systems in the South and Pacific Northwest," McMullen declared.

ANOTHER VIEW on power development questions was presented by Pres. Andrew J. McMahon of the big New York City Local 1-2 of the CIO Utility Workers.

"We are in complete disagreement with the policies of CIO on this matter," McMahon declared. He said he was representing the "unanimously adopted" position of his union "throughout the entire U. S."

Referring to previous testimony before the Task Force by CIO Vice Pres. O. A. Knight, McMahon said those views do not represent the position of the Utility Workers.

McMahon said his union is strongly opposed to further public power developments because "we do not want to be employes of any government or governmental agency."

UNDER QUESTIONING by Task Force Chairman Ben Moreell, the CIO spokesman, Barkin, attempted to "clarify the record" in regard to the different viewpoint on power development expressed by the Utility Workers spokesman.

He pointed out that only the CIO convention can speak with final authority for the entire CIO, but that Knight's earlier testimony had fully reflected the position unanimously adopted at the last convention in Cleveland, and that he had, therefore, been speaking for the CIO in his Denver statement.

"The CIO isn't doctrinaire on this subject," Barkin said, "and we're happy differences exist. But we know that power rates in this region are far in excess of what they should be. We favor public power development to obtain a low-rate yardstick that will force the present power monopoly to meet fair competition."

McMullen said that the importance of low-cost power to the growth of a region was indicated by the fact that between 1900 and 1930, when existing power at Niagara was being absorbed, the city of Niagara Falls grew at three to four times the national rate, but from 1930 to 1940, after all the existing hydroelectric power had been absorbed, its rate of growth was less than half that of the country.

Expanded use of electricity in the Niagara-St. Lawrence region would follow lower rates under public development of hydroelectric power and its marketing under the preference clause, McMullen contended.

He said that this would mean an expanded market for electric appliances and farm equipment, and more jobs for workers employed in their manufacture.

FRIENDLY DIFFERENCES.—Hoover Commission Task Force Chairman Ben Moreell discusses testimony with CIO spokesmen Stephen G. McMullen (right) and Solomon Barkin at New York hearing. In the past, Moreell has criticized power policies which CIO supports.

Brainwashing

Investor groups and private electric companies have conducted a "propaganda brainwashing" campaign in recent years against non-profit electrical systems.

That's what Clyde T. Ellis, executive manager of the National Rural Electric Cooperative, told the new Hoover Commission Task Force on Water Resources and Power.

"It is perfectly apparent that the American attitude toward the electric power industry has always been an anti-private monopoly attitude," Ellis said. He termed public development of power resources a "democratic right and sound economics."

"FULL-SCALE and immediate" multi-purpose development of New England's rivers under a federal program is needed "if New England is to move forward and not become an economic problem for the nation," the CIO said last week.

Appearing before the Task Force on Water Resources and Power of the Hoover Commission at hearings in New York City, Solomon Barkin, CIO Textile Workers research director, contended:

1. The present private power company monopoly's success in blocking all attempts at federal power development in New England has helped make the region "much worse off than the rest of the nation, not only with respect to its power, but also economically."

2. Only multi-purpose regional development of New England rivers, "under federal power policies similar to those which have been such a great success of the TVA," can bring full development of the region's power potential.

3. By forcing the present private power companies to adopt business methods to meet competition with low-cost public power, such development would greatly increase the sales of New England utilities and boost their profits above present levels.

BARKIN CHARGED that the high power rates prevailing throughout New England have contributed to its recent economic decline. And, he added, the "high-cost, limited output" policies followed by New England power companies result in lowered profits for the companies themselves.

"Private power companies in areas aided by federal power development have consistently enjoyed higher profits than those enjoyed by New England utilities," he said.

Noting that "apologists" for New England utilities have attributed the great difference in their rates to the higher fuel costs which prevail in the region, Barkin said that less than one-quarter of the cost differential is due to this factor.

"Operating costs of New England private power companies are running about 48% higher per kilowatt hour of electricity sold to consumers than the average for the rest of the U. S.," he pointed out. "Office overhead expenses are about 58% higher and their fixed charges, including depreciation and net operating income, are about 36% higher."

BARKIN ARGUED that New England needs the stimulus of healthy competition between private and public power.

He said that the policies now being followed by the power companies there are "more akin to the European cartel concept of dividing up scarcity than the American philosophy of taking lower unit profits on abundance for a greater net income on the entire operation."

"It is time," he added, "that the private power monopoly in New England woke up to the economic facts of the 20th century."

6-21

Atom Power Monopoly Moves Hit

ANY CHANGES in the Atomic Energy Law must contain safeguards against private monopoly of atomic power, Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) told the Senate last week.

Sparkman said development of atomic power is "potentially the greatest asset we have discovered in a century." It is an asset now owned by all the people and it must be used for their benefit, he declared.

He said he would insist on a continuation of a national power policy that recognizes the validity and value of federal, state and local development and ownership of power facilities; full protection of rural electric systems and participation by and full protection of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

SPARKMAN emphasized that any new law must provide "equal opportunity for small business to share in whatever plan may be set up for private development of atomic power for civilian and military uses."

"Moreover," Sparkman went on, "patents for atomic energy development and use would not be given to a handful of companies as Administration spokesmen apparently have in mind."

TVA Power Ruling Hit

AMERICAN taxpayers will foot the bill for an extra $90 million because Pres. Eisenhower last week directed a private utility to supply power through the TVA for the atomic energy plant at Paducah, Ky.

Rep. Holifield, (D. Calif.) made this estimate of the difference in costs if the Tennessee Valley Authority supplied the power. A private firm will build a $107 million plant under a direct order from the President.

Sen. Gore (D. Tenn.) at once challenged the "wisdom and legality" of the action. Holifield claimed the Administration proposal was a "flat violation" of the spirit and letter of the Atomic Energy Law.

Sen. Green, Oldest Member Of Senate, Seeks 4th Term

SEN. GREEN (D. R. I.)—the oldest present member of the Senate — has announced his candidacy for re-election for a fourth term.

A former governor of his State, Green has served in the Senate since 1936 and is one of its most respected members. He is 86.

While governor he sponsored enabling legislation to permit Rhode Island to participate in the federal Social Security program and helped to get old age and minimum wage legislation through the General Assembly.

Green is an influential member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and has many times represented the U. S. abroad on matters of legislation. He was a co-sponsor of the law which provided voting privileges for U. S. armed forces during World War II.

A friend of organized labor, the Senator voted against the Taft-Hartley Act and is a co-sponsor of a bill to bring about its repeal. He has consistently supported measures which have labor's endorsement.

SEN. GREEN

CIO on ABC
Monday thru Friday
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS

Steel Talks Stalemated
—See Page 3

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., June 28, 1954 — 82 — Vol. 17, No. 26

Showdown Vote Is Near At GE's Biggest Plant

By AL ZACK

A SHOWDOWN vote will be held this week between the CIO Electrical Workers and the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers at the key Schenectady plant of General Electric.

The National Labor Relations Board last week set balloting for Wednesday, June 30.

The election order brought to an abrupt halt a three and one-half month long campaign of delays and stalling instigated by the UE, which was expelled by CIO in 1949 as Communist-dominated.

Eligible to vote in the crucial election are 20,000 GE workers, last big bloc in the UE camp. The election is particularly significant since other GE workers, still weighing abandonment of UE and affiliation with IUE-CIO, are closely watching the results.

Local 301 in Schenectady has long been a key factor in UE's plans, not alone because of its size or its importance as the headquarters operation of General Electric. But much top-secret U. S. defense work comes out of the Schenectady GE works and UE has long weighed that factor.

All of the top local officers, veteran leaders of Local 301, have personally urged the members to vote for IUE-CIO, with the single exception of one woman executive board member. She deserted the other seven executive board members and went with UE.

DESPITE attractive bait dangled by UE organizers, with seemingly unlimited purse strings, no responsible local leader has abandoned IUE-CIO.

UE thus was forced to set up a "paper" union, with headquarters, a staff of 100 paid UE organizers rushed to Schenectady from all over the country and led by the three top UE officers with propaganda experts and all the paraphernalia of an organizer's campaign.

But they have lacked one important ingredient of a successful union building operation—members.

Despite all the UE claims in daily handbills, press releases, radio broadcasts and weekly telecasts, few GE workers have lined up with the organization which IUE-CIO has long branded as "discredited." Proof of this lies in UE's failure to fill all the top spots in its "local leadership."

MEANTIME, IUE-CIO Local 301 leaders have conducted a consistent campaign of telling all the facts, keeping the membership fully informed on all developments, and demonstrating the lies of UE's propagandists.

Chief among these has been a campaign to scare GE workers by shouting that all the hard won trade union rights, such as seniority and piece rates, will be lost if the workers vote IUE. IUE-CIO contracts, of course, grant all these protections.

Business Agent Leo Jandreau, and other top local officers, have carefully pointed out this fact to GE workers and the daily demolition of UE's false propaganda has won support to IUE-CIO.

Local 301 officers hailed the setting of the election date, pointing out that UE's delaying tactics had stalled the unity of GE workers at a crucial period, in the midst of contract negotiations.

Jandreau said the election would end GE's "abuse" of its workers. He pointed out that during the long delay engineered by UE, which used all the traditional anti-union employer tactics including injunctions, GE had profited at its employes' expense.

MANY grievances remain to be settled, with the company having engaged in a concerted campaign to cut rates, reduce seniority and provoke disturbances.

Jandreau charged both UE and GE feared "the democratic decision" of Schenectady GE workers. Their "joining together to prevent this democratic vote," Jandreau charged, demonstrated "complete disregard for the welfare of Schenectady workers."

Jandreau also charged GE was costing Schenectady $150,000 a week by its refusal to accept the "just and reasonable wage and other contractual proposals of IUE-CIO."

A Winner

Since the first of this year, the CIO Electrical Workers have won bargaining rights in 37 representation elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board. They also gained direct recognition for three other plants.

More '54 Ammunition Is Offered By PAC

MORE LITERATURE to help CIO members in the political campaigns shaping up for the fall is being made available by the CIO Political Action Committee.

Ready for mailing now is an illustrated leaflet, Everything We Have, which describes the relationships between workers and farmers. The content is similar to a previous leaflet, but it has been redesigned to make it more readable. It may be obtained now at 2c per copy.

Another one of the 54 Facts series, likewise dealing with relations between the city worker and the farmer, may be ordered now at 3c per copy. Done in the familiar point-to-a-page style, it is illustrated by the same artist whose drawings in '54 Facts-Farmers aroused much favorable comment.

The CIO-PAC notes that both booklets should be helpful to local political committees which plan booths at county and state fairs.

Coming up by the end of the month will be the fourth edition of the PAC Speakers' Handbook. For the first time it contains a detailed index so specific information can be quickly located. It is in loose leaf form, and to those who return to CIO-PAC an attached card, supplements will be sent during the summer to keep it up to date. There will be but one printing, so the CIO-PAC is asking purchasers to give it estimates of their orders.

All publications may be ordered from CIO-PAC at 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Reuther Pledges Help To NAACP On Civil Rights

"WARM GREETINGS" to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and a pledge of continued CIO help in the fight for civil rights was voiced last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

His greetings were sent to the NAACP's 45th annual convention, under way this week in Dallas, Tex. CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey was scheduled to address the convention.

Reuther cited the "magnificent unanimous decision" of the U. S. Supreme Court a few weeks ago ending segregation in public schools, and added:

"Now all of us must roll up our sleeves for the job of translating that decision into practical realities in the school systems of the country."

TAFT-HARTLEY'S first legal enforcer, former Gen. Counsel Robert N. Denham of the National Labor Relations Board, died at 68.

McCarthy Pal Beached In Maine; Flanders Presses Contempt Move

BEACHED on the rock-bound coasts of Maine last week was the myth that McCarthyism is unbeatable at the polls.

By a margin of almost five-to-one, Maine Republican voters renominated — and thus virtually assured of re-election—Sen. Margaret Chase Smith.

Mrs. Smith

Trounced in the primary was Robert L. Jones, whose campaign was given a personal sendoff last winter by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.).

Mrs. Smith, renominated for a second term, was one of the cosigners in 1950 of the "declaration of conscience" which was one of the first senatorial protests against McCarthy's unrestrained investigating operations.

And Jones campaigned on a platform which included "McCarthyism" as one of its planks and featured denunciations of "internationalism."

The vote, for all but four of the State's 626 precincts, was 96,232 for Mrs. Smith to 20,241 for Jones.

In the foreground of the Maine contest, according to the Smith forces, was "Texas oil money." Jones was a heavy user of television. But the Texas oil millions proved futile in Maine as they did some weeks ago against Sen. Sparkman (D.) in Alabama.

In the background were overtones of race-baiting. According to a report in the Scripps-Howard papers, the violently anti-semitic paper, "Common Sense," was widely distributed in Portland, Bangor and other cities shortly before election day. A portrait of McCarthy was featured on the cover.

Jones said he didn't know anything about the distribution.

(In California recently, one of McCarthy's strong supporters, State Sen. Jack B. Tenney, was defeated for re-election after an outright anti-Jewish campaign.)

While the Maine election results were coming in, Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.) announced that he is going ahead with his move to strip McCarthy of his committee chairmanships—any and all GOP opposition to the contrary.

Despite efforts of Senate Republican Leader Knowland (Calif.) to shelve Flanders' proposal, and a similar resolution by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.), in the Rules Committee, the Vermont lawmaker said he will demand action on his proposal by mid-July.

And, Flanders added, "I have not been discouraged by Administration leaders."

CIO Supports Mexican Workers In Wage Fight

FULL SUPPORT of the CIO in the fight of the Mexican Confederation of Labor (CTM) to maintain living standards in that country was pledged by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther last week in a telegram to CTM Sec.-Gen. Fidel Velasquez.

Mexican workers have been badly affected by the recent devaluation of the currency. The telegram was sent from Detroit, where the CIO Auto Workers, of which Reuther also is president, was host to eight Mexican auto union leaders.

"The CIO heartily supports our trade union colleagues of the CTM in their defense of the living standards of Mexican workers against the reduction in purchasing power of their wages resulting from the recent devaluation of the peso," the wire said.

"We know that these living standards must be protected and further raised so that those who work have a decent share of what they produce and a visible stake in the maintenance and extension of their democratic rights.

"Your action for wage increases merits the support of all organized labor. The CIO pledges its full support and solidarity and its best wishes for complete success in your current struggle."

The Mexican auto union leaders' visit to Detroit grew out of the CIO and UAW-CIO programs for strengthening the ties between the free labor movements of the world as one means of combating totalitarianism of both right and left.

The invitation was extended through Velasquez by Reuther in his dual role as head of the UAW-CIO and president of the Automotive Div. of the Intl. Metalworkers Federation. In it, Reuther voiced the UAW's long desire to "establish closer personal ties with their brother trade unionists south of the border who likewise are employed in the automotive industry."

A visit by a Mexican delegation, he added, would "also give us the much-needed opportunity to establish closer organizational bonds which will be of mutual benefit."

The delegation conferred with UAW-CIO officials, visited the annual summer school of the Michigan State CIO Council at the FDR-CIO Labor Center, Port Huron, Mich., toured the Ford Motor Co. River Rouge plant and visited offices of Ford UAW-CIO locals.

'Day And Night' Talks Asked By McDonald As Steel Pacts Expire

FEELS BETTER — "Very satisfactory" is the condition of Harry Truman, but he's still in for a long recovery after an emergency appendix and gall bladder operation in Kansas City. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wired "warmest best wishes for a full and speedy recovery."

THE DECISIVE negotiations of the CIO Steelworkers with U. S. Steel Corp. approached a showdown last week on the eve of expiration of contracts covering 600,000 workers in basic steel plants across the nation.

The USA-CIO Intl. Wage Policy Committee emphatically rejected as "unsatisfactory" a limited offer by Big Steel for some pension and social insurance improvements — an offer from which a general wage increase was noticeably lacking.

The whole proposition was estimated to amount to 4.5c an hour, and Pres. David J. McDonald called it "totally unacceptable."

With the basic steel contracts expiring on June 30, there were these developments:

1. The Wage Policy Committee, in turning down Big Steel's offer, authorized the USA-CIO's officers to "take whatever action they deem necessary" to back up the union's demands for comprehensive improvements throughout the basic steel contracts.

2. McDonald emphasized that the union is standing by its "no contract, no work" policy—of not working without a new contract or a temporary extension of the present agreement—but voiced "hope" that a settlement may be reached.

3. Union negotiators were pressing for a renewal of bargaining sessions with Bethlehem, Republic and other steel producers, and there were indications that further sessions with U. S. Steel—which traditionally sets the pace for the industry—would be held late last week.

"THE PRESENT proposals," said McDonald, "don't meet the requirements of this organization."

He called for "intensified negotiations" on a "day and night basis" in an effort to reach a settlement.

With the 170-member Wage Policy Committee standing by in Pittsburgh for further meetings, the union president said "I hope to have something which I can recommend to them as a satisfactory settlement."

McDonald added that some USA-CIO locals have begun what he called "routine" discussions with plant management on preparations for shutting down the mills, if a strike should become necessary.

DETAILS of the rejected Big Steel offer were withheld by the company. In total, according to McDonald, they amounted to "less than 5c an hour."

The U. S. Steel offer covered in part the union's proposals in two major fields:

Pensions: Some liberalization of the existing $100-a-month pension, including social security benefits. The offer, it was reported, was far short of the union's proposal for total pensions of $175 to $185 a month.

Social Security: Some improvement of existing health and welfare insurance plans, but no concession by the company on the union's demand that these be shifted from a contributory basis to a non-contributory program. Cost of these benefits now are shared.

And there were no proposals at all from management in three important fields: general wage increases, the guaranteed annual wage, and overhauling and improvement of working conditions sections of the contract.

A union spokesman summed up the situation: "I think we got the run around, and I think we may get it again, but we still hope to have a contract signed, sealed and delivered before July 1."

TWUA Backs Drive For Jobless Benefits Boost

AN "IMMEDIATELY URGENT and necessary" action by Congress for the relief of jobless workers is the substantial improvement and standardization of our unemployment compensation laws.

That's what Washington Rep. John W. Edleman of the CIO Textile Workers told the House Ways and Means Committee. He said TWUA strongly supports and urges enactment of H. R. 9430 introduced by Rep. Forand (D. R. I.) and almost 90 other House members.

"This union advocates passage of H.R. 9430 both as a very necessary prop for our total economy during this period of mounting unemployment and as a long-delayed measure of social justice," Edelman said.

"In addition, we point out that there would be a very special value to the roughly one million textile workers scattered in some 30 states who have been suffering in varying degrees, depending on the particular branch of the industry, from a steadily contracting demand for the products which their plants manufacture."

The TWUA spokesman presented a compilation of levels of employment and weekly manhours worked in 23 principal textile states between February 1951 and April 1954.

ACCORDING to these data, Edelman said, there has been a 21.2% drop in textile employment in that period and a decline in manhours of 28.2%.

"The woolen and worsted section by and large is the most badly hit portion of the industry . . . which has experienced the most prolonged difficulties," he said.

Textile employment in the New England states, Edleman reported, has dropped 39.7% in the period covered by the survey and manhours have been cut 44.2%.

The results of a sample study made by a Rhode Island college of what is happening to men and women thrown out of work by mill closings were cited by Edelman. Investigators interviewed 131 people who were laid off for over a year.

Only 29% of the group had found new jobs and while the survey did not deal closely with this aspect, Edelman said he was positive they were employed at less desirable jobs and at lower wages than formerly.

Another 18% of the group have retired from the labor market.

Phony Jobless Aid Tax Bill Gets Okay

The Reed Unemployment Compensation Tax Bill, opposed by the CIO and the Eisenhower Administration, was approved last week by the Senate Finance Committee in practically the same form as it was received from the House.

The CIO opposed it because it would undermine all effective federal leadership in unemployment insurance, make a farce of the federal appropriation process, and offer harsh loan provisions to states in need because of heavy unemployment instead of giving them genuine help. Important changes sought by the Administration were rejected in the House and by the Senate committee.

Auto Output Is Falling Off

THE SUMMER cutbacks in auto production already are under way, with shutdowns for new '55 models a few weeks away.

According to the trade paper, Ward's Automotive Reports, auto production now is running 6% below May for the first decline this year.

The CIO Auto Workers reported that General Motors has laid off 1275 workers at its Pontiac and Fisher Body Div. in Pontiac, Mich.

CIO, AFL Dinner To Build For 'Closer Fraternal Bonds'

SEVERAL hundred leaders of CIO and AFL unions will attend a dinner in Washington next week to celebrate the signing and ratification of the AFL-CIO No-Raiding Agreement.

The dinner, to be held on June 29 at the Mayflower Hotel, was suggested at the recent meeting of the AFL-CIO Unity Committees.

Presiding at the dinner will be David L. Coke, former director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, who was named impartial umpire under the No-Raiding Agreement.

The other speakers will be AFL Pres. George Meany and CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

INVITATIONS to attend the dinner have been sent out to the presidents and other executive officers of the 111 unions affiliated with the AFL and to the 33 unions affiliated with the CIO.

The dinner will follow meetings of the CIO Executive Committee set for June 28 and the CIO Executive Board on June 29.

In announcing the dinner, Meany and Reuther declared:

"The signing and ratification of the No-Raiding Agreement between our organizations is an historic step. We are confident that the achievement of the No-Raiding Agreement was a successful step toward labor unity in the United States and Canada.

"The time has come for the leaders of the AFL and CIO unions to know each other better, in order that the No-Raiding Agreement may function in a spirit of understanding and fraternal friendship.

"It is our belief that the June 29 dinner will help pave the way toward closer fraternal bonds between the unions of our two organizations."

'Inconsequential,' Says Sen. Murray On School Bills

"INCONSEQUENTIAL . . . not to say trifling" is the description which Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) has pinned on three Administration education bills recently voted by the Senate.

The measures — all providing more talk and no action—would authorize a White House and state education conference and establishment of a National Advisory Commission on Education. They also provide for U. S.-financed research on school needs.

Murray said the Administration's plans do nothing but authorize "unnecessary" conferences and "authorize a little research" while the nation's growing needs for new school construction "go unanswered."

What's Happened To Our Economy In The Past Year

In quick summary, here's what's happened to the U. S. economy as it started sliding downhill in the past year.

- Over the last year (May to May) total non-agricultural employment has declined by one million. Agricultural employment is up 400,000, making a total civilian employment decline of 600,000.
- Because of a net increase in the labor force of 700,000 and because of an increase in productivity which displaces 1.8 million workers a year, a total of 2.5 million new jobs each year must be provided.
- Manufacturing employment over the last nine months, beginning in September, has declined 1,734,000. In May there were 10.1 million workers employed for less than 35 hours a week, as compared with 9.3 million a year ago.
- According to the Commerce Dept., 31.6% of those currently unemployed have been unemployed for 15 weeks or more. During the first five months of this year, 658,000 workers exhausted their unemployment compensation benefits.
- In the week ending June 12, 286,069 workers received their first unemployment compensation checks. This is 23,000 more than the preceding week and 116,000 more than a year ago. In the same week 2,035,000 workers were receiving unemployment insurance, 1.2 million greater than a year ago.
- Steel production currently is running at 72.6% of capacity. This means that the current week's production will be 450,000 tons of steel short of the same week a year ago.
- Auto production is off 15% from a year ago. During second half of 1954 auto production is scheduled to drop one-third below first half of 1954.
- Industrial production is off 9% from a year ago. The reported upturn from April to May is the result of the figure being seasonally adjusted. Actual operating rate for industrial production in May was identical with April.
- Business failures in the week of June 12 totalled 206 as compared with 218 the preceding week and 167 in the similar week a year ago. Most of these business failures were among small businesses.

The Silly Season

How silly can those Republican policy makers get? The answer: Very silly.

According to AP reporter Rowland Evans, the Veterans Administration issued a press release commemorating the 10th anniversary of the passage of the GI Bill of Rights.

The news release incidentally mentioned that law had been signed by Pres. Roosevelt on June 22, 1944. That brought protests from some GOP Congressmen. So-o-o, a new release was issued, with all mention of FDR out.

But we're willing to make a bet: If the Republicans were to delete every mention of Franklin D. Roosevelt from every volume in the Library of Congress, they'd never be able to erase from the hearts of the American people the great memory of FDR and the New Deal.

Deadlock In Steel

As this paper goes to press, the United Steelworkers has not yet reached agreement with the steel companies, and has rejected as altogether unsatisfactory a counter-proposal from U. S. Steel Corp.

It is to be hoped that a mutually satisfactory collective bargaining agreement can be worked out between the steel union and the companies before the contract expires on June 30.

Whatever transpires in the next few days, the Steelworkers have the full moral and fraternal support of the CIO and its affiliated unions.

'Just Plain Loaded'

The Administration's tax bill, which is due to reach the floor of the Senate this week, is "just plain loaded"—to use the words of liberal Sen. Humphrey (D.) of Minnesota.

As the Senator—and others—have pointed out, the Administration tax bill offers the average-income citizen "absolutely no tax relief unless the taxpayer has rung up excessive medical expenses or is a working mother."

The bill lightens taxation on income from dividends, but not from wages and salaries. It gives benefits and more loopholes than a Swiss cheese to the wealthy and the corporations. It is entirely based on the "trickle down" theory that maybe the rich will share a crumb of their prosperity with the less fortunate.

Clearly, the increasing of personal exemptions from $600 to $800 is the only sensible, the only feasible way to improve this tax bill's benefits for the great number of average income citizens. Your Senators would like to know how you feel about increasing exemptions. Why not write them today?

GM & WSJ

For years newspaper publishers have been claiming that advertisers never, never try to influence what goes into the news or editorial columns.

In effect, most publishers seem to be saying that they can be reactionary without need of prodding from the big businessmen.

Now comes General Motors, which withdraws its advertising and proclaims a news boycott of The Wall Street Journal—because it didn't like a Journal story about 1955 GM models.

Pretty petty on GM's part, it seems to us. We can't help sympahthizing a bit with The Wall Street Journal, even if it uses pretty twisted logic to whack the CIO on an average of once a week. But from the standpoint of a free press, The Journal ought to have the right to be independently reactionary, without pressure from General Motors.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS
Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.
Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII June 28, 1954 No. 26

'Tide's In—Dirt's Out'

In Other Words—

'And They Call This Treason . . .'

In a series of bulletins the New York State CIO Council is surveying the record of government in Washington and Albany. One of these reviews 20 years of New Deal and Fair Deal achievement. Written by Claude G. Bowers, eminent historian, it is entitled "And They Call This Treason." Excerpts follow:

By CLAUDE G. BOWERS

JUST NOW we are approaching the cross roads where the American people must decide which road they will take—whether onward in the spirit of the New Deal of Roosevelt, or backward to the policies of Taft and Hoover.

There is something strange and sinister in the atmosphere evoked by the creation of fear and a form of hysteria that is expected to dim the reasoning facilities of men.

Behind the smoke screen raised by our common hostility to the curse of communism, powerfully entrenched forces are moving toward the smothering of our freedoms, the limitation, if not extermination of our American liberties, the termination of the policies of social justice of the last 20 years, and the destruction of American democracy.

Under the New Deal was ended the reign of privileges for the privileged few. It moved the capitol of the nation back from New York to Washington. It took the workers in the factories and the mines and the farmers in the field, without whose labors the processes of civilization would cease, and made them partners in government.

Under the Eisenhower Administration, promises to the people have not been redeemed; promises to the powerful have been speedily honored or are in process of being kept.

The Administration got off to a slow start, but no time was lost in redeeming the campaign pledge to turn the submerged oil fields over to the big oil magnates. This property of the people of all the nation is thought to have a value into the billions.

The Supreme Court in three decisions declared this oil the property of all the people and of vital importance to the people in the event of war. The men who simulated shock when Roosevelt decided places on the Supreme Court were not reserved, as before, for corporation lawyers, did not hesitate to disregard the action of the nation's highest tribunal when it stood in the way of redeeming the campaign pledge to the big oil men.

Having kept its promise to the big oil men, the Eisenhower Administration concerned itself with its obligations to the big power men. Men today have forgotten the fierce fight Sen. Norris had to make in the case of the Tennessee Valley power development and that his final victory came when Roosevelt's Administration got behind it.

That great achievement of the Roosevelt Administration has given cheap electricity to all the farms and homes and converted that once backward section into one of the most prosperous in the world. But this only intensified the fury of the group from which Gen. Eisenhower selected his intimate advisers.

Beneath the soil of the great national parks, belonging to all the people, are mineral resources of great value, and it is in the mind of the Administration to turn this over to the privileged few.

Rule Of The Hamiltonians

One thing is certain—government today is in the hands of the enemies of labor; in the hands of the Hamiltonians who believe that to have a strong government it is necessary to make government profitable to the rich and powerful.

These enemies have been enemies a long time and have never been friends. They have looked forward for 20 years to placing Big Business in power for the purpose, among other things, of "putting labor in its place."

Consequently, this coming campaign is of vital importance to the worker. He now knows his friends and he knows his enemies, and unless he supports his friends and fights his enemies he will have only himself to blame if the notable advance he has made during the Roosevelt and Truman Administrations is stopped, and the benefits he has received are wiped out.

That is what Sen. Taft meant when he said that "it will not be difficult to put the country back on the track we abandoned 20 years ago before the New Deal."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THERE'S AN OUTFIT here calling itself the National Citizens for Eisenhower Congressional Committee that is beginning to work up steam for the November elections. This "committee" is a classic example of what should now be recognized as the Eisenhower dilemma.

Ike's Committee Backs Taftmen

The Citizens for Eisenhower Congressional Committee is supposed to be a lineal descendent of the famous "independent" groups that, working within and without the regular Republican organization, did so much to smash Taft and nominate Eisenhower and to elect Eisenhower in 1952.

The funny thing about it is that the "independents" calling themselves the National Citizens for Eisenhower Congressional Committee have not found, in 1954, a single Democrat whom they think worthy of their "independent" support.

A second funny thing is that they are finding a lot of Republican congressional candidates worthy of their "independent" support despite the fact that many of these Republicans could not possibly be described as pro-Eisenhower as distinguished from pro-Joe McCarthy or pro-the-memory of Sen. Taft.

The National Citizens for Eisenhower Congressional Committee had a clambake here a couple of weeks ago—and included in the printed list of "invitees" from the congressional wars were absolutely no Democrats and such Republicans as these:

Sen. Kuchel of California, who voted for the Bricker Amendment which Pres. Eisenhower had to use every ounce of power to defeat by a one-vote margin.

A Simple Explanation

Sen. Cooper of Kentucky, a decent individual, but a pro-Taft-Hartley man who happens to be running against former Vice-Pres. Alben W. Barkley, Democrat, for a new term in office. What does the alleged "National Citizens Committee" have against Barkley, who could probably be depended upon to do more than Cooper for any affirmative, constructive Eisenhower program in Congress? Simple: Barkley's a Democrat.

Here are some other Republicans on the list of "invitees" (which means candidates endorsed) by the Citizens for Eisenhower Congressional Committee:

Rep. Jackson of California, a Republican member of the Un-American Activities Committee, who made the notorious House speech denouncing Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Episcopal Church as "serving God on Sundays" and serving Communist fronts and fellow travelers the other six days.

Rep. D'Ewart of Montana, sponsor of the most extreme bills to steal the Forest Service grazing lands from the people and turn them over to big ranchers.

Rep. Bow of Ohio, who as former legislative assistant to Sen. Schoeppel of Kansas, planted on his boss a vicious speech impugning the patriotism of a Democratic official, and then hastily ran for—and was elected to—Congress.

By some odd coincidence, the Citizens for Eisenhower Congressional Committee considers all three Virginia Republican members of the House as worthy of support, and also considers the solitary North Carolina Republican worthy of support.

The most extraordinary coincidence of all is this: Illinois spokesmen at the "Citizens" party allowed reporters to know that the committee is "considering" endorsing Joseph T. Meek, nominee of Illinois Republicans against the able Sen. Douglas, Democrat.

Meek campaigned for the GOP Illinois nomination with the all-out support of the Chicago Tribune, which considers Eisenhower a traitor to the Republican party.

Meek is against reciprocal trade, for the Bricker Amendment, against "involvement" in "foreign" problems. He is the opposite of the "modern enlightened" Republican type supposed to be embodied in Eisenhower.

Campaign Group Is Fraud

The President is tentatively scheduled to speak in Springfield, Ill., at the State Fair, in August, and Meek will undoubtedly be clasping his coattails. But if Ike knew what was good for him, he would either skip Springfield, Ill., or forthrightly say, "I'd rather have Douglas."

The so-called National Citizens for Eisenhower Congressional Committee is—let's face it—a fraud.

It's what is left of the self-proclaimed "independents" of 1952 after they have been thoroughly pulverized and whipped into line by the Republican professionals.

One shouldn't be terrified by Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams' threat that, if the American people don't elect a Republican Congress this year, Eisenhower may refuse to run for a second term in 1956.

This dire possibility may be endured.

It is more disturbing that Eisenhower has allowed his "independent citizens" to be taken over by the Republican Old Guard. This observer's viewpoint is that by this time the President should have taken over the Republican Party—and the Eisenhower dilemma is that he hasn't done it.

Economic Outlook Says—

Federal Compensation Law Urged To End 'Evasion' By Employers

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION laws, the CIO charged last week, "have been turned into a legal device through which employers are evading the cost of proper compensation to injured workers."

Almost the entire burden of work injuries, the CIO said, is falling on the injured and their families or on private charity and public relief.

After more than 40 years of failure, the CIO continued, it is evident that the states will not make the reformations which are needed to elevate workmen's compensation "to a status of decency."

Federal action is necessary, declared the current issue of the Economic Outlook, monthly publication of the CIO Dept. of Education & Research. The CIO has proposed a national workmen's compensation law with uniform and adequate benefits.

Other groups, the Outlook said, "believe that, at the very least, uniform minimum federal standards that must be complied with by all the states are necessary to stimulate proper action."

Look To Washington

While the CIO will continue to work for improvement in the states, "tragic experience has taught us that we must look to Washington if we are to be saved from frustration," the Outlook said. It continued:

"Surely the injured workers of America have suffered long enough the wrongs inflicted upon them by an outmoded and inhuman compensation system which has been perpetuated in the name of 'states' rights.'

"Most workers do not expect to be injured but every one is exposed to some occupational hazard. Every 16 seconds around the clock, an American is injured on the job; every four minutes, a worker is killed or maimed; every year two million workers suffer injury or disease in the process of turning out the goods and services America needs.

"When injury strikes, workers have to rely on workmen's compensation laws to provide medical care and to replace lost wages. Not many workers know in advance how adequate or inadequate the compensation will be. But when injured, they soon learn that workmen's compensation does not offer enough protection to maintain their families and, sometimes, not even enough to regain health."

Economic Outlook, CIO.

In a survey of benefit levels of the 48 states and the District of Columbia, the Outlook found that most compensation laws stipulate that an injured worker should receive about 66% of his wage loss. But, it found, "the maximum benefit limitations, usually written into the laws in specific dollar amounts, make this impossible."

The maximum benefit, the survey showed, is most often $28 or $30 a week. In 18 states, it is less than $30. Then the Outlook noted:

"The average production worker in the U. S. earns about $72 a week. But a $30 maximum means that he receives, at most, only about 42% of his wages when injured."

In other words, the Outlook concluded, "the percentages written into the laws are merely a fiction. A worker can only get the 'maximum' compensation set by the state legislatures. Often these benefits for injured workers and their families are actually less than payments made to families on public relief."

Ike's Curbing Of TVA Lambasted

ONE OF THE MERRIEST brawls in years was building up in Washington last week as a result of Pres. Eisenhower's order directing the Atomic Energy Commission to negotiate a contract with a private utility company to supply electricity to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Democrats in Congress teed off on the order as a violation of Eisenhower campaign pledges and a back door attack on TVA. Three of the five AEC commissioners also opposed it.

Eisenhower touched off the melee by directing the AEC to sign a 25-year contract with a syndicate led by E. H. Dixon, of Middle South Utilities, Inc., and E. A. Yates, of the Southern Co., to feed 600,000 kilowatts into the TVA system at Memphis, Tenn.—200 miles from the nearest AEC installation.

This power would come from a $107 million plant to be constructed by the private utility at West Memphis, and would replace an equal amount the TVA is delivering to AEC plants in the Paducah, Ky., area. It would be distributed to commercial and domestic users in the Memphis area.

Contracting with the private utility would save the government an estimated $100 million which would be required over a three-year period to expand TVA facilities so the AEC operations around Paducah could be served. The Bureau of the Budget described the proposed annual costs as "reasonable" in comparison with TVA's "when all factors are considered."

The Bureau of the Budget didn't say how much more the private deal would cost the taxpayers than if TVA added to its facilities and supplied the power.

The agencies directly involved were less reluctant. The AEC said the people would be hooked for $3,685,000 more a year. The TVA said that amount wasn't enough—it should be $5,567,000 more for each of the 25 years.

The charge that the order violated the President's campaign promises was made by Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.), Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) and Sen. Langer (R. N.D.). Ike pledged himself, they recalled, to maintain TVA at maximum efficiency. Not only does the order break this pledge, they said, but it represents an entering wedge for private interests.

Kefauver also charged that the private power lobby "which spends the most money of any lobby," had got the ear of the Eisenhower Administration and is driving for a sell-out on "public power and the Rural Electrification Administration."

He called the order an "administrative monstrosity" which goes "a long way 'round just to take a whack at TVA." It turns the AEC into a "power broker" by making it buy "utility services not necessary for its own program," he added.

"Let AEC keep to its atoms and let the TVA keep to its power," he said. "This is about the same as directing the Bureau of Wildlife Service to run a brewery."

Throw Up A Roadblock

Sen. Gore (D. Tenn.) announced he would ask the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy to pass a resolution urging the AEC not to consummate the contract until the "basic issues" are settled.

The three Democrats and other senators from the TVA area threatened to throw a road block into Administration plans to revise the Atomic Energy Act unless Eisenhower cancels his order. Action on the revamp is scheduled before adjournment.

Rep. Evins (D. Tenn.) rapped the order as a "brazen deal" to block expansion of TVA, and to give private power interests a "foothold" in the TVA area so they could collect "huge profits at the expense of the American taxpayers."

'Nothing's The Matter With Kansas,' Thanks To CIO Council

By MILTON PLUMB

"WHAT'S THE MATTER with Kansas?" That's the question the late William Allen White, famed Kansas editor, used to ask.

And the answer is "nothing at all is the matter with Kansas" when it comes to the record of legislative, farm-labor and community relations—a record of accomplishment—set under the leadership of the Kansas CIO Council.

Entirely apart from its legislative and political activities, the Kansas CIO for several years has been engaged in one of the most successful community and public relations undertakings to be found anywhere in the country. Its program this year is bigger and better than ever.

Athletic And Academic

Do you like women's soft ball? The Kansas CIO this year is sponsoring a team which will play throughout the state. Or have you a more academic bent? Then you'll be interested in the new college scholarships which the State CIO Council will inaugurate this fall.

These new programs are being added to the Kansas CIO's already proven successes, which include an active program of farm-labor meetings; sponsorship of CIO booths at state and county fairs; many community services activities and a statewide "talent" contest which has already launched young hopefuls on successful entertainment careers.

A Union Girl

Gayle Larsen, popular singer who won the Kansas CIO Talent Contest in 1952 at the age of 16, is now under contract for several records with Tops Recording Co.

Graduated from high school only this year, she's a member of the American Federation of Variety Artists and is paid full union scale for her recordings.

"We made a union girl out of her," says H. J. Yount, Kansas CIO Council secretary.

Community service activity in the CIO in Kansas follows pretty much the pattern of similar CIO services in other states. It may be, for example, some volunteer work for a community cause, such as the work done this April in Wichita by CIO Communications Workers, who manned 55 telephones for the local TV and radio cerebral palsy marathon.

Or it may take the form of helping build or remodel a local community recreation center, like the donation this May of over 850 man hours of labor by members of Local 241 of the CIO Oil Workers in El Dorado to the rebuilding of their city's teen-age "Cage" club.

Similar activities by members of the CIO go on constantly in other cities throughout Kansas, and have done much to bring community good will and support for the CIO and its programs of economic betterment.

KANSAS CIO talent winner, Pat Clark (right), starts for Hollywood.

Farm-Labor Co-operation

The Kansas State CIO Council's efforts to improve farm-labor understanding and active cooperation date back to 1945, when it invited farm leaders to speak before its convention and, in turn, sought opportunities for CIO spokesmen to address farm groups.

There were disagreements, at times, but CIO always received a fair and friendly reception. It wasn't long before an active "interchange of speakers" program was under way, with CIO leaders appearing regularly at educational conferences, schools and forums sponsored by farm co-operatives, local farm groups and the farm organizations.

Then, in 1947, the CIO Council sponsored its first booth at the Topeka Free Fair. Nearly 600,000 people—mostly farmers and their families—attended. The reaction was so favorable that the "fair booth" program became a permanent IUC activity.

In 1948, the Kansas CIO began distributing specially prepared literature, balloons to the children, and products like hams, tires, oil, soap and clothing produced and donated by CIO unions making these products. Registrations at the booth reached a rate of over 3700 an hour!

Going To Fairs

Today, CIO booths appear at each of the three major Kansas fairs and at three county fairs in different locations each year. Over 50,000 balloons—all donated by local unions—were given to children in 1953. A total of 192,000 pieces of literature was distributed.

An entirely different "literature distribution" program is also carried on by the State Council. Pamphlets and informational material bearing on CIO-farm relations are sent regularly to the some 600 Kansas farm co-ops. In addition, similar publications, accompanied by a letter explaining the CIO's program, are mailed regularly to boxholders on rural routes throughout the state.

Most recent development in farm-labor cooperation is the series of "farm-labor meetings" launched this year in cooperation with the state Farmers Union and Farm Bureau.

Rank and file union members, who were invited to be the farmers' guests at the Randolph meeting, were as enthusiastic about the good time they had as the farmers, despite the fact that the CIOers attending drove 80 miles to the meeting and, when it was over, had to change their clothes and go to work at 11:30 p.m. on the night shift.

Over 500 people—95 from the CIO—turned out, and the discussion and questions showed a firm farmer-labor common ground. Newspapers throughout the state praised the meeting, saying it contributed much to better understanding between workers and farmers.

Yet only five years before, many of these same papers had run editorials after the state CIO secretary spoke before a Farmers Union meeting which declared: "Go home, CIO. The farmers don't need you."

Talent Contests Popular

One of the most successful undertakings of the Kansas CIO Council has been its annual statewide "talent contest," sponsored each year since 1951. Preliminary contests, to pick two finalists, are held in each of the six congressional districts, and two more finalists are also picked in the city where the state CIO convention is scheduled to be held.

Finals are held at the convention, and all 14 finalists spend three days there with all expenses paid. The winner gets a two-week, all-expense trip to Hollywood for radio and TV auditions and possible screen tests.

The first winner was 18-year-old violinist Norman Whistler of Coffeyville, son of a CIO Auto Worker, who since has landed several radio and TV appearances. In 1952, Gayle Larson of Kansas City, a popular singer, won, and last year Pat Clark of Emporia was the lucky entrant who rose to fame singing semi-classical songs.

Baseball And Scholarships

The idea of sponsoring a CIO women's amateur baseball team grew out of a charity game the Greater Kansas City CIO Council sponsored last year between the women's city championship team and the men business and labor leaders of greater Kansas City. The game drew the largest crowd—4500—ever to attend an event at Klamin Park, the city's biggest. All proceeds went to the Salvation Army Playground Fund.

This year, the State Council, in cooperation with Kansas CIO locals, decided to sponsor the women's championship team they found such formidable opponents last year.

The team is significant because the Negro members who play on it will be the first to play with white players throughout the state. The CIO will only book contests with teams where Negroes are allowed to participate.

The "State CIO Scholarships" will be offered this fall to four worthy individuals who qualify at the Kansas State Teachers College. The college will make the awards on the basis of need, scholastic record and evidence of future promise.

Sponsored by the State IUC, which contributed funds for one of the four one-year scholarships of $135 each, the awards are being financed also by the CIO Packinghouse, Oil and Chemical Workers. The latter are underwriting a scholarship apiece.

TOPEKA CIO FLOAT, built and mann point in state centennial parade witne

CIO COFFEE TIME, at Kansas state c to right) Sen. Carl Huxman (D.) an

FARM-LABOR MEETING at Randolp
Bureau and Farmers Union, drew hu

CIO GOES TO THE FAIR—About 55,000 farmers registered last year at Kansas IUC's popular Hutchinson State Fair Booth manned by CIO members.

Political Twister On Prairie May Topple Some Tory Citadels

ed by Kansas CIO members, was high ssed by 175,000 last May.

ıpital, brings out (in dark suits, left
l Wichita Mayor William Salome.

n, Kan., sponsored by State CIO, Farm
dreds to discuss mutual problems.

(Second in a series of on-the-spot analyses of the coming campaigns.)

A POLITICAL cyclone is blowing across the Kansas prairies, and there's a good chance that the extreme conservatism that has marked Sunflower politics in recent years may in large part be blown away.

Talking to political experts in Kansas these days, one is impressed with their realism and cautious hope for better times. The state certainly isn't going radical next November, but change is unmistakably in the air.

The only question is how big the change will be.

Few doubt that Republican Kansas will probably elect more Democrats to the state House of Representatives than ever before in its history.

Close Senate Race

Others—a goodly number—predict there will be a Democratic governor also, and GOP Sen. Schoeppel is at least going to have the hardest fight he's ever had to win another six-year term in the Senate.

Democrats also hope to pick up a couple of House seats in Washington.

Many factors contribute to this situation. The state GOP political machine has been badly rent since the exposures of the activity of lobbyist Wes Roberts rocked the nation. The state, which had to foot the bill, rocked even harder.

Kansas, with its strong Puritan background, has always been quick to act against corruption. And its long humanitarian tradition—the state was the birthplace of populism—makes its citizens equally resentful of economic hardship.

Today, with 43,000 workers—about 8% of the labor force—unemployed, and with practically all of its farmers feeling the pinch of falling farm prices, Kansas isn't in a mood to conserve things the way they are.

Another event which has greatly affected Kansas politics happened outside the state. This was the death two years ago of Lacy Hanes, Kansas political expert of the Kansas City Star. Although published in Missouri this newspaper for years dominated Kansas politics.

Kingmaker Is Gone

Hanes was kingmaker in Kansas, but his successor Alvin McCoy, who exposed Roberts' lobbying, has torn the GOP house asunder. Many Kansans see in this a hopeful sign that the Star's political dominance has cracked.

The CIO's 40,000 members in Kansas—long the victims of vicious attacks by Star editorial writers—are determined to do all they can to bring true home rule to the people of their state. They're already mobilized under Willard Murphy, CIO Kansas representative, and State PAC Sec. H. J. Yount.

And in keeping with CIO-PAC's standing bipartisan tradition, Kansas CIOers will be backing Republicans and Democrats alike on the basis of merit.

Major congressional hopes of the CIO next November center in the First, Second, Third and Fourth Districts. Reps. Hope and Smith, both Republicans, are deemed certain of re-election in the Fifth and Sixth.

In the First Dist., where CIO backing in 1952 helped elect Rep. Miller, the only Democrat ever chosen from that district, there are six GOP candidates in the Aug. 3 primary. Miller is unopposed. He is almost certain to have the support of most of 10,000 CIO members and their families in this district again.

Congressional Races

Rep. Scrivner, with no opposition in the Republican primary, will be opposed in the Second Dist. by Newell George, assistant prosecuting attorney of Wyandotte County and former secretary to Sen. McGill (D.). George will seek the district's Negro vote because Scrivner in committee opposed bringing out an FEPC bill. CIO, with 23,000 members in the district, will back George.

The Third Dist. finds liberal Republican opposition seeking to unseat Rep. George, with a middle-of-the-road record, while the Democrats hope former state Sen. Jack Goodrich, a strong pro-people candidate, will run.

In the Fourth Dist., it looks like Rep. Rees, who will have no opposition in the primary, may be in trouble next November. The Democrats are pinning their hopes on a young state representative, Robert Green, who has an outstanding record in the Legislature and is regarded by both parties as one of the best campaigners in the state.

Rees, in contrast, has a long reactionary record, including support of Taft-Hartley, and opposition to increased personal tax exemptions this year. The key to his race will be Wichita, which has 60,000 workers, most of them unionized.

Schoeppel's Senate race will have to be fought twice, within the GOP primary as well as in November, and he'll have strong opposition both times. William Edwards, of Bigelow, Kans., well known in state farm circles, will probably run neck and neck in the primary. The Democrats are expected to choose between Georgia Clark Gray, former U. S. treasurer, and Harry Woodring, former governor and ex-secretary of war.

The governor's race, which bears on Schoeppel's chances, will also be close. At present two candidates in both parties are leading favorites. All four have good labor records.

Fred Hall, present lieutenant governor, is running in the GOP primary as an anti-state Republican administration candidate. The administration favors George Templar, former state senator and U. S. district attorney. Democrats will choose between Mayor William Salome of Wichita and George Docking, liberal banker from Lawrence.

KANSAS' LONE DEMOCRAT in Congress, CIO-PAC-backed Rep. Miller, talks to Topeka IUC Pres. Walter Bryant (l.) and State CIO Sec. Jim Yount.

Benson Accused

Agriculture Sec. Benson is using "half-truths" in an attempt to divide farmers into squabbling factions.

That's the charge made by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.). He also accused Benson of implying that it's all right to lower price supports "because few states except the southern states would be hurt."

"You can't wreck one portion of America without hurting all of America," Humphrey said. The Senator scored Benson's "divide and conquer" tactics of attempts to "play off" farmers who buy feed against those who produce it and to "array consumers against farm price supports."

Relaxation

The costliest party last year in Topeka for the State Legislature was thrown by the oil lobby. On the menu were roast turkey, pheasant, side of beef, benedictine and other fine liquors.

The CIO later gave a "relaxation party" for the same group. It served deviled eggs, baked beans, coffee and cake by the ladies auxiliary. It was the largest—and declared to be the most popular—party of the session.

And there was no unfavorable press comment — something which greeted the affair of the lobbyists.

KANSAS CIO TEAM "roughs up" Umpire Fred Alvine, president of Kansas City, Kan., Chamber of Commerce. Does he like it? Look at that smile!

CWA Swelters And Practices Democracy

By EUGENE KELLEY

THE UNION with members in more cities and towns than any other union in the world—the CIO Communications Workers—gave a "democracy in action" demonstration at its eighth annual convention last week.

Summer and the more than 2500 CWA-CIO delegates arrived in Cleveland on the same day to begin their deliberations in the Public Auditorium, where the temperature was far higher than the 94 degrees registered on thermometers outdoors.

Mayor Anthony J. Celebrezze, greeting the delegates, apologized for the delay in getting the air conditioning system in working order before the convention opened. Trial of the system a short time later plunged the entire building into darkness for four minutes.

'Not A Private Union'

CWA now is CIO's fifth largest union, representing more than 300,000 workers in 46 states and three Canadian provinces and in Hawaii.

It proved again its reputation for grass-roots democracy. There was a high degree of delegate participation and a minimum of oratory by guest speakers.

Even the floor microphones were backstopped with a telephone system to the stage to facilitate recognition of speakers.

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne set the convention's theme in his opening remarks, when he stated: "This is not a private union, this is no vest pocket or personal organization. This is the assembly which the people we represent said is the supreme assembly of our union. And it is here that the best interests of all of our members are to be represented . . ."

Directors Named

Although CWA meets ananually, elections are held in alternate years and were not scheduled at the Cleveland conclave except for balloting on national directors as the result of internal structure changes and the death of an incumbent.

L. B. Adams was elected director for Long Lines, Joseph Dunne was named director for Western Electric installation and Louis Junker was picked to head the Western Electric sales units.

The big issue of the convention was whether or not to dissolve the nationwide Districts 10 and 11 of the union, made up of Western Electric sales and installation employes' locals. The proposal was to incorporate these groups into the regular geographical districts of the international.

After a three-hour debate, the delegates dissolved Districts 10 and 11 by a close roll-call vote.

Prior to this debate the delegates hammered out a spate of resolutions that ranged in nature from a call for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act to a pledge to aid the federal civil defense program.

Positive action was taken on a demand for higher personal income tax exemptions, a national health insurance program, heightened activity by women in political action and condemnation of proposed legislation allowing the use of evidence obtained by wiretapping.

CWA Vice Pres. A. T. Jones reported in detail on last year's strike with Southwestern Bell and the Indiana Bell Telephone Co. Jones commented at length on the union's defense fund and the aid it gave in the two strikes.

He warned that "the strike breaking techniques of the (Bell) system are always in evidence," and charged that "the largest army of professional strikebreakers in American industry (is) in the management of the Bell System."

One convention speaker, Sen. Burke (D. O.), declared that as the situation stands today the Congress would not give Pres. Eisenhower the authority to intervene in French Indo-China.

Foreign Problems

"We have been told," Burke said, "with some authority, that almost a month ago we were committed to go to war in French Indo-China, and then things went wrong."

He blamed "conflicting statements in high places" for the contradictions in U. S. foreign policy.

CWA Sec.-Treas. C. W. Werkau in presenting his annual report commented on the union's "good organizing job."

He said CWA was "one of the few unions in CIO which has not suffered a sizable loss in membership during the past year . . . With an increased tempo of activity, CWA may look forward to substantial gains in membership in the coming year, barring a further dip in employment in the industry."

The Good Old Summer Time? Neither Cleveland nor its Public Auditorium were air conditioned, which explains why Sylvert J. Schmidt (right), of Minneapolis, mops his brow during hot debate which marked the eighth CIO Communications Workers Convention. Wearing headphones to listen to delegates asking to be heard over battery of floor mikes, CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne stands behind giant telephone with international union office number on its dial.

Interest

Rev. Herbert Morris, O.M.I., of West Jefferson, O., who delivered the invocation on the opening day of the CWA-CIO convention, told the delegates he had more than ordinary interest in their proceedings.

Father Morris said his sister, Mary Morris, is secretary-treasurer of CWA's Long Lines Local 1051 in Boston, Mass.

Denunciation

The CIO Communications Workers heard an eloquent denunciation of racial, religious and national superiority as "shadows of man's prejudices" from Rev. Oscar C. Plumb, minister of the Kenmore, N. Y., Methodist Church, who said:

"Every time we think or talk or act religious superiority, racial superiority or national superiority, we have added to the fire that is burning the world to the core at the present time."

THE GOP should have recognized long ago "that you cannot compromise with political immorality without getting in trouble," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the Communications Workers convention.

In a speech interrupted 13 times by applause, Reuther warned that "the way to fight communism in America is not by using their tactics. You cannot fight Communist immorality with another kind of immorality. That is why Joe McCarthy is wrong, because he thinks that the end justifies the means."

Reuther said that the "tragedy of America" at a time when it needs a greater sense of unity to meet the problems of unemployment at home and of communism abroad is that "the party in power is so divided within itself, it is incapable of the leadership needed to meet this challenge."

The Real Struggle

The CIO head, who is also president of the Auto Workers, said it is "very fashionable" to be anti-Communist. "People in high places make eloquent anti-Communist speeches and then they block the road to social justice," Reuther continued.

"I say that in the real practical struggle against Communist tyranny, men like Philip Murray, Allan Haywood and organizations like CWA do more in one year than all of those fellows in Wall Street do in their whole lives," Reuther charged.

Reuther was introduced by CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne who declared "the CIO is in very capable hands" and "we are happy to call him Mr. President."

Tribute was paid by Reuther to the CIO Community Services Committee, of which Beirne is chairman.

"We in CIO have been saying for many years that we are not a narrow economic pressure group that hopes to solve its problems in an economic or social vacuum, or believes that it can make progress at the expense of the rest of the community," Reuther said.

The great challenge of the free world, he concluded, "is to find a way to tap the spiritual wellsprings of hundreds of millions of free people throughout the free world and get that dynamic power rolling, getting people and nations working together, sacrificing and building together in peace time because they share common hopes and aspirations."

CWA Gains 5-7c Hike

The CIO Communications Workers last week gained wage increases of from 5c to 7c an hour for 5500 workers at Western Electric plants in Greensboro and Burlington, N. C. Western Electric is the telephone manufacturing subsidiary of the Bell System.

Liquor Ad Ban Rapped

THE BACKDOOR approach to prohibition contained in proposed legislation banning liquor advertising was condemned last week by CIO before the Senate Commerce Committee.

Thomas H. Burke, director of congressional liaison in the CIO Legislative Dept., testified against S. 3294, one of several liquor ad bans before Congress. Recalling the vote repealing prohibition, Burke warned:

"This bill . . . attempts to do in a back-handed manner what the American people have declared they do not wish to have done."

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther (left) smiles appreciation as CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne pins on badge.

JUNE PICKETT, CIO Legislative Dept., and CWA staffer Gwendolyn de Roche show congressional voting records.

Pegler Shifts His Story As Case Nears Jury

Special To The CIO News

WESTBROOK PEGLER stepped down from the witness stand in the $500,000 libel case filed by Quentin Reynolds, after a probing cross-examination had indicated considerable confusion about facts and dates in the minds of the Hearst anti-labor columnist.

Days of questioning by Louis Nizer, counsel for Reynolds, showed many conflicts between Pegler's testimony and statements in his columns and pre-trial questioning.

Judge Edward Weinfeld of the federal district court in New York is expected to send the case to the jury early this week, after nearly two months of testimony. The Hearst Corp. and the Hearst-owned New York Journal-American are co-defendants.

Reynolds filed his suit as the result of a 1949 Pegler column. In it, Pegler charged Reynolds with cowardice, an artificial reputation for bravery, serving as a British propagandist, pro-Communism, nudism, and with having proposed to the widow of the late Haywood Broun—first president of the CIO Newspaper Guild—on the way to Broun's funeral.

One Light Moment

The tension at the grimly-contested trial was relieved by one light moment last week. Referring to a 1949 column, in which Pegler wrote that Mrs. Clare Luce—now ambassador to Italy, then a Connecticut congresswoman—had peeled Reynolds' "mangy hide," Nizer asked Pegler if the words did not suggest "an element of hate."

Replied Pegler: "I don't hate anyone."

As reporters, jurors and spectators erupted in a roar of laughter, Judge Weinfeld said firmly: "I'll clear the courtroom if this happens again. I mean it."

Passing references in a number of Pegler columns to the "Communistic CIO" also came into the trial record—as well as Pegler's views as to what constitutes union membership and activity.

Discussion revolved around his own relationship with the CIO American Newspaper Guild, of which his one-time associate, Broun, was the founder and first president.

"I never joined the Guild. Broun put me in," Pegler insisted.

The columnist said that although he held a membership card and paid dues,

QUENTIN REYNOLDS

Asks $500,000 damages for libel charged to Westbrook Pegler.

he didn't consider himself a member "because I never voted. I abstained from voting for very definite personal reasons in the few meetings I attended."

Nizer asked him about previous testimony that he had joined the Newspaper Guild.

"I was mistaken under oath . . . I answered inexactly . . . I wasn't discriminating at that time. I found I was considered to be a member of the Guild."

How long had he been a member of this "Communist front"—as Pegler calls it? "I think it was about three years," he replied, starting in 1935 or 1936.

Changes In Testimony

This was only one of a number of changes in Pegler's testimony from earlier statements. Thus:

- He was in error in believing that Reynolds' articles no longer appeared in Colliers after he resigned as an editor of that magazine in 1943.
- He had described Mrs. Broun, in pre-trial questioning, as "honest, reliable, and trustworthy," but "I changed my opinion . . . she lied under oath here the other day . . ."
- He had testified that Reynolds had taken a coeducational shower with a lady—an incident that couldn't have happened "before 1933." Then he said it occurred in 1932. Reynolds has denied it ever occurred.
- He had said, in a 1943 column, that he and Broun were "pretty good friends" who had played poker together perhaps 50 times. But he testified: "We played together fewer than a dozen times. We were not friends."
- He testified that "nobody" ever invited Reynolds to his home. Reminded of pre-trial testimony that he himself had invited Reynolds to his home, and had visited the Reynolds home during the late 1930's, Pegler testified: "If I did invite him, I was being kind, I was mistaken."
- He testified that a Reynolds appearance and radio speech at wartime "Navy E" award ceremonies at a plant owned by the Garsson brothers—later convicted of fraud—was "greedy . . . very unethical but not illegal." Reynolds received a $2000 fee, which Pegler's column had described as coming from the "ill-gotten loot" of the Garsson brothers.

But in pre-trial testimony, Pegler had said he didn't consider the Reynolds speech unethical. When the contrast in statements was brought up, Pegler complained he had been "trapped" by misleading questions.

"Each man's honor is his own rag doll, to do with as he sees fit," the Hearst columnist said from the witness chair.

Blackball Moves

Questioning by Reynolds' lawyer brought out two other facts:

1. Although a strong undercurrent of charges of pro-communism has run through Pegler's accusations of Reynolds—both in his column and at the trial—Pegler testified: "I don't say he is not loyal and a good American. I say he is a big dope."

2. Pegler — in what he insisted was merely a fact-producing "public service"—had gone to organizations which had booked Reynolds as a banquet speaker and given them derogatory information. One group was the New York Credit & Financial Management Association; the other was the Amateur Athletic Union, whose president was Jeremiah Mahoney, an uncle of Reynolds.

It was revealed that Pegler had gone to James A. Farley, Robert A. Moses and other New York dignitaries to place "information at their disposal." He denied his purpose had been to get a "cancellation of the speech" by the AAU.

Sharply contradictory testimony entered the record about whether Reynolds, while swimming in the nude, had ever climbed into a rowboat occupied by Mrs. Connie Broun.

Mrs. Pegler seconded her husband's testimony that Mrs. Broun had personally told them about the alleged incident.

Mrs. Broun took the stand for a second time to deny the story flatly. She testified she'd never seen Reynolds in his birthday suit, had never received a proposal from Reynolds, doesn't row boats, can't swim and doesn't like water.

Her daughter — 27-year-old Patricia Broun—denied she had been present when Mrs. Broun told the story of the alleged incident. She added her mother had never told any such stories concerning nudism or marriage proposals from Reynolds.

Denial Of Story

One witness, the widow of a New Yorker magazine editor, admitted on cross examination that Mrs. Broun had never spoken of a marriage proposal in the funeral car—as Pegler's column had said.

Other defense witnesses in the trial's final days were the managing editor of the New York Journal American, who said "we get very few complaints" about Pegler's column; and Louis Waldman, until recently counsel for the racket-ridden "old" Intl. Longshoremen's Association, who testified that a Reynolds speech had praised Stalin and some of his methods in 1943.

But later, Pegler admitted he had not read a number of Reynolds' strongly anti-Communist articles and books.

Peg, Meet Peg

The following quotation was read to Westbrook Pegler while he was on the witness stand:

"Communism is the reaction to poverty, oppression and the exploitation of the masses by the few, and represents the demands of the masses for a strong central authority to curb their enemy."

What—asked Louis Nizer, counsel for plantiff Quentin Reynolds—did Pegler think about that?

"Utter nonsense—pro-Communist propaganda . . . very familiar in the Communist line . . . it is false," replied Pegler.

Source of the quotation: Westbrook Pegler, in a 1937 column!

Arbiters' Group Gets Murray Grant

THE LONG interest of Phillip Murray in the peaceful settlement of labor-management relationships was memorialized in an award last week to the American Arbitration Association.

The Philip Murray Memorial Foundation — set up to honor the late president of CIO and the Steelworkers—presented $7500 to the AAA. It will go for a Philip Murray Room at the arbitration group's headquarters.

The presentation, one of a series to a wide range of welfare, hospital and social agencies, was made at the AAA headquarters in Rockefeller Center, New York City. Participating were Emil Rieve, Foundation chairman and president of the Textile Workers, and James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and Electrical Workers president.

In announcing the grant, Arthur J. Goldberg, director of the Foundation and CIO general counsel, said it had been voted unanimously because of Murray's "profound interest in the peaceful arbitration of disputes."

"He was a staunch supporter of the fine work being done in this field by the AAA," Goldberg said. "The Board of Trustees of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation hopes that this grant will help in forwarding the constructive activities of the American Arbitration Association."

The Philip Murray Memorial Foundation was established by the CIO and its affiliated unions to honor the memory of the CIO's late president, who died in November 1952.

With funds of about $1 million contributed by the unions and union members, the Foundation has already announced gifts to the American Association for the United Nations; Providence Hospital, Washington, D. C.; Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor; the Legal and Educational Fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Howard University; and the National Religion and Labor Foundation.

Sen. Hunt And Farrington Die

DEATH took two members of Congress within a few hours last week end—Sen. Lester C. Hunt (D. Wyo.) and Joseph R. Farrington, Republican delegate from Hawaii.

Hunt, who 11 days before had announced he would not seek reelection because of his health, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head in his Senate office. He was 61, and had built up a good voting record on straight labor legislation.

His death left the Senate with 47 Democrats, 47 Republicans and one Independent.

In Cheyenne, Gov. C. J. Rogers (R.) announced the appointment of GOP National Committeeman E. D. (Ted) Crippa, Rock Springs banker and merchant, to fill out the remainder of Hunt's term.

Farrington, Hawaiian delegate to Congress since 1942, was found dead of a heart attack in his quarters in the House Office Building. He was 56, and as a delegate had a voice but no vote in the House.

Quest For Peace Concerns Everyone, CIO Aide Holds

THE SEARCH for peace is not a matter "to be left to the professional diplomats or to the professional soldiers," but concerns every citizen, Victor Reuther told the convention of the United World Federalists in Washington last week.

Reuther, assistant to the CIO president, addressed several hundred delegates gathered for the eighth general assembly of the organization. The UWF is devoted to maintaining world peace through strengthening the United Nations.

He said CIO unions are giving serious thought to proposals for changes in the UN Charter to strengthen the "worldwide structure through which nations may find a basis for joint cooperation and collaboration."

He cited the "great danger" that the success attained in building the framework of a world organization "may well be swept aside in the atmosphere of hysteria generated by increasing tensions."

Recalling his experiences as CIO representative in Europe, Reuther said that "German, Italian, Austrian and Finnish workers are writing a chapter of heroism in the down-to-earth fight against communism that Sen. McCarthy would do well to read."

"That fight against Communism totalitarianism is not fought with fancy slogans," he said. "In a large measure, it will be won or lost by what is done in the shops and mines and mills of the world.

"It will depend on the extent to which we can take the hopes and ideals of democracy and translate them into the bread and butter, into the substance that will give people a personal stake in the democratic cause."

Noting that there is a "great and disastrous tendency" to rely almost exclusively on military power, Reuther said "we have not even begun to wage the kind of battle" on the economic front that will truly raise world living standards.

New England Banks Aid Textile Runaways, Maine CIO Warned

HELP ACWA CELEBRATION—Tex McCrary (center) and a model show Jinx Falkenburg the Amalgamated union label in their suits during television show marking the 40th anniversary of the CIO Clothing Workers.

NEW ENGLAND bankers who "want to make a fast-buck by helping the southern movement of the textile industry" drew a vigorous blast at the Maine State CIO Council convention last week at Belgrade Lakes.

Officials of two unions accused some bankers of helping to wreck the region's economy.

Executive Vice Pres. Michael G. Schoonjans cited five banks in three New England states which supplied $1.3 million so a Manchester, N. H., weaving mill of the Verney Corp. could be moved to Richmond Hill, Ga., leaving 900 workers jobless.

SCHOONJANS, the Saco-Biddeford Joint Board manager for the CIO Textile Workers, said the same bankers cry that the region's industry "must be saved and a wage cut is the only answer."

A spokesman for Vice Pres. Joseph Salerno of the CIO Clothing Workers said "it is time that New England depositors learned the truth of this situation—so that they might take retaliatory action against the men who, with the depositors' money, are doing so much to wreck the region's economy."

The convention adopted a resolution calling on Pres. Eisenhower to "take leadership in rallying his own party and the nation against McCarthyism." Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) "and his imitators" were charged with distracting the nation from the task of "combating true subversion."

HUGH THOMPSON, CIO regional director, told the convention that Maine had been exposed to "Jonesism, a brand of McCarthyism." This was a reference to Robert L. Jones, who was trounced in last week's GOP primary by Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R).

George Jabar, who was elected to his twelfth term as head of the Council, made a plea for development of Maine's hydroelectric power potential. He said the Passamaquoddy Project, under consideration since 1924, could contribute billions of kilowatt hours of electric energy each year to the economy.

Jabar noted that Maine now has 23,000 unemployed compared with 11,600 a year ago.

TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka paid tribute to workers in the Wyandotte, American Woolen and Bachmann Uxbridge textile chains in their recent strikes against unfair wage cuts.

Schoonjans was reelected as executive vice president and Dennis J. Blais was reelected secretary-treasurer.

Public Housing Foes Fail On Gag; Bill Goes To Parley

THE Administration Housing Bill was on the Senate-House conference table last week, with no indication that action would be forthcoming until after the July 4 recess.

The measure went to the conferees after House Republican leaders beat down an effort by foes of low-rent public housing, led by Rep. Smith (D. Va.), to gag the House members of the conference committee by instructing them to vote against any proviso to continue public housing.

The Senate had given at least token heed to the demand for low-cost housing by inserting in the House version of the bill a clause authorizing 35,000 new public housing units—an Eisenhower Administration proposal the House had flatly rejected.

THE VOTE was the second victory for Administration forces in the House. First, they got the Rules Committee to reverse itself and delete the gag from the rule sending the bill to conference.

Then Republican Floor Leader Halleck (Ind.) beat back the House move to instruct the conferees by calling it a disruption of orderly procedure, and promising that any conference report which contains a public housing clause will be put to the House for a vote. Smith, who made the motion, withdrew it.

Price Index Back In Clouds And Dollar Is In Dumps

THE COST OF LIVING jumped again to within hailing distance of the all-time high in the 30-day period ended May 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

The BLS Consumer Price Index during the month increased three-tenths of 1% to 115.0 from 114.6 on Apr. 15—only a scant measure under the all-time record of 115.4 set last October.

The National Industrial Conference Board added to the announcement by reporting from New York that the dollar is now worth only 54.1c based on the dollar of January 1939 equaling 100c. Its value is at the lowest point in the 169 years the U. S. has been in existence, the board said.

The rise in the BLS index was attributed chiefly to higher food prices, with fresh fruits and vegetables, meats and coffee the principal villians, and to the introduction into the index of over-the-year increases in mortgage interest, real estate tax and fire insurance rates.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS index:

Period	Index		Period	Old Index	New Index
1939 monthly average	99.4		1953: Jan. 15	190.3	113.9
1943 monthly average	123.6		Feb. 15	188.6	113.4
1944 monthly average	125.5		Mar. 15	188.8	113.6
1945 monthly average	128.4		Apr. 15	188.3	113.7
1946 monthly average	139.3		May 15	188.8	114.0
1947 monthly average	159.2		June 15	190.9	114.5
1948 monthly average	171.2		July 15		114.7
1949 monthly average	169.1		Aug. 15		115.0
1950 monthly average	171.2		Sept. 15		115.2
1951 monthly average	185.9		Oct. 15		115.4
1952 monthly average	190.6	(old index)	Nov. 15		115.0
1953 monthly average	114.4	(new index)	Dec. 15		114.9
1954 monthly average	114.9		1954: Jan. 15		115.2
			Feb. 15		115.0
			Mar. 15		114.8
			Apr. 15		114.6
			May 15		115.0

Coffee Control Voted Again

For the second time, the Senate has approved Sen. Gillette's (D. Ia.) proposal to regulate coffee futures trading.

After Gillette pointed out that coffee price increases have cost U. S. consumers $1 million annually for each 5c-a-pound price boost, the Senate added the coffee controls to a House-approved bill putting onions under regulations. Now the House, which had sidetracked Gillette's original bill, will be forced to act.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

YOUR COST-OF-LIVING prospects for the second half of 1954 are for continued high expenses at about the same level or a little higher than now.

Your dollars will be able to buy the best values in three years in house furnishings and clothing, but these savings will be cancelled out by continuing high rents, increasing costs of medical care and slightly higher prices for some foods.

Buying Calendar

You can beat at least some of these high costs in several ways. Take advantage of the annual July sales of shoes, clothing, housefurnishings and carpeting to anticipate your needs of staple items. July is one of the best months to find cut-price reductions on clothing and household goods.

In food, avoid pork products, veal and lamb during the summer when they are seasonally scarcer and costlier. Pork will be cheaper in the fall. Rely more on beef (still comparatively reasonable), cheese (now at new low prices) and eggs (still comparatively reasonable in early summer, but costlier later).

Shopping For Carpeting

The annual mid-summer home furnishings sales this year will offer the lowest prices on household goods in almost four years. Price-cutting on rugs is especially keen among retailers this summer because of poor business. We advise shopping both the specialty rug stores and rug warehouses (found in larger cities) and the department store sales.

Get prices on both the cost per yard, and the entire price of the rug or wall-to-wall installation. The carpet specialty stores sometimes undersell the department stores, but the department stores may estimate the yardage required more closely on wall-to-wall carpeting, so the final price may be close.

Buying a carpet is a real problem for a moderate-income family. Many women want a carpet more than anything else. Sometimes, as letters from readers tell us, they will spend $700 or $800 for a luxurious-looking wall-to-wall installation. Frequently they are disillusioned as they find their expensive carpeting turns shabby surprisingly soon.

Wall-to-wall carpeting is actually not a practical choice for most families. Because wall-to-wall costs noticeably more, many families are now turning to cotton carpeting to cut the expense. But this often adds to the troubles.

Good-quality cotton carpeting generally costs about $2 a yard less than good wool carpeting (for one reason because most is made in non-union mills in the South). Some cotton carpeting is even available for as little as $4.50 a yard. It is the least-costly way to have a high-pile effect and a feeling of luxuriousness.

While a good-quality cotton rug will wear almost as long as a wool rug, the cheap ones won't. Also, cotton carpeting gets dirty quicker and is harder to clean, too. It is a dubious choice for living rooms, especially, although that's where people trying to save money are using it.

The better way to keep down the cost of carpeting is not to go to a cheaper type, but to buy a good-quality room-size rug rather than mediocre wall-to-wall carpeting.

Mid-summer Mattress Sales

This summer furniture sales are also a good opportunity to find values in mattresses. Buy by comparing price and quality, rather than by brand name.

You will find good and mediocre mattresses made by the same famous-name manufacturers, but their good ones run high in price, and are often price-fixed so the retailer can't offer any reductions.

A good innerspring mattress should have a seven or eight-ounce woven-stripe ticking. Don't pay extra for fancy-pattern tickings. Some stores, especially installment stores, charge as much as $10 and $20 more for the same mattress in fancier ticking. A good innerspring mattress should also have at least 180 coils; at least 30% of the filling should be sitched sisal pad, and the rest, layers of cotton-felt or hair and cotton-felt. Hair adds to firmness and durability, but also to cost.

(Copyright 1954, by Sidney Margolius)

Open Books On Welfare Funds

A BILL to make an "open book" of union health and welfare funds has been introduced by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

He said the measure is aimed at preventing abuses "which have crept into the administration of these programs."

Federal standards for the operation of welfare funds, and public disclosure of their financial affairs, Humphrey said, would prove "one of the most effective weapons against dishonest and corruption."

Humphrey conceded that misuse of welfare funds is limited, but he added:

"It's time we modernize and strengthen our laws with respect to union health and welfare funds. Abuses have taken the form of shady or outright illegal practices engaged in by insurance company officials, brokers, union officers and employers.

"In terms of the magnitude of the health and welfare (programs) these shady or illegal practices have been limited to a relatively few situations. This fact, however, must not blind us to the need for dealing with the problem in a constructive way."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

ALTHOUGH MANY HONORS have been paid Emil Rieve in his long and useful career in the trade union movement, it must be a fact that the testimonial dinner in his honor, on behalf of the City of Hope, was one of the most gratifying compliments he has received.

The City of Hope is a medical institution, largely supported by labor, which has done much in medical research and treatment for the betterment of all men and women, regardless of their race or creed or color. They awarded Pres. Rieve, head of the CIO Textile Workers, their Torch of Hope in recognition of his great services to their cause.

But I believe that an equal honor was the presence of so many of the leaders of our great unions who gathered to pay their personal respects to the fighting leader of the TWUA-CIO. The grand ballroom of the famous Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, in New York, was crowded with CIO officers, international union officers, many a worker from the rank and file, members of the press, distinguished public officials, friends and neighbors.

These men and women came together to give testimony to the broad social vision that is exemplified by Emil Rieve, a vision that goes far beyond the gates of the mills, and a vision that brings us a view of the labor movement as a force for the welfare of man beyond the confines of collective bargaining.

AT THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE and Council meetings of the Canadian Congress of Labour June 14 and 15, one of the situations that caused the most concern was the rise of unemployment in our sister nation to the North. Pres. A. R. Mosher pointed out the indications were that Canadian unemployment might reach the 500,000 mark—which would compare with five million unemployed in the United States.

CCL is not sitting back and waiting for this situation to develop without presenting the Canadian people a program of hope and prosperity. In their way, and with observance of their own customs and traditions, they are carrying forward a militant program of education and political action to help their nation meet its problems, and they are matching this effort with an all-out organizational drive.

One of the drives CCL has given particular attention is among the department store workers. They have appointed a special organizing committee to move in this field. Joe McKenzie, Larry Stettner and Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald of CCL sat down with Al Heaps of the RWDSU-CIO to work out a cooperative effort. Before the CCL convention in September, the CCL Organizing Committee and RWDSU-CIO hope to have the details of a full-scale drive for the consideration of the organizations involved.

AS I MENTIONED some time ago, the vitally important tax legislation is about ready for consideration on the floor of Congress and may be debated as you read this.

Our Legislative Dept. has kept the staff advised of the action that is expected, and I expect the staff to go down the line in support of this program. No situation or job a staff man has been assigned should make it impossible for him to discuss this matter with friends, neighbors and workers. The issue is not only the amount of money and purchasing power in the pockets of the workers, but it is also our effort to preserve a fair and just distribution of the heavy tax burdens the nation must carry.

CIO has never taken the position that we want any special privilege or that we seek to be relieved of our fair share of the burden, but we stand against any attempt to throw the entire economic weight of our country's needs on the shoulders of those who can least afford it.

Russ Seated At ILO Meet

DESPITE protests from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the American delegation, the Intl. Labor Organization, meeting in Geneva, seated Soviet bloc worker and employer delegates.

Michael Ross, CIO representative with the ICFTU, is with the U. S. delegation. The ICFTU had maintained that worker delegates from Russia and Czechoslovakia, under the laws of those countries, are directly subordinate to the state. The U. S. delegation took the position that both worker and employer delegations from Soviet nations are subject to the state.

Earlier, the full conference, by a 133-48 roll call vote, had decided to seat the Nationalist Chinese delegation. The seating had been held up by China's failure to pay dues for more than two years, and could be ordered only by a two-thirds vote in the conference itself.

UFW Reelects Top Officers

DELEGATES to the eighth convention of the CIO Furniture Workers unanimously reelected Pres. Morris Pizer and Sec.-Treas. Fred Fulford to their third two-year terms at closing sessions of the meeting in Cleveland.

Also reelected were Vice Pres. Michael DeCicco, New York, and Fred Stefan, San Francisco. Named vice presidents for the first time were Neil McCormick, Grand Rapids, Mich., and Floyd Buckner, High Point, N. C.

After hearing an analysis of the domestic and international significance of the Supreme Court ruling outlawing segregation in the schools by Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the convention adopted a resolution calling for prompt enactment of effective legislation to protect the civil rights of all Americans.

Out 4 Months, Kendall OWIU Local Seeks Decent Contract

By MARVIN ZELDIN
OWIU Assistant Publicity Dir.

CIO OIL Workers in Bradford, Pa., haven't had a full pay check since Feb. 7, when their contract with the Kendall Refining Co. expired.

That was the day when the company instituted a lockout in an attempt to starve them into accepting an inferior wage offer tied to a three-year contract and a no-strike clause.

The lockout lasted until Apr. 22, when the Kendall workers—members of OWIU Local 567—went on strike, having tried every means to get the company to bargain in good faith.

TESTIMONY taken by a National Labor Relations Board's field examiner, in hearings on the union's unfair labor practice charges against the company, made it clear that Kendall wouldn't sign anything but an inferior contract.

Even before their contract expired, the 260-man OWIU local learned that this was the year Kendall was out to destroy the effectiveness of the union.

The company started shutting down units in the 5000 barrel per day refinery in January and had cots, stocked rerigerators and TV sets brought in for use by scabs.

After the lockout started, Kendall workers were declared eligible for unemployment compensation benefits—but the company managed to block payment of these benefits.

THE COMPANY'S tactics during the lockout and since the strike began have resulted in lower sales of Kendall gasoline and oil.

Other OWIU locals in the area as well as AFL, independent and other CIO unions, have rallied to the support of the strikers, for they know their employers might well try similar tactics if Kendall succeeds in destroying unionism at its refinery.

Progress in negotiations? The company's latest proposal is that the OWIU local agree to superseniority for the handful of scabs who've been making poor attempts at operating the plant. The OWIU strikers rejected the offer and are staying on the bricks—until they get a genuine trade union contract.

3 Elections Won By URW

THE CIO RUBBER Workers won three National Labor Relations Board elections within a few days, Pres. L. S. Buckmaster announced last week.

The victories were scored at the Henrite Products Corp., Ironton, O., where 399 workers were eligible to vote; the Norbalt Rubber Co., North Baltimore, O., where the tally was 74 for the URW-CIO to 21 for no union, and the P-B Div. of the Byron Jackson Co., Los Angeles, where 47 workers were eligible.

After a month-long recess, the URW-CIO resumed wage reopening negotiations with the Goodyear Rubber Co. The talks cover 30,000 workers in nine plants across the nation.

LIKE OLD TIMES—R. J. Thomas, assistant to CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, joined a CIO Woodworkers' picket line at the Inman-Poulson lumber mill on a trip to Portland, Ore., center of a major CIO and AFL strike. Shown (left to right) are CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler, C. Luccitti, of IWA-CIO Local 5-3, Thomas, and Peter DiAngelo, of Local 5-3.

CIO, AFL Unions Join In Timber Walkout

MORE THAN 100,000 logging camp, lumber mill and plywood workers in the Pacific Northwest went on strike last week after flat refusals of wage increases by employers had driven rival CIO and AFL unions into the first mutual assistance pact in their history.

Approximately 40,000 members of the CIO Woodworkers are manning picket lines at pine and fir logging and mill operations, mainly in Washington and Oregon plus a few in Northern California.

The rest of the strikers belong to the AFL Lumber & Sawmill Workers, an affiliate of the AFL Carpenters, and work in the same states and Idaho.

BOTH UNIONS are seeking a 12.5c an hour wage increase. In addition, the IWA-CIO wants three weeks' vacation after five years of service, a labor-management study of job classifications so as to eliminate inequities, and other fringe benefits.

Tied up by the strike are the operations of some of the largest timber and mill firms in the world, the source of much of the lumber used by the country's construction industry. A few small operators have settled on the 12.5c basis, but many of the large employers declared they would not even consider if they will meet with the unions until after the July 4 holiday.

The walkout started shortly after the two unions entered into an agreement to hold joint strategy sessions, to respect each other's picket lines, to refrain from raiding although the AFL Carpenters failed to sign the CIO-AFL No-Raiding Agreement, and to give each other as much assistance as possible.

The agreement was announced by IWA-CIO Pres. A. F. Hartung and LSW-AFL Sec. Kenneth Davis. They declared it marked the end of the pushing around organized employers have been able to administer to the two unions in the past because of their lack of unity.

Meantime, some 35,000 IWA-CIO members in British Columbia approved a new contract giving them three days' additional vacation, travel time pay and other fringe benefits worth an estimated 6c an hour.

Vacation And Pension Gains Won By NMU

IMPROVED pension, vacation and welfare programs have been won by the CIO Maritime Union in recently-completed negotiations covering 40,000 members on Atlantic and Gulf Coast ships.

Highlight of the NMU settlement with the American Merchant Marine Institute was a new vacation clause, granting four weeks off (instead of three) after one year of service with a firm.

Company contributions to the pension and welfare fund were increased by 15c to 75c a day for each employe, to finance improved benefits.

PENSION improvements and longer vacations also were key issues in negotiations still underway by the CIO Radio Association and CIO Marine Engineers with the shipping operators.

ARA Pres. W. R. Steinberg and MEBA Pres. Herbert L. Daggett were heading their respective union negotiating committees.

A truce to allow continuing negotiations was reached by the CIO Shipbuilding Workers and the Bethlehem Steel shipyards. The union promised not to strike before July 23 without giving 15 days' notice, and the firm agreed to maintain the terms of the old contract while talks continue.

Aid To Workers, Communities—

New Approach On Trade Offered

IDENTICAL BILLS providing assistance to workers, companies and communities suffering economic dislocation as a result of the country's foreign trade policies were introduced in Congress last week by Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.) and Rep. Williams (D. N.J.).

In speeches explaining the bills, the two sponsors both said their ideas are parallel to those advanced by Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers in his series of dissents to the report of the President's Foreign Economic Policy Commission.

McDonald was the only laborite among the seven representatives of the public on the the commission headed by Clarence B. Randall, chairman of the board of directors of the Inland Steel Co. In his dissent, he maintained the federal government has a responsibility to help workers, industries and communities dislocated by increases in imports resulting from trade concessions.

Under the present Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, the President can either accept or reject, but not modify, the recommendations of the Federal Tariff Commission when an industry has sought relief from foreign competition in the form of heavy imports.

THE KENNEDY-Williams Bill, which the sponsors call the Trade Adjustment Act, would give the President an alternative course in cases where he rejects FTC recommendations. It would set up a program of specific relief measures and a new Trade Adjustment Board which would determine the eligibility of applicants for such aid.

A similar bill was drafted for introduction by Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.).

For individual workers who lose their jobs through failure of the President to follow FTC recommendations, the bill proposes supplemental unemployment compensation benefits in addition to those already available; a lower social security retirement age, if the worker is of advanced years and unable to find new employment; and in certain cases, financial aid in relocation to sections where jobs are available.

It would give companies technical information, advice and consultation through established federal agencies; make available rapid amortization benefits to encourage modernization and diversification; and make possible loans, not available commercially, by the Small Business Administration as a further aid to modernization and diversification.

THE BILL would offer communities adversely affected by foreign trade the advice, technical information and consultation necessary to establish a workable plan for adjusting to the situation; and to implement such adjustment proposals, would make loans available to such communities, industrial development corporations or other agencies.

"We must be realistic," Kennedy told the Senate. "Regardless of personal or sectional attitudes, it is clear that the trend is in the direction of lower tariff barriers and increased international trade. Instead of merely talking about the need for American industries to adjust to imports, it is time we took some positive steps to assist them in their difficult transition."

Ike Defeat

The Senate last week turned down the three-year extension of the reciprocal trade program originally proposed by Pres. Eisenhower. A move by Sen. Gore (R. Tenn.) for the three-year extension was defeated 45 to 32. The Senate then voted a GOP plan to extend the program one year.

CHALLENGE to despair was sounded by Pres. Emil Rieve of CIO Textile Workers when he received Torch of Hope Award at dinner in New York. Left to right: TWUA Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock, CIO Clothing Workers Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, CIO Maritime Union Pres. Joseph N. Curran, Rieve, CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, Mayor Robert F. Wagner, Jr., and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Rieve Given Torch Of Hope Award For Long Service To U. S. Labor

By JULES WEINBERG

EMIL RIEVE, president of the CIO Textile Workers, vice president of the CIO and a veteran labor leader with a long and distinguished record of accomplishment, was presented with the coveted Torch of Hope Award of the City of Hope at a dinner in his honor in New York last week.

The award was given on behalf of the City of Hope, Los Angeles medical center primarily supported by organized labor, by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, representing CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

BEFORE more than 1000 friends and union officials who had gathered to honor him, Rieve in accepting the award hurled a challenge at those who despair.

"There is no place for despair," he declared, "either in medicine or economics. The pioneers who established the City of Hope refused to accept the philosophy of hopelessness."

Mayor Robert F. Wagner, Jr., of New York, paid tribute to Rieve as a man and a leader. "This was one dinner invitation I really wanted to accept," he explained.

Tribute

"Emil Rieve, is by constitution, a blunt and a forceful and a truthful man," said CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a message read in his absence at the Torch of Hope testimonial dinner by CIO Clothing Workers Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky.

"He has a broad outlook, a tremendous devotion to labor's cause, and a sharply realistic outlook on our lives and times and institutions," Reuther's message continued. "It is good for the CIO and good for the Textile Workers Union that we have an Emil Rieve to keep us in focus."

He compared Rieve's career with that of his late father, whose work in the Senate led to the Wagner Labor Relations Act —labor's "Magna Charta." Both men, he said, were examples of self-reliance.

"Like my father," he went on, "he was born in Europe. Each came here at an early age; and each, in his own field, built a career not only for himself, but in the service of his fellow Americans."

The quality of self-reliance which Rieve and the Senator shared, he continued, is evident in such organizations as the City of Hope.

"The City of Hope is one of the many answers to those who argue that action by government destroys individual initiative," he maintained.

"I would be willing to wager that the enterprising, self-reliant people who founded the City of Hope voted almost unanimously for the New Deal."

In handing over the plaque symbolic of the award for Rieve's services to the City of Hope, Potofsky described the recipient as "a forceful and truthful man." The ACWA-CIO, he went on, has had 25 years of help from the City of Hope, and is now having plans prepared for a new Amalgamated Building there.

PRES. JOSEPH N. CURRAN of the CIO Maritime Union, general chairman of the testimonial committee and dinner toastmaster, "confessed" that he had begun his career as a textile worker, before he got his sea legs.

"Emil and I sit side by side in the serious things," he declared, although they might differ on small details.

Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock of the TWUA-CIO, who also was chairman of the dinner committee, said that Rieve "has held a torch of hope for millions of textile workers for 15 years."

CIO Executive Pres. John V. Riffe, picking up the same theme, said:

"The quality of hope is one of the greatest blessings we can give to the sick, and one of the greatest strengths we can bring to the workers."

A LONG ASSOCIATION with "CIO's senior vice president" was recalled by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

"Emil's humanitarianism in this cause and in other causes of brotherhood," he said, "his tireless efforts on behalf of his fellowman in illness and in health . . . have been an inspiration to all of us."

Carey, also president of the CIO Electrical Workers, paid tribute to the City of Hope as "one of the most important . . . institutions in terms of its pioneering example and practical success."

'What's Good For GM' Is Boycott Of Wall St. Journal

WHAT'S GOOD for General Motors—isn't very good for the Wall Street Journal.

The country's biggest auto company has pulled its advertising out of the country's leading business newspaper. GM has also taken the Wall Street Journal off its news release lists. And it refuses to answer news queries from Journal reporters.

The reason: The Wall Street Journal printed a story that General Motors didn't like.

The story—which The Journal said was based on reportorial sleuthing by its Detroit bureau chief, John D. Williams—described what a number of 1955 cars would look like. Presumably, the information was gathered from parts and die manufacturers in the auto city.

The paper said that the "wrap-around" windshields used on the more expensive GM cars would be found next year on Ford, Chevrolet, Mercury, Pontiac, Lincoln and Packard. Chevrolet, Plymouth, Pontiac and Packard will introduce V-8 engines, the story added.

Drawings of some of the new models, which the paper said came from blueprints, accompanied the story.

While the other auto makers took the story calmly, General Motors reacted with a roar.

Talking about destruction of its property rights, GM cancelled $11,000 in advertising placements in The Wall Street Journal. GM spends about $250,000 a year in the paper.

Reacting to the corporation's policy pressure, The Wall Street Journal publisher said sadly:

"I find it hard to believe that this represents the policy of General Motors top management, because I do not think that General Motors would use this sort of pressure to express disapproval of editorial or news policies of any newspaper."

And in an editorial, the paper commented:

"Sometimes what is valuable business news to one reader may be displeasing to another. But in the end, the truth about what is happening is the only thing that is of value to anybody.

"And when a newspaper begins to suppress that news, whether at the behest of its advertisers or on pleas from special segments of business, it will soon cease to be of any service because it will soon cease to have readers."

CIO and AFL Celebrate (See Pages 6 and 7)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., July 5, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 27

Steelworkers Win 12c Package

—See Page 2

Dotted Line—Happy smiles wreath faces of this labor quartet as AFL Pres. George Meany (right) signs a symbol of historic CIO-AFL No-Raiding Agreement at a unity celebration last week in Washington. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther (next to Meany) had just signed. Looking on are James B. Carey (left) and William Schnitzler, secretary-treasurers of CIO and AFL respectively.

TWU Wins—The CIO Transport Workers win an historic victory by polling 93% of the votes cast in a representation election for New York City's 35,000 transit employes. (Story on Page 2.)

Sign Pact—Placing signatures on new contract covering 600,000 CIO Steelworkers are USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald (right) and Vice Pres. John A. Stephens of U. S. Steel.

Reynolds Wins $175,001 Libel Award From Pegler

—See Page 8

Gains In Wages, Pensions And Insurance Won In Steelworkers' Contract Settlement

CIO STEELWORKERS scored a bargaining triumph last week with a 5c an hour wage increase and other benefits for a total 12c package in negotiations with the U. S. Steel Corp.

Almost immediately the same terms were accepted by several other firms. Approximately 600,000 workers are affected immediately in basic steel plants, and an equal number in fabricating plants will have the new rate as a negotiating yardstick.

The negotiations were hailed as a major victory by USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald. He reported to the union's 170-man Intl. Wage-Policy committee that the terms had been worked out in private talks with Vice Pres. John A. Stevens, industrial relations director for U. S. Steel. McDonald was given a tremendous ovation by the wage-policy group as they ratified terms of the new pact.

Labor Sec. Mitchell sent congratulations to the union and company on their successful negotiations, "which will make for labor peace and maximum production . . ."

Conclusion of bargaining talks averted the possibility of a major steel strike. Even while McDonald was reporting settlement terms with U. S. Steel, other steel producers stood ready to sign new contracts.

These included Bethlehem Steel, Republic, Jones & Laughlin, Youngstown Sheet and Tube, Wheeling, Inland, Great Lakes, Pittsburgh and Colorado Fuel & Iron. Most of them signed before the week was out.

The "Big Steel" wage pact will run for two years and may be reopened on the wage question at the end of the first year. Insurance provisions are frozen for two years and pension benefits for three years.

The pay increase brings the average wage in the basic steel industry to $2.20 an hour. Janitors and others will get a starting rate of $1.57 an hour, while rollers and some other highly skilled operatives will get the top rate of $3.275.

The wage hike, the second to be won in two years by USA-CIO without a strike, was effective July 1 and was to be applied on the same terms as the 8.5c increase negotiated last year. The settlement terms were even more notable in view of the present depressed condition of the industry and a slump in steel orders.

Benjamin F. Fairless, chairman of the board of U. S. Steel, declined to estimate the expected increase in steel prices. But two days later, the company announced boosts averaging $3 a ton.

A big gain was registered in the pension system. The present monthly minimum of $100 for workers with 25 years' experience will go to $140 on Nov. 1 for those with 30 years.

Both figures include Social Security payments as part of the total pension, but there is a provision that workers will get the benefit of any future increases if Congress amends the old age assistance law. When pending changes in the Social Security Act are effective, a worker with 40 years' experience in the industry will be entitled to a total of $183.50 a month in pensions.

The amount of pension costs will vary from company to company, depending on the age level of their workers and the way they fund their plans.

Contributions to the joint program of insurance benefits will be increased Nov. 1 to a total of 9c for each hour worked, with workers and companies splitting the cost. Benefits to be included in the new insurance program will be agreed upon before Sept. 1.

Stress was also placed on the complete elimination of the differential between wages in steel mills North and South. About 40,000 workers in the South were to receive benefits as the historic differential was wiped out.

In 1937 when the first USA-CIO pact was signed with U. S. Steel, the gap was 17.5c between those doing identical jobs. By last year it had been narrowed down to 5c and the contract provided that 2.5c be canceled on Jan. 1 and a like amount on July 1.

Steelworkers Had CIO Backing

A wire of support for the CIO Steelworkers was sent to USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther on behalf of the CIO Executive Committee "as a first order of business" at its meeting June 28.

The telegram pledged "the full support of the CIO to you and to your fellow officers and members of the United Steelworkers of America in your efforts to win satisfactory and acceptable contracts with the various companies in the steel industry."

Reuther's message said the USA-CIO proposals for substantial improvements in wages, pensions and welfare plans "are fully justified by economic developments," and noted they were "in line with the common effort of all good Americans to build a stronger economy for our country."

"We offer you our continuous and undivided support," the message concluded. "The millions of workers who make up the family of CIO stand shoulder to shoulder with the Steelworkers in your efforts to win a satisfactory and acceptable contract that will provide the measure of economic justice to which steel workers and their families are entitled."

N. Y. Transit System Vote Won By TWU

THE CIO Transport Workers have won an overwhelming victory in a representation election for some 35,000 employes of New York City's transit system.

Ninety-three per cent of those voting—25,192 out of 27,500—cast their ballots for TWU-CIO Local 100.

The election was held on the recommendation of a fact-finding board named by Mayor Robert F. Wagner.

The election results spell the end of the last vestige of power of some dozen splinter unions.

Local 100 immediately demanded collective bargaining on its 15-point program, which includes a 25c an hour wage increase, up-to-date grievance machinery and impartial arbitration. TWU-CIO Pres. Michael J. Quill and Local Pres. Matthew Guinan wired Chairman Hugh Casey of the Authority:

"As a result of the election, the officers of TWU are confident that all roadblocks have been removed and that collective bargaining negotiations with the Transit Authority and the union should be resumed immediately."

In the only contest, TWU-CIO received 1752 votes in its bid to speak for some 3500 motormen, and the independent Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers polled 1344.

LOOKS LIKE trouble, but it isn't. It's just Thomas Lazzio, CIO Auto Workers Local 300, Paterson, N. J., one of the CIO members attending the Scandinavian Labor Education Workshop, getting into Sweden with the aid of a customs inspector. Frank E. Meloni, CIO Retail-Wholesale Union, Camden, N. J., awaits turn at Gothenberg Airport.

17,000 CWA Installers Go On Strike

A STRIKE against the Western Electric Co. which could eventually cripple the nation's telephone industry began late last week as 17,000 CIO Communications Workers halted work as exchange installation employes.

Picketing did not begin immediately outside exchanges in 43 states and the District of Columbia. CWA-CIO officials said it would start on the determination of Vice Pres. A. T. Jones, defense fund director.

Since most telephone exchange workers also belong to CWA, telephone service across the country would be affected if the installation workers established picket lines. Policy has always been to honor picket lines, CWA officials noted.

Negotiations broke off at 3 a.m. on July 1 after 12 hours of bargaining. The strikers walked off the job at 6 a.m., the strike deadline, and day crews did not report.

Slight progress was made at the final bargaining meeting. The company's final offer averaged wage increases of 5.5c. CWA made wage hikes of 6-8c a condition of settlement.

However, a wide area of disagreement existed in company proposals for "serious" retrogression in job categories. These, CWA said, "could wash out much of the progress made over the years."

Holiday pay, travel and transfer allowances were also items of contention in negotiations.

The strikers install central office equipment produced by Western Electric at telephone exchanges in every part of the nation except five New England states.

IUE-CIO Victorious In Schenectady Vote

By AL ZACK

THE CIO Electrical Workers scored a spectacular conquest over the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers last week, winning its last big stronghold, the huge Schenectady, N. Y., Local 301, in a National Labor Relations Board election.

By a top-heavy vote of 9005 to 5137, Schenectady General Electric Co., workers voted to join IUE-CIO. It was a direct repudiation of UE, for Local 301 was known as UE's "mother local," was the home local of UE Sec.-Treas. Julius Emspak, and has been UE's major source of financial support.

The IUE-CIO victory resulted from a rebellion against national UE policy which swept through the leadership and rank-and-file of Local 301, and which dated as far back as 1950.

At that time, the Schenectady local bolted national policy and supported the United Nations intervention in Korea.

In succeeding internal battles, the local fought UE's foreign policy stands, ousted Communist-party liners thrust in their midst by UE, and generally isolated itself from the national organization.

By Mar. 8, of this year, the local was fed up. On that date, the officers, executive and shop stewards' body announced they were leaving UE and entering the IUE-CIO. Only one executive board member and a tiny handful of stewards turned to the left and supported the UE.

More than 12,000 members signed petitions supporting IUE-CIO. This democratic action brought instant retaliation from the UE, which went into courts seeking the employers' favorite weapon, the injunction.

But all UE's lies, propaganda and diversionary tactics, spurred by nearly 100 paid organizers, failed.

Hailing the victory which united 100,000 GE workers in IUE-CIO. Pres. James B. Carey called it a "magnificant fight" for "democratic unity and trade union solidarity." CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said the Schenectady win "marks the beginning of the end for the weak and discredited UE."

Other losses faced UE almost immediately. In Newark, N. J., at another GE plant, 1000 workers will vote in a board election July 7. The IUE-CIO has petitioned for an election at GE's Erie, Pa., plant where 8500 workers also seek relief from UE's taint.

Barbers Sign 2-Year Pact

A TWO-YEAR contract covering more than 600 barbers in 350 shops has been signed by the CIO Barbers & Beauticians with the Master Barbers Association in Queens and Nassau Counties, N. Y.

Pres. Arthur Hebert of the BBCU-CIO said the contract climaxed an organizing drive of more than eight months. Local 8 of the union was chartered in January as organizing gathered steam.

The first contract calls for a guaranteed wage plus liberal commissions, a 2% welfare fund contribution by the employer, seven paid holidays, paid vacations and dues checkoff.

'Positive and Consistent' Hemisphere Policy Demanded For U. S. By CIO Executive Board

LEADERS OF THE CIO moved through a busy round of Washington meetings last week. In a two-day period—June 28 and 29—they gathered for sessions of the CIO Executive Committee, the 44-member CIO Executive Board, the PAC Executive Committee, and a joint dinner with the AFL to mark the ratification of the No-Raiding Agreement between the two organizations.

While most of the meetings were devoted to administrative matters, these actions were made public:

1. A strong pledge of support from the CIO Executive Committee to Pres. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers, which was then in the final stages of negotiating new contracts with basic steel producers.

Through a telegram from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther to McDonald, the CIO leaders voiced "continuous and undivided support," and said the steel union's proposals on wages, pensions and welfare plans "are fully justified by economic developments."

2. A decision to sign new one-year contracts for the CIO-sponsored radio news program featuring commentator John W. Vandercook. The program has been on the air since last Labor Day, and is heard five nights a week on about 150 ABC network stations.

Vandercook's broadcasts, the CIO board statement said, are "firmly based on the best traditions of American anti-totalitarian liberalism." It said the show is reaching millions of listeners and "has developed an audience of increasing size and very considerable loyalty."

At the same time, the Board directed the executive officers of CIO "to take immediate steps to explore intensively the potentiality of CIO use of television, and to take steps at the earliest practicable moment to place a regular CIO-sponsored television show on the air."

3. An Executive Committee-approved wire from Reuther to the banana workers of Honduras, who are on strike against United Fruit Co., and a gift of $1,000 to aid the strikers.

At the same time, the CIO head sent a telegram to the big U. S.-owned fruit firm strongly urging an honorable settlement with the strikers and full recognition of their union.

Reuther said he had been assured by leaders of the hemisphere's labor groups that the Honduran banana union is not Communist and that its "demands are just."

"Your failure to allow simple economic justice in response to their legitimate demands can only serve to undermine further our country's position in Latin America," Reuther told United Fruit.

4. An Executive Board statement on Guatemala that emphasized the "urgent need for a positive and consistent U. S. policy in this hemisphere." (See detailed story Page 9.)

The statement said that without "minimizing" the need for military strength to prevent or repel Communist aggression, the fact remains that "planes, bombs and guns supply no real and lasting answer to the challenge of economic, social and political injustice in Latin America."

Too often, the statement said, the U. S. government becomes identified through its policies and actions with "the United Fruit Co. and other corporations which are bent on holding down wage levels and blocking economic and social reform." That, the CIO added, plays directly into the Communists' propaganda hand.

Name-calling against the Guatemalan Communists, it said, is not "an adequate substitute for positive action to raise the standard of living" in Guatemala and other Latin American nations.

Wire To Truman

The CIO Executive Committee joined the list of former Pres. Harry S. Truman's well-wishers with a warm "get-well" telegram dispatched to the Kansas City Research Hospital.

"The members of our CIO unions," the Executive Committee wire signed by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said, "together with all Americans, are counting the days until you are once again functioning normally as our youngest and most beloved elder statesman."

Demos Call Jobless Bill Feeble Token

THE GOP majority-backed unemployment compensation bill, due for early congressional action, was described last week as "but a feeble token gesture serving as a gloss to cover the absence of a program" in a Democratic minority report by House Ways and Means Committee members.

They said the measure would bring certain minor benefits to workers not already covered, but would do nothing to meet the most pressing needs of the unemployment insurance system or repair its basic weaknesses.

Action by the federal government, they continued, is necessary if "realistic and adequate" improvements in the unemployment compensation fields are to make a major contribution to the nation's sagging economy.

THE ADMINISTRATION measure fails even to cover employers with one to three workers or marginal agricultural processing workers, as the Administration had recommended. But provisions in the bill do reduce the time in which a new employer can get an experience rating and thereby a tax reduction.

Nothing in the bill would add one cent to the payments of most majority of workers already covered. It will not provide permanent aid to states with heavy unemployment problems. Instead, it offers loans with harsh repayment terms.

THE PROBLEM at present, the minority said, is not because there is a shortage of insurance funds in most states, but because of the great reluctance of those states—each under pressure to compete with all the others in holding down payments and taxes—to provide adequate benefits.

Large reserves had been accumulated—almost $9 billion at the end of 1953. Yet only about $1 out of every $5 in lost wages and salaries is being replaced by unemployment compensation payments, the minority noted.

Senate Votes Kill Income Tax Cut For Those Who Need One Most

HOPES FOR higher personal income tax exemptions were dashed last week when a quartet of Democrats joined with 45 Republican Senators to defeat a modified George Amendment by a scant three votes—49 to 46.

Voting for the amendment as finally submitted by Sen. George (D. Ga.) were 43 Democrats, two Republicans—Langer and Young from North Dakota—and Oregon's Morse (Ind.). George had proposed to cut the exemption increase from $800 to $700 and make it effective next Jan. 1 instead of retroactive to 1954 taxes. CIO, which had long urged the original higher figure, reluctantly agreed to the amendment.

Joining the Republicans in defeating the George measure were Sens. Byrd and Robertson (Va.), Johnson (Colo.) and Holland (Fla.).

Aware of the political dynamite in their action, the GOP attempted a counter-measure by proposing a $20 tax credit to some taxpayers. Debate on this amendment was held to two hours, but the sharp criticism revealed the inadequacy and hypocrisy of the Republican maneuver.

The $20 tax credit would have applied only to a taxpayer and his wife, and would have no effect on children or other dependents. Further, it would not have been available to those who claimed any other benefits under the bill. A working widow, for instance, for whom provision had been made in the bill, would be ineligible for the tax credit.

The GOP countermove was offered by Sen. Millikin (Colo.), who frankly admitted it was designed only to block the George Amendment.

Democrats proved themselves equally adept at blocking. They defeated the Millikin proposal 49-46, all 47 on the Democratic side being joined by Langer and Morse.

The only absentee was Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.).

As part of their face-saving strategy, Senate Republicans offered to cut in half the give-away to those who pay taxes on stock dividends. This proposal won unanimously.

Next day, however, when the tax measure was recalled for action, the Eisenhower-supported handout for the wealthy was killed in a surprise vote. Sen. Johnson (D. Colo.) argued that the provision should be lopped off the House-approved tax bill since the Treasury could ill afford the revenue loss.

Because of increasing difference in the House and Senate versions, the bill will go to a joint conference committee. The possibility still remains that stockholders may yet get unneeded but welcome tax relief.

The Democratic floor fight was led by Minority Leader Lyndon Johnson (Tex.) and Sens. George, Kerr (Okla.), Humphrey (Minn.) and Clements (Ky.)

Riffe Is Sick, Rests Easily

EXECUTIVE VICE-PRES. John V. Riffe, who was taken ill suddenly on June 25, is resting comfortably in a Washington hospital.

Although he was on the critical list for a few days, the CIO official has been responding well to treatment, it was indicated. Only members of his immediate family have been permitted to visit him.

The CIO Executive Committee, which met June 28, sent a telegram to him, expressing hope for a rapid recovery.

Roll Call Vote On George Amendment

Here is the roll call on the 49 to 46 vote by which the Senate on June 30 defeated the modified George Amendment, which would have granted a minimum $25 income tax exemption to each taxpayer and dependent. As prepared by the CIO Legislative Dept., R is a right vote for the amendment; W is a wrong vote against it, and A shows the senator was absent.

Alabama
Hill (D)	R
Sparkman (D)	R
Arizona
Hayden (D)	R
Goldwater (R)	W
Arkansas
McClellan (D)	R
Fulbright (D)	R
California
Knowland (R)	W
Kuchel (R)	W
Colorado
Johnson (D)	W
Millikin (R)	W
Connecticut
Bush (R)	W
Purtell (R)	W
Delaware
Williams (R)	W
Frear (D)	R
Florida
Holland (D)	W
Smithers (D)	R
Georgia
George (D)	R
Russell (D)	R
Idaho
Dworshak (R)	W
Welker (R)	W
Illinois
Douglas (D)	R
Dirksen (R)	W
Indiana
Capehart (R)	W
Jenner (R)	W
Iowa
Hickenlooper (R)	W
Gillette (D)	R
Kansas
Schoeppel (R)	W
Carlson (R)	W
Kentucky
Clements (D)	R
Cooper (R)	W
Louisana
Ellender (D)	R
Long (D)	R
Maine
Smith (R)	W
Payne (R)	W
Maryland
Butler (R)	W
Beall (R)	W
Massachusetts
Saltonstall (R)	W
Kennedy (D)	R
Michigan
Ferguson (R)	W
Potter (R)	W
Minnesota
Thye (R)	W
Humphrey (D)	R
Mississippi
Eastland (D)	R
Stennis (D)	R
Missouri
Hennings (D)	R
Symington (D)	R
Montana
Murray (D)	R
Mansfield (D)	R
Nebraska
Butler (R)	W
Bowring (R)	W
Nevada
McCarran (D)	R
Malone (R)	W
New Hampshire
Bridges (R)	W
Upton (R)	W
New Jersey
Smith (R)	W
Hendrickson (R)	W
New Mexico
Chavez (D)	R
Anderson (D)	R
New York
Ives (R)	W
Lehman (D)	R
North Carolina
Ervin (D)	R
Lennon (D)	R
North Dakota
Langer (R)	R
Young (R)	R
Ohio
Bricker (R)	W
Burke (D)	R
Oklahoma
Kerr (D)	R
Monroney (D)	R
Oregon
Cordon (R)	W
Morse (Ind.)	R
Pennsylvania
Martin (R)	W
Duff (R)	W
Rhode Island
Green (D)	R
Pastore (D)	R
South Carolina
Maybank (D)	R
Johnston (D)	R
South Dakota
Mundt (R)	W
Case (R)	W
Tennessee
Kefauver (D)	R
Gore (D)	R
Texas
Johnson (R)	R
Daniel (D)	R
Utah
Watkins (R)	W
Bennett (R)	W
Vermont
Aiken (R)	W
Flanders (R)	W
Virginia
Byrd (D)	W
Robertson (D)	W
Washington
Magnuson (D)	R
Jackson (D)	R
West Virginia
Kilgore (D)	R
Neely (D)	R
Wisconsin
Wiley (R)	W
McCarthy (R)	A
Wyoming
Crippa (R)	W
Barrett (R)	W

In A Nutshell

"The people of Russia have had a very rough time in the 20th century, the century of the common man."—Sir Winston Churchill.

Taxes — A 'Moral Victory'

The proposal to increase personal income tax exemptions from $600 to $800 failed of passage in the U. S. Senate.

It was strongly supported by the CIO and other liberal groups. If passed, it would have brought tax relief to millions of families and brought purchasing power into the national market at a crucial time.

But the Republican Party was dead opposed to tax relief for the many, just as it supported with all its strength the idea of tax relief for the wealthy and the big corporations.

Yet, at the last moment, the idea finally penetrated the thick skin and slow-moving mind of the GOP elephant that there is merit—and popularity—in the concept of tax relief for the people rather than for the privileged.

So, after all the speeches and diatribes, the Republicans cast their principles to the wind (not for the first time this year, either). Having tailored an economic theory to fit their special-interest clients, the GOP came out for tax cuts for everyone, too. Not substantial tax cuts, just little ones —to be talked about during the campaign months ahead.

The GOP trick was defeated, as it deserved to be. And few voters will be fooled by the Republicans' last-minute effort to pose as the friend of tax cuts for all the people.

Victory In Steel

Members and officers of the United Steelworkers can well be proud of their new contract agreements with the various companies in the steel industry.

It was no easy task to win pay increases and better pensions and a more adequate welfare plan at a time when the industry is operating far below capacity, and when hundreds of thousands of steel workers are either unemployed or working short work weeks.

Under the leadership of Pres. David J. McDonald, the union kept its eye on the objective of winning badly-needed improvements. And through the collective bargaining technique, it gained an important victory without resort to the strike weapon.

Benjamin Fairless, the head of U. S. Steel, also deserves a share of the credit for working out the new agreement. He has said on numerous occasions that he accepts the role of the union in the industry and believes in the collective bargaining process.

In helping achieve a new contract before the old one expired, Fairless gave meaning to his words. Other companies in other industries might do well to note the lesson that the labor-management relationship can be cooperative and constructive, and serve the best interests of all parties and the public as a whole.

Guest Editorial

Letter to the Washington Post, from noted liberal radio commentator Elmer Davis:

"The Vice-President is holding out on us. He says that Acheson's policies are responsible for the loss of Indo-China.

"Why doesn't he add that this is the same Acheson that shot Abe Lincoln?"

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE — Executive Vice President
JAMES B. CAREY — Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS
Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.
Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII — July 5, 1954 — No. 27

Union Man At Work

In Other Words—

The Fanaticism Of Joe McCarthy

In a recent article from a series on the McCarthy-Army hearings, Michael Straight, the editor of the New Republic, documents a case that Sen. McCarthy is a fanatic. Excerpts of the article follow:

By MICHAEL STRAIGHT

THE IMPRESSION that Sen. McCarthy left above all, was his total concentration in driving through his objectives without regard for the punishment that he or anyone else might take.

It was fanaticism, comparable to the fanaticism of the Fascists and Communists of Europe. But America could not absolve itself of blame by pinning a European label on McCarthy.

He wore the label of an American fanaticism, the by-product of our democratic heresy which holds that the mass is superior to the law and that truth is to be found by majority vote. McCarthy was a mob master—of the American mob.

In his political role, he was sole judge. In his messianic role he was sole source of absolution—able to transform acts of crime into acts of virtue, and criminals into martyrs participating in the holy cause of destroying a society so corrupt that its legal instruments existed to be disobeyed.

McCarthy was the founder of the new American Brotherhood of the Guiltless. And like most founders of such movements, his motivation stemmed in part from knowledge that he was steeped in conventional guilt.

McCarthy paralyzed conventional citizens by hurling at them the very words of "blackmail," "smear," "dishonest" and "unfair" that they supposed best fitted him.

McCarthy was not a fanatic in his beliefs at first. He came late and a stranger to the cause of anti-communism. His mood, on returning to Wisconsin from Wheeling, W. Va., was one of amazement and delight at the political diamond mine into which he had stumbled. He was not then a fanatic in any cause but McCarthy. But gradually he came to believe his tirades.

The fanatic stands above the law and above duly constituted authority. He disdains authority as part of the society he rejects. He scorns the law as the instrument of the order he is sworn to overthrow. So McCarthy claimed he spoke for the Army, rather than the responsible officials appointed by the President. He stated: "I just will not abide by any secrecy directive of anyone."

The fanatic seeks to destroy real and imagined enemies who stand in his way. So, in the present conflict, the fanaticism of McCarthy stood forth in his original brief of counter charges. The Army brief attributed a minor and rather moderate role to McCarthy. His was the reply of a man verging on paranoia.

McCarthy was never more emotional than when he cried that Carr and Cohn had been "smeared." Yet, Asst. Defense Sec. Hensel swore that on May 3 McCarthy told him that in attacking him he was just following the advice of an old farmhand, Indian Charlie, who had told McCarthy that "if one was ever approached by another person in a not completely friendly fashion one should start kicking at the other person as fast as possible below the belt until the other person was rendered helpless."

Rejects Objective Truth

The fanatic rejects objective truth in dedication to the truth of his own creation. So the record of the hearings is replete with evidence of McCarthy's disregard for truth. His assertions are rarely outright lies. But the impression they are intended to leave is untrue.

Yet, with the stubborn devotion of the fanatic, McCarthy clung to his untruths. He said of Sen. Symington (D. Mo.), for example, "The only time I hear him raise his voice at this table is when we appear to be hurting those that defend communism."

This demonstrably false charge was one of McCarthy's Big Lies. It was indignantly repudiated but following the manner of his teacher, he repeated it over and over until in many untrained minds a part of it stuck.

Day and night McCarthy lunged at real and imagined enemies. Only one seemed beyond his reach—the enemy within. It emerged on the afternoon of June 9 and struck at Welch with instruments of mental torture. Later McCarthy reported that when the outraged Welch struck back, he felt knots in his throat. He knew that it was his one great error in the hearings, for which he had only the enemy within to blame.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

PRES. EISENHOWER showed some fire when he was asked at his news conference whether the Administration endorsed the most recent speech of his Vice-President, Richard M. Nixon, on foreign policy.

He hadn't read Nixon's speech, Eisenhower said, and he added in effect that he wasn't going to be baited about it. He said that Nixon spoke for the Administration most of the time—but he didn't say necessarily this time — and reporters should not try to excommunicate Nixon from the Republican Party.

Double-Talk—And Deception

The President can't seriously expect to adopt this aloof attitude toward the political declarations of high officials in his regime.

When Nixon charges, literally, that all our present problems in the Far East arise because the "Acheson policy" was directly responsible for the "loss of China," he is speaking as Eisenhower's lieutenant. Democratic leaders in Congress, as they showed in angry comments, know it.

Nixon may be a bad joke, an imposition on the American people, but he holds the office second under Eisenhower by the choice of the President himself. He is not disavowed by refusal to comment on his speeches. The speeches cannot be treated as trivial.

Classifying The Man

The best way to classify Nixon is under the "Isn't It Wonderful?" department. Last winter in Florida he murmured, in another speech:

"Isn't it wonderful, finally, to have a Secretary of State who isn't taken in by the Communists?"

Most politicians, even, would have hesitated to employ this sentence as a slur against former Sec. Acheson and praise of Sec. Dulles. Dulles was certainly "taken in" by Alger Hiss. He recommended Hiss as head of the Carnegie Endowment even after he was apprised of all the collected charges against Hiss. Acheson wasn't "taken in" to any greater extent.

Acheson, moreover, did everything in his power for years to build Western strength against the Communist military threat. He was a patient, able, determined man of force and intellect, and Nixon's abuse of him is indecent.

In the latest speech, Nixon showed himself a master of deliberate double-talk, calculated to deceive.

He didn't blame Acheson for the Communist troubles in Guatemala or the Egyptian urgency to get the British out of the Suez Canal zone—but he would have made as much sense in doing this as he did when he blamed Acheson for the French plight in Indo-China.

The civil war in Indo-China began in 1946, when the French refused Ho Chi Minh, then more a nationalist than a Communist leader, the measure of self-government the people of the Vietnam demanded.

Chiang Kai Shek—not the Communists—then ran the central government of China, and the Vietnam rebellion against the French didn't rise because of either Acheson or Chiang Kai Shek. It arose because of the Vietnam determination for national sovereignty and French foolishness in trying to reclaim a far-away colony against the will of the people.

Chinese Communists have since aided Ho Chi Minh, but not nearly to the extent that we have aided the French. France is losing the Vietnam because the rebels are too strong to be put down in eight bloody years even with hundreds of millions of dollars of American military aid to French forces.

More Double-Talk

Nixon also had the gall to praise Dulles for coming back from Geneva without having "given away at the conference table" in regard to Korea what our soldiers had not "lost."

There could never have been the slightest danger that South Korea would be "given away," and the implication that Acheson might have done so, whereas Dulles did not, was ridiculous. Acheson, after all, was the Secretary of State who helped strengthen Harry Truman's decision to fight to save Korea.

Further than that, the plain fact is that Dulles suffered such defeats at Geneva regarding Indo-China that American prestige dropped sharply.

He couldn't keep the French from negotiating a compromise peace; he couldn't get the British to endorse allied action to "save" Indo-China, and he slipped away home in a hurry leaving Undersec. Bedell Smith to salvage what he could from the ruins of Dulles' own failures.

Isn't it wonderful that we have a Vice-President with the brashness, ignorance and unscrupulousness to try to pretend that Dulles scored some kind of triumph when in fact he was humiliated and beaten on every proposal even to our allies? No, it is not.

A wisecrack hereabouts says a congressman overheard two Communists talking about Joe McCarthy. "Well," they agreed, "We don't like his objectives but we sure do admire his methods."

LISTEN TO THE CIO RADIO PROGRAM

John W. Vandercook AND THE NEWS

every weekday evening on the ABC Network

Washington Window—

Big Utilities Get The Gravy In GOP Atomic Give-Away Drive

By Public Affairs Institute

DOES THE ATOMIC Energy Act, under which the U. S. atomic program has been carried on for the past eight years, need amending?

The Republican-controlled Joint Committee on Atomic Energy says that it does. So do a number of private corporations, particularly power interests who want to develop atomic power for profit.

On the other hand, a number of Democrats, led by Rep. Holifield (D. Calif.), feel that the committee is in too much of a hurry to turn the peaceful development of atomic energy over to private interests without adequate safeguards for the public interest and the taxpayers' $12 billion stake in atomic development.

What is the situation?

For the past weeks the Joint Committee has been holding hearings on a bill introduced by Sen. Hickenlooper (R. Ia.), a former chairman of the committee, and its present chairman, Rep. Cole (R. N.Y.). The bill is designed to enable private industry to take over peaceful development of the atom, subject to security regulations, and to take the government as far as possible out of the peacetime atom business.

A Boon For Monopoly

There isn't much opposition to that in Washington. But there is a lot of opposition to the way in which the bill would do it. Opponents of the bill declare that it would encourage monopoly, turn its back on public power and cooperatives, and hand a few companies billions of dollars of know-how and patent rights on a silver platter.

Here are the points at issue:

1 Under the law the Atomic Energy Commission is supposed to make a complete report to Congress on the social, economic and political effects of any peacetime development of atomic energy before licensing anybody to go ahead with it. The AEC hasn't done that. In fact it admits that it doesn't know enough about the future to make such a report.

Then why not wait until we know more about atomic energy than we do now, ask opponents of the current bill? Why rush in now to turn atomic energy over to private enterprise and freeze the pattern of the future when we don't know how jobs will be affected and whether other industries will be ruined? They call it "legislation in ignorance."

2 Under the proposed bill the big power companies would get the go-ahead signal. Public power and cooperatives are scarcely mentioned.

In fact, opponents of the bill claim that it really is a power bill rather than an atomic energy bill.

It deals with American power policy painfully built up during the past century.

This policy has been to permit local communities to decide for themselves whether they want public or private power. All this is disregarded in the bill. Supporters of public power, REA and farm cooperatives claim that the bill leaves them out in the cold while a handful of big companies get the gravy.

—Herblock in Washington Post & Times-Herald

"Yessir—Peacetime Use Of Atomic Power"

3 The patent provisions of the proposed bill would open the way for private industry to take out patents on atomic processes. This is intended to encourage private investment. Yet opponents of the bill point out that up to now only a handful of private companies have been able to work with the commission. In any patent race they would have a terrific advantage over competitors. They could take out patents that would give them a monopoly over the peacetime atomic energy business.

4 What about the public interest? Already the American taxpayer has sunk some $12 billion dollars in atomic energy research and development. All this time private industry has scarcely put a nickel into the necessary research. Now, however, a bright future for peacetime use of atomic energy is beginning to appear and private industry sees possible profits ahead. Opponents of the bill ask whether all the fruits of the taxpayer's dollars are now to be turned over to private industry without adequate protection for the public interest?

The Hickenlooper-Cole Bill will soon come before Congress. It probably will get through the House. Opponents of the measure are perparing to fight it in the Senate.

A Report From Sweden—

What Makes A Communist?

SWEDES who become Communists do so for three main reasons—they have a sense of isolation, a lack of social adjustment, or a general disposition toward extremism, religious or otherwise.

That is what Sven Rydenfelt, Swedish sociologist, concluded after making a thorough study of the subject as part of his thesis for a degree at the University of Lund, according to the American-Swedish News Exchange.

Not many Swedes, of course, become Communists for any reason. They won about 200,000 votes, or 5% of the number cast, in the last election.

The general feeling that communism appeals most readily to low income groups is not sustained by Rydenfelt's study, the news exchange reported.

"The principal Communist strongholds in Sweden are actually found among highly paid industrial labor groups such as the mineworkers in the Far North, construction workers in Stockholm and shipyard employes in Gothenburg," it said.

"Agricultural and home workers, on the other hand, hardly ever vote with the Communist Party, although they have relatively low incomes. It is true that fluctuations in the country's economic conditions usually seem to be reflected in the Communist vote, but the relationship is not significant."

Marxist ideology and Communist propaganda seem to have little effect in influencing Swedes.

"Sweden's 'reddest' election district," the exchange recounted, "is an isolated community in the interior of the western province of Varmland, where the Communist vote has reached over 50% of the total. Mr. Rydenfelt points out that of 133 newspapers and other publications read in the district, only six are Communist."

Rydenfelt found that the relation between communism and religion could be best studied in the North of Sweden. The most northern province, Norrbotten, has more Communist voters than any other district, the news exchange said.

Ashes Of Fanaticism

"Villages and townships which some generations ago were known as centers of extremist religious revivals are today typical Communist strongholds," it reported Rydenfelt found.

"The old religious movements are practically extinct, but communism flourishes in the ashes of the religionist ecstasy or fanaticism.

"In the province immediately south, economic and social conditions are largely similar, but the population has been imbued with the Christian faith without extremist tendencies, and it is actually one of the 'whitest' provinces in Sweden."

HISTORIC CELEBRATION—AFL Pres. George Meany (left) and CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther chat at dinner with David L. Cole, impartial umpire of new No-Raiding Agreement signed by participating unions.

RAPT ATTENTION—Top CIO and AFL leaders listen intently as CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther says that the "same good faith that went into this agreement will make it succeed." toric first step to the Mayflower Ho

CIO, AFL Celebrate No-Raiding A

OFFICIAL signatures are appended to No-Raid Agreement by unionists on the way in to celebration dinner.

CORDIAL AMITY prevailed as more than 300 top officials of the CIO and AFL celebrated signing and ratification of the No-Raiding Agreement between the two labor groups at a banquet last week in Washington's Mayflower Hotel.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany described the event as historic and important. As spokesmen for the 33 CIO affiliates and 111 AFL unions, they were the only speakers.

They were introduced by David L. Cole, former head of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, who was named impartial umpire under the No-Raiding Agreement.

Noting that the compact was signed in the same hotel two weeks before, Reuther called it "the second Mayflower Compact." The first, he recalled, was signed by the Pilgrim Fathers in the cabin of the Mayflower in 1620, and gave America its first democratic constitution.

Informality Prevailed

Meany predicted that elimination of raiding as the first step towards labor unity "can make a tremendous contribution to the workers we represent." He said the two unions could go forward "in an atmosphere of tranquility without the sounds of raiding warfare outside the door."

An easy air of informality marked the event. Affability at the highest level quickly communicated itself through the entire gathering. Officials of both federations were seated at assigned tables and restraint was notably lacking as problems common to unionists were discussed during the meal.

For some, it was an opportunity to chat over old times. At other tables, catching a sense of the event's historic significance, men grown grey in the service of the labor movement signed each other's placecards as mementoes.

On the stage, musicians helped things along with selections like "Marching Along Together" and "Some Enchanted Evening."

During the two addresses the same spirit of harmony prevailed, with Meany and Reuther applauded impartially many times during their talks.

Cole remarked at one point that the "most superfluous person in this room tonight is the umpire."

Underlying both speeches, however, was a deadly serious awareness of the problems ahead and of the need for action in concert by the two big union groups.

Reuther said he did not regard the No-Raiding Agreement as a panacea, but as "the first essential step."

"Out of this climate we can begin to put our house together," he declared. "The facts are most convincing that raiding doesn't pay. It is expensive and morally wrong."

He called the pact "a reflection of the growing maturity in both movements," and continued that the well-being and future of organized labor transcends the interests of any segment of it.

Recognition Often Denied

The CIO head pointed out that labor had often been denied its due recognition because it was divided. The labor movement, Reuther said, understands that "we make progress only as we work with other segments of the population, and we are now trying to put together a movement that will facilitate the progress of the whole community."

"The division has not been in the ranks but in the leadership," Reuther said. He called for "demonstration by our attitudes" that unity of purpose is feasible.

"The people here have the power to create a united labor movement—it remains to be seen if we have the will," he challenged.

"There will be those unions that will come along slowly. Let us be patient with

96 Signatories

A total of 96 unions, 29 from the CIO and 67 from the AFL, have now signed the No-Raiding Agreement. Two AFL affiliates, the United Garment Workers and the United Glove Workers, have ratified the agreement since the ratification signing ceremony on June 9.

QUOTE FOR PUBLICATION—AFL Molders & Foundry Workers Editor Elmer Reynolds (left) notes comments from UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey and M&FW-AFL Vice Pres. David Rath and Pres. Chester A. Sample.

AFL LETTER Carriers' Pres. William Doherty (l.) shakes with CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne.

TRANSPARENT—Clearly pleased McCracken (l.), AFL Flint Glass Workers Pres. Burl Phares, FGW-A Dinner crowd of 325 celebrated "his-labor unity" in Williamsburg Room of tel in the nation's Capital.

IMPARTIAL Umpire David L. Cole tells unionists united labor movement will be good thing for the nation.

WITH GESTURES—AFL Union Label Dept. Pres. Matthew Woll (l.) raises point with ACWA-CIO Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, AFL Bldg. Trades Sec.-Treas. Joseph Keenan, AFL Electrical Workers Sec.-Treas. J. S. Milne.

greement Ratification

Truman Hailed

Former Pres. Truman was remembered by CIO and AFL leaders during the celebration of the No-Raiding Agreement signing. A message was sent to him hoping for his quick return to health "and all his usual vigor," and adding a wish that he will "shortly again resume his full measure of normal activities."

them. Let history record that we had the good sense to put this together. The goal is a united labor movement. If we can do this in our day we will have measured up to the standard of leadership."

Meany told the gathering he "had no illusions aobut the problems we face" in "this first step towards unity in the American labor movement."

Raiding, the AFL head declared, "is a very costly occupation." He said he would have no quarrel with any union which could report that it had organized 100% of its jurisdiction "and wanted to keep busy." But, he continued, "I don't know of any such union, AFL or CIO." He reminded that only one person in every three who could be organized is now a union member.

Meany said the U. S. labor movement had a tradition of independence and was based on voluntarism.

"When we speak of those who have not signed this agreement, let us bear in mind there was never a thought in the minds of those who drew it up there would ever be any compulsion to sign," he said.

"However, I think the facts of life will speak for themselves. The raider learns that the one who raids is the one who is raided most."

Meany advised that the American people have nothing to fear from a united labor movement. The U. S. trade unionist, he said, has a bitter antipathy towards dictatorship in his union or his country, and wouldn't stand for it.

Foreign Policy Record

The record of the American labor movement on foreign policy is "miles ahead" of the rest of any other population segment, Meany recalled, citing its recognition of Hitler as a threat in 1933, seven years before anyone else.

Seated at the head table besides Reuther, Meany and Cole were: Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, and Presidents Joseph Beirne, Communications; L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber; O. A. Knight, Oil; Jacob Potofsky, Clothing, all from CIO; Pres. Harry Bates, Bricklayers; Pres. Matthew Woll, Union Label Dept.; Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Pres. Daniel Tracy, Electrical; Pres. William Doherty, Letter Carriers; Pres. William McFetridge, Building Service; William Birthright, Barbers; and James C. Petrillo, Musicians, all from the AFL. —E.K.

AUTOGRAPHS, PLEASE—CIO Textile Workers Research Dir. Sol Barkin (l.) exchanges signatures on placecard with AFL Cement Workers Pres. William Schoenberg and AFL Lathers Union Pres. William J. McSorley.

e CIO Glass Workers Sec-Treas. Lewis
orkers Pres. Harry Cook, CIO Glass
L Sec.-Treas. Charles M. Scheff.

CIO SEC.-TREAS. James B. Carey adds his signature to No-Raid agreement as IUE-CIO president.

POLITICS, NO DOUBT—CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll (r.) talks with (from left) AFL Bus Drivers Sec-Treas. Othmer J. Mischo and Executive Vice Pres. Sam B. Berrong, and AFL Legislative Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller.

Pegler Overtaken by $175,001 Worth of Fate

By EUGENE KELLEY

WESTBROOK PEGLER, the hate-peddling columnist, finally got his come-uppance in a federal court last week when a jury ruled he had libeled Quentin Reynolds, war correspondent and author, in a 1949 column.

But Pegler, whose defense charged Reynolds ran away from the battle of Salerno in World War II, himself had decamped from the New York City court room long before the eight men and four women on the jury filed in to report their verdict.

The smear specialist who mocked Reynolds' courage as a war correspondent and called him "yellow" didn't hear the foreman award Reynolds $1 in compensatory damage and assess 75,000 punitive charges against Pegler, the Hearst Corp., and the publishers of the New York Journal-American, a Hearst paper.

Pegler was ordered to pay $100,000, the Hearst Corp. was tabbed for $50,000, and Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc., was told to pay Reynolds $25,000 for the libels against him in Pegler's column of Nov. 29, 1949.

Pegler Bolts

It was the first time in Pegler's life that anyone had got him into court on a libel charge, and he got away from it as fast as he could. He bolted as soon as Judge Edward Weinfeld had completed a charge to the jury in which he branded sections of the column as libelous, and noted that Reynolds was entitled to damages for at least two smears against his morals.

"I charge you that there was no competent evidence to support the comments about Reynolds 'nuding on a public road' and his proposal of marriage to Mrs. Heywood Broun on the way to her husband's funeral," the judge told the jurors.

For 93 minutes Weinfeld read his charge, a masterpiece of legal prose. He referred to the more than 4000 pages of testimony during the trial's seven weeks, the hundreds of exhibits by both sides, and the international reputations of the litigants.

"Civilized society has always recognized a man's reputation as a precious thing," the judge said as he detailed the laws of libel.

Minutes later he made it clear that "as a matter of law, this (the Pegler) article is libelous and defamatory."

He excluded most references in the trial to Broun, founder and first president of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

"If you find actual malice in the column, this defeats the defense of fair comment," the judge instructed.

Awards Explained

He explained the damage awards open to the jurors, compensatory for injury to reputation or loss of earnings, and punitive or "smart money." Punitive damages, he went on, "have as their purpose to punish the defendant, to set an example to him and to deter him from repetition and to warn others."

"It is a legal expression of ethical indignation," he added.

Clearly and with scrupulous fairness, Weinfeld outlined the main points of Reynolds' suit and a counter suit filed by Pegler against Reynolds on which the jury failed to reach agreement. He asked the jurors to use "common sense" in evaluating the mass of testimony given them.

For, he said, "to put it bluntly, witnesses on both sides were either woefully mistaken or deliberately lied."

Through all of this, Pegler, the trial's central figure, sat with exaggerated erectness in a chair less than a dozen feet from the man judge and jury found he had libeled.

Occasionally he frowned like a Jove who had mislaid a thunderbolt. Rarely did he turn his head to survey the thronged courtroom. When he did, his contempt and scorn for his fellow humans was mirrored in his expression, which softened only when his eyes met those of his wife.

When the judge had concluded and the jury trailed out to begin deliberation Pegler fled as quickly as he could, shrinking from contact with the others who tried to crowd through the doors. The courtroom saw him no more.

Ten and a half hours and seven courtroom clarifying conferences later, the jury came back with its verdict, just before 1 a.m.

"I'm very, very happy," Reynolds told friends who thronged to congratulate him.

Appeal Probable

Spare, angular Charles Henry, Pegler's counsel and the sole defender of the Hearst empire at the hour of reckoning, rose to argue for and won a stay of execution for 20 days during which an appeal, almost certainly, will be prepared. Spectators were long aware of a coolness between counsel and client.

Louis Nizer, Reynolds' lawyer, was jubilant. He observed the award was the largest in U. S. libel history. Nizer brushed aside the one dollar in compensatory damages and took elation from the huge assessment to punish Pegler and the Hearst units.

Earlier, in a brilliant, step-by-step summation that took five hours, Nizer had said:

"We are defending ourselves from the dirt and filth cast by an evil man . . . I don't know how many reputations we will save in this historic case. Not everyone can stand up against the Hearst empire and Pegler."

He called Pegler "a big bully with his pen," and observed that Pegler had changed his testimony under oath 130 times.

"Where are the Hearst executives?" demanded Nizer of the jury. Dramatically he pointed to the empty witness chair. "They belong here, they are a party to this suit, they are in New York and easily available," he thundered.

Nizer maintained that top-drawer officials of the Hearst domain never took the stand because they would have found it hard to defend the reputation of their featured columnist. He declared that admissions would have been wrung from them that they often had to delete sections or kill whole columns by Pegler.

The trial's closing hours were notable for two other things. Press coverage, up to then almost non-existent except for a few papers and magazines, expanded many times over. The self-imposed press blackout ended abruptly.

Missing Juror Cleared Up

Also, the mystery of the missing juror was cleared up. Near the end of the third week of the trial, testimony was suspended while Judge Weinfeld talked separately with the jurors. One was released without explanation.

Just before discharging the jury Weinfeld revealed that the missing man, a New York investment counselor, had discussed the case outside the courtroom despite stern admonitions to the contrary. He had been fined $250 for "improper and gross misbehavior," Weinfeld said, clearly agitated, and his name was stricken from the jury rolls.

The judge indicated he had been "very lenient" with the juror and had had to deny a motion for a mistrial after he satisfied himself the fairness of the legal action had not been impaired. An alternate took the place of the discharged juror for the balance of the trial.

Editorial

Press And Pegler

The Westbrook Pegler libel case took almost eight weeks before the jury brought in its $175,001 award against the Hearst columnist. Few people knew anything about it.

The CIO News regarded the trial as major news, and carried weekly stories by Al Zack and Eugene Kelley of our staff.

We had a near "exclusive" story during all but the last week of the trial. With the exception of Editor & Publisher, the newspaper industry's trade paper, and the liberal New York Post, scarcely a line appeared in the press until the closing days.

The papers knew about the trial. AP and UP had reporters there every day.

Newspapers, of course, resist reporting libel suits—on the theory it may give the customer some bad ideas on the subject.

Pegler's writings, not all of which carry a message of sweetness and light, appear in scores of papers, with an estimated circulation of over 12 million.

Should not these readers have had, for seven long weeks, an inkling of the fact that Mr. Pegler's veracity had been challenged? Does not the press have a responsibility to its readers to tell all the news, even about a leading reactionary columnist?

On the basis of the record, we think the American press failed its responsibility in the Pegler trial. —H. C. F.

The Milk Of . . .

Something of Westbrook Pegler's philosophy was read into the trial record by counsel for Quentin Reynolds, who won a libel action against the union-hating columnist last week.

"My hates give me more spiritual satisfactions than my friendships," Pegler wrote in one of his earliest columns, according to Reynolds' lawyer.

AIDS PEACEFUL RELATIONS—Emil Rieve, chairman of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation and TWUA-CIO president, hands a check for $7500 to J. Noble Braden, executive vice president of the American Arbitration Association, while James B. Carey (right), CIO secretary-treasurer and Electrical Workers head, smiles approval. AAA got money because of Murray's interest in arbitration.

CIO Says Two Brownell Bills Will Advance Totalitarianism

THE CIO PROTESTED two bills recommended to Congress by Atty.-Gen. Brownell, purportedly designed to control Communist infiltration of trade unions, as "advancing the very threat of totalitarianism which they decry."

The two bills grew out of Administration proposals to give the Justice Dept. new weapons presumably needed to fight Communist-dominated labor organizations.

One would empower the President to bar from defense plants individuals "as to whom there is reasonable ground to believe" might engage in subversive acts.

THE OTHER would supplement the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950 and provide for the dissolution of "organizations which have been established for legal and legitimate purposes" but which have become "Communist-infiltrated."

In testimony prepared by CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg and presented by Assistant Gen. Counsel Thomas E. Harris before a House Judiciary subcommittee, the CIO said the first bill could lead to "abuses" similar to those in the present governmental personnel security program.

The fact that it can go into effect only when the Secretary of Defense publishes a list of defense facilities was questioned by the CIO on the ground that such publication "would serve as a directory of targets for would-be saboteurs."

Harris pointed out that the second bill was similar to bills already introduced by Sens. Butler (R. Md.) and Goldwater (R. Ariz.) and Rep. Velde (R. Ill.). He quoted the recent CIO Executive Board statement opposing those bills.

"To wreck, through government regulation, the whole edifice of American trade union democracy," that statement said, "in order to try to deal with the control of a tiny handful of Communists in trade unions is unreasoning."

POINT is checked at Intl. Labor Conference in Geneva by Al Barkan (right), CIO Textile Workers, worker member of committee on paid holidays, with Michael Ross, CIO delegate to Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and also a U. S. representative at ILO. Elmer Cope, Steelworkers, third CIO representative, was absent when photo was taken.

U. S. Latin American Policy Spelled Out By CIO Board

A SIX-POINT program containing the "essential elements" of a U. S. policy for Latin America was approved by the CIO Executive Board at its meeting in Washington last week.

Consideration of the Latin American situation was touched off by the crisis in Guatemala, which, the board found, "underlines the urgent need for a positive and consistent U. S. policy in this hemisphere."

Nothing, it added, could better strengthen Communist influence in Guatemala than to give new reasons for identification of this country with those who have been fighting economic and social reforms and who "seem more loyal" to foreign corporations than to their own country.

THE CIO PROGRAM was urged on Pres. Eisenhower, Sec. of State Dulles, the Foreign Operations Administration and U. S. delegates to the Organization of American States. It provides:

1. "Step No. 1 is by word and deed to convince the peoples and governments of Latin America that the full moral support of the American people will be given to all legitimate efforts at economic, social and political reform; and that, when democratic decisions have been made to undertake such reforms, we will be ready to help in every possible way in their implementation.

2. "The State Dept. should notify all U. S. corporations operating in Latin America, specifically including the United Fruit Co., that they are expected to comply with laws and regulations democratically adopted in each country to implement such reforms; that in no event will the U. S. government support efforts to defeat, repeal or evade such legislation; that any attempts directly or indirectly to foment or finance armed resistance, seizure or aggression will be treated as unwarranted interference in the internal affairs of friendly peoples and as such undermining relations between the U. S. and our allies.

"Such a declaration is a necessary prerequisite to effective action under the Inter-American Mutual Assistance Pact.

3. "In concert with Latin American nations, the U. S. should serve notice on world communism that we will not tolerate and will resist any effort to subvert free governments in this hemisphere or elsewhere.

4. "It is universally conceded that the problems of land reform and labor comprise a vital area in the contest between freedom and world communism's strategy of penetration and subversion.

"Therefore, all nations participating in the mutual defense effort should join in a clear declaration of the rights of farmers, farm workers and industrial workers, to organize and to bargain collectively through unions of their own choosing.

5. "Labor should be represented on a Commission of Inquiry to be named by the Organization of American States, and the job assigned to such a commission should include:

"Evidence, findings and conclusions on the extent of Communist influence and control in the Guatemalan government;

"The nature and extent of outside Communist or non-Communist interference in the internal affairs of the Guatemalan government;

"The circumstances of the June 1954 invasion of Guatemala, sources of funds, arms, planes and men;

"The character of the invasion group and of those persons and groups within Guatemala and Honduras or elsewhere co-operating with them in the rebellion to indicate the extent of democratic and non- or anti-democratic support and participation.

6. "We urge the U. S. government, in concert with the Latin-American democratic governments, to work out a program of action in the following fields:

"The formulation of practical measures to strengthen democratic practices and forces in Guatemala and in other Latin American nations.

"Formulation of a hemisphere pact including but extending beyond military defense to the building of an invincible inter-American economy based upon a steadily rising standard of living that will absorb the abundance that our lands, our mines, mills and factories and the genius of free men can produce.

"Formulation and implementation on a really meaningful scale of a hemisphere program of technical assistance and cooperation. Such a program, with the spending of only a fraction of what is spent for purely military defense, can and must give the peoples of Latin-America a chance to develop their economies, produce more, have a fair share in what they produce and have a real stake in the defense of democratic rights."

ILO Urges World Approval Of Two Weeks' Vacation

THE PRINCIPLE of two weeks' vacation for 12 months' work came closer to worldwide recognition with the adoption of a formal recommendation to that effect by the International Labor Organization at its recent Geneva conference.

Three other questions— vocational rehabilitation of the disabled, penal sanctions for breaches of employment contracts and conditions of migrant workers in underdeveloped countries—were set aside for next year's conference.

The ILO, which is a specialized United Nations agency through which employer, worker and government representatives jointly work out solutions to pressing labor and manpower problems throughout the world, also adopted a committee report proposing that its technical assistance projects in the future be fewer and of longer duration.

SUCH PROJECTS are to be concentrated in countries where they are more likely to be continued after outside assistance is ended.

Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse, in one of the final conference sessions, called for the ILO to enter a new phase of activity, "with particular emphasis on the human aspect of worker-employer relations."

Morse agreed that the recent seating of Soviet bloc delegates raised grave issues for the ILO, but said it was the duty of the delegates to consider "how we may turn this new membership situation to advance the cause of peace."

The ILO's Governing Body chose Roberto Ago of Italy as its chairman. Alfred Roberts of the United Kingdom was named vice chairman for the workers to replace the late Leon Jouhaux of France.

The conference voted a budget of $6,745,196, and fixed the Soviet contribution toward it at 10%.

Foreign Aid Bill Passes Despite GOP

THANKS to the Democrats, the House last week passed the Administration's foreign aid bill.

Had Pres. Eisenhower relied on the Republicans, the measure would not have passed. The roll call vote was 260 to 125. Only 118 GOP representatives voted for it—75 short of the number necessary to assure its passage. Voting for the measure were 141 Democrats and one independent.

"Nay" votes were cast by 78 Republicans and 47 Democrats.

The measure provided for $3,338,608,000 in foreign aid—$109 million less than the President said was "essential" for free world defense against communism.

After a strong plea by Democratic floor leader Rayburn (Tex.) — joining with Speaker Martin (Mass.)—the House defeated a motion by Rep. Adair (R. Ind.) to kill the Administration's proposal to extend $85 million in economic aid to India.

The House-approved measure, which was sent to the Senate, carries an authorization of $1,403,300,000 for military aid. Only $131,528,000 was voted for the Point Four program. A total of $705,880,000 is provided for "defense support" economic aid and Korean rehabilitation.

The CIO has consistently called for more economic aid to foreign countries.

Friend Of CIO Dies In Montana

M. A. (Whitey) Wright, Glasgow, Mont.—long-time member of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and an old friend of the CIO—died recently. He was legislative representative of his local and active in labor political action.

"His passing leaves a hole in the army of fair-minded people," commented Walter Smethurst of the CIO field staff.

Reuther Asks Ike To Bar Swiss Watch Duty Hike

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther "urgently appealed" to Pres. Eisenhower last week to reject the U. S. Tariff Commission's recommendations for increasing the tariff duty on imported Swiss watches.

In a letter to the Chief Executive, Reuther recalled that the CIO has been "a consistent and strong supporter of the reciprocal trade program from its very inception." He urged that the United States "not retreat from its well-advanced position on international trade because the security and well-being of America are dependent upon continued trade with free nations."

Among the reasons for rejection of the increase listed in the CIO president's letter were the "substantial amount of subsidiary employment" created in this country by Swiss watch imports, and the fact that "more employment in the United States is dependent on continued American exports than would be adversely affected by increased imports."

Reuther also urged a re-examination of curtailment of defense orders in the watch industry and asked for "serious consideration" of an adjustment program "such as the one recommended by the CIO over the years and spelled out by David J. McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers of America, CIO, and Public Member of the Randall Commission, in his dissent on adjustments in the Trade and Tariffs section of the report of the commission."

IN A PRIOR action last March, the CIO had submitted a statement to the Tariff Commission outlining CIO's views on the subject of Swiss watches.

The statement accompanied a letter to the commission by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Affairs Committee and president of the CIO Clothing Workers.

Five CIOers Join City of Hope Unit

Five leaders of CIO unions were among 17 men elected as members of the National Labor Council of the City of Hope, non-sectarian medical hospital near Los Angeles.

They are: Pres. Joseph Curran, Maritime Union; Pres. Max Greenberg. Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union; Pres. Elwood D. Swisher, Chemical Workers; Pres. John Blackburn, Lithographers, and Sec.-Treas. James J. Mitchell, Shoe Workers.

United Fruit Strikers Are Pledged Aid

THE CIO PLEDGED its support to striking banana plantation workers in Honduras last week, and backed up its pledge with a $1000 gift.

The action was made public as CIO released the text of a cablegram from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther to Sec.-Gen. Raul Edgardo Estrada of the Central Strike Committee of the Honduran Banana Workers.

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations declares its solidarity with you in your efforts to secure economic justice for your members," the cablegram said. "We know that the misery you are suffering during your strike will not be in vain.

The plantation workers are striking against the giant United Fruit Co., major grower and shipper of the tropical fruit, which operates in a number of Central American countries. Prime issue in the nearly two-month-old strike is wages.

The CIO cablegram advised Estrada that the CIO had also cabled the company strongly urging "conclusion of an honorable settlement with Honduran banana workers" and granting of full recognition to their union.

Carey Warns NAACP Of New Bias Problems

CIO SEC.-TREAS. James B. Carey warned the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People last week that the recent Supreme Court decision banning segregation in the public schools carries with it "the seeds of new problems."

Carey, who spoke at the NAACP convention in Dallas, Tex., said that "in many areas, the practical effect of eliminating public school segregation will be negated as long as non-white families are denied residence in any neighborhood in which they can afford to live."

"As long as we allow customs, the mortgage banker fraternity, or administrators of government housing programs to prevent the free movement of non-white families in certain neighborhoods, public school segregation, in fact, will be with us," he said.

Carey, who is also president of the CIO Electrical Workers and chairman of the CIO Civil Rights Committee, cited the Supreme Court's reasoning that segregation in public schools is a denial of the equal protection of the laws.

"Therefore," he said, "if we find that segregation or discriminatory practices in housing serve to frustrate this dictum, we must eliminate these patterns and practices."

Carey said the high court decision also will "make us more aware" of newer, more subtle types of discrimination and inequities in employment. Many plants, he said, still refuse to hire Negroes, and in others, Negroes are relegated to unskilled jobs.

Passage of a Fair Employment Practices Act, he said, is "the quickest and most effective method of meeting these problems."

He pointed out that to get an FEPC law, more people will have to register and vote, so that we can send "more men and women to Washington who will share our sensitivity to the needs of our times."

"In the meantime," he said, "we will exhaust every organizational and legal means to remove these roadblocks."

As the convention opened, NAACP leaders prepared to face new problems of racial discrimination.

Thurgood Marshall, NAACP special counsel, told 100 Negro lawyers prior to the opening of the convention:

"There is a good possibility that we will move into the areas of local and train transportation soon. Cases are in preparation and should be filed within about a month."

He said that among the fields in which the convention would consider extending its fight against segregation are housing, recreation and employment in addition to transportation.

Senate Urged To Boost Social Security Payments

THE CIO urged the Senate to add to the House-passed amendments to the Social Security Act higher benefits, long-term and temporary disability insurance and broader coverage to meet the needs of older citizens.

The CIO also noted the fact that the bill was improved in the House was "a great victory for the sound principles of social insurance," but that the improvements do not go far enough.

In testimony prepared for delivery before the Senate Finance Committee, Joseph Childs of the CIO Social Security Committee and vice president of the CIO Rubber Workers, charged that "the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and its allies have not ceased their efforts to undermine the established system of old age and survivors' insurance."

CHILDS said that "private insurance is good, but no one has a right to block measures essential to the general welfare because he wants to make money from a competing activity."

He suggested that the program outlined in the Lehman Bill (S. 2260) "would come far closer to providing a program geared to the needs and resources of the United States."

The House bill, the CIO spokesman said, would provide only a $150 monthly pension for workers who earned an average of $300 a month, while those who earned as high as $350 or more could not receive more than $163 a month.

THIS, Childs noted, is at best $37 less than the bill's stated maximum payment of $200 monthly which itself "provides only a meager level of living."

The CIO asked that benefits be based on an annual earnings ceiling of $6000 instead of $4200 as in the House bill; that benefits be based on the 10 best years of earnings; that .5% additional be paid for each year of coverage; and that the minimum payment be set at $35.

Disability payments, Childs said, have already been provided by Congress in the cases of veterans, railroad workers and most federal employes. He asked that such a program be added to the bill because private insurance companies are not filling the gap, and because only a small percentage of the severely disabled can qualify for workmen's compensation.

He stressed the need for an improved social security program and said "we think it should not be difficult for your committee to make its decision in view of the overwhelming weight of evidence and sentiment on the side of progress."

Auto Workers Sell TV Permit

The CIO Auto Workers, who had been awarded a permit to construct an ultra-high frequency television station on Channel 62 in Detroit, sold the permit for $100 to the Woodward Broadcasting Co. in the motor city. The company is owned by Max Osnos, the operator of Sam's Inc., a Detroit department store.

Oil-Chemical Merger Talks Under Way

PRELIMINARY discussions between leaders of the CIO Oil Workers and the CIO Chemical Workers concerning a possible merger of the two organizations into "one big, powerful CIO union" have been held recently in Cleveland, O., and Denver, Colo.

The discussions, it was made clear, have been "purely exploratory," with any final decisions to be made by the rank-and-file membership of the two unions in separate and joint conventions.

One factor leading to the talks is the almost parallel jurisdictions of OWIU and UGCCW in certain phases of the chemical industry, especially in the petrochemical field. Two other developments were indirectly connected with the merger discussions:

First, the action of OWIU and a number of independent oil unions in proposing a strengthened and enlarged union in the oil industry. The OWIU at a special convention in Cleveland recently approved the establishment of a new, comprehensive union which would bring OWIU and the independents under one banner.

Second, the CIO and AFL joined in signing a two-year No-Raid agreement. Both the Chemical Workers and the Oil Workers were signatories to the agreement along with the AFL Chemical Workers, thereby eliminating much of the rivalry between AFL and CIO unions in the chemical and oil industries.

OWIU and the independents had previously agreed on the Oil and Chemical Workers Intl. Union as the name for the new organization. The proposed OWIU-independent merger, as well as a constitution for the new union have still to be ratified by some of the organizations.

Preliminary merger talks between OWIU and UGCCW have resulted in several general areas of agreement which were seen as a demonstration of the sincerity of both unions in seeking an honorable way to fashion a new union which may total 250,000 members or more.

Participating in the discussions were the executive officers of both unions: Pres. O. A. Knight, Vice Pres. B. J. Schaefer and Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick of the Oil Workers, and Pres. Elwood Swisher, Vice Pres. Joseph R. Joy and Sec.-Treas. Cecil Martin of the Chemical Workers.

"I'm so underpaid I had to raise my pay check in order to raise my rent this month!"

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

FROM ALL SIDES moderate-income families are being urged to buy stocks in one form or another. Mutual funds have grown enormously since this type of investment was started in 1940. Now stock brokers have a plan to compete with the mutual funds—the "Monthly Investment Plan" which sells stocks on installments, like furniture or a car.

Mutual Funds vs. Stock Ownership

This department previously pointed out that you face almost as much risk in investing in mutual funds as in stocks. An investor buys shares in a mutual, and its managers invest the money in a diversified group of stocks and bonds.

But while the fund does diversify your investment, when stock prices fluctuate so do fund shares although not as sharply in the case of conservative funds.

Arnold Green, manager of the mutual funds department of Bache & Co., a big investment firm, has taken exception to our comment. He writes:

"The purpose of diversification is not to protect the shareholder from a drop in the market as a whole. It is to protect from poor risks—generally something unforeseen—in one particular security. If you own a number of well-chosen securities, the fact that one or a few may not perform well is not of much importance to you. However, if you have invested in just those that did poorly, your capital may suffer considerably. It is therefore necessary to protect oneself by adequate spreading of risks.

"You did not mention one of the greatest advantages in owning mutual funds—constant supervision by the fund's professional management. As no security is so good it may be bought and then put away to be forgotten, this continuous supervision is probably of more value to the shareholder than the original selection of the securities. We have been working with unions to help them with investments. In some cases, mutual funds have offered them certain advantages which they were unable to get through other investments."

Comment On Statement

With mutual-fund salesmen on almost every doorstep these days, this question needs an airing. To answer Green's comments:

1—For a union to invest a portion of its reserves in mutual funds to get greater earnings is not the same as an individual making such an investment. A large organization is better able to seek competent advice, and diversify its money in bonds, mutual funds and other investments so it will have maximum earnings with least risk.

But a moderate-income family does not have the benefit of this study and counsel. It is subjected to sales pressures from highly-advertised mutuals or other stock-buying plans, and often does not buy shares the best way, if it should buy any at all.

2—Mr. Green is probably right that the mutual fund better protects the small investor from putting all his eggs in one basket that may later develop an unforeseen hole, resulting in a serious loss of capital.

However, there is still the objection that if you had to get your money out at a time when the market price of your fund shares had fallen, you might suffer a loss.

Obviously mutual funds cannot be regarded as the place to deposit emergency savings you might need in case of unemployment or illness. Generally a family needs emergency reserve equal to six months to a year's income; in some cases, even more. For this purpose, credit unions, savings accounts and government "E" bonds, paying 2 to 3%, are most suitable. At any time you can get back all you put in.

Returns Compared

In comparison, mutual funds at this time pay about 4 to 5%, depending on which you buy. Earnings from investments in mutuals are higher when the general price level of stocks and mutual funds shares is lower than at this writing.

Also: A family can earn 4 to 5% without risk by prepaying the mortgage on its house. A family that generally buys cars, furniture and other goods on installments can earn from 6 to 24% on its money by using savings for cash buying instead of time payments.

One disadvantage of mutual funds is not the funds themselves but the way many moderate-income people buy them—on a monthly installment or "penalty" plan. Not only do you pay extra fees for custodianship and federal taxes, but if you must drop out soon after starting you lose some of your money. If you dropped out at the end of the first year, you would lose 50% of your investment in some mutuals, because that much went to pay sales commissions out of first-year deposits. Even if you dropped out at the end of the tenth year, you would lose 9% of your original investment.

In contrast, when you buy mutual shares outright (the "voluntary" plan), you pay a straight 6 to 8% sales commission in most plans. You would not have to forfeit more than this much for the sales charge whenever you drop out.

Moreover, in the voluntary plan, more of your investment goes to work immediately to start earning dividends, since less of the initial deposit has been diverted to the sales expense.

(This department is preparing an additional report comparing specific mutual funds as to values offered, for publication in the near future.)

Copyright 1954, by Sidney Margolius.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

(Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe is away from his duties as the result of an illness. In his absence, his column is being prepared by the CIO Dept. of Organization.)

CIO REG. DIR. GEORGE DE NUCCI sends word of an election victory at the Davey Compressor Co., Kent, O., where the CIO Auto Workers were chosen to represent workers in collective bargaining by a vote of 89 to 60.

CIO's Retail-Wholesale Workers report a win in Memphis, Tenn., where, at the Swift Cotton Oil Co., they received 33 votes to 28 for the AFL.

CIO Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst has advised that the CIO Lithographers were victorious in a representation election at the Raur Co., Omaha, Neb. And CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann follows with word of another successful campaign by the same union at the Triplex Lithograph Corp., New York City.

WORKERS AT THE OZAN LUMBER CO., Prescott, Ark., have chosen the CIO Woodworkers to represent them by a vote of 106 to 13 after a campaign led by IWA-CIO Field Rep. A. Stewart O'Bannon, who points out in his report that attendance at organizational meetings ran well over 90% of the eligible workers. From Ocala, Fla., CIO Rep. Fred J. Wingard reports that employes of the Ocala Lumber Sales Co. selected the IWA-CIO as bargaining representative by a vote of 107 to 57.

From the West Coast, Reg. Dir. Irwin De Shetler advises that the CIO Rubber Workers were victorious at the P. B. Div. of the Byron-Jackson Co. and the CIO Steelworkers at the Chain Belt Co., both in East Los Angeles, Calif. Close cooperation from USA-CIO Local 4997 made the URW-CIO victory much smoother, he added.

Textile Union Fights To Keep 2200 Jobs In Yonkers Mill

CIO TEXTILE Workers led the mobilization for a last-ditch fight last week to dissuade Alexander Smith, Inc., from moving its century-old carpet factory from Yonkers, N. Y.

Battling for the jobs of 2200 workers, the remnants of a work force once three times that number, TWUA-CIO joined city and state agencies in an attempt to block the plan of Yonkers' chief employer to move to non-union Greenville, Miss.

The firm's decision to move was announced during a strike by TWUA members against proposed wage cuts of almost $1 an hour in some cases. The rest of the rug and carpet industry had just renewed TWUA contracts with little or no changes.

Actually, it developed, the strike had nothing to do with the decision to leave Yonkers. TWUA credited the firm with "rare honesty" for resisting "an opportunity to make labor the whipping boy."

Instead, the company said, it was not seeking monetary savings but more modern facilities. The new Greenville plant was built with a $3.5 million municipal bond issue plus a big investment by the company. By contrast, they said, their Yonkers layout was inefficient and buildings were obsolete.

The firm turned down the request of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey to reconsider.

The union berated Alexander Smith for having "farmed" Yonkers for 100 years and then moving on in the same fashion that farmers once moved to virgin soil after exhausting their croplands.

"Why should it (the company) not restore where it has so richly reaped?" the union asked. "Because buildings grow old, must there be a trail of ghost towns across our land?"

TWUA also charged "a management failure." Spokesmen recalled that during boom years the firm bought a linoleum plant it later sold at a $10 million loss.

The real tragedy, the union declared, was to the workers, some of whom are the descendants of carpet makers the company brought over from Scotland a century ago.

"Hundreds are too old to learn new skills, or to find new jobs; the looked forward with confidence to retirement under the company's pension plan," the union said.

Newspaper advertisements signed by the union pointed out that the "tragedy of Alexander Smith is a lesson to the nation." It could have been prevented, TWUA asserted, "by tax laws which penalize, rather than reward, runaway industry.

But above all, it could have been prevented by prosperity, full employment and a rising standard of living in the nation as a whole, the union added, "for under these conditions the company would have had the courage and confidence to face its problem."

Poet-Striker

The strike by CIO Textile Workers at the Alexander Smith, Inc., carpet plant in Yonkers, N. Y., is the fourth in the firm's 109-year history.

A previous one, lasting for several weeks in 1897, affected 19-year-old John Masefield, now Poet Laureate of England. In his book, "In the Mill," Mansfield, now 76, recalled how Yonkers rallied to aid the distressed carpet factory workers. A short time after the strike ended Masefield returned to England to devote his time to writing.

CIO on ABC
Monday thru Friday
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS

Washington CIO Council Gets 'Muscles' For Coming Tasks

TWO HUNDRED delegates to the Washington State CIO convention in Aberdeen, Wash., last week voted to give the State IUC the financial muscles it will need to meet big economic, political and legislative problems of the coming year.

With only token opposition, the convention voted to up the per capita tax from 7c to 10c per member. Only four delegates supported a motion to put the issue to a roll call after State CIO Pres. Daniel E. Bandmann declared the resolution adopted by overwhelming voice vote.

THE ACTION came at a time when the CIO Woodworkers, which accounts for a majority of the membership, is engaged with the AFL in what IWA Vice Pres. James Dicey told the delegates is 'one of the biggest strikes in Pacific Northwest history."

All IWA delegates, however, urged the increase after Sec.-Treas. Harold Slater warned that legislative and political fights ahead will be some of "the toughest we've ever faced."

Earlier, delegates heard Rep. Magnuson (D. At-large), former Rep. Hugh Mitchell and national CIO officials lash out at policies followed by the Eisenhower Administration and the Republican 83rd Congress.

"Two years ago at this time the Republican Party was preparing to launch its great crusade against the New Deal and the Fair Deal," Magnuson said.

"In the months that followed the record of 20 years of Democratic government was distorted by some mysterious chemistry into 20 years of treason. The great social accomplishments of the New Deal and the Fair Deal were derided."

Yet, today, Magnuson added, the policies and programs of recent Democratic Administrations "never looked better."

"They have stood the test of time," he continued, "of criticism—and yes, of the great Republican crusade."

The convention was rapped to order by William Gilmore, chairman of the Grays Harbor Industrial Union Council. Mayor Ed Lungren gave the delegates a warm welcome, recalling that Aberdeen was the place where the Washington IUC was founded four years earlier.

GENTLEMEN OF PRESS—Enjoying a lighter moment at the Washington State CIO convention at Aberdeen are three ANG-CIO members: (from left) Fred Martin, executive secretary of the King County Newspaper Guild; Rep. Magnuson (D. Wash.), a speaker and candidate for re-election, and Don Page, Seattle reporter.

CIO REG. DIR. Irwin L. DeShetler criticized Republican "bungling" and failure to act against unemployment.

"Republican name-calling," he declared, "won't put unemployed workers back to work. It is inexcusable that a country with resources such as ours should suffer unemployment."

R. J. Thomas, representing CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, pledged the full support of CIO's six million to the IWA-CIO in their fight for a decent wage.

Mitchell, in addressing the convention, made the first public announcement that he will be a Democratic candidate for re-election from Washington's 1st Dist. He called the recent defeat in the House of the Democratic move to increase personal income tax exemptions "a 9.5c hourly pay cut."

"If we'd had the right delegation from Washington in the House," he said, "a bill calling for such an exemption increase would now be before the Senate. But because all members of the Washington delegation except Don Magnuson voted against it, we're faced with the possible loss of this income we'd otherwise have had."

M.P.

Vacation Hike Won By NMU

THE CIO Maritime Union last week won four weeks' vacation with pay for seamen on coal ships employed more than 360 days with any one company.

The improved vacation clause was contained in a new agreement between the NMU-CIO and the Colliers Owners Association. The pact, which was similar to one the union recently negotiated for dry cargo and passenger ship unlicensed personnel, covers some 600 seamen on 26 colliers.

The contract also increased from 60c to 75c a day a man payments by operators to a pension and welfare fund and established operator-union committees to handle ship manning and crew accommodation problems.

Michigan Tries To Chisel On New Jobless Aid Rates

MICHIGAN'S unemployed workers can give that state's sagging economy a small shot in the arm thanks to the improved unemployment compensation law that went into effect last week.

One of three states to take action on Pres. Eisenhower's request that state laws be amended to give jobless workers at least half their regular earnings for at least 26 weeks, Michigan increased the benefit period to 26 weeks and hiked maximum benefits $3 to $7 weekly.

Michigan CIO Council Pres. August Scholle urged workers who have exhausted their present benefits or who have held up collecting their 20th check to file a claim for the extra benefits.

Laid-off workers should file such claims, he said, despite the fact that the State attorney-general has ruled that anyone who had exhausted 20 weeks of benefits before the new law took effect is not entitled to more.

The CIO has instituted court action to reverse the ruling, Scholle pointed out, and should the CIO view be upheld, only those unemployed workers who had filed claims would be paid the extra benefits.

Both Scholle and Council Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins told workers to appeal any claims turned down by the commission. The same advice was given for claims turned down for claiming a spouse as a dependent, another restrictive ruling by the attorney-general which the CIO is also challenging.

CIO unions are conducting an extensive education campaign to acquaint unemployed members with their rights under the law.

Wages Issue In Strike At Ohio Edison

SOME 2200 CIO Utility Workers went on strike last week against the Ohio Edison Co. in eight northern Ohio cities after 45 days of fruitless negotiations.

The strike began July 1 on the expiration of the old agreement. UWUA-CIO Sec.-Treas. William J. Pachler said the chief issue was wages. The union asked for a 16c an hour increase, while the firm stubbornly refused to offer more than about 6c.

The walkout occurred at Akron, Youngstown, Warren, Toronto, Burger, Lorain, Mansfield and Marion.

CIO Tells Task Force—

Multi-Purpose Dams Needed In Northwest

By MILTON PLUMB

THE CRUCIAL needs of the people of the Pacific Northwest for more low-cost hydroelectric power under a multi-purpose federal program were spelled out last week at Portland, Ore., by two spokesmen for the CIO.

The power needs were tied in by the program with plans to wipe out threats of damaging floods and to preserve the region's rich resources.

Testifying at the final hearing of the Hoover Commission Task Force on Water Resources and Power, E. W. Kenney, research director of the CIO Woodworkers, charged that Eisenhower Administration power policies have brought about a "growing anarchy" in the Northwest's power set-up.

This has "already done as much harm to our economy as if it were deliberately planned as a method of sabotage by enemy forces," he charged.

Kenney also filed with the task force a statement by Pres. A. F. Hartung of the IWA-CIO which pointed out that mismanagement of watersheds and water tables by private timber operators is contributing to floods along many of the nation's rivers.

CHEAP POWER NEEDED—E. W. Kenney (standing left), IWA-CIO research director, tells Hoover Commission Task Force a federal program for more low-cost hydroelectric power is vital for the continued development of northwestern United States.

He said heavy cutting threatens communities along rivers below the region where deforestration takes place.

AS AT EARLIER hearings, about 60 witnesses presented widely differing views about the policies the federal government should follow in regard to power. Testimony favoring continued federal development seemed most favorably received by the audience, but task force questions were more sharply critical than usual.

Perhaps this was because the task force originally hadn't wanted to hold hearings in Portland.

It agreed to this fifth and final hearing in the Pacific Northwest only after strong protests by State Sen. Richard Neuberger (Ore.), also Democratic candidate for the U. S. Senate, who pointed out that this region is most adversely affected by Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay's decision to abandon the federal power program.

Task Force Chairman Ben Moreell, who is chairman of the board of the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., questioned the CIO spokesman about the implications of the fact that the CIO Utility Workers have flatly opposed the CIO position.

He has thrown the UWUA-CIO opposition to public power in the face of CIO spokesmen at each of the last three hearings.

In using UWUA-CIO testimony to try to break down the CIO position, Moreell contended that the workers in the power industry most immediately affected didn't want anything to do with public power. He ignored, in doing so, testimony at the immediately previous hearing by the CIO Chemical Workers, who represent the bulk of workers in atomic energy plants, that this rich resource must be kept in the people's hands.

Kenney patiently explained again to the task force that the CIO respects the right of the Utility Workers to disagree on this matter, but that at the last CIO convention the resolution endorsing public power was adpoted without a single dissenting vote. He underscored that the great majority of members of CIO are in complete disagreement with the UWUA-CIO on this issue.

Blasting the Administration's "on again, off again" policy on Libby, John Day and other proposed dams which the GOP has delayed, Kenney pointed out that McKay now has said both these major dams are needed.

Of Hells Canyon, where the administration wants to abandon the site on the Snake River in favor of much smaller private dams built by the Idaho Power Co., Kenney declared:

"The Eisenhower Administration policy on Hells Canyon makes clear that our new Republican power policy means curtailment of future power supply, high rates, and phony concessions to certain financial interests disguised as local interests."

If the Idaho Power Co. plan is approved, he pointed out, the nation will lose 442,800 kilowatts or 44% of the potential power capacity. He estimated this would be equivalent to the loss of 50,000 to 60,000 jobs in industry, of $125 million in annual payrolls and of $500 million a year in products of electro-process industries.

Rejecting the administration's "partnership" proposals, Kenney said they mean "piecemeal development" and that, if enacted into law, "the integrated and comprehensive development of the Columbia Basin is at an end."

"These so-called partnership projects would break up the integrated plan for flood control, power development, navigation, irrigation and recreation, "He declared.

"The CIO will never favor individual public power developments if it can be shown they threaten to destroy the benefits to an entire region that are possible only through coordinated regional development."

Kenney cited bills before the Senate Committee on Public Works to modify the already authorized Cougar and Green Peter projects as examples of "partnership proposals." CIO objected to these, he said, and favors the bills introduced by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) calling for the interconnection of both these dams with the Northwest power pool and the marketing of electricity under the Bonneville Act.

Contrasting Morse's strong fight for John Day planning funds which the administration had requested with the "partnership" proposals of Sen. Cordon (R. Ore.), Kenney said:

"It is this kind of public-private power politics and double-talk of the present administration, with Sec. McKay and Sen. Cordon in the lead, which has turned the average citizens of this entire northwest into an almost solid block of opposition to special interest projects that are obviously detrimental to the communities of this region."

Prof's Tieup With Utility Lobby Rapped

ANOTHER instance of lobbying tie-ups between university professors and big utility companies was brought to light recently in a letter signed by four Virginia CIO leaders and addressed to University of Virginia law Professor A. J. G. Priest.

The letter pointed out that the National Association of Electric Companies, Washington's biggest-spending lobby, "emphasized" Priest's connection with the university on the cover of a pamphlet parroting the anti-public power line of the utilities.

Back in the 20's, congressional lobbying investigations involving utility companies exposed what the letter called "the shame and scandal of honored university teachers accepting subsidies from private corporations which had axes to grind."

THE LETTER was signed as "citizens and taxpayers" by Virginia CIO Council Executive Vice Pres. Julian F. Carper, CIO Textile Workers Synthetic Yarns Dir. Wesley W. Cook, TWUA-CIO Washington Rep. John W. Edelman and CIO Reg. IV Assistant Dir. Ernest B. Pugh.

The four particularly raised the "question of propriety and ethics in relation to your (or the Association's) exploitation of your faculty position to give the impression that your views on the distribution of electricity are based on correct information and stated with some objectivity."

Nine Lumbermen Meet CIO-AFL Pay Terms

WITHIN hours after the two-week-old lumber strike began, nine lumber companies in the Pacific Northwest agreed to pay the 12.5c hourly pay increase asked by CIO and AFL unions in negotiations.

"Here is proof that the union told the truth when it said the operators could easily pay more money," CIO Woodworkers Pres. A. F. Hartung said.

Some 100,000 loggers, plywood and lumbermill workers, members of the IWA-CIO and the AFL Lumber & Sawmill Workers, walked out June 21 after flat refusals by employers to consider wage increases. That action also had brought on the first mutual assistance pact in the history of the two unions.

Basis of the IWA-CIO argument for the wage boost is an industry-wide productivity increase of "as much as 13%." In addition, Hartung pointed out that lumber profits have remained high and prices that sagged in 1953 are this year "again up to the abnormally high levels of 1952."

"If we asked for an increase on the basis of lumber productivity alone, which we are not," Hartung declared, "we should get as much as 28c or more per hour."

The IWA-CIO president also charged that the majority of employers "are concealing the facts as to how much higher their profits are this year," and accused the operators of "confusing the issue by going back before World War II to compare wages and cost of living."

The striking unions pointed to wages paid construction workers in the Pacific Northwest, who are also seasonally employed, which range from $2.50 to $3.15 an hour in comparison to the base of $1.725 in the lumber industry.

The Case Of The Vanishing Expert

IF YOU BELIEVE what your boss says and speak your piece, it can get you fired. At least that's the way it seems around the Interior Dept.

It all started about a year ago when Interior Sec. McKay termed "hogwash" reports that department employes were afraid to testify as to their beliefs about the Hells Canyon development project.

"Federal employes are freeborn American citizens," McKay was quoted as saying by the Portland Oregonian last July 16. "There's no thought control in the Interior Dept."

Then the following day Undersec. Ralph Tudor said department witnesses would be "entirely free" to testify at the controversial Hells Canyon dam hearing.

Well, sir, employe Samuel Moment of Portland, Ore., believed the boss and on May 18 he testified for groups advocating construction of the federal dam at the site.

Moment, a Bonneville Power Administration marketing expert, testified at the hearings that only a complete integration of proposed federal dams in the Bonneville system would provide enough low-cost power to develop the Pacific Northwest.

The final chapter of the story came the very next day, May 19, in the Oregon Journal. Said the news item, as reported by Political Action of the Week:

"Sam Moment, an economist with Bonneville Power Administration who is credited with making cost analyses which led to the revival of aluminum production in this region after World War II, is among the employes to be released by the federal agency July 1."

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

Shipbuilding—It's Plight (See Pages 6 and 7)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., July 12, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 28

A Good Reason for Giving a Buck to PAC!

NATIONAL SMALL BUSINESS MEN'S ASSOCIATION
INCORPORATED

WASHINGTON OFFICE
925 FIFTEENTH ST., N. W.
NEW YORK OFFICE
25 W. 43RD ST.

NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS
2834 CENTRAL STREET
EVANSTON, ILL.
PHONE: DAVIS 8-5100

June 3, 1954

We are now running into something we haven't previously encountered in the seventeen years our Association has been in existence - a spirit of complacency. Quite a few business men seem to feel that everything is all right now that we have a new President in the White House.

I'm sure you will agree with me that this is a short-sighted, unrealistic view, and that instead of sitting back doing nothing we should redouble our efforts because now there is an opportunity for greater accomplishment than "our" side has had at any time since 1933.

The socialism Roosevelt and Truman injected into the operation of our federal government is still there, and practically every member of Congress is today under greater pressure from the "other" side than he has ever been. The CIO, the AFL, the ADA and all sorts of radical groups are pushing their programs for more socialization and less freedom of enterprise harder than ever. They confidently expect to be much stronger in Congress than ever before after the election this fall.

The most effective way in which to counteract this radical pressure is through the organized activities of an organization like ours which has the courage to fight the labor bosses, the communists, the bureaucrats and anyone else without giving any consideration to possible reprisals or the likelihood of being smeared in the papers and over the air.

None of us want this country to go all the way down the road to national socialism, a socialistic-welfare-state. So it is imperative for each of us to put up the best fight he is capable of making and to do it now.

You can help, by sending us a check for $15.00 in payment of your current dues.

Sincerely yours,

L. M. Evans
Treasurer

LME:Mc

Trustees

Russell C. Barlow
C. S. Barlow and Sons, Inc.
Tacoma, Washington

Bailey Bockman
Bockman Granite Corporation
Sparta, Tennessee

W. J. Boos
Walk-Easy Foot Rest Mfg. Co.
St. Louis, Missouri

Ivan M. Bridges
Industrialist
Des Moines, Iowa

Harry E. Brinkman
Cincinnati Lithographing Co., Inc.
Cincinnati, Ohio

Ernest N. Calhoun
Edwin L. Wiegand Co.
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Frank M. Cruger
Indiana Manufacturers Supply Co.
Indianapolis, Indiana

DeWitt Emery
Evanston, Ill.

L. M. Evans
Telectron Co.
Cleveland, Ohio

A. W. Kimball
Evanston, Ill.

A. F. Mathews
Consolidated Freight Co.
Saginaw, Michigan

Lloyd E. Skinner
Skinner Manufacturing Co.
Omaha, Neb.

John S. Stevens
Stevens Enterprises, Inc.
Wichita, Kansas

J. Raymond Tiffany
Attorney
Montclair, N. J.

James S. Westbrook
Investments
Bridgeport, Conn.

2 Atomic Energy Plants Struck By UGCCW-CIO

THE NATION'S first strike of atomic energy production workers, involving 4500 members of the CIO Chemical Workers at Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Paducah, Ky., got under way last week as the union authorized a walkout over wages and a long history of grievances.

The Carbide and Carbon Chemicals Co., which operates the plants for the Atomic Energy Commission, said it was maintaining production with about 120 supervisory and technical employes. Union sources said picket lines were effective in keeping "all but a very few" production workers out of the plants.

UGCCW-CIO Pres. Elwood Swisher authorized the strike after the two local unions voted, in both open and secret ballots conducted by outside sources, to reject a recommended 6c increase.

"Why, if the company can operate at full capacity with only 120 people, does it maintain a 4500-person payroll at the taxpayers' expense?" he asked.

Swisher said the 6c hourly increase recommendation of the Atomic Energy Labor Relations Panel, headed by Cyrus Ching, "doesn't even cover area rent increases which average 7.5c an hour."

HE POINTED out that the company had consistently refused to make any counter offer to the union's original 21c demand, later scaled down to 15c, and "only reluctantly agreed to the 6c recommendation in a last-minute effort to avert the strike."

The union had offered to negotiate with the company for orderly shutdown of the two installations, but Swisher said the firm's "essential anti-union nature" was shown by rejection of the proposal and by its "insistence that the jobs would be there if the people want to work."

The UGCCW-CIO noted that despite the hope expressed by Pres. Eisenhower at his news conference last week that the people would go back to work while a presidential fact finding commission studied the dispute, "neither the international office nor the two local unions has received any such request from any government source."

At week's end Pres. Eisenhower had appointed a three-man board of inquiry. Informed sources predicted a quick decision which would pave the way for an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction against the strike.

Rear Adm. Lewis L. Strauss, AEC chairman, had earlier offically informed the White House that a strike would constitute a "national emergency." Swisher questioned that an emergency existed "if, as the company claims, it is maintaining production."

In addition to the wage issue, the union cited a long history of "buck-passing" by the company on grievances, and charged it with "consistently ducking its collection bargaining responsibilities by refusing to settle grievances at lower levels and invariably taking them to arbitration."

One of the major points buttressing the union argument for a wage hike was increased productivity.

"In 1946, when the union was certified," Swisher pointed out, "there were 9000 production workers in the bargaining unit.

"Today, with increased facilities, only 4500 people are needed to turn out more fissionable material than was produced when the operation began."

Besides criticizing the original panel recommendation for a 6c increase as "wholly inadequate," the union contended it had never been allowed to be a party to drawing up the panel's operating procedures, as it had requested.

PEACEFUL—Tennessee hills, scene of many a bloody feud, are quiet as O. A. Duke pickets Oak Ridge atomic plant. CIO Chemical Workers are striking against Carbide and Chemicals Corp., which operates unit for the government.

23,000 Rubber Workers Out In Goodyear Strike

THE CIO Rubber Workers last week went on strike at 10 Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. plants across the nation. The walkout followed several weeks of fruitless negotiations.

URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said the strike, involving 23,000 union members, resulted from the company's "harsh and arbitrary position." Negotiations began on May 7 and the company made its first and sole offer of 5c an hour on July 2.

Key union demands were for a substantial wage increase and for improvement in area wage differentials, wider in Goodyear than in any other major rubber company.

Buckmaster cited as one example the wage scale for tire-makers in Goodyear's Topeka (Kan.) plant, which is 34c an hour lower than in comparable plants. The Topeka rates are 33c less than the average in the industry and the lowest paid by any rubber company.

Goodyear arrogantly took the position, when negotiations began, that its workers "didn't have a thing coming." After finally making its nickel offer, the company would not negotiate further. The strike came when union spokesmen agreed that "it was impossbile to negotiate a wage settlement."

Buckmaster said the company's 5c package was offered either as an "across-the-board" increase, or could have been divided into 4.5c in wages and a half-cent to correct inequities. The half-cent proposal, the union president said, was "only a drop in the bucket."

Of the 5c package, Buckmaster said, "the offer would not be sufficient to correct the area wage differentials among its own plants if used entirely for that purpose."

The strike, first nationwide work stoppage in Goodyear's history, shut the company down fast. Earlier the union members had voted overwhelmingly for the strike by secret ballot, and the action had been sanctioned by the international union.

BUCKMASTER said there was no doubt of Goodyear's ability to meet the union demands. Last year the company had its best profit year in history, making $49 million in net income.

The company's first quarter reports for 1954 showed profits running 11% greater than in the similar period last year, despite a 10% drop in sales. Added to this was a $5 to $6 million boost in profits resulting from the Eisenhower Administration's action killing excess profits taxes.

Negotiations were broken off by the company an hour before the strike deadline, Buckmaster reported. Company officials flatly refused a union request that sessions be resumed the following day.

"We're going home," company spokesmen said, as the Cincinnati bargaining sessions were broken off. They also refused to meet again except in Akron.

No date has been set for resumption of negotiations.

CIO, AFL Textile Unions Discuss Merger Plans

MERGER of the CIO and AFL textile unions loomed as a possibility following a meeting last week in New York City.

No commitments were made by either side as top officials of the CIO Textile Workers and the AFL United Textile Workers conferred on amalgamation chances. Considerable time was also spent discussing implementation of the recent no-raiding agreement signed by CIO and AFL unions.

A TWUA spokesman described the meeting as "friendly in tone and exploratory in nature." Arrangements were made for further meetings to iron out problems and make a merger possible.

Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock and Gen. Sec.-Treas. John Chupka headed the five-man group from TWUA at the parley. The UTW-AFL group was led by Pres. Anthony Valente and Sec.-Treas. Lloyd Klenert.

Struck Lumber Operators Cited To NLRB By IWA

AN UNFAIR labor practice charge of refusal to bargain is being filed against some Northwest lumber operators by the CIO Woodworkers, now beginning the fourth week of a strike for a 12.5c wage increase.

Basis of the decision to press the charge was the recent National Labor Relations Board ruling in the case of Whitin Machine Co., Charlotte, N. C., reaffirming past court and board decisions that a union is entitled to "all wage information essential to intelligent representation of the employes."

The IWA-CIO charged that a number of operators "have persistently refused to furnish the union with wage data." Some 100,000 IWA-CIO and AFL Lumber & Sawmill Workers walked out of Pacific Northwest lumber mills June 21 after fruitless negotiations. Their joint action and a mutual assistance pact were the first in the history of the two unions.

Meantime a telegram of support for the IWA strikers was sent Pres. A. F. Hartung by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, assuring the "full and undivided support" of National CIO in their efforts to win the "full measure of economic and social justice" to which they and their families are entitled.

In another action, Hartung lashed out at the "greed and lack of responsibility" of timber operators who "mine" the forests and "then clear out when the crop is gone and the land devastated and leave their employes to shift for themselves."

With the closure of one company and the imminent shutdown of another, Hartung said lack of security for workers caused by "cut-out-and-get-out policies of Northwest lumber privateers" was one reason IWA was fighting for higher wages.

Noting that timber supplies are running out, Hartung said that "propaganda has become the principal crop being planted in place of timber."

TWU Wins 6.5-11c Hike

THE CIO Transport Workers last week won increases of 6.5c to 11c an hour for 37,000 employes of New York City's transit system. The raises will be retroactive to last Jan. 1.

The agreement ends a long dispute between the CIO union and the state-created Transit Authority, which operates the city-owned subway, surface and elevated lines.

TWU-CIO Pres. Michael J. Quill predicted that meetings of the executive board and the membership of TWU-CIO Local 100, which represents the city employes, would ratify the agreement.

The two-year pact also provides the authority also will consider an additional wage increase next Mar. 15. An impartial adviser will be named to consider future disputes.

IUE Defeats UE At Another GE Plant

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week soundly defeated the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers in a National Labor Relations Board election at the Newark, N. J., lamp and X-ray plant of the General Electric chain.

The election followed by a week the victory of IUE-CIO over UE at its last big stronghold, GE's Schenectady, N. Y., plant, and united more than 100,000 GE employes at 60 plants into the CIO union.

The Newark tally was: IUE-CIO 447, UE 258, no union 10, and challenged 13. A total of 764 were eligible to vote, and 732 ballots were cast. Separate elections were held in the four plant units, lamp, X-ray, warehouse and trucking.

The day before the election, UE signed a contract with GE incorporating terms which the Communist-dominated union had earlier rejected. News of the sell-out spread like wildfire and caused many undecided workers to cast their votes for the IUE-CIO, which is standing on its refusal to accept the offer.

Jobless Statistics Assailed By Reuther

OFFICIAL figures on unemployment prove the inadequacies of unemployment compensation laws, and failure to enumerate those whose claims have been exhausted builds false optimism, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther charged last week in a telegram to Commerce Sec. Weeks and Labor Sec. Mitchell.

The wire followed the release by the two departments of figures on the June employment-unemployment situation.

"The joint release . . . includes repeated references to the decline in the number of workers drawing unemployment compensation but fails to note that this decline is attributable in major part to the exhaustion of workers' benefit rights," Reuther said.

He told the Cabinet members that the drop in insured unemployment is "evidence of the inadequacy of present unemployment compensation laws rather than of a brightening employment picture."

He pointed out that the government credited Michigan with one of the "sharpest drops" in insured unemployment. The facts are, he countered, that during the four weeks ending June 17, over 7000 Michigan workers exhausted their benefits, and more thousands withheld final claims to preserve their right to extended benefits made possible under recent amendments to the State law.

IN THE first five months of 1954, Reuther recalled, 658,000 workers exhausted their benefits. Despite additional exhaustions since the end of May, the number drawing benefits was still 100,000 higher in the week ended June 19 than at the first of the year.

The decline from the peak at the end of February to the latest week reported is 300,000, Reuther continued, but 457,000 exhausted claims in March, April and May alone. Reuther said:

"To avoid the danger that the public may be misled by lack of all the relevant facts, we urgently request that you issue at once an amplification of your joint release interpreting insured unemployment figures in the light of the data on exhaustions available in Labor Dept. files, and that weekly Labor Dept. releases on insured unemployment hereafter include the full facts on the number of exhaustions."

Flurry Of Picketing Ends Phone Installers' Strike

A THREE-DAY strike netted wage increases of 5 to 7c an hour for more than 16,000 CIO Communications Workers employed as installers for Western Electric at telephone exchanges across the nation.

Approximately 400 job clerks in the WE system got raises of $1.50 a week. The installers had been working without a contract since May 2 and although company offers had improved in negotiations, they were still inadequate when the strike was called.

CWA-CIO strategy had been to withhold pickets from exchanges until after July 4 so as not to jeopardize the holiday pay of operators and other personnel. Only in Texas was there a brief flurry of picketing, but it triggered a chain reaction throughout the American Tel. & Tel. network.

Jittery officials of AT&T, owner of all of Western Electric's stock, alerted flying scabs to man toll centers throughout the country. Chartered planes took supervision personnel from Denver to Atlanta, for instance, before the Texas pickets were withdrawn.

The new one-year agreement defeated the "serious" retrogression demands of the company. A company proposal for six additional base locations was reduced to four. Armistice Day was added as a paid holiday for 1000 members in Pennsylvania in line with practice in most other CWA areas. In addition, Christmas Eve will be a paid holiday this year throughout the system.

HANDSHAKE marks end of a three-day strike by more than 16,000 CIO Communications Workers against Western Electric Co. Joseph E. Dunne (right), national director of CWA-CIO's installation department, and Charles A. Ford, company labor relations manager, congratulate each other on signing new contract providing for pay raises of 5c and 7c an hour and other improvements.

New Job Figures Show 'Stagnation,' CIO Warns

EMPLOYMENT figures for June, released last week and hailed with glee by Administration leaders, reflect "at best a picture of economic stagnation," the CIO said.

Farm employment accounted for most of the 989,000 rise in the number of jobholders last month. Unemployment early in June was up 42,000 over May's figure for a total of 3,347,000.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther challenged the cheery statement of Commerce Sec. Weeks that the U. S. is over the hump of rising unemployment and that the trend has been "decisively reversed."

It is "dangerously unrealistic," Reuther pointed out, to draw comfort from the statistics released by the Commerce and Labor Depts. The figures show, he said, "that the weak areas of the economy remain weak and there are, as yet, no signs of prosperity rounding the corner."

Weeks expressed gratification at the trend shown by the figures. The number of jobless, he conceded, "was much higher than we would like to see it." Employment now stands at 1.8 million fewer jobs than in June 1953, an all-time high.

Totals Seem Low

There was expectation, based on precedent, that the June totals would be far higher than the official statistics seemed to indicate. The entry of high school and college graduates into the labor market traditionally swells June employment rolls. This year, the Labor-Commerce report admitted, 300,000 fewer young people than last year had not been accounted for.

"The reason is easily understandable," Reuther noted. "They have no hope of finding jobs. Failure of the economy to expand as it should has slammed the door to job opportunity in their faces.

"The decision of hundreds of thousands of our young citizens not to engage in a fruitless search for jobs that do not exist results in their omission from the official count of the unemployed."

The figures also showed that the number of workers collecting unemployment compensation, while down slightly from the month before, was more than double that of June 1953 and all other previous postwar years.

There was a 64,000 drop in durable goods manufacturing unemployment. This field, the weakest since the slump started last fall, continued to show declining employment. The sag showed up markedly in the metal working plants turning out machinery, electrical goods, ordnance, transportation equipment and instruments.

"The June figures cannot hide the tragic fact of mass unemployment in America's basic industries and in America's major industrial centers," Reuther warned.

"The auto, steel, and other industries continue to operate at less than 70% of productive capacity. One hundred and thirty-two labor market areas are now classified as areas of substantial labor surplus with 41 of these areas having 12% or more of the total labor force completely unemployed."

Nor, he went on, do the June figures reflect the widespread under-employment and economic hardship being experienced by millions of American workers who are working short weeks, nor do the unemployment figures reflect those who are temporarily laid off.

"Despite whatever justification the Administration may attempt to wring from . . . these latest figures for its policy of delay and inaction, the new employment and unemployment figures show no signs of recovery from our present recession," Reuther said.

He added that the "need grows more imperative daily" of the Administration to face its responsibilities under the Employment Act of 1946 by "taking vigorous affirmative action."

Situation 'Inexcusable'

"Unemployment of more than 3.3 million workers, to take the official figures at face value, is inexcusable in the face of the tremendous unfilled needs of millions of American families," he said. "In a dynamic free economy that must expand and move forward or contract and slip backward, stagnation makes inevitable growing unemployment and more serious economic difficulties.

"Our labor force is increasing by approximately 900,000 per year. This means our economy must expand to provide that number of new job opportunities each year.

"In addition, productivity advances made possible by advancing science and technology require further expansion to assure employment opportunities for upwards of two million workers who would otherwise be displaced.

"Clearly, the economy of the U. S. must expand, or we will be confronted with continued rising unemployment."

Robins Again

"Next Spring" is now the target date when the Eisenhower Administration hopes to see improved unemployment compensation laws come from the states.

Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams in a recent letter to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said he expected the states will give full consideration to measures needed to increase weekly benefits and duration of payments when their legislatures meet next year.

Steelworkers Open Parleys With Alcoa

NEGOTIATIONS between the CIO Steelworkers and the Aluminum Co. of America opened last week with the union presenting demands similar to those which resulted in a 12c package settlement in the basic steel industry.

USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes headed the union negotiators, who represent about 15,000 workers in 10 Alcoa plants. The union asked for undisclosed pay increases, a guaranteed annual wage, an improved insurance program and other contract benefits.

Pensions are not covered in the current talks since the present contract is in effect on this issue until Apr. 1, 1955. The union pressed, however, for basic job classification and pay rate studies which are now standard in USA-CIO contracts with steel companies.

Another meeting was scheduled for the end of the week at which Alcoa counter-proposal would be presented.

CIO's Vandercook Program Signed For Second Year

THE CIO last week signed a new one-year contract with the American Broadcasting Co. continuing sponsorship of the nightly news commentaries of John W. Vandercook.

Acting on authorization of the CIO Executive Board, the CIO Publicity and Legal Depts. completed arrangements with ABC. During its second year, the Vandercook show will be heard over some 160 ABC stations, the lineup being substantially the same as during the first year.

The CIO launched its five-night-a-week program on Labor Day, 1953. It had a three-fold purpose in sponsoring the Vandercook broadcasts.

It was determined to add another liberal voice to the nation's airwaves; to offset the one-party press which dominates much of the country, and to reach a broad audience with the story and message of the CIO and its affiliated unions.

During the 10 months this program has been on the air, it has received wide and favorable attention in every section of the country. Program ratings have shown a steady, marked gain, ABC officials have reported.

THE CIO Executive Board, in a resolution commending the program and authorizing its continuance, said that Vandercook's broadcasts were "firmly based on the best traditions of American anti-totalitarian liberalism."

His voice has reached millions and he has developed an audience of increasing size and very considerable loyalty, the Board said.

It noted that there had been much favorable comment about the CIO's message, contained in the commercial portions of the broadcasts. These are designed to acquaint the public with the CIO and its viewpoint on major legislative issues.

CIO on ABC
Monday thru Friday
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS

Economic Stagnation

Administration apologists and economists who still use McKinley era text books may pretend to take some satisfaction from the June employment and unemployment figures. But practical men can't.

Even if we take the official figure of 3,347,000 unemployed at face value, the picture is disheartening. For, as CIO Pres. Reuther well put it, the picture is one of "economic stagnation."

Under the tender guidance of big business, our economy has sagged to such a degree that hundreds of thousands of young people, who regularly enter the labor market during this period, just didn't bother to hunt jobs. They knew the jobs didn't exist.

Completely ignored by the official statisticians are the millions of Americans drawing slimmer pay envelopes because they are working fewer hours. To the Administration, these people aren't even statistics. Yet the lack of their full purchasing power is felt in every market place in America.

Maybe the Administration would take some long overdue action if the advisers at 1600 Pennsylvania avenue were impressed with one hard fact: unemployment is not only an economic issue; it is a political issue as well.

Political issues are resolved on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November. And unemployed workers have a lot of spare time to get registered so they can vote on that day.

Get Out The Pen Again

Like it or not, the Republicans in the Senate are going to have to stand up and be counted on the question of McCarthy and McCarthyism.

That is the pledge of Sen. Flanders, an anti-McCarthyite Republican from Vermont. Flanders has a resolution pending in the Senate which would strip McCarthy of his committee chairmanship and keep him from chairing any other committee. Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) has introduced another resolution aimed at the same end.

The Vermont Senator says his resolution will definitely be voted on before the end of July. Thus, all America will have an opportunity of seeing just which of the senators abhor McCarthy and his tactics, and which are on his team.

Letters to senators can play a big part in this showdown. We have a hunch there are a lot of them, perched on the fence, who would vote to chop the platform from under the junior whatever-he-is from Wisconsin, if they felt the voters agreed with them.

Three cents postage—and a few minutes of time—can help rid America of this menace to our basic freedoms.

Congratulations To IUE-CIO

Congratulations are in order for the IUE-CIO, which has chalked up two important, significant victories in two weeks over the discredited UE.

In the huge Schenectady, N. Y., headquarters plant of General Electric, and in another GE plant in Newark, N. J., the workers voted IUE-CIO by a substantial margin.

The leaders and members of Local 301 in Schenectady weathered a particularly vicious 17-week battle in which the UE threw everything in the Commie book, plus a few tricks swiped from employers, at these militant, democratic trade unionists. But UE lost, just as GE will lose, now that 100,000 of its workers are united in one strong, free union —the IUE-CIO.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS

Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII July 12, 1954 No. 28

Point Of Odor, Mr. Chairman!

In Other Words—

The Easy Way To Lose To The Reds

In a recent signed editorial in The Saturday Review, Editor Norman Cousins notes "Six Easy Ways To Lose To Communism," by concentrating "so hard on what we hate that we forget what we are trying to protect." Excerpts from his editorial follow.

By NORMAN COUSINS

1. WE CAN ALL ACT like third-rate political party hacks. We can take the position that it is more important to cripple our political opponent before the next election than it is to safeguard the system by which free elections are possible. We can proclaim the fact that if a man belongs to the opposite party he is a self-confessed traitor to his country.

2. We can be cowards. We can flee from the things we believe in because we fear that someone may attack us unfairly if we put our beliefs to work. If the Communists talk peace, we can prove our patriotism by calling for war. If communism identifies itself with freedom and social justice, we can denounce their objectives instead of the phoniness of their claims.

We can make private distemper sovereign, more fearful of the penalty of appearing to stand in its way than of the loss of those institutions which alone can deal with costly distempers, private or public.

3. We can keep good people out of government. Our young people can be convinced that those of them who are foolish enough to go into government service can expect low incomes and high abuse.

We can go far beyond the legitimate requirements of loyalty to government, we can leap far out in front of the valid safeguards against subversion and we can create a no-man's land called "security risk." In such a land, literally, no man is safe for even if his own actions have been sound he can be judged by the actions and characteristics of those he may have known.

Thus at our military research centers we have already lost the services of a large number of scientists and research specialists, who are not accused of being subversives and who have not sought shelter under the Fifth Amendment, but who have had to answer for the unproved actions or associations of acquaintances, some of them long since forgotten.

Meanwhile a loyalty review board, acting under the laws, has barred one of the nation's leading scientists from the nation's "secrets." The country seems to have forgotten that it is not the knowledge that is given by the government to the scientists that will determine our strength, but the knowledge that scientists give to the government.

One of the charges made public is that the scientist had had an illicit relationship with a woman. Nothing is said about the fact that such a disclosure before the public gaze may itself be illicit and immoral. If an impeccable private life is the new yardstick, who will be left to apply it?

4. We can cut ourselves off from the majority of the world's peoples. We can show so little knowledge of the broad movements of history and so little awareness of what the real issues are in the rest of the world that nothing that we say to other peoples will seem sensible or relevant.

We can chatter unceasingly about what we want others to do without taking the trouble to find out what their own histories and cultures make it natural for them to want to do. We can convince other peoples that we do not know what we are doing; in particular, that we do not know everything we should know about the big bomb we are setting off, thus creating doubts about our ability to equate power with responsibility.

5. We can continue to run a weak second to Soviet propaganda activities in many parts of the world. We can continue to reduce our appropriations for our information and library and radio services to the point where Communist propaganda has a clear field. In short, we can continue to fulminate against communism in the U. S. Congress, but clam up when it comes to doing anything specific against communism in the battle of communications and ideas.

6. We can make anti-intellectualism the national national pastime. We can take the position that anyone who believes in books or is interested in serious books is a dangerous fellow.

We can create a new ideal for our young people —the ideal of the man who knows too much to read, who has too much inside information to have to think, who is so filled with empty slogans and guesses that he does not have to understand real problems.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

YOU CAN GET a lot of wrong ideas by reading newspaper reviews about the status of Pres. Eisenhower's "affirmative, constructive" program in Congress. What the President has done to whittle down the social gains of the New Deal, both by personal inclination and under pressure from the Republican Old Guard, can't be measured in legislative terms alone.

WHAT Dynamic Record?

Early-in-July reviews ran something like this: Eisenhower won his fight for the St. Lawrence Seaway and got a notable partial victory on his farm program in the House. He lost on Taft-Hartley revision but he seems to be winning on social security expansion, and he is winning a lot—if not everything—in the field of tax revision. He "compromised" on tariffs and reciprocal trade.

One trouble with this approach is that it ignores the simple question of whether the "dynamic" program ever included much that was forward-looking and affirmative.

The second trouble is that the approach ignores what has happened in the administrative agencies, now packed with Eisenhower-appointed enemies of New Deal laws, and in vital old-line departments, such as Interior and Agriculture, which administer vast areas of the public domain.

No Laws Needed

Congress doesn't have to pass a law to change the philosophy of the government in the fields of labor relations, regulation of monopolies, or public power.

Bitter-end New-Deal haters in Congress can simply induce or compel the President to name New Deal-haters to the departments and agencies, on threat that anyone with a different philosophy will never be confirmed by the Senate.

Or the Republican businessmen surrounding Mr. Eisenhower, "liberal" about foreign policy but haters of New Deal domestic reforms, may sell the still politically-inexperienced President on the gruesome notion that "expansion" of power distribution by the Tennessee Valley Authority is "creeping Socialism."

The President's personal legislative program was never—let's reiterate it—dynamic or forward-looking.

He got the St. Lawrence Seaway through, after hesitating for a year, because he could use the scare-phrase of "national security" to argue for it. But he merely endorsed what had been urged by every president, Republican and Democratic, from Warren G. Harding.

The Social Security Bill is better than it might have been—but again there was a year of hesitation before Mr. Eisenhower adopted part of the truly "forward-looking" program urged by Harry S. Truman.

The Administration's Taft-Hartley revision bill was a piddling, gingerly approach that the President himself may have been glad to have killed.

The "compromise" on reciprocal trade merely postpones until next year any showdown struggle by the President for mastery of the high tariff wing of his own party. The tax program was based on a "trickledown" theory of kindness to investors and corporations, with no direct relief to low-income or middle-income families.

The farm program is adequately summed up by recalling that Mr. Eisenhower used to think the so-called Brannan Plan was "immoral"—but adopted a Brannan Plan scheme for the exclusive use of wool producers, including direct subsidies from the government, when he needed congressional support from the sheep-raising states in order to put through a bill cutting government aid to wheat and cotton farmers.

Agencies' Fate Worse

What has happened in the agencies, with little publicity, is worse.

The Federal Power Commission, established to protect consumers' interests against overcharges by huge interstate gas and electric utilities, is a shambles, its professional staff disheartened. The FPC's announced policy is to encourage higher profits for the utilities.

The National Labor Relations Board, with three Eisenhower appointees out-voting two holdover Truman members, is rewriting labor law by administrative decision. It is cutting down the role of the federal government in protecting union members.

Public power is being gutted—both by the refusal of the Interior Dept. to recommend new multiple-purpose federal dams, such as Hells Canyon in Idaho, and by Mr. Eisenhower's personal assault on "expansion" of the TVA.

Republican senators sat voiceless—not a single member rising to defend the Administration—as Democrats ripped into Mr. Eisenhower's attempt to use the Atomic Energy Commission as an instrument to "destroy," as Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) put it, the TVA

GOP senators didn't dare defend the attempt in debate—but they will support it by refusing to repudiate the President, by refusing to vote TVA appropriations.

Want to know how powerful the oil and natural gas lobby is in Congress? When Sens. Williams (R. Del.) and Aiken (R. Vt.), plus Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), tried four times to get a roll-call vote on tax amendments to cut down the rich 27.5% tax-"depletion" allowance that makes Texas and Oklahoma millionaires, they failed.

The vast majority of senators, fearful of oil contributions against them, four times refused to stand up and be counted on a roll call.

Washington Window—

Administration Trying Again On Boosting Debt Limitation

By Public Affairs Institute

ONE SEPTEMBER EVENING during the 1952 presidential campaign, Gen. Eisenhower asked a Davenport, Ia., crowd:

"Why do we have a $260 billion debt? . . . Even this year, when we have probably the greatest income measured in dollars that we have ever had, the most prosperous with the highest taxes, and we are still going $10 to $12 million in debt."

Now, two years later, Pres. Eisenhower's Secretary of the Treasury, George M. Humphrey, announces that he will ask Congress to increase the present $275 billion ceiling on the national debt.

This comes at the close of this fiscal year. The national debt is now about $270 billion.

However, budget receipts for the new year, starting July 1, are expected to be about $62.6 billion. Spending will amount to $65.6 billion. It means that the government is expected to go $3 billion more in debt. This would bring the national debt to $273 billion by June 30, 1955—still under the $275 billion legal limit set by Congress in 1946.

The Treasury, however, thinks the margin of safety is too small and wants to make sure that it has all the money it may need to pay its bills.

Purse Strings And Politics

One of the underlying causes of the tug-of-war between the Congress and the Executive Branch over the debt ceiling concerns the question of who will control the purse strings of the nation.

There are political aspects to the picture, too. Republicans promised to cut spending, cut the deficit, balance the budget and cut taxes all at one and the same time.

This is a difficult stunt and the Republicans have found out how difficult it is.

They cut government spending something like $4 billion, most of it coming out of national defense and a good deal out of social services.

These cuts, together with the Administration's original "hard money" policy, however, did hit the economy and a recession set in. Unemployment rose. The full impact of this is not expected to hit Treasury receipts until next year.

In addition, the Administration cut taxes something like $7 billion, or at any rate, permitted the tax cut voted by the previous Administration to go into effect. This, too, meant a decrease of tax revenues into the Treasury.

Again the Administration wants to cut taxes further in accordance with its campaign promises. Most of these tax benefits will go to corporations and the stockholders, instead of to the great body of consumers.

Between tax cuts and a slackening in business it is obvious that the Treasury must suffer unless the Republicans can turn on a new wave of prosperity. This they still have to do.

An increase in the debt limit is the cushion in case the maneuver doesn't come off.

Still No Quarter

The Senate's fiscal expert, Sen. Byrd (D. Va.), who led the fight against the Eisenhower Administration's move to boost the national debt ceiling to $290 billion last year, still thinks the Treasury has enough money to pay its bills.

Byrd has announced he will oppose Sec. of the Treasury Humphrey's current move to raise the top limit, just as he did in 1953.

"I still think," he declared "the $275 billion limit is enough and too much for the government to owe."

Book Review—

Nothing New About Witch-Hunting

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WITCH-HUNTING is nothing new in this country, even in so-called enlightened times, Lucille Milner reminds us in her new book, "Education of an American Liberal," an informal history of civil liberties in practice. It is based upon her own personal experiences.

As one of the founders of the American Civil Liberties Union and its executive secretary for 25 years, Mrs. Milner was in a position to observe closely important events and persons involved in the fight to protect those threatened by violations of the Bill of Rights.

Looking back on her many years in the liberal movement, Mrs. Milner says that "in the present wave of hysteria," she feels as though she were re-living earlier periods of the last quarter of a century, when civil liberties were being trampled under foot by U. S. Atty.-Gen. A. Mitchell Palmer after World War I, and later by other forces of "law and order."

Protects Civil Rights

From its formation in 1920, the ACLU has been dedicated to the fight to protect civil rights. It has performed invaluable service in the cause, but there have been times when it was confronted with dilemmas in trying to apply such abstract concepts as justice and freedom to individual cases.

One of the instances when the ACLU was faced with the problem of tempering abstractions with common sense arose on an issue involving the CIO Auto Workers' drive in the late 30's to organize the Ford Motor Co. Mrs. Milner recalls that it generated more heated discussion than any other single issue that so far had come before the board.

The case, which caused a furor in the labor movement at the time, is still important, because it illustrates how well-meaning liberals sometimes take a stand on pure principle that lands them in an anti-labor position negating everything they think they believe. Great injustice can be done in the name of justice if a principle is applied without full understanding of all the factors involved and their overall effect on the human beings concerned.

In the UAW-Ford case, a minority of the ACLU board held that Ford's right of free speech had been violated by the charges of unfair labor practices brought against him by the National Labor Relations Board, for—among other things—distributing pamphlets to his employes containing "Fordisms" that viciously attacked the union.

The majority believed that Ford's pamphlets were "part of a deliberate coercive plan to keep his employes from organizing," Mrs. Milner writes, and no question of free speech was involved. The row went on for weeks. It finally ended in a compromise, with the ACLU pointing out to the NLRB that its order in the Ford case "left doubt as to the status of Mr. Ford's freedom of speech."

In her story of some of the ups and downs of the ACLU, Mrs. Milner also brings out how groups and individuals devoted to idealistic aims are agitated and swayed by the temper of the times.

In the past, periods of repression have been followed by periods of liberty, Mrs. Milner says in conclusion.

"I would like to think that the pendulum of history will swing us from the current hysteria to another period of freedom," she says. "But the future depends upon us. Liberty is not handed down like the family silver, but must be fought for and re-won by each new generation."

Education of an American Liberal, an autobiography by Lucille Milner; Horizon Press, N. Y., $3.95.

Shipbuilding: Congress Is Throwing Away I

Artisans Sent To New Fields By Joblessness

By FRED ROSS

"I'M SURE of a job every day," said Alfred Thomas, a former Baltimore shipyard worker turned bakery salesman. He explained why he would not return to his former job.

"If I had gone back to my old job," he continued, "I would have been called back and then laid off three times since I was furloughed in April.

"I make as much money as I made in the yard, and if I get a better route I will earn more because my commission will increase."

This is the price Congress is paying for failure to pass several bills that would aid the merchant marine—the fourth arm of defense that played a vital role in two World Wars and Korea:

Thousands of skilled workers are going to other industries where they are assured of more job security.

During the peak of World War II, some 1.37 million workers were employed in the shipbuilding industry. According to the Maritime Administration, employment in the industry dropped in May to about 100,000. The latter figure included manufacturing of canoes, motor boats and even pots and pans, these latter an acquisition of one shipyard, according to the CIO Shipbuilding Workers.

An adequate merchant marine is vitally needed today. The United States will not have it unless Congress acts soon.

The Germans sank scores of our merchant ships in World War II. The Soviet Union presents a greater threat today.

In a recent interview, Adm. Robert B. Carney, who as chief of naval operations, is the Navy's top planner and its representative on the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said that Russia has some 375 submarines, many of the modern long-range type.

Carney said that the Soviet Union is building more submarines, that she already has more than Hitler had, and that she could make "some effective challenge of the various sea lanes."

Clifford N. Parry, Jr., executive secretary of Local 24 of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers at the Key Highway repair yards of Bethlehem Steel, in Baltimore, said that the trained workers needed to build and repair the ships necessary to meet the Soviet threat are rapidly going to other industries.

He quoted John M. Willis, general manager of Bethlehem Steel yards in the Baltimore area, who said that it takes 10 years to train a first-class shipyard mechanic.

Parry said that seniority lists furnished by the company for the Key Highway yard alone indicated that in two years some 1250 workers had left the industry.

Many IUSMWA-CIO members at Bethlehem's big Fore River yard at Quincy, Mass., in New York City area shipbuilding facilities and in the Baltimore area report themselves disgusted with the lack of security in the industry.

But let them tell the story.

Laid off again after slightly more than a year's employment, Pete Sorrentino, another Baltimore skilled shipyard worker, is living on unemployment compensation.

Father of five children, he said his unemployment check does not begin to cover his expenses. In Maryland maximum benefits are $38 a week for 26 weeks. Benefits amount to $30 a week for the unemployed worker plus $2 a week for each child up to four.

Sorrentino said meat and groceries alone cost $35 a week, and then, he added, "there are such things like the light bill."

A skilled worker at Bethlehem's Sparrows Point yard, where he worked for 20 years, Antonio Leonelli was laid off three months ago. Luckier than many, he turned to contracting as he had done during a previous furlough and is now renovating IUSMWA-CIO Local 24's hall.

Leonelli, who has six children, saw no future in the contracting business, but is looking for "a good job."

Then he could build a home, he added.

"There is no use working in shipyards," he said. "You work a month or two, are laid off and are called back. You think you are going to work steady, but then you are laid off again."

He said he would be "sitting pretty" if IUMSWA-CIO gained the guaranteed annual wage, which it is seeking in current negotiations.

Arthur E. Westveer, who had just received his layoff notice from the Sparrows Point yard, said some 50 electric welders had been furloughed in his department, a number of whom were doing highly-skilled X-ray work.

(In this work an X-ray machine is used to examine the welding for flaws. If the welder does too much faulty work, he is transferred to a less exacting job.)

He doubted whether he would go back to work if called should he get another job. Westveer said that in addition to the irregularity of employment, his yard job was "rough in winter," and that at any moment he could be hit and seriously injured by falling pipes or rivets.

Many of the men being furloughed now are lost forever to the industry, he declared and pointed out that after heavy layoffs in 1951, the company had to sta a school to train welders.

Pres. Peter Bolfar and Executive Sec. Benjamin Hewitt of Local 24, at the Sparrows Point yard, estimated that of the BALTIMOREANS, like Clem C. Creek (right), take pride in keeping clean the white steps—"stoops" as they call them—in front of their homes. With Creek, who was laid off from his shipyard job last September and is working for a plumber, are his wife, his daughter and grandchildren.

THE WAYS of the Sparrows Point s which last year set a production rec soon to be launched. Scenes, like thi of the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Coas

Hazardous Job

Shipbuilding is one of the most hazardous occupations. Accidents are frequent and sometimes fatal.

While the CIO News reporter was gathering material for this story, Howard Klebe and Paul Tate suffered severe burns of the face at the Key Highway ship repair yard of the Bethlehem Steel Corp., Baltimore.

As Klebe was putting the first rivet into a tank, that day, an explosion was followed by a fire, injuring Klebe, who was working outside the tank, and Tate, who was inside. Both were taken to a hospital.

Contract Goals

The CIO Shipbuilding Workers are seeking a 21c hourly increase in negotiations on behalf of workers in eight shipyards of the Bethlehem Steel Corp., the industry's behemoth, and of some 30 other yards.

IUMSWA-CIO is asking the pay boost to bring the rates closer to those paid similar craftsmen in the construction industry. Other demands are the guaranteed annual wage, a company paid health and welfare program, higher pensions, two more holidays, an improved method for computing vacations, and elimination of inequities.

THOUSANDS of shipyard workers like Alfred Thomas, Baltimore, have found jobs they like better.

EMPLOYMENT outlook is grim, say Pres. Peter Bolfar (left) and Exec. Sec. Benjamin Hewitt of Local 33.

LAID-OFF Sparrows Point shipyard worker Antonio Leonelli, now contractor, renovates Local 33's hall.

REPORT on negotiations with the B is being given by Exec. Sec. Cliffor cal 24, at an outdoor meeting opposi

ts Greatest Asset—The Skills Of Its Workers

hipyard of the Bethlehem Steel Co.—ord—stand idle except for a tanker s, can be duplicated in the shipyards ts, and the Great Lakes.

1000 skilled men furloughed during the last three months, at least 40 were lost to the industry.

A comparative handful of men are working at Sparrows Point. Only a 16,000 ton tanker is being constructed at the eight-way yard, which IUMSWA-CIO Vice Pres. Andrew A. Pettis said set a wartime world's record for production by turning out ships with an aggregate tonnage of 217,570 last year.

The yard recently was awarded a Navy contract for two ammunition ships, but it ill be months before a few hundred men are called back to work on them.

The plight of other ship yards is similar. It is the same story everywhere. At the Fore River yard, which with the nearby but now closed Hingham yard employed 65,000 men during the World War II employment peak, fewer than 3000 are working with the prospect of a reduction to 800 by September.

Among those laid off are James Di-Gravio, a first-class machinist with 38 years' seniority. The 54-year-old man, who has three children, was never laid off before.

Anthony M. Cardwell, a first-class wood pattern specialist, also was furloughed from his department where only three remained on the job.

With 20 years' seniority, Victor Kendall, who mills shafts of some 40 tons, was laid off only three weeks after returning to work upon his recovery from a fractured left hand suffered on the job.

Bills Pending In Congress Aim To Ease Plight

SOME 100 merchant marine ships will be built and more than 100 others repaired in private shipyards if several bills pending in Congress become laws, according to Vice Pres. Andrew A. Pettis of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers.

The House last week passed the trade-in ships measure, which the Senate will have to pass again after differences between the two versions of the bill are ironed out in conference.

The bill provides that owners of World War II T-2 tankers can turn them in to the government and receive credit for part payment in 10 new tankers. The old ships would go in the reserve fleet.

The Senate-passed bill authorizing the Navy to charter for 10 years 20 tankers to be built in private shipyards was stalled in the House Armed Services Committee after a subcommittee altered it. The altered version provides that the Navy, instead of private operators, would build the ships in private shipyards.

The Senate Commerce Committee has reported out and the House Merchant Marine Committee is considering a measure authorizing expenditure of $45 million to modernize 106 ships in the U. S. reserve fleet.

The IUMSWA Program

Still another measure to provide for the construction of 60 cargo and cargo-passenger ships a year, with subsidies to be paid on those to be used in foreign trade, was referred to the House Merchant Marine Committee.

A Commerce Dept. report recommended the program, but it was essentially the same plan that IUMSWA-CIO has been advocating seven years. There is no companion bill in the Senate.

And another measure, appropriating $82.6 millions to build four passenger cargo ships, recondition four Liberty ships in the reserve fleet and encourage operators to turn in 10 T-2 tankers as provided in the trade-in bill, has been referred to the House Appropriations Committee.

Half the foreign aid goods would have to be transported in American ships under a House-passed measure. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee was considering this foreign aid bill last week.

The Senate has passed a bill making permanent the 50-50 shipping provision of the foreign aid measure. The House Merchant Marine Committee has reported out the bill. The measure would keep U. S. merchant ships in operation and increase ship repair work.

DON'T LET the smiles of the leaders of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers lead you to believe that they are not worried over the slump in shipyard employment. This convention picture shows (from left) Sec.-Treas. Ross D. Blood, Pres. John J. Grogan and Vice Pres. Andrew A. Pettis.

Danger Of Losing Skilled Workers Is Told By Union, Navy, Management

THE CIO Shipbuilding Workers, shipyard management and the Navy all have pointed out the danger of losing skilled workers because of the curtailment of merchant ship construction.

IUMSWA-CIO Pres. John J. Grogan warned a Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce subcommittee:

"The preservation of the shipbuilding resources, facilities, organizations, skills and highly trained personnel with somewhat unique and not easily replaceable qualifications is vital to national security.

"During the past year, there seems to have been small consideration given in Washington to the essential fact that the American flag merchant marine constitutes the fourth arm of the national defense."

Rear Adm. W. D. Leggett, Jr., chief of the Navy's Bureau of Ships, testified before the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee:

"I am particularly concerned with the fact that highly skilled design and production personnel are rapidly being dispersed among other industries which can provide more stable employment. We may not have time, in the event of another emergency, either to recruit or train new workers."

George H. French, president of the Maryland Dry Dock Co., ship repair yards at Baltimore, said:

"The fall-off in employment is so severe as to represent a real threat to the survival of many of the productive units in the industry.

". . . Many of the crafts in the shipyards are unique to the ship repairing and shipbuilding industry—they simply don't exist anywhere else and it takes years to train them."

French called the problem a national one and not a local one. He said the ship repairing industry was dependent on the prosperity of the American merchant marine and renovating of Navy ships in private yards.

Craftsmen

Some 120 different kinds of craftsmen are employed in ship-building, possibly more than in any other industry. A partial list gives an idea of the wide variety of the skills required: Masons, carpenters, shipweights, loftsmen, machinists, electricians, upholsterers, blacksmiths, burners, welders, chippers, caulkers and heat treaters.

thlehem Steel shipyards management l H. Parry, Jr., of IUMSWA-CIO Lo-e the Key Highway shipyard.

LOOKING at help wanted ads is Arthur E. Westveer, who just received layoff notice at Sparrows Point.

DISMAL FUTURE face workers at the Bethlehem Fore River yard where Don Edmondson heads Local 5.

THIRTY-EIGHT years' seniority did not save James Di Gravio from being laid off at Fore River yards.

Things Are Looking Up In Washington State

(Third in a series of on-the-spot reports on the coming campaigns.)

By MILTON PLUMB

NO SEAT in the House is going to be more hotly contested next November than that of Don Magnuson (D. Wash.). That's the one sure thing about the current political picture in the Evergreen State, which has always been something of a maverick as far as elections go.

It has, for example, in Sens. Magnuson and Jackson, both Democrats, sent two of the ablest Senators in the nation to its municipal namesake, Washington, D. C. But, except for Rep. Magnuson, a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, whom it elected as congressman-at-large in 1952, its representatives are all Republicans—six of them. With one possible exception, all are servants of the reactionary cause.

The coming elections will differ from those in most states because the only statewide contest is that for congressman-at-large.

This fact has made Magnuson, who in two sessions in the House has run up an outstanding liberal record, a prime target of reactionaries everywhere. The trend in the six congressional districts has been conservative in recent years, and they hope it will carry over into the at-large race when no other statewide campaigns are in the offing.

Magnuson, who left his post as a reporter for The Seattle Times to run for Congress, is handicapped at the outset by lack of adequate campaign funds. Moreover, the Democratic National Committee is not likely to do as much with its limited funds in Washington as it will do where gubernatorial and Senate seats are at stake.

Texas Oil Money Again

Generally regarded as the most likely man to oppose Magnuson in November is Al Canwell, of Spokane, former chairman of the State Legislature's ill-famed Un-American Activities Committee.

Informed people in Washington say that Canwell also recently made a trip to Texas as part of the nationwide pilgrimage there by GOP reactionaries seeking the backing of Lone Star State oil millionaires. And the State Republican Committee said early this spring that it had set aside $20,000 just for the congressman-at-large race.

Still another possibility as Magnuson's opponent is the State's ambitious attorney-general, Don Eastvold, the Washington GOP's fair-haired boy. He rose to prominence overnight at the 1952 GOP convention when he submitted the Eisenhower backers' minority report on the credentials of the two Texas delegations.

CARRYING Evergreen State liberals' hopes in Congress races, ex-Rep. Mitchell (left) and Rep. Magnuson (second from right) confer with Washington State CIO Sec.-Treas. Harold Salter and R. J. Thomas.

O'Mahoney To Run

Former Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney of Wyoming has agreed to run for the Democratic nomination for the Senate seat left vacant by the death of Sen. Hunt (D.).

Reaction from Democratic Senators in western states was enthusiastic following the announcement by Sen. Clements (D. Ky.), chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee. O'Mahoney served as senator from 1934 to 1952. As chairman of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, he led the fight for development of natural resources in the west.

Eastvold ran the same year for attorney-general and was elected. He has since been speaking throughout the State and trying to build his own machine. What may keep him from running is that he aspires to higher office, and a defeat by Magnuson would be a severe setback to his future political hopes.

Helping whip up the hysteria which the GOP seems to think helps its cause, the Velde House Un-American Activities has just completed hearings in Seattle. Canwell, of course, attended all of them and was seen on the television broadcasts sitting in the audience. Otherwise, the maneuver seems to have had little political effects.

The Washington citizenry didn't scare. It is clear now that the voters will be more interested in the failure of the Republican Legislature to enact increased unemployment compensation, and similar matters, than in the Velde Committee revelations come November.

Harold Slater, secretary of the Washington State CIO Political Action Committee, is predicting flatly, as of now, that the voters will change 40% of the Legislature. He also predicts Democratic victories in the first, second and fourth congressional districts, and a possible change in the third, with Magnuson winning also.

Henson Supported

Other political experts further from the work being done by the 65,000 CIO members in the State are less optimistic, but nearly all agree that former liberal Rep. Hugh Mitchell (D.) seems a fairly certain bet to be the new Congressman in the first district. He has opposition in the primary, but remains a heavy favorite to unseat Rep. Pelly (R.).

CIO-PAC also will be backing Harry Henson, a teacher and former secretary to Sen. Magnuson, who ran unsuccessfully in 1952 against Rep. Weston (R.). Without Eisenhower to carry Weston along, Henson is believed to have a real chance.

In the fourth district, Dr. Fred Yoder, a former farmer and now professor of agricultural economics at Washington State College, is given a good chance, with CIO backing, of riding in on widespread farm resentment of Eisenhower Administration farm policies.

The third district candidate remains undecided, but Elmer Huhta, former Washington University football star, is mentioned as a possibility to oppose Rep. Mack (R.) on the Democratic ticket.

Filing for the primaries opened July 1 and candidates have until July 21 to make up their minds. Then campaigning will begin in earnest.

Council Active

The Washington CIO Council throughout the past year, however, has been holding monthly statewide legislative and political action meetings to keep CIO members informed on the issues. It has circulated literature widely and kept up the registration drive, which in 1952 saw more persons registered than ever before in the state's history.

The Council has also just voted to increase per capita payments from 7c to 10c, so that November will find it functioning at high effectiveness. Roy Atkinson, former CIO regional director, is helping with PAC operations.

Thus, on balance, the prospect seems to be that, after a hard fight, Washingtonians will improve their congressional delegation to the 84th Congress. Both Sens. Jackson and Magnuson have promised to campaign, and their personal popularity should more than offset whatever slush fund the GOP may raise from Washington's Associated Industries and out-of-state contributors.

In addition, the undisputed popularity of Mitchell in the first district, as well as the higher than usual caliber of other Democratic candidates this year, should help roll up the votes for Magnuson in his at-large race.

As Western PAC Dir. George Roberts puts it:

"Don Magnuson just possibly could lose despite his perfect record in Congress. But you can be certain that CIO-PAC will be doing everything it possibly can to prevent that happening."

GOP And Dixiecrats Unite To Defeat Jobless Pay Hike

DEMOCRATIC efforts to boost unemployment insurance benefits and require their payments for at least 26 weeks a year were beaten last week as most House Republicans and a bloc of Dixiecrats ganged up against them.

The vote against a motion by Rep. Forand (D. R.I.) to make these long overdue improvements in the unemployment insurance law was 241 to 109.

Then the House voted, 309 to 36, to pass the bill extending coverage of the law to federal employes and workers of firms with four or more employes. At present, firms with eight or more employes are covered.

DEMOCRATS charged that the bill was inadequate in view of the current unemployment situation. They pointed out that under the existing law each state sets the amount and duration of benefits, and that many workers have already exhausted the inadequate payments given them under the program.

Rep. Garmatz (D. Md.) likened the GOP bill to "a garden hose to use on a three-alarm fire."

Five Democrats on the House Ways and Means Committee which drafted the bill contended "it is really not a program at all but a feeble token gesture serving to gloss over the absence of a program."

Forand's amendments would have required that payments be at least equal to half a man's average weekly wage but not more than two-thirds of the state's average weekly wage.

CHAIRMAN REED (R.N.Y.) objected that Forand's amendments would "force the states to increase benefits." Majority Leader Halleck (R. Ind.) argued they would "federalize the system."

Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.) said that "the Administration has completely side-stepped its responsibility to provide adequate unemployment insurance protection not only for workers, but as a means of bolstering the economy as a whole."

Home Town Is Site For HST Library

THE Harry S. Truman Library will be built on a 13.5 acre site donated by the city of Independence, Mo., the former President's home town.

The library's board of trustees last week authorized architects to prepare blueprints, and directed a three-man committee to let contracts for the proposed $1.75 million structure.

Truman, recuperating at a Kansas City hospital following an appendix and gall bladder operation, said he was "tremendously pleased" that his home town had been selected as the site of the memorial library to house his official papers.

O'Connor said that $900,000 of the $1.75 million cost already has been raised with an additional $200,000 in large gifts anticipated. The CIO and affiliates have contributed $275,000 for the project as follows: CIO $150,000, Steelworkers $100,000, and Clothing Workers $25,000.

More Relief For Wealthy Tax Bill Conferees' Aim

HOUSE and Senate conferees were wrestling last week with GOP demands that they find some way to make the Administration's "corporation bonanza" tax bill even more of a windfall to the wealthy few who own most of the nation's stocks."

Although there were hundreds of minor differences in the tax bills passed by the House and Senate, the only significant departure from Pres. Eisenhower's "trickle down" proposals was the Senate action watering down—but not killing—his request to give tax relief to persons getting dividend income.

THE HOUSE approved the full amount of the handout the Administration requested. The Senate bill approved the principle of such relief, although it reduced the amount drastically. This means that conferees from both House and Senate are under clear instructions from the GOP majority to continue the dividend exemption in some form.

In such circumstances, the issue before the conferees is essentially a question of how big the bonanza should be. And the bargaining power, in terms of how floor voting in both houses went, is clearly on the side of those conferees who hope to make the giveaway bigger.

One factor working the other way, however, was the conference committee's knowledge that the Administration has announced it intends to ask again for another increase in the present $275 billion ceiling on the national debt.

EVEN Sen. Byrd (D. Va.) and others who voted for the Administration's tax program have made it clear that they will not go along with Treasury Sec. Humphrey's plan to boost the debt limit to meet government expenses after passage of legislation cutting taxes for the wealthy makes such action necessary. (See Washington Window, Page 5.)

Tax reductions voted in the Senate bill will mean a loss of at least $1.2 billion in revenue to the government.

Kassalow Appointed As FOA Labor Aide

APPOINTMENT of Everett M. Kassalow, associate director of the CIO Research Dept., as deputy director of the Office of Labor Affairs, Foreign Operations Administration, was announced last week by FOA Dir. Harold E. Stassen.

John M. Meskimen, former official of the AFL Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, was named director of the labor affairs office.

Kassalow's appointment and the overseas assignment of two CIO union officials were the first since a Labor Advisory Committee on which four top CIO leaders serve was arranged with Stassen in May. Stassen agreed that FOA would undertake no labor programs without the consent of the committee.

Representing CIO on the committee are Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald and Clothing Workers Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, who is chairman of the CIO International Committee. Victor G. Reuther, executive assistant to the CIO president, will serve as the CIO head's alternate.

THE OFFICE of Labor Affairs participates in developing FOA's economic policies and programs. It encourages the building and strengthening of democratic free trade unions and provides for the participation of U. S. unions in the foreign operations of this country.

Kassalow, a resident of Silver Spring, Md., was graduated from the College of the City of New York in 1939. He was appointed associate labor economist in the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics in December 1942. In July 1945 he became a research associate with CIO and served as research director for the CIO Rubber Workers in 1947 and 1948.

Between January 1949 and July 1950 he was executive secretary of the CIO Full Employment Committee. Kassalow returned to government service in September 1950 as a special assistant to the chairman of the National Security Resources Board, a post he held until February 1953 when he returned to the CIO Research Dept.

EVERETT M. KASSALOW

Kassalow's government assignment will be on an intermittent basis and he will continue his association with the Research Dept.

One of the two CIO union officials to receive overseas assignments sailed last week to assume new duties as a labor consultant under FOA.

E. E. Phelps, research and education director for the CIO Oil Workers, left with his family. Woodrow L. Ginsburgh, CIO Rubber Workers research director, will sail later this month. Both will be based for a year in Paris, working with free trade unions in training technicians in union research and education methods.

PHELPS' interest in foreign labor problems led the Marshall Plan agency and CIO to request his services for a two-month tour in Europe in 1951, when he served in France and the Scandinavian countries as a member of a union education team.

The resignation of Michael Harris as director of the U. S. Operations Mission to Germany was announced by Stassen. Harris was formerly director of Dist. 7 (Philadelphia) for the CIO Steelworkers. Before his appointment to the post in Germany in May 1951, Harris served in Sweden and France.

Workers Need Wage Hikes Now To Prime 'Sagging' U. S. Economy

WAGE increases being negotiated this year "offer the quickest and most direct" prop for the nation's "sagging economy," the CIO Economic Outlook stated last week.

The current issue of the CIO Dept. of Research and Education publication declared that unless wage and salary workers share equitably in the growing product of the economy, "the present distortion between producing and and consuming ability will widen and the recession will deepen." In other words, the ordinary American needs more money if industry is to be kept going.

The lag of consumption behind the national production ability helped to bring on the 1929 depression, the Outlook recalled.

Consumers Needed

In seeking to make the adjustment from the "semi-war economy brought on by Korea" and the higher military expenditures of that period, "inevitably the country must look to consumers to step in and buy the ever-increasing product of American industry if the nation is to be prosperous," it said.

Yet, the CIO publication added, "the imbalance between the consumer's ability to buy and industry's ability to produce began to reveal itself sharply in the spring of 1953."

"It first reflected itself in the large accumulation of inventories in the hands of American business . . ." the Outlook went on.

"As government spending for national security was reduced, it was the failure of consumer income and consumer spending to rise to the new challenge, that made an industrial decline and an increase in unemployment inevitable."

The Outlook said that the "weakness in the flow of wage and salary income stems from three major sources":

1. The recent decline in employment and rising unemployment.

2. "A decline of 1.4 hours in the length of the average work-week in manufacturing, the spread of part-time work, and under-employment." These have combined to make a drop of $40 million a week, or $2 billion a year, in purchasing power.

3. "The failure of wages for millions of workers to keep pace with the rising productivity and the rising economic potential of the economy."

Productivity Up

Average "real" hourly earnings have shown an increase between April 1953 and April 1954 of less than 2%, the Outlook noted.

"It is instructive to compare this increase of less than 2% with the current rate of productivity increase in the economy, which has been in excess of 4%," the publication said.

Charging that the "great mass of Americans, our wage and salary earners, are in a deteriorating economic position," the Outlook said that in contrast "the small handful of stockholders who own the great majority of stock in American corporations and receive the lion's share of dividends" have done very well.

The benefits made possible by removal of the excess-profits tax "are not being passed along to the consumer by any price reductions," it asserted.

"Continued high profits, the elimination of the excess profits tax, and sharply rising productivity are combining to keep dividend payments flowing out to stockholders in a steadily increasing stream," it pointed out.

CIO Welcomes United Fruit Anti-Trust Suit

THE U. S. government has moved to break up the United Fruit Co.'s banana empire through an anti-trust suit. The action was hailed by CIO as a step in the right direction.

The Justice Dept. announced the legal action shortly after Sec. of State Dulles charged the Communists with trying to becloud "the real issue" of Red imperialism in Central America with their claim that this country is interested only in protecting U. S. business interests there.

UNITED FRUIT'S policies in Guatemala came in for strong criticism during the recent invasion and revolution there. The firm's holdings in Guatemala were being expropriated by the Arbenz regime, with compensation being paid at 1921 valuations in 25-year government bonds.

The anti-trust suit charged United Fruit with monopolizing and restraining trade in bananas by gaining control of nearly all Central American land used for growing the fruit. It also contended it had gotten rid of competitors to a point where it dominated production, transportation and importation phases of the banana industry.

A NEW ORLEANS federal court was asked to order the firm to get rid of or dissolve such properties as may be necessary "to establish effective competition."

Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers, chairman of the Latin Affairs subcommittee, said the U. S. action was "a step in the right direction."

"If this suit is prosecuted vigorously and fairly," Knight added, "it can go far towards cementing friendly, stable relations between the countries involved. The policies of United Fruit and some other U. S. firms have frequently played into the hands of Communist propagandists by thwarting overdue social and economic reforms and by holding down already depressed wage levels."

A further developing in Guatemala, announcement of removal from the voting rolls of more than 70% of the population made up of poverty-stricken, illiterate Indian peasants, by the revolutionary junta, Knight considered a possible step in the wrong direction.

Disenfranchisement of the peasants at this time, he pointed out "could well mean an intent to turn back the clock of land reform, and this would only hand the Communists a really good issue on a silver platter."

Thanks For Aid

Grateful appreciation for a pledge of support to striking Honduran banana workers and a $1000 gift from CIO was expressed in a cablegram to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther from Sec.-Gen. Raul Edgardo Estrada, of the Central Strike Committee of the Honduran Banana Workers.

The United Fruit Co.'s stubborness in challenging the entire nation "will alienate good will towards the U. S.," Estrada said. "We insist that frustrated masses make hotbeds sprouting Communistic seeds," he added. Strike has been in progress two months.

Union That Routed Denham Strikes For Higher Wages

THE LOCAL union of the CIO Woodworkers that the late Robert Denham, former anti-union general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, tried to bust by forcing it into an election with a company-dominated union, is out on strike—and the strike is solid.

Back in 1952, Denham set up a master-plan to defeat IWA-CIO in the giant Mengel plywood firm plant in Elizabeth City, N. C., by "encouraging" formation of the Independent Woodworkers of America, which coincidentally had the same IWA initials on the ballot as did the legitimate CIO union.

Then the pressure was put on in semi-rural Elizabeth City, with every merchant in the town furnished a list of Mengel employes. When a CIO member went into a shop to buy, the merchant would say that he couldn't extend credit until after the labor board election was over, because if the CIO union won, there might be no more jobs.

Well, the 190 good unionists weren't fooled then, and even the local press isn't fooled now, by company claims of victory in the strike. The Daily Advance printed the fact that only five people showed up for a back-to-work movement, that that number dwindled to one a week later, and he tore up his application when he learned a strike was in progress.

The pay scale runs from 74c an hour to a high of 96c, with an average of 86c. Mengel is proposing to cut six holidays back to three, has rejected a 5c wage increase and has refused to arbitrate. Only 17 workers make the top pay and a number with more than 30 years seniority still earn 85c.

Harvard Offers Scholarships

Scholarships for the 13-week Harvard University trade union program courses, valued at approximately $1000 for tuition, fees, board and room, are currently available to union officers and members, Executive Dir. Clinton S. Golden announced last week.

The scholarships are awarded on the basis of work experience, trade union activity and letters of recommendation. Applications or requests for information should be sent to Golden at Harvard University, Soldiers Field, Boston 63, Mass. Application forms should be in at least six weeks before the starting dates of the sessions, Sept. 15 and Feb. 23.

If The Coffee Tasted Strange . . .

If your coffee has had a strange flavor lately, it might have come from one of the companies where the Food & Drug Administration seized more than 12,000 pounds of adulterated coffee.

The FDA said such things as match sticks and wax paper had been roasted with the coffee "to make it go farther," and thus take advantage of soaring prices.

None of the seized coffee involved large companies or well-known brands, an FDA spokesman said, most of it being held by smaller distributors supplying hotels and resturants.

Among other adulterants found during the recent crackdown were bug-infested chick-peas, coffee chaff and dust, barley, soybeans, used coffee grounds and brush fibers. Some packages were labeled "superior coffee."

Brownell Defense 'Security' Bill Cleared By House Body

THE ADMINISTRATION'S move to substitute suspicion only for due process of law in dealing with subversion was OK'd last week by a House Judiciary subcommittee.

It approved a bill requested by Atty.-Gen. Brownell that would authorize the President to bar from defense facilities anyone suspected of sabotage, espionage or other subversive activities. The measure would specifically exempt the government from having to disclose the source of the information on which it acted.

Only a few days before, CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg had told the subcommittee that this measure, and another bill also requested by Brownell calling for the dissolution of "Communist infiltrated" organizations, were "advancing the very threat of totalitarianism which they decry."

The CIO pointed out that they depart from traditional Anglo-Saxon concepts of jurisprudence by substituting mere suspicion for proof and denying the right of the person accused to confront or even know his accuser. The measure also would extend to industry in general those "abuses" which have arisen under the present government personnel security program.

Under the second of Brownell's bills, on which the subcommittee has yet to act, the government could dissolve groups it declared to be "Communist infiltrated," even though they were "organizations which have been established for legal and legitimate purposes."

UWUA-CIO Locals Obtain Hourly Raises Of 5c To 10c

WAGE INCREASES ranging from 5c to 10c an hour have been won by CIO Utility Workers local unions in recent contract settlements.

Local 414, recently chartered, won an across-the-board 10c hourly boost from the New Britain (Conn.) Gas Co., as well as wage-inequity adjustments as high as 25c an hour.

An 8c settlement with the Monongahela Power Co. has been approved by Local 162. The increase is retroactive to Feb. 1. The new contract also includes 2c hourly boosts in shift differentials and improved vacation

In Somerset, Mass., the Montaup Electric Co. agreed to a 22-month pact providing for an increase of 3% or 5c hourly, whichever is higher. Other contract improvements brought the number of paid holidays to 10, a premium raise of 5c an hour for 25-year employes and a better medical coverage plan.

In two other companies, disputes with UWUA-CIO have gone to arbitration. They are the West Penn Power Co. and the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co.

A 7c hourly general wage hike was negotiated for seven UWUA-CIO locals at 11 water company plants in Western Pennsylvania. The agreement also adds another day's pay for Christmas and New Years because they fall on Saturday.

C. Of C. Still Wants In On Old Age Fund

SOCIAL security views of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce got an airing last week before the Senate Finance Committee.

They added up to a renewal of the Chamber's former efforts to block higher benefits and, under the enticing guise of "universal coverage," to dip into social security funds—which now have a reserve of $19 billion—to meet old age assistance programs financed by federal grants to the states.

A. D. Marshall, of the General Electric Co., told the committee that the Chamber endorsed the Administration plan for broadening social security coverage, but that Congress should go further and make coverage really universal.

Just what these nice-sounding words meant became clear when besides recommending that the program apply to all employed individuals, Marshall proposed that about eight million aged persons not now covered be brought under the program. He advocated this be done to cut off federal grants to the states for old age assistance.

The effect would be to use social security fund contributions, built up out of joint worker-employer payments, to finance the old age assistance programs which now are—CIO contends more properly — supported by general tax funds.

Marshall also objected to a provision in the House-approved bill which would levy the social security payroll tax on the first $4200 of individual earnings instead of on the $3600 limit provided in present law. He completed this with criticism of the higher benefit scale that would result.

NMU Ballot Count Gets Under Way

Tallying of the 25,000 ballots in the CIO Maritime Union's election of officers has been begun by the Honest Ballot Association and is expected to take two and a half to three weeks.

Votes of the New York district, which represents about half the NMU membership, will be counted first.

FIRST-HAND VIEW — In recent Red Feather tour sponsored by Greater Los Angeles CIO Council Community Services Committee, a score of members of Southern California CIO locals visited the Children's Home Society and the Orthopaedic Hospital. Led by CSC Dir. Charles Harding, they saw how CIO contributions help.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

Your Buying Questions

DRYERS; EVAPORATED MILK: "We live in a three-room house with no cellar. I have been thinking of getting a clothes dryer, but my husband has been told they are electricity eaters. Could you please give me an idea which makes are best and most reasonable, or would it be more practical to get a combination washer and dryer?

"I would also like to know if there is any difference in evaporated milks for feeding infants."—Mrs. V.P.L., Gibsonia, Pa.

Answer: We estimate that in a typical suburban area, for a family of four, the cost of operating an electric dryer might run about $60 a year (over three times as much as a gas dryer). This might be reduced if the dryer is used only in bad weather. If you cook with electricity, and have other major electric appliances, operating cost might be further lowered since the rate goes down with additional use.

On the other hand, if you don't already have heavy-duty wiring, you will have an additional installation cost. You should get an estimate of probable operating cost from your local company, since rates vary.

Where indoor drying space is limited, as in your case, a dryer of course takes on an additional value.

There are many good electric dryers currently available, and for as little as $150-$160 for the smaller eight-pound models (standard-size dryers are nine pounds). In selecting a dryer, ask about accessibility of controls for servicing.

A combination washer-dryer offers some space saving, and a little work saving in that the wash goes through a complete washing and drying in one operation. However, a breakdown would put both units out of use. Too, buying the combination limits your choice of washer, since the combination unit has the tumble washer rather than the agitator automatic which some women prefer. Also, with separate units you can wash a new load while the first dries.

Most brands of evaporated milk are made to federal standards and have a minimum of 7.9% butterfat and 25.9% milk solids. Since 1945, most are fortified with 400 USP units of vitamin D per reconstituted quart. Any widely-sold brand which states on its label that it meets these standard specifications is suitable, including the lower-priced brands of the large food chains.

Co-ops: "I am interested in obtaining names and addresses of cooperatives, where I may purchase drugs and other household appliances."—A. L., Newark, N. J.

Answer: The drug cooperative is Celo Laboratories, Celo, N. C., a central purchasing agency for drugs and vitamin preparations for co-ops, which also sells directly to consumers by mail. You can get price lists by writing. You can get addresses of co-op retail stores nearest you by writing the regional warehouse in your area.

These are: Central States Cooperatives, Inc., Waukegan, Ill.; Consumer Cooperative Association, 318 E. 10th St., Kansas City, Mo.; Midland Cooperative Wholesale, 739 Johnson St., N. E., Minneapolis, Minn.; Central Cooperative Wholesale, Superior, Wisc.; Associated Cooperatives, 351 Second Ave., Oakland, Calif.; Eastern Cooperative, Inc., Palisades Park, N. J.; Arizona Cooperative Association, Phoenix, Ariz.; Consumer Cooperative Association, Amarillo, Tex.; New England Cooperative, Inc., 167 Albany St., Cambridge, Mass.; and Potomac Cooperative, 238 N. Franklinton Rd., Baltimore, Md.

MAPLE FURNITURE: "I am in the market for maple furniture. Prices vary in different stores, for good real rock maple. The last place I looked, where prices were way over other places, the salesman claimed his maple furniture has a better finish so it won't peel. This is the first time I've heard of such a thing. I've had maple furniture for over 12 years and I never knew it to peel."—M. E., Oakland, Calif.

Answer: The difference in price may be due to quality differences, or only to variations in prices among the stores. First, make sure the furniture is genuine maple, and not merely gummed with a maple finish, as is some inexpensive "maple." Gumwood is a satisfactory furniture wood, but you shouldn't pay the price of genuine maple for it.

There is a difference in the quality of finishes on furniture, and a poor finish can wear through. A good finish has depth and smoothness. But you should not have to pay excessively more for it.

Other signs of well-made furniture are thin sheets of wood between drawers (called dust-proofing); dovetailed sides of drawers; a center drawer guide; solid, substantial drawer bottoms; corner blocks under table tops and chairs. Too, on better-made pieces the insides, sides and bottoms of drawers are finished, while on poorly-made furniture they are often left unfinished. Also inspect the furniture to make sure there are no bulges in the back or on the tops and that the drawers are well-fitted.

Copyright by Sidney Margolius, 1954

LISTEN TO THE CIO RADIO PROGRAM
John W. Vandercook AND THE NEWS
every weekday evening on the ABC Network

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

While CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe is recovering from his recent illness, his column is being conducted by guest writers. This week, the writer is CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who also is president of t' e CIO Communications Workers.

By JOSEPH A. BEIRNE

THE COMMUNICATIONS WORKERS of America has just completed its eighth annual convention. This convention was the largest in the history of our union. Almost every one of our 728 locals, scattered throughout the country, in Canada and Hawaii, had delegations present. Over 2700 were in attendance, including alternate delegates, visitors and guests.

The convention marked the fifth anniversary of our affiliation with the CIO. These have been five fruitful years. In those years, CWA has emerged as one of the leading unions in our nation. It has accepted its full share of responsibility as a CIO affiliate and proudly holds aloft the CIO banner in towns and villages in which there is no other union.

Our eighth annual convention was successful from every point of view. Our dues-paying membership was reported to be the highest in our history. Although our gains were not spectacular, they were steady throughout the past year. These gains were achieved despite employer resistance and the anti-labor atmosphere which has characterized so much of the present national Administration.

Ours was not a convention devoted to speech-making. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther delivered an eloquent address that won an ovation from the delegates and Sen. Tom Burke (D. O.) also won the approval of the delegates with a talk devoted to discussion of our nation's problems.

BEYOND THIS, ours was a working convention, devoted largely to resolution of internal questions. The convention was true to the best tradition of CWA and of American labor. Hundreds of delegates took the floor to argue the pros and cons of the issues.

We of the CWA look to our conventions as our supreme legislative body. Once a decision is reached, it becomes law for the entire union. We settle our internal problems through democratic debate and vote. This was decidedly the case at our convention.

Because ours is so highly integrated an industry, we establish our national bargaining policies at our convention. This was very much a matter for debate. A firm policy was adopted and, with its adoption, we intend to carry through to successful conclusion our present negotiations with the major companies of the Bell Telephone System.

Collective bargaining in our industry, like that of so many unions in other industry, has been inhibited by the present political and economic climate. Nevertheless, we have made significant gains. Prior to our convention, we had negotiated contracts with both the Western Electric Co., Bell System manufacturing arm, and one major Bell System operating company.

NEVERTHELESS, we emerged from our convention to face a nationwide strike against Western Electric. This company was denying to us a proper wage increase for our exchange installer members and was also seeking to take from them favorable conditions that they had enjoyed for years.

The strike could have affected almost our entire membership, since our Western Electric installers are employed in the same buildings as our operating company membership. Fortunately, we were not required to establish picket lines. Within two days after our strike began, we reached a settlement providing for wage increases of 6c per hour in basic wages and without any essential retrogression in our working conditions.

At this writing, some 1200 of our members are on strike against Western Electric at Buffalo, N. Y. This is a solid strike and we have closed down the operation. It indicates so much of current employer attitude. It is not basically a strike over wages. We are striking to prevent the company from watering down a hard-won seniority provision which protects our job security. We intend to win.

Among the matters debated by our convention was our organizing program. A strong resolution was adopted, calling upon the union for renewed and intensified efforts to organize in our CWA-CIO those not already under CWA contracts. We intend to accomplish this, although the tide today does not readily lend itself to easy victory. We intend also to build our present ranks to new high ground. We have geared our Organizing Dept. to this effort and this activity remains a major aspect of our union work.

IN THE PAST YEAR, we requested and received from CIO substantial aid in our organizing effort. We have sought to make maximum use of the CIO organizers assigned to us. We have a planned program and we intend to carry out this program to the best of our ability. We are highly appreciative for the aid supplied to us by CIO.

Among the important resolutions we adopted was one mandating us to continue our work with the CIO Community Services Committee. We are very proud of our participation in CIO-CSC. We have seen this work prove its worth to all of CIO.

I have often stated that community services are equal to bargaining, legislative work and PAC. I believe that this is true for all CIO unions and I urge once more maximum participation by all in the work of the Community Services Committee.

We of CWA have received excellent cooperation from CIO Executive-Vice Pres. Riffe and his staff. We appreciate that cooperation. We learn with sorrow of his illness. We join with all of CIO in wishing him a speedy recovery.

Union Shop Outlawed By Louisiana

DESPITE outspoken opposition of all branches of the clergy and various citizens' groups, Louisiana became the 18th state to enact an anti-union shop law.

With the immediate signature of Gov. Kennon, an ardent Dixiecrat who bolted the Democrats to support Pres. Eisenhower in 1952, the bill will become law within 20 days of the Legislature's adjournment July 8.

Four attempts to amend the bill's more restrictive provisions were beaten down in the House before the final 58-41 roll call vote was taken. The body even voted down, 59-57, a resolution to delay action on the bill until both proponents and opponents testifying on the measure could file statements of the financial support each had received.

"Don't you believe that each member should know the facts about lobbying before he votes on the bill?" shouted Rep. Jones, maker of the resolution and an opponent of the bill.

The House had made the measure a special order of business in an earlier vote.

THIS was challenged on the floor, giving rise to speculation that the bill might later be held invalid because the procedure for considering it was "illegal and void."

Leaders of all major religious faiths signed advertisements objecting to the bill, and all of them testified against it either before the Senate, which earlier passed the measure 22-14, or the House.

Shoe Workers Move

National headquarters of the CIO Shoe Workers have been moved to 1012 14th St., N. W., Washington 5, D. C. The telephone number, unchanged, is REpublic 7-1442.

WAY DOWN EAST—Officers of Maine CIO Council chat with CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson (second from left) during recess from recent convention sessions. From left, Sec.-Treas. Dennis Blais, Thompson, Pres. George J. Jabar and Executive Vice Pres. Michael Schoonjans.

Prize-Winning Essay—

'CIO, An Ardent Supporter Of The Democratic Way—'

"THE CIO has always been an ardent supporter of the democratic way of life. It backed the formation of both the United Nations and the North Atlantic Pact.

"When the World Federation of Trade Unions was discovered to be helping more than hindering communism, the CIO joined labor unions of 53 nations in organizing the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions."

THAT'S the way Charlotte Hudy, a Muskegon, Mich., senior, summed up the activities of the CIO in her prize-winning essay "The CIO and The American Way of Life," for which Local 113 of the CIO Auto Workers awarded her $125.

The local also awarded her school a prize of $75, as it did to four other high schools in the area, for essays written by seniors. Those who failed to win the grand prize divided $75 given by UAW Reg. 1-D. The winning essay continued:

"The CIO, now lead by Walter Reuther, is fighting communism by strengthening our democracy in every possible way. This union also strives to have qualified leaders elected in the union organization and in our government because it realizes that the ultimate in leadership is necessary to lead this nation to a permanent peace."

ADOLPH Dumont, education committee chairman, said "the thing that impressed the judges (which included men selected from public life, the clergy and the local) most was the fact that CIO aside from seeking better working and living conditions went all out for community projects and the promotion of all kinds of plans for a better community."

Other prize winners were: Carroll Bruce Privacky, Muskegon Heights High School; Chester Zbojniewicz, Catholic Central High School; Lillian Walhout, Western Christian High School, and Lynette Ferrell, North Muskegon High School.

GOOD REASON TO SMILE—Mat Stallins, CIO Textile Worker, shows checks for $2154 for time he lost since 1951 when he was fired after walkout at a J. P. Stevens plant at Rock Island, S. C. Army Sec. Stevens once headed the company, which did not pay until it lost Supreme Court appeal.

Kerr Forced Into Run-Off In Okla. Vote

ROLLING UP a total of more than 228,000 votes, CIO-PAC-backed incumbent Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) narrowly missed renomination in last week's primary and will have to run again against ex-Gov. Roy J. Turner July 27.

Sooner State voters gave Turner 193,000 votes while casting 40,000 for seven "little" candidates. Since Kerr's plurality was just over 35,000, he barely lacked a majority of the total vote cast and a run-off is necessary.

Both Kerr and Turner are former governors and millionaire oilmen. Although bitter political foes, each has been friendly to labor.

Meanwhile, Sam W. Reynolds, 63-year-old Omaha business man, was sworn in last week as the new U. S. Senator from Nebraska. A Republican, he was appointed to serve until November in the seat left vacant by the death of Sen. Butler (R.).

Farmers Look To Senate To Stop Dropping Prices

WHETHER or not the nation's farmers—who have already taken a cut of 13% in their income over the past two years—will have to take further losses under Eisenhower Administration farm policies now is up to the Senate.

A bill calling for continuation of present high supports may reach the Senate floor this week.

The considered judgment of its own experts on the House Agriculture Committee, which after traveling some 20,000 miles to get first-hand the "grass roots" views of the farmers voted 17 to 4 for continued high price supports, was over-ridden in the House. It adopted a "compromise" of the Administration-Farm Bureau "sliding scale" supports program by a vote of 228 to 170.

Sec. of Agriculture Benson has asked Congress to permit him to lower supports to as little as 75% of parity or to boost them up to 90% as he finds it necessary to prevent what he calls farm "surpluses."

Since being in office, Benson has shown that he's ready to cut supports when he has authority. In April he slashed the support under dairy products—dried milk, cheese and butter—from 90% to 75% of parity.

This cut proved too drastic for the House, which included in the bill it passed a requirement that dairy supports be restored to 80% beginning Sept. 1. Meanwhile, the Senate Agriculture Committee last week went the House one better and voted 8 to 7 to up them to 85%.

THE SENATE committee, by the same margin, earlier had approved the present 90% support program.

But the House, after being told by GOP leaders that Pres. Eisenhower would veto a bill continuing the present 90% mandatory support level on six basic crops, did authorize Benson to tamper with the farmers' income within the limits of 82.5% and 90% of parity. Farm price supports thus could be cut 7.5% next year instead of the 15% Benson asked for.

What wasn't pointed out, however, was that, under the bill, a new so-called "modernized" parity will be substituted for the old parity now in effect. Actually, this means that farmers will take an across-the-board cut on four basic crops at the outset, since "modernized" parity is considerably lower than the present one.

In terms of income loss, the new parity will cost farmers about 33c a bushel in the parity level for wheat, 19c for corn, 1.3c a pound for cotton, and 2.4c a pound for peanuts. The new "flexible" supports voted in the House bill would be figured on parity prices after these amounts had been subtracted from the current parity.

THE HOUSE action came as the Agriculture Dept. reported that farm prices in June had tumbled another 4%, the most severe monthly drop in several years.

What effect the Administration's farm policies may have on the economy as a whole was put bluntly by a spokesman for the National Farmers Union, who charged that it expects "reduced prices to drive unwanted 'marginal' farmers out of business."

"There," he continued, "they will join 3.5 million unemployed industrial workers—likewise unwanted in the Administration's 'sound' economy of recession and decline."

7-12

UNION BOXER—Contender for welterweight boxing crown is Vince Martinez, member of Local 412, CIO Electrical Workers, Bloomfield, N. J. He's with Margaret Robertson, former model and member of IUE Local 410, also at Westinghouse plant.

IUE Member Is On His Way To Welterweight Crown

ONE OF THE country's top welterweight boxers and a title contender, Vince Martinez, is a proud member of the CIO Electrical Workers' Local 412 at the Westinghouse plant, Bloomfield, N. J.

Vince has an impressive record—36 wins in 39 fights, 20 of them over the knockout route. Two of his losses were split decisions, one of which he later reversed when he met Chico Vejar in a rematch. Local 412's shining hope has yet to be knocked to the canvas for even a one-count.

His latest bout was with Chuck Davey in Chicago, an engagement so one-sided that after being floored four times by Martinez, Davey was not allowed to answer the bell for the seventh round. The mauling by Martinez has put Davey's career in almost full eclipse.

Martinez is a member of the salaried workers' local at the Bloomfield plant. He worked as a draftsman and is on leave of absence while he follows his fistic star.

Just to keep things in the union family, Martinez' publicity manager for the past three years has been Elmer Everiss, financial secretary of Local 412.

Textile Workers Ask Bid To Weeks' Industry Parley

THE CIO Textile Workers have asked for representation at a conference of textile industry leaders to be called soon by Commerce Sec. Weeks.

Although TWUA-CIO has been urging a conference of labor, management and government representatives for almost a year to act on the industry's grave problems, Weeks is planning the parley at the suggestion of Pres. Eisenhower—with an eye on the November elections.

The President recently informed Rep. Canfield (R. N.J.) that Weeks would call a conference of 35 or 40 woolen and worsted manufacturers. Canfield had written Eisenhower that he was deeply concerned over the depressed condition of textile mills in the Passaic-Paterson areas of his State.

EISENHOWER replied that the federal government should not be "insensitive to the ebbs and flows of commercial, business and industrial enterprise."

TWUA has had numerous meetings with Administration leaders to urge action in meeting the industry's problems. There was considerable skepticism, therefore, in union circles that Weeks' action was taken more to help Canfield in his election fight than to aid the industry in finding solutions to its dilemmas.

Administration policies generally and the impact of the recession on his highly industrialized district spell real trouble in his re-election campaign for Canfield.

"Regardless of your motivation we are glad you have recognized that a problem exists," the union wrote Weeks. "We believe that as the collective bargaining representative of a majority of workers in this industry, we should be represented at your proposed conference.

"In the first place, the workers have borne the brunt of the current depression in the industry. Generally speaking, liquidations have been profitable to the liquidators; the workers have suffered all the penalties.

"In the second place, joint labor-management participation in such conferences is established practice for reasons which hardly need to be stated here. And in the third place, we alone have promulgated a program for strengthening the woolen and worsted industry."

Meanwhile, TWUA signed a 90-day extension of the old agreement with the Alexander Smith carpet firm which intends to move from its century-old Yonkers, N.Y., plant to non-union Greenville, Miss. Business Manager Charles E. Hughes of Local 122 said he did not want to raise "false hopes" that the company would rescind its decision.

More Locals Sign Up For CIO News

SEVERAL more CIO locals have signed up for group subscriptions to the CIO News.

The largest of these is the CIO Steelworkers Local 2016 in Oil City, Pa., which now has 1000 members getting this paper.

Other groups who have recently subscribed for all or a large part of their members include Steelworkers Local 4618 in Meadville, Pa.; Electrical Workers Local 450, New Hyde Park, N. Y., and Auto Workers Local 382, Sturgis, Mich.

Group subscriptions and bundle orders are available at special rates. Details may be obtained by writing the CIO News Circulation Dept., 718 Jackson Place, Washington 6, D. C.

A record for a voluntary solicitor for The CIO News has been set by Reg. 3 PAC Dir. Dan Bedell of the CIO Auto Workers.

Bedell recently got 13 individual subscriptions at a UAW Reg. 3 staff meeting at Rochester, Ind. The region covers Indiana and Kentucky.

Steel Output Lags

After a slight climb early in the month, steel production for last week dropped to a scheduled rate of 72.6 pct. of capacity. That means that more than one-fourth of the nation's steel production is going unused.

Factory Injury Rate Drops Off

Fewer factory workers suffered disabling injuries in the first quarter of 1954 than ever before, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The new rate of 11.8 injuries for each million man-hours worked is 2% under the previous low in the last quarter of 1953. Industries showing substantial drops in injury rates were saw mill, logging, cutlery and edge tools, and steel and nonferrous foundries.

A 'Stranger' Who Saved 4 Lives Is A Union Man

A MODEST hero who saved the lives of four children has finally been identified after two months of being known as the "mysterious stranger." He is Edward J. Wagner, a member of CIO Auto Workers Local 501 at Buffalo, N. Y.

Wagner rushed six children to the hospital in a station wagon after they had been badly burned in the Cleveland Hill School fire. Two of the children later died but Wagner's prompt action is credited with saving the lives of the others.

Fellow workers heard about the action from Wagner and contacted Mrs. Harry Noel, mother of one of the little girls saved. She had been trying to learn the name of "the mysterious stranger."

Said Wagner: "I didn't do it for publicity. It was more important to get the children to the hospital than to tell people who I was." —(PAI)

Question On Travel Bias Ban Irks Ike

PRES. EISENHOWER, whose temper frequently flares at his press conferences, clearly resented a woman reporter's question last week as to whether his Administration would support legislation to ban segregation in interstate travel.

The question, by Ethel Payne, a Negro employe of Defender Publications, brought a presidential reply in clipped tones that made his annoyance plain.

The reporter referred to the fact that Deputy Atty.-Gen. William Rogers told the House Commerce Committee that there was a legal basis for banning Jim Crow travel conditions between states. Rogers added that in view of the recent Supreme Court ban on school segregation, such a measure should be enacted by this Congress and that the Budget Bureau approved it.

"I WOULD like to know," the reporter asked the President, "if we could assume that we have Administration support in getting action on this."

With considerable heat the President answered that he did not know by what right the reporter should say that "you have to have Administration support." His Administration, he said forcefully, was trying to do what it thought to be decent and just in this country, and was not trying to support any particular or special group of any kind.

He stated that Rogers' opinion was part of the Administration's belief "because we thought it was just and right."

And with that, the President cut off further discussion.

Reuther Urges Ike Act On Jobs

—See Page 3

Looking to November (See Page 6)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., July 19, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 29

The Facts To Help Us Win

THE HOW AND WHY of political action is told in fact-crammed material like that shown above. A variety of new PAC literature, highlighted by the 1954 Political Action Handbook, is now available to help show people how politics affects their pocketbooks. (See story Page 2.)

Murray Fund Gives Protestants $200,000

A GRANT of $200,000 to the National Council of Churches of Christ in the United States of America was announced last week by the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation, created to honor the memory of the late president of the CIO and the CIO Steelworkers.

The money will be used by the National Council "on behalf of the practical application of religious principles to the everyday world of economic life."

Half the sum will be used to assist in financing, over a period of years, the Council's national education program in the area of the church and economic life. The remainder will be allocated to a Philip Murray Fund to establish and maintain, at the Council's headquarters, a permanent library and research service for the churches and interested members of the public in the field of the relationship of religion and ethics to economic life.

ANNOUNCEMENT of the grant was made by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther; Emil Rieve, chairman of the Foundation, vice president of the CIO and president of the CIO Textile Workers, and Bishop William C. Martin, president of the National Council and Methodist Bishop of Dallas, Tex.

"The trustees of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation," said Reuther and Rieve, "are most favorably acquainted with the work of the National Council, and especially the excellent work it is doing in the field of the church and economic life.

"The trustees of the Foundation feel certain that the late Philip Murray, who spent his entire life in the practical application of religious principles to the problems of our works, would most heartily approve the extensive educational program contemplated by the National Council to stimulate a better understanding and application of religious principles to our society.

"The Foundation welcomes this opportunity to help serve the Council's work on behalf of the national welfare. It is our belief that the activities which this grant will make possible are indispensable to the achievement of ethical and spiritual gains comparable to the scientific and technological advances of the nation."

Bishop Martin, in accepting the grant, said it would help the National Council's 30 member-churches "make the Christian faith a more vital force in the lives of men and nations."

"We are gratified that the program of the National Council has so commended itself to the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation," he said, "that it desires to share in the support of the Council's program for a better community and national life.

"The grant will contribute to the cooperative effort of the churches to make the Christian faith a more vital force in the lives of men and nations. It is accepted with heartfelt thanks.

"The grant to the Council by a foundation established to advance the nation's welfare exemplifies, we believe, a growing recognition on the part of American institutions of the indispensable service religion renders to mankind."

THE FOUNDATION with funds of about $1 million contributed by CIO unions and their members in memory of the late Philip Murray, had previously announced gifts to the American Association for the United Nations; Providence Hospital, Washington, D. C.; Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor; the Legal and Educational Fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Howard University, Washington; the National Religion and Labor Foundation, and the American Arbitration Association.

CIO, AFL Win A Point—

Brownell Bills Spiked; House Unit Favors Communist Inquiry

IN A SHARP slap at the Administration, the House Judiciary Committee last week spiked two so-called "Communist control" bills sponsored by Atty.-Gen. Brownell.

The committee okayed instead a measure urged jointly by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany which would create a Presidential commission to study legislation to meet the problems of Communist infiltration of unions and defense factories.

The Brownell measures would have permitted the Attorney-General and the Subversive Activities Control Board to liquidate unions and other organizations found to be infiltrated by Communists. Another Brownell bill would have authorized the President to bar subversives from defense plants.

COMMITTEE action came shortly after Reuther and Meany released letters written to the chairmen of the Senate and House Judiciary Committees, making similar proposals.

Reuther urged the House committee to kill the Brownell bills and substitute a measure creating a bipartisan public committee, similar to the Randall tariff commission and the legislative salary commission, to study the entire manner.

Reuther reiterated CIO's readiness "to assist in every practicable way in protecting the national security, both from outside aggression and internal subversion." He detailed CIO's successful fight against Communist infiltration in which CIO expelled 11 unions which had become Communist dominated.

The CIO president called this fight "a mortal blow" to Communist efforts "to gain and maintain any substantial foothold" in the U. S. labor movement.

From this experience, Reuther said, CIO had "clear-cut ideas about effective and ineffective methods" for combatting communism. The Brownell proposals, he said, did not "offer a constructive solution" and would "do harm to the entire labor movement."

BY PLACING unions under government control, Reuther continued, unions would be weakened and "a propaganda jamboree for the Communists" would be created.

The bipartisan committee, made up of congressional and public members, including labor and industrial leaders, could "devise and recommend enactment of a program which, while respecting individual rights and liberties, would provide every needed protection to our internal security," Reuther said.

The House Judiciary Committee approved a measure, presented by Rep. Walter (D. Pa.), which would create such a commission.

URW Renews Goodyear Strike Talks

NEGOTIATIONS were to be resumed this week between the CIO Rubber Workers and the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. in an effort to settle a strike that has closed 10 company plants in all parts of the country.

Some 23,000 URW-CIO members walked out July 8 after company bargainers had stalked from a session in Cincinnati, O., and announced they were going back to Akron, O., headquarters "in order to get some work done."

The union remained ready to resume talks at any time but the company balked until agreeing last week to meet in Cleveland.

WITH its members manning token picket lines before all plants, the union for the first time made public its wage demands. According to URW-CIO Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, these provide for a minimum wage increase of 7.5c an hour, plus another 4.5c to correct inequities, particularly at the Gadsden, Ala., and Topeka, Kan., plants.

TOKEN picket lines, such as this at main entrance of Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.'s Plant 2 in Akron, O., sufficed to close company plants in 10 cities when CIO Rubber Workers struck for higher wages.

Guildsman Named To India Mission

Reporter Carl T. Rowan of the Minneapolis Tribune, one of the first Negroes to get a U. S. Navy commission, has left for a three-month visit to India under State Dept. auspices.

Rowan, who will confer with journalists, is a CIO Newspaper Guild member.

PAC Handbook Offers Facts For Campaigners

THE 1954 EDITION of the CIO Political Action Committee Handbook, the comprehensive fact book on important issues in this year's congressional campaigns, is now off the press.

The $3-a-copy loose-leaf book, which will be updated with supplements during the campaign, is available at half-price to union members ordering copies from CIO-PAC.

Besides providing factual material on nine major issues, this year's edition has a number of new features which will make it even more useful than its predecessors. Chief among these is a detailed, alphabetical, item-for-item index to the contents.

Each issue is divided into background, talking points and the CIO position. In addition quotes pertinent to the subject are provided and, where applicable, recent publications on the issue are cited.

THE "TALKING points" are set off in bold-face type so they are easy to see at a glance. Following each talking point are the arguments to buttress the point.

The nine issues covered in the 234-page volume are housing, natural resources, public power, REA, social security, Taft-Hartley, taxes, TVA and unemployment.

On unemployment, for instance, the handbook details some 15 talking points ranging from current figures to "Republican budget balancing." There are three pages of quotes on the subject from Candidate Eisenhower, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and others.

IN THE process it presents a strictly factual accounting of the Administration's action, or lack of it. The CIO's 10-point full employment program is in the section, as is an eight-point program to keep America at work, and a six-point plan to "expand purchasing power in the hands of the people."

Sent out with each 1954 handbook ordered will be a postage-free reply card. When filled out and mailed to PAC, the person's name is entered on a special mailing list to receive automatically the supplementary pages as they are published Binders are available for 85c, or 75c each in lots of a dozen or more. Gold stamping is $2 extra.

More Facts

Facts, facts and more facts on how to be effective in political action and on important issues and problems in American life are available in a number of pieces of literature put out by the CIO Political Action Committee.

Among them are three of the pocket-sized '54 Facts series on farmers, social security and jobs; How to Air Your Views, on using radio and television; Everything We Have, about common interests of workers and farmers; Roll Call, a series of special pamphlets detailing the background of an important congressional vote and including the record of each congressman.

Full information, sample copies and prices can be obtained by writing CIO-PAC, 718 Jackson Pl., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

T-H Move Revised By McConnell

IN AN obviously political move, Rep. McConnell (R. Pa.), chairman of the House Labor Committee, last week sought to revise one section of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The section deals with "economic strikers" and was branded as a "union busting" section by Candidate Eisenhower, who promised to eliminate all union busting from the law.

McConnell's proposal would not end this legalized union busting, but merely delay it for a year, by prohibiting employers from seeking an NLRB election during the strike or for a period of a year after it begins, whichever is shorter.

The McConnell move was labeled as a move to redeem an Eisenhower campaign pledge, but labor sources noted it fell far short of making the law "fair and just" as the President had promised.

Looks Like A Sure Hit

SULTRY Ava Gardner may star in Empress in the Dusk, to be made by M-G-M from book by John W. Vandercook, CIO-sponsored radio commentator. Vandercook has another book, Murder in Haiti, scheduled for fall publication.

Reuther Renews Plea To Ike For Jobs Parley To End 'Stagnation'

WITH LATEST official statistics failing to show "any sign of a pickup" in economic activity, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther last week renewed his plea to Pres. Eisenhower to call a conference intended to "keep America at work."

Reuther's latest request came shortly after the release of official figures on employment and unemployment for June showed what the CIO leader earlier had called "at best a picture of economic stagnation."

"I again respectfully urge that you use your good offices," Reuther wrote Eisenhower in a six-page letter, "and call a broad representative conference of industry, agriculture, labor, consumers and government for the purpose of discussing ways and means of achieving and maintaining full employment and full production in peacetime.

"Such a broad conference, as we suggested earlier, would bring out the best thinking of all groups in our population directed toward the common goal of keeping America strong, prosperous and free by keeping America at work.

"MEETING in the same room, each group would gain maximum consciousness of the needs and problems of all the others. The program that would emerge from their joint deliberations would be one behind which all citizens of good will could unite.

"Such a conference would greatly facilitate the effective implementation of the purposes of the Employment Act of 1946, namely, the promotion of maximum employment, production and purchasing power."

Reuther told the President that the CIO is "greatly disturbed by the apparent stagnation of the American economy," and cited the 3,347,000 million unemployed reported in June.

"The vitality and strength of the national economy rest upon dynamic qualities that make for expansion and progress," he wrote. "Our kind of free economy cannot maintain its strength if it is static. We must either expand and go forward or contract and lose ground."

REUTHER REMINDED the President that total employment remains 1.1 million less than in June 1953; that industrial employment was 1.6 million less than the year before, and the factory work week 1.1 hours shorter.

He recalled, too, that at a recent press conference, Dr. Arthur Burns, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, indicated he looked for no significant improvement before October, and then only because of a seasonal pickup.

Reuther further pointed out that the government's own statistics show wage and salary income dropped at an annual rate of $8 billion between July 1953 and April 1954, latest month for which figures are available.

Steel production, he wrote, is 20% less than a year ago, and second-half auto production is due to be about one-third less than in the first half.

In June, he went on, 25.7% of the jobless had been without work for 15 or more weeks, compared to only 13.5% a year ago, while 658,000 workers, or 300,000 more than a year ago, exhausted their unemployment compensation benefits in the first five months of the year.

"We in the CIO have an abiding faith in the strength and future of America," Reuther wrote. "We believe, however, that the achievement of full production and full employment in peacetime is both an objective and a challenge that commands the full cooperation of all segments of our society. Industry, agriculture, labor, consumer groups and government all have a contribution to make and a responsibility to assume."

. . . Slippery Statistics

"Figures don't lie," BUT—

You sure can do some strange things with them.

Take the case of the work week in manufacturing industries: it's edged up slightly. Judging from the comments of Sec. of Commerce Weeks, Presidential Economic Adviser Arthur Burns and others, it's been epoch-making. But the facts are otherwise.

The figures—and they were emphasized in the last U. S. unemployment report and again last week by Burns, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers—are that the factory work week has gone from 39 hours last April to 39 hours and 18 minutes in May, and then to 39 hours and 36 minutes in June.

"A very favorable indication," said Burns.

BUT—The truth of the matter, as CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther pointed out, is that the low 39-hour figure for April was misleading. It covered the week of Good Friday, which amounted to a four or four-and-a-half day work week. So naturally there was some gain for five-day work weeks in the following months.

"This is shoddy economic analysis and misleads the public," said Reuther of the Weeks-Burns reports.

Actually, the factory work week has dropped by 1.1 hours in the past year, and has gained insignificantly expect for seasonal changes.

PENNY pinching by Congress has cost the nation "reliable, realistic" statistics that are essential for democratic solution of the country's economic and political problems, CIO Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg and Associate Dir. Katherine P. Ellickson told the Joint Committee on the Economic Report last week.

"The present status of government statistics and economic analysis is highly discouraging," they told a subcommittee studying government economic and statistical needs. They said:

"Curtailment of funds, year after year, has led to deterioration of the volume, quality and promptness of federal statistics. The top staff people in many bureaus are stretched too thin and are overworked, so they cannot do the type of creative thinking required.

"Continuing uncertainties and repeated failure in efforts to obtain more funds increase frustrations. Many excellent people have understandably left for more remunerative and intellectually rewarding opportunities. The quality of staff has deteriorated."

EARLIER, Dr. Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, told the subcommittee that government statistics are not good enough. Their quality in some cases is poor, he said, and they sometimes come too late.

The CIO spokesmen before the subcommittee called on Congress to encourage good statistics of high calibre, reconcile proposals with fiscal policy, encourage long-range planning and review statistical achievements and needs.

They made specific proposals for improving current statistics in a number of areas, including employment and unemployment, wages, working conditions and accidents, industrial relations and the labor movement, productivity, and the consumers price index.

THEY ALSO urged greater coordination and uniformity of statistical classifications between different government agencies, and particularly asked that compulsory reporting of figures be required in many fields.

"The federal government alone," they said, "can carry on a co-ordinated program of statistical collection and analysis adequate to the needs of the people. The cost is infinitesimal compared to the advantages that would be provided for sound judgments by both public and private decision-makers."

Jobless Pay Boost Loses In Senate

LED by Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.), Senate Democrats last week tried, but failed, to add increased individual jobless aid benefits to the Administration's unemployment compensation bill.

The Senate, by a vote of 56 to 30 after lengthy debate, rejected the proposal to increase state benefits to two-thirds of the average weekly wage and also to lengthen the period of payment.

Such improvements have been called for by Pres. Eisenhower as a "first line of defense against economic recession."

But the Senate turned down the amendments and then, by a vote of 78 to 3, approved the Administration's Reed Bill. The bill, already voted by the House, sets up a $200 million unemployment reserve fund and extends unemployment compensation coverage to 3.8 million more workers, including federal employes.

THE REED BILL has been described as using "a garden hose to fight a three-alarm fire."

(Kennedy directed the fight while standing on crutches. A wound suffered in combat with the Seebees during World War II had been bothering him for some time, but he delayed going to a hospital until after making the battle for the badly-needed unemployment compensation improvements.)

Harry's Home And Doing Fine

Former Pres. Truman is convalescing "beautifully" from his recent double operation, and is soaking up sunshine on the front porch of his Independence, Mo., home.

U. S. Needs Expanding Economy To Remain Strong

A NON-PARTISAN research organization has taken a look at the nation's economy, and reports that it is not very healthy, partly because of neglect by the Administration.

The National Planning Association, made up of representatives from business, labor, agriculture and the professions, says the U. S. economy is not expanding at a time when it should be to remain healthy and strong.

In its report, Opportunities for Economic Expansion, the non-profit association says:

1. The U. S. economy needs to step up its production of goods and services by at least $25 billion in the next 12 months to keep the economy healthy.

2. The Administration is not doing what is required to encourage economic expansion.

3. Failure to use our full industrial capacity would be "inexcusable in a perilous world situation."

4. A "sobering aspect" in the present outlook is the fact that business activity has been leveling off at a rate of production which is more than $15 billion below the rate of reasonably full employment.

Key point in the NPA report was the strong conviction that it is essential to national interest to achieve this potential growth during the next year.

"Involuntary total or partial idleness on the part of a substantial number of workers and under-utilization of productive capacity would be undesirable in any circumstances," the report said. "They are inexcusable in a perilous world situation in which the effective use of manpower and capacities concerns not only the comfort but also the security and possibly the survival of the nation."

'A' For Effort

Sen. Flanders, the doughty Republican from Vermont, deserves at least an "A" for effort in seeking to get the Senate to remove Sen. McCarthy as head of the important Senate Government Operations Committee.

It was an open Washington secret that many Senators who would have liked to have voted against McCarthy felt they could not easily vote against the traditions of the Senate in regard to committee chairmanships.

That's a major irony—because few men have gone so far as the junior Senator from Wisconsin in flouting the very best traditions of the upper house of Congress. Should he be protected by the traditions and unwritten rules which he defies so regularly?

Another Speech

Isn't it wonderful to have a Vice-President whom we can trust to stir up a hornet's nest every time he makes a formal address?

Dick Nixon, having caused pain to many people by his talks on the Indo-Chinese problem, spoke to the 48 governors about a $50-billion highway program. That seems to have raised ructions among the state executives.

Well, after all, the "new team" has been on the job for only 18 months, and it probably takes a little while before things get working smoothly.

A Wise Decision

The House Judiciary Committee acted wisely in sidetracking two bills sponsored by Atty.-Gen. Brownell concerning Communist influence in unions and internal security in defense plants. Instead, the committee favors a study by a commission of legislators and representatives of labor, industry and the public.

The questions involved are complex, and easy solutions can also be dangerous solutions.

Both the CIO and AFL strongly urged that these problems be carefully studied—rather than rushed through the Congress.

CIO Pres. Reuther, noting organized labor's experience in handling the problem of Communist-dominated unions, has pointed out that the Brownell bills do not "offer a constructive solution to the problem." Thoughtful legislation, not headline-hunting, should be the order of the day.

Boo!

We note with some astonishment that the Jackson Daily News of Jackson, Miss., told its readers in an editorial that "it is a well known fact that the political action committee of the CIO has at its disposal a fund of $35 million—money raised for political purposes only."

It further told its readers to beware of "men with gimlet eyes and furtive faces who move about on election day, carrying little black bags filled with folding money," the implication being, of course, that these are people from PAC.

The CIO has been accused by some southern papers like the Jackson News of many "crimes" in the South but at least we have never made so gross an assault upon the intelligence of any people anywhere as that contained in the editorial of the Jackson Daily News.

We can only conclude that the News' candidate must be in trouble with his constituents and that it has concocted this fantasy in the hope of diverting attention from him.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS
Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII July 19, 1954 No. 29

The One That Got Away

In Other Words—

The Diplomacy Of Bluster

In a recent floor speech on foreign policy, Sen. Mansfield (D. Mont.) denounced what he called "diplomacy of bluster and retreat" fostered by "bluffers, blusterers and buffoons." Excerpts from his speech follow:

By MIKE MANSFIELD

WITH RESPECT to Indo-China, a serious defeat has been inflicted on American diplomacy. And in the process, vast new areas have been opened for potential conquest by Communist totalitarianism.

For the present, the inescapable fact is that totalitarianism and not freedom has emerged triumphant from the murky waters of the war of the deltas. Its triumph has been confirmed by Geneva, and the pattern for a further advance in the Far East is set.

Thanks to the courage and the wisdom of a sincere American and a great Secretary of State, George C. Marshall, and thanks to the financial sacrifices of the American people who bore the cost of the Marshall Plan willingly and generously, Western Europe had been able to lift itself out of the mire of a disastrous war. It had begun the long, slow ascent toward unity. It was on the verge of reaching the most elusive goal of all, the formation of a common European army.

A Dream Is Fading

This was a dream worth having, the hope of a century. But now the dream is fading; the hope is dimming. These results were not expected when the Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, announced that this nation had been committed to the Geneva meeting.

I say this without reflecting on the intentions or the capacities of the Secretary of State. Some have even waxed lyrical in their appreciation of his exceptional qualities. It has been said, for example, that it is "wonderful" to have at last "a Secretary of State who is not taken in by the Communists, who stands up to them."

I cannot hope to match such eloquence in the expression of my regard for the Secretary. That he did stand up to the Communists is beyond doubt.

"Berlin," the Secretary said on his return, "cleared the way for other things to happen." Those were prophetic words. Berlin cleared the way for Geneva and a failure of American policy.

I do not call attention to the mistake without an appreciation of the many difficulties which confronted the Secretary of State at Berlin and Geneva. He had to deal with reluctant allies and obstinate enemies. He had to stand in the forefront and seek to negotiate a settlement for peace while others in this Administration beat the drums for war behind his back.

The job of the Secretary of State is an extraordinary difficult one at this time. It is not made easier by those in high official positions who, by offering public statements at inappropriate moments, in effect tell him how it should be conducted.

All that has been done at Geneva cannot be undone. We can still have a foreign policy that will keep this nation safe and free and at peace. But we can have it only if we recognize the errors that have been made and act to correct them.

Clinging To Illusions

We can do nothing—and will do worse than nothing—it we cling to the illusion that television performances are a substitute for sound foreign policies; that eleventh-hour flights to foreign capitals are a substitute for carefully cultivated, carefully maintained cooperation with friendly nations; and that strong words, even massive words, equate with a strong policy, or can take the place of genuine strength and conviction.

If this diplomacy of bluster and retreat is designed to confuse the enemy, it succeeds only in confusing the American people. This country has not achieved greatness under the guidance of bluffers and blusterers.

We can lose our supremacy if we cease to say what we mean and mean what we say in foreign policy. The time has come to put a stop to the multiple voices which apparently speak for the Administration on foreign policy.

Ultimately (our choice) is between shouldering, day in and day out, a part of the responsibility of maintaining freedom in a world from which tyranny has not yet been banished; or of abandoning this responsiblity today only to have to pick up tomorrow the crushing burden of a third world war.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE ECONOMIC INNOCENCE of Pres. Eisenhower was never revealed more clearly than when, in a press conference a few weeks ago, he defended his tax program by claiming that wage earners in the steel industry make more money than most stockholders of U. S. Steel Corp.

Ike's Innocence vs. Tax Favoritism

The President is understandably sensitive about charges that his tax schemes favor the well-to-do and load an unfair share of the tax burden on low-income families. Unfortunately for him, the evidence sustains the charges, and his attempted defense, by citing some alleged facts about U. S. Steel, is killed by outside evidence that denies his alleged "facts."

The issue here, which may be decided in Congress before this column is in print, involves tax favoritism toward stockholders.

Eisenhower, apparently acting on the slick advice of Treasury Sec. Humphrey, proposed a tax program that would give special favors to the small minority of families who own corporation stocks and receive dividends:

1. This year the first $50 of dividend income, and 5% of all other dividend income, could be deducted—tax free.
2. Next year, and thereafter, the first $100 of dividend income, and 10% of all other dividend income, could be deducted.

This program shot through the House of Representatives like a well-greased pig. The Senate balked, with Republicans well aware of the political dynamite involved, and wiped out all the special favors to stockholders except the deduction of the first $50 of dividend income.

The House and Senate tax bills then were sent to a conference committee, to be reconciled, with practically everyone assuming that the "compromise" would be a provision writing into the final law both the $50 exemption and the 5% exemption, but omitting the even more lush $100 and 10% exemptions written by the House for "hereafter."

Sold A Bill Of Goods

Mr. Eisenhower has been sold a bill of goods about so-acled "double taxation" of dividends.

There isn't any "double taxation" of dividends, of course. There is a tax on corporate net earnings, after all expenses and amortization, which corporation take into account in fixing their prices so as to show net profits. There is also a tax on the income which people receive from corporate dividends—no higher and no lower, as of now, than the taxes other people pay on income from wages and salaries.

A great many things are taxed more than once. Cigarets and liquor, for example, pay federal, state and municipal taxes. Wages and salaries, as well as dividends, pay both federal and state taxes—and in some cases municipal taxes.

But dividends to people are not "doubled-taxed" by the federal government. Eisenhower just has been told that they are.

Having been sold this bill of goods, he then tried to justify it with his phony U. S. Steel figures on the wages of steelworkers and by his comments on the situation of downtrodden U. S. Steel stockholders.

A U. S. Steel survey, he said, showed that "most" stockholders of the company have low incomes, that the wages of steelworkers are more than the incomes of more than 50% of the company's shareowners.

J. A. Livingston, a syndicated newspaper financial writer, exploded this nonsense by pointing out that Mr. Eisenhower's figures came from U. S. Steel itself, based on a mail survey, with no attempt to get a scientific sample and with no protection against misleading replies.

Livingston said that the Eisenhower-U. S. Steel figures were in direct conflict with a careful, thorough study in 1952 by the Brookings Institution, a privately-endowed research group with no bias toward labor, covering the entire field of corporation ownership.

The Brookings Report

The Brookings Institution reported not that most stockholders were downtrodden, but that the vast majority of shares in American companies were held by people in the middle-income and upper-income brackets. It reported that stock ownership increased according to income.

"The U. S. Steel data," said Livingston bluntly, "don't square with either common sense or past data."

The U. S. Steel data, nevertheless, are those which Mr. Eisenhower relied on in defending his tax program. They are phony data but they are the President's only pretense at an answer.

Every wage-earner and salary-earner can remember, if the President's program goes through, that he is paying taxes through the nose, for what he earns with hands and brain, while stockholders get special treatment on their dividends.

★ Rep. Carroll Reece (R., Tenn.), shocked by denunciation of his investigation of tax-exempt educational foundations by the Carnegie Foundation, rallied to announce that he wanted an "explanation" of what "influence" had been exerted by Alger Hiss on the Carnegie Foundation.

There are two answers:

Hiss never had any connection with the Carnegie Foundation; he was president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, a separate group. Second, the best witness for Mr. Reece is Sec. of State John Foster Dulles, who sponsored Hiss as president of the Carnegie Endowment.

Washington Window—

Maybe Prosperity's Coming, But Workers, Farmers Can't Sight It

By Public Affairs Institute

PROSPERITY is breaking out all over—or so the headlines in the daily newspapers read.

Is it true? That is the question most often asked today.

Look at the stock market. It is even breaking 1929 peak prices. On the other hand, most of U. S. industry is operating far below its capacity.

If you own property you should be prospering. Since early in 1953, income from property in the form of interest, dividends or rent has risen steadily. These income receipts are now running at a rate about $2.5 billion higher than at the end of 1952.

If you are a worker, job prospects are not really very good. Underlying forces at work, including increased productivity, new additions to the labor force coupled with the weakness of consumer demand, all point to further rises in unemployment.

Here is what is really happening:

Business and employment expansion were heavily hit by the tight money, high interest rate, by mid-1953. Since then total wage and salary receipts have fallen at a rate equal to about $8 billion a year. And this figure includes white collar and executives' pay which have been unaffected by the decline.

Farm income since late 1952 has fallen by over $1 billion.

Together labor and farmers have suffered an income loss of $10 billion at an annual rate in the last year.

National production is still down 10% below the mid-1953 level of output. Unemployment, now over three million, will be swelled by the seasonal influx of summer job seekers.

"I don't know who started all this unemployment talk. My statistics conclusively prove we're in a boom."

While there was a decline in June in factory layoffs the number of workers becoming unemployed for the first time this year was still running at about 275,000 per week.

And these cover only the workers under unemployment insurance. In June a year ago, the weekly rate of new claims for unemployment insurance was about 175,000.

Industry By Industry

Surveying some of the major industries we have prospects for increased unemployment:

Passenger car output was cut 7% between May and June and is scheduled for another 7% reduction in July. Auto workers will be laid off.

In the steel industry, production was raised to a "high" of 73.2% of capacity in early June as a result of temporary "anticipatory" ordering. It has now been cut back to below 70% of capacity. (Last week the scheduled rate was 65.4%.)

In the clothing industry, workers starting on their annual two weeks vacation face the prospect of a two months shutdown at many of the large clothing firms, according to industry estimates.

Railroad workers, the first to feel the job loss in the current recession, face further joblessness if the forecast of a continued drop in carloadings by the regional shippers advisory boards is borne out.

Prosperity talk may be good politics for the Administration in the hopes of instilling confidence after the talk of "gloom and doom," but the hard facts just don't bear it out.

'Stop Kidding—'

It's time for the GOP Administration "and everybody else to quit kidding themselves" about unemployment and "to look the facts square in the face."

That's the editorial judgment of the St. Louis Post Dispatch, which also hit out at the Administration's "cheerful words about a confidently expected upturn" that accompany each month's eport on unemployment.

Reece Heads For The Storm Cellar

THE DULL THUD that bounced around the country last week was Rep. Reece (R. Tenn.) closing the door on his House committee's investigation into tax exempt foundations.

His flight into the temporary—it is assumed—anonymity of the storm cellar was touched off by the tart tongue of Rep. Hays (D. O.). It didn't protect him, however, from the continuing wave of resentment at his staff's allegations that foundations spending the money of some of American history's most rugged individualists have "socialistic" or "Communistic" leanings.

The three Republican members of the committee, taking their cue from the somewhat battered Reece, voted to discontinue public hearings. Hays and Rep. Pfost (D. Ida.) voted to continue them, although the former noted that the majority decision appeared "the least embarrassing way to bow gracefully off the stage."

Reece, smarting under Hays' sarcasm, laid the action to "efforts to frustrate orderly procedure," his description of the Ohio Democrat's efforts to inject fairness into the hearings.

"The case presented by the staff without basis in fact merely fell of its own weight," Hays retorted.

Hays started Reece and his committee employes on their way to the storm cellar by reading three quotations to Thomas McNiece, the staff assistant, and asking for his comment. McNiece replied that they amounted to Communist statements. Then Hayes identified them. They were from the encyclicals of Pope Leo XIII and Pope Pius XI.

Hays pointed out that a lot of people are concerned with social conditions and want to make them better, that not all of them are either Socialists or Communists, and that they include such bodies as the Rockefeller, Ford and Carnegie Foundations, which had been under fire.

In his syndicated column, Drew Pearson wrote that the end came when Republican leaders told Reece to call a halt. The investigation, they said, was producing some "embarrassing publicity" against some of the party's best friends, such as the Fords and the Rockefellers.

Besides, wrote Pearson, they "were chafing under the merciless ridicule" of Hays. Reece, originally a Taft man, was reported "still nursing a grudge against the Fords, the Rockefellers and other heavy backers" of Pres. Eisenhower.

The Carnegie Corp., the foundation spending the steel millions of the late Andrew Carnegie, blasted the committee for ending the hearings without giving it and other foundations a chance publicly to reply to the charges that had been made in public.

The president, Charles Dollard, in a statement filed with Reece, accused the committee of attacking the foundation's patriotism by a "shocking combination of innuendo and implication" through "completely unfounded charges" and "errors of fact and interpretation."

The corporation's attorney, Hohn E. F. Wood, called the committee's procedure "odd."

Dollard flatly declared the corporation is unqualifiedly loyal to the United States. Since 1911, he said, it has made grants totaling $253 million for research and educational projects in more than 700 colleges, universities, schools, and private research and educational institutions.

For Reece's edification, Dollard also listed the corporation's directors. They include such noted non-Communists and non-Socialists as R. C. Leffingwell, vice chairman of J. P. Morgan & Co.; Devereaux C. Josephs, chairman of the board of the New York Life Insurance Co., and Pres. Gwilym A. Price of the Westinghouse Electric Corp.

Looking To November—

Oklahoma's Kerr Again Wins The Hard Way

(Ninth in a series about outstanding senators and their 1954 campaigns.)

By MILTON PLUMB

LAST WEEK brought an end to the toughest fight that Oklahoma's "Bob" Kerr (D.) has had in his political career. He won the Democratic Senate nomination—which amounts to re-election in the State—when his nearest rival withdrew from a run-off.

Behind this victory is the story of a man who, although blessed with uncommon luck, has almost always had to do things the hard way. His current campaign is no exception.

The climax of a year's bitter contest was reached in the Democratic primary held July 6 in Oklahoma. Kerr topped his main opponent by over 33,000 votes, but seven other minor candidates rolled up a total of about 40,000. This apparently meant that Kerr would have to go through another hard-fought run-off election July 27 because Oklahoma requires a majority for nomination.

Resemblance Ends

The man he was to face was Roy J. Turner, who, like Kerr, is a former governor and millionaire oil man. Here, however, the the resemblance ends. They are bitter political rivals, and in his race this year Turner had the backing of out-of-state reactionaries, enemies of labor and local GOP leaders.

Oklahoma political experts, noting that Turner campaign expenditures went for "everything" from newspaper and radio-TV advertsing to "a small army of paid workers," estimate that his pre-July 6 primary costs amounted to at least $1 million. This kitty, they say, came in part from Texas oil men, from Republicans, and from the liquor interests.

Then, like a bombshell, Turner last week announced he had withdrawn from the race. He gave as his reason "lack of finances."

Many recalled, however, that the Republican party had sent Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) to "Beat Kerr Rallies" at Tulsa and Oklahoma City during the past campaign. The Illinois Senator promised that the GOP would pour money into Oklahoma for this purpose.

But, after Kerr had rolled up a lead of over 33,000 ballots in the first contest, it was clear that money alone was not enough to defeat him. Once again, the reactionaries had learned that—so long as democracy prevails—American elections are not for sale.

They also learned to what extent the people of Oklahoma are prepared to go to preserve their democratic heritage. When evidence was uncovered of what Democratic Gov. Johnston Murray called "appalling" vote fraud conditions in five counties, martial law was imposed and national guardsmen supervised the polls.

There could be no doubt, under such circumstances, that Kerr's impressive plurality was an honest one, reflecting the high esteem in which he is held throughout the state.

Grass Roots Backing

Kerr's support in his campaign for re-election comes entirely from the "grass roots." Organized labor, farmers and the public for whom Kerr has generally been one of the most outstanding Senate spokesmen are solidly behind him.

They know Kerr as one of the uncompromising liberals who fought steadfastly for the principles of the New and Fair Deals, never dodged facing up to even the most controversial issues, and made his position known unequivocally.

Ever since he was Governor, he's kept a sign on his desk reading: "The buck stops here."

He showed his readiness to fight Oklahoma's battle when he joined his colleague, Sen. Thomas (D. Okla.), in 1950 in introducing legislation to exempt independent gathers and producers of natural gas from regulation by the Federal Power Commission.

Bucked Opposition

The Oklahoma Legislature had asked the State's two Senators to push for this legislation, Kerr recalls, and he fought hard for it even though he ran into strong opposition from organized labor, northern and eastern mayors, and consumer groups who feared its effects on gas prices in their areas.

His record on labor and farm legislation is 100% on the side of the people. He was the only candidate for the Senate this year who took a clear stand against a proposed Oklahoma "right-to-work" law. He has long opposed Taft-Hartley.

Oklahoma is not a highly industrialized state, and Kerr's stand on these issues was clearly one of principle rather than politics. The solidly anti-Kerr press made the most of it in open shop cities like Tulsa and Oklahoma City, and the Senator trailed in Oklahoma and Tulsa Counties by 15,000 and 3200 votes in the primary.

On the other hand, Kerr carried rural boxes by an average of three to one, and in some places his margin was 20 to 1. He sees in this a lesson for rural congressmen who think farmers demand an anti-labor attitude from their representatives in Washington.

Kerr has constantly stressed that there is no conflict of interests between farmers and labor, but that a healthy economy demands prosperity for both.

He is one of the most vigorous critics of Sec. of Agriculture Benson's moves to reduce agricultural price supports, pointing out that Oklahoma farmers stand to lose at least $100 million on basic crops, on top of the $25 million loss they suffered on dairy products this year. Kerr advocates high price supports on all farm products, including cattle.

Public Power Aided

Both as governor and in the Senate, Kerr has worked actively for a program of water conservation, flood control, irrigation and low-cost public power. A major victory in this fight came this year when he secured passage of legislation authorizing construction of Markham Ferry Dam in northeast Oklahoma.

Kerr's first battle on the Senate floor in 1949 secured the setting up of a special fund under the Southwest Power Administration for the operation of generating and transmitting facilities by rural electric cooperatives. Since then, he's been one of the most effective pro-REA senators and this year he again led a successful fight to restore $1.7 million in G&T funds.

The problems of the farmer and the "little man" are intimately known to Kerr, who was born Sept. 11, 1896, in a log cabin near Ada, in Indian Territory, now Oklahoma. He was raised on a farm under rugged frontier conditions.

After attending Oklahoma Baptist University, East Central Teachers College and the University of Oklahoma, he taught school two years and during World War I, he was a second lieutenant in the field artillery and served nine months overseas.

He returned to Ada after the war and started a produce business. A fire wiped out his produce house, and Kerr decided to start over again by studying law in the office of Judge J. F. McKeel. He passed the bar and became McKeel's partner.

Then, a few years later, he entered the business of drilling oil wells, first as a sideline to his practice of law, but finally as his full-time occupation. In 1931 he moved to Oklahoma City to become president of the Kerr-McGee Oil Industries, Inc.

He attracted the attention of Oklahoma Democratic chieftains, and Kerr was made national committeeman in 1940. Two years later, he was elected governor, being the first native of the State to hold that office. He was elected to his present Senate term in 1948.

A Big Man

A big, genial Westerner, standing 6 feet 3 inches and tipping the scales at 230, Kerr is personally one of the most liked members of the Senate. He is especially effective at winning his points before committees and in the behind-the-scenes maneuvers that make up such an important part of the legislative process on Capitol Hill.

He is a ranking member of the powerful Senate Finance and Public Works Committees.

One of the first to condemn the Republican tax bill giving huge concessions to the wealthy in the form of dividend write-offs, Kerr was cosponsor with Sen. George (D. Ga.) of the amendment to substitute higher exemptions for all taxpayers.

His stature in this fight was recognized when he was allotted half of the Democratic Party's time for debate. When the battle was over, the Democrats had knocked out the biggest share of the dividend give-away and came within three votes of getting their higher personal exemption enacted.

Kerr says he intends to renew the fight in the Senate Finance Committee and adds: "With any reinforcements in the Senate, we can still get a fair tax bill through next year."

WINS AGAIN—Oklahoma's amiable Sen. Kerr (D.), left, as he appeared in recent successful primary campaign for renomination to the Senate. Picture at right was taken in Jan. 1949 when Kerr, right, was sworn in as member by the late Sen. Vandenberg (R. Mich.), along with Sens. Frear (D. Del.), Johnson (D. Tex.) and Douglas (D. Ill.), all elected in the Democratic sweep which protested policies of Republican 80th Congress.

'Kernels'

In the best Oklahoma tradition of his friend, the late Will Rogers, famed cowboy humorist, Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) has become noted for observations he calls "Kerr Kernels." Here's a typical example:

"When the Republicans promised both to cut taxes and balance the budget in the campaign of 1952, that was 'statesmanship.' But, when we Democrats seek to cut taxes NOW in Congress, that's 'politics'."

That's All

Campaigning this year has been like a "strip tease" for Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.). First, he left his hat behind at a luncheon of the Farm Bureau in Beaver, Okla., and then, at Pawhuska, where he "poured it on" about cattle in his shirt-sleeves, he forgot all about his coat until he was back in Tulsa.

But, about the election, Kerr served notice: "I don't aim to lose my shirt or any other piece of apparel."

POPULAR CHEF—Whether it's at clambakes in his native State like this one her, or cooking up legislation in Washington, Sen. Kerr has proven he's an adept chef. He got more than 283,500 votes in this month's primary.

Reuther At Columbia—

The Challenge To American Leadership

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther addressed the Summer Session Institute of Columbia University, New York City, last week on "Free Labor's Role In the Struggle for Peace, Freedom and Social Justice." Excerpts follow:

By WALTER P. REUTHER

THE FREE labor movement of the world stands today as one of freedom's greatest bulwarks against Communist tyranny and all forms of totalitarianism.

Free labor has been effective in the struggle for peace and freedom because labor has understood the social dynamics of our changing world and has acted in the knowledge that the struggle for peace and freedom are inseparably tied together with the struggle for social justice.

Labor has understood that the struggle for freedom and tyranny, between democracy and communism, is essentially a struggle for men's minds, their hearts and their loyalties, and that this struggle must be won on the broad field of human betterment.

America i the last, best hope of free men everywhere. Because we are the strongest of the free nations of the world, we must of necessity assume a major portion of the world's responsibility in the defense of our common freedom. We need to provide the free world with economic leadership, political leadership and military leadership. It is of equal importance, however, that we provide comparable moral leadership, for power without morality is power without purpose.

America is capable of that measure of moral leadership necessary to give purpose to our great technical and industrial progress. Standing as a symbol of both morality and power, a nation endowed with spiritual and material strength can give hope and encouragement to free men everywhere. This combination can create an invincible force against which the evil forces of Communist tyranny cannot prevail.

We are living in a period in which the future is both pregnant with war and disaster, and at the same time filled with the promise of peace and abundance. For the first time, science and technology have given us the weapons of self-destruction and also the tools with which to conquer poverty, hunger, disease, ignorance and man's other ancient enemies.

For the first time man is able to master his physical environment and to solve his basic economic and material needs, and is able thus to devote a greater measure of attention to his growth and development as a social and spiritual being.

To provide that measure of leadership equal to the challenge that we face, America must shape its policies and programs in the image of our faith and our hopes, rather than our fears and hatreds.

If we fail, the apostles of fear, hatred and hysteria will take over, and they will fill the moral vacuum with negative values and create a world climate that will make war inevitable.

To assume a position of moral leadership in the world, we must wipe out (in America) the double standards of citizenship and all discrimination. We should stand for civil rights for all citizens, regardless of race, creed or color. Civil rights is more than a matter of high purpose; it is a matter of democratic survival.

We must raise the level of political morality in Washington by first raising the level of political consciousness of the people back home. We cannot successfully preserve the free market place of commodities unless we rededicate ourselves in the struggle to preserve the free market place of ideas.

Westinghouse Locals Move For Strike Votes

THREE locals of the CIO Electrical Workers whose members work for the Westinghouse Electric Corp. have rejected company wage offers and called for a strike vote.

They acted after the firm, which has been in negotiation with the union since April, increased its only wage offer of from 3 to 7c an hour to 3.5 to 7c. At membership meetings, they again demanded "substantial" pay boosts.

The votes were taken by Local 601 at Westinghouse's big East Pittsburgh plant, where the union has about 11,000 members; Local 401, Metuchen, N. J., with 1500 members, and Local 627, Fairmont, W. Va., with 1200 members. The IUE-CIO represents nearly 60,000 Westinghouse workers.

The votes in the locals gave solid backing to the IUE-CIO Westinghouse Conference Board, which had recommended rejection of the pay proposal and urged authorization for the negotiating committee to take any action necessary, including the calling of a strike, to get an acceptable contract.

THE CIO Electrical Workers have won collective bargaining rights for some 43,000 employes in 73 plants of the electrical appliance and other industries in the first half of 1954.

With most of them dues-paying members, IUE-CIO now has a membership of some 425,000.

Biggest gain was at General Electric's Schenectady plant, where IUE-CIO routed the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers in a National Labor Relations Board election a few weeks ago to gain representation for some 20,000 employes. The CIO union's membership in the GE chain is now 100,000.

Ten of the NLRB victories were in GE shops, including Schenectady and more recently the Newark, N. J., lamp and x-ray plant.

IUE-CIO also has some 60,000 members in plants of the Westinghouse chain. The union's latest victory was at the Los Angeles warehouse of the Radio Corp. of America, where it gained bargaining rights for 75 workers without an election.

Stalling On School Bias In Capital Protested

DELAYS in ending school segregation in the nation's capital were protested last week by the Washington chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The NAACP registered its objection to the plan advanced by District School Supt. Hobart M. Corning under which desegregation would not be fully effective until September 1955.

The Corning plan is "mere token response" to the Supreme Court ruling ending school segregation, the NAACP said.

The plan implies contradictions and circumventions of the District School Board's statement of principles, and is a "one-way street," transferring groups of Negro pupils to former white schools, it declared.

RACIAL problems in the school system also broke out in New York City where the Board of Education has asked the Public Education Association to investigate charges of "Jim Crow" practices.

In Mississippi, the drive to maintain the segregated school system has resulted in proposal of a constitutional amendment which would abolish the State's public school system if necessary to preserve separate facilities.

Give A Buck To PAC/ —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

Flanders Forces Showdown On Proposals To Curb McCarthy

THE SENATE this week will face a showdown on what—if anything—it intends to do about the rampaging Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.).

Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.) served notice last week that "my present plan is to move on July 20 that the Rules Committee be discharged from further consideration" of his resolution stripping the junior Senator from Wisconsin of his chairmanships unless he purges himself of "contempt" of the Senate.

"The next move," Flanders added, "will be to ask for a vote of the Senate on that resolution."

McCarthy heads the Senate Government Operations Committee and the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations Flanders' move to oust him from these posts is based on his failure to answer questions about his financial affairs propounded by a Senate subcommittee in 1952.

THE SUBCOMMITTEE report was adopted by the Senate by a 60 to 0 vote. That action, Flanders maintained, means the "contempt applied to the Senate as a whole."

The 73-year-old Vermonter, long a sharp critic of McCarthy's tactics, apparently will have to fight the Senate Republican leadership to get any action on his resolution.

When he concluded his notice-serving speech last week, Majority Leader Knowland (Calif.) promptly announced he would move to table Flanders' motion to get his resolution on the floor.

Flanders said he would counter this action by demanding a roll call vote on the motion to table. This would place every senator present on record one way or another, and would indicate a suspicious desire to duck the issue by unpaired absentees.

Despite this, the GOP Senate Policy Committee voted unanimously to back Knowland.

Meantime, the National CIO sought to round up support for Flanders.

In a letter to CIO international union presidents, CIO regional directors, and state and local CIO councils, Robert Oliver, assistant to Pres. Walter P. Reuther, urged that "full advantage" be taken "of this opportunity to do something about McCarthy."

SEN. FLANDERS

Enclosed was a leaflet prepared by the CIO Legislative Dept., asking for letters and telegrams to senators urging them to be present and vote to support Flanders.

"In addition," Oliver wrote, "efforts should be made to obtain general community support."

In his speech to the Senate, Flanders said he offered his resolution originally "to put an end to the destructive forces in the power and influence" of McCarthy.

"The necessity for doing this has become more and more apparent as the months have gone by," he added, "and it is my expectation to go into this matter in some detail when I make the next motion on this subject."

He explained he did not use the word "contempt" in regard to McCarthy in the legal sense.

"It is personal contempt of the Senator for his peers," he went on. "No statute of limitations runs on this. The purging, like the original display, is a personal matter."

Joe's Support Is Slipping

OHIOANS don't like Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) as much as they once did, according to Sen. Burke (D. O.).

"Since the televised hearings, the anti-McCarthy letters are well in the majority," he said.

Burke said that he thought the long hearings were a "waste of time" but said "the people really got a chance to see how their congressmen behave."

Burke's comments on McCarthy were made during the course of a day of back-home campaigning in Cincinnati where he also told constituents that "what little success the Eisenhower program has met has been because of Democratic support."

Burke is running for the balance of the term of the late Sen. Taft (R. O.). His GOP opponent, Rep. Bender, has ignored his challenge to debate the issues on a statewide television program.

Wiretapping Bill Approved

USE of wiretap evidence in court cases involving kidnapping and national security is authorized in a bill approved by a Senate Judiciary subcommittee.

The vote was along party lines, with three Republicans voting for it and two Democrats opposed. The measure faces rough going in the full committee before it reaches the Senate floor, and one Senator predicted a debate "until Christmas" if Republicans try to push the measure through the Senate.

A similar bill was approved in the House Judiciary Committee, which inserted, over objections of Atty.-Gen. Brownell, a stipulation requiring prior approval of wiretapping by a federal judge.

STUDENTS from CIO unions—more than 7000 of them—are attending labor-sponsored summer training schools throughout the country. Left, Bill Abbott, assistant education director of CIO Rubber Workers, talks to a New Jersey group at Rutgers University, New Brunswick. Center, CIO Assistant Education Dir. Stuart Brock (standing, left) and Education Dir. Joe Glazer (right), of URW-CIO, lead an outdoor class during Alabama school at Lake Junaluska, N. C. At right, husky Minnesota scholars do their best to stay that way between classes at Marcell.

Labor's World—

Honduran Workers Win Banana Strike

AN INCREASE of 22.5% in the minimum daily wage has ended a two-month strike of 23,500 members of the Banana Workers Union of Honduras against the powerful United Fruit Co.

Work was resumed last week after the company had agreed to raise the daily minimum wage from $1.68 to $2.04, granted two-week paid vacations, agreed to pay time and a half for overtime, and to increase medical aid to its employes.

The contract, for one year, came after the CIO and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions had pledged their support to the strikers. and was on the heels of the filing of an anti-trust suit against the company by the U. S. government.

CIO support, buttressed by a gift of $1000, was given by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a cablegram to Sec.-Gen. Raul Edgardo Estrada, of the Honduran union's Central Strike Committee.

Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek cabled Gen. Sec. Luis A. Monge, of the ICFTU's Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), a promise of full ICFTU support, and sent $1000 for the strikers. The walkout in addition had full ORIT backing.

Japan

Members of the Japanese Federation of Textile Workers' Union are on strike at 10 mills of the Ohmi Spinning Co. not for higher wages, but for a little privacy and the right to live their own lives—plus recognition of their union.

The workers, with whose union the company refuses to negotiate, are mostly young girls living in company domitories. They are striking for an end of restrictions on their religion and their right to marry, and to halt the company's practice of inspecting their personal mail and other personal effects.

Satellites

Communist Party congresses in Hungary and Czechoslovakia held recently reveal common economic problems typical of Russian satellite states, according to News From Behind the Iron Curtain, publication of the Free Europe Committee.

In agriculture, it reports, livestock deliveries lag, crop yields remain low, quotas are not met, and the peasants exhibit apathy and resistance. In industry, "irresponsible and incompetent" economic officials were charged with excessive bureaucracy, violation of party orders, rising production costs, and "liberalism," or condoning absenteeism and higher wages.

Israel

The Israeli labor federation, Histadrut, is preparing to mark the sixth anniversary of Israel's independence with celebrations in every city, village and cooperative center.

Founded in 1920—or 28 years before the nation — Histadrut laid the foundations of the Israeli economy and has shaped the country as well as built a labor movement. Many of its early leaders hold major positions in the national government. The federation now represents nearly 90% of all workers, both Jewish and Arab, who with their families represent more than half of Israel's 1.5 million population. —G.N.L.

Three CIOers Gain Fulbright Awards

Three CIO members have been awarded Fulbright fellowships for study abroad next year.

Bertram F. McNamara, of the CIO Steelworkers staff in Milwaukee, Wis., received a senior fellowship—although he has no college degree—for study in England and Wales.

The other fellowships went to two women members of the CIO Washington Newspaper Guild. Jacqueline Brophy, assistant editor of the IUE-CIO News and daughter of John Brophy, veteran CIO leader, will study labor communications in Great Britain.

Jane Bentley, who was on the staff of the defunct Labor Press Associated and formerly was secretary of the Harrisburg, Pa., Guild local, will study the labor press in Norway.

'School Of Hard Knocks' Is Brought Up To Date At CIO Sessions

WORK CLOTHES are being swapped this summer by more than 7000 rank and file members of CIO unions for the cap and gown of the student.

The cap and gown are, of course, figurative—the uniform of the worker-scholar is more likely to be slacks and sport shirt if he's a man, or a cool, airy cotton dress if she's a woman.

But there's nothing figureative about their being students. They are attending summer schools in all parts of the country sponsored by the National CIO, many of its international unions, and a number of CIO state councils.

They are learning to be better informed citizens and union members, in the words of CIO Research and Education Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg.

THEY STUDY parlimentary procedure, public speaking, the preparation of material for leaflets and shop papers, the planning of union education programs and the handling of mimeograph and multilith equipment.

But they also pore over problems of civil rights, political action, and national and state legislation, and they consider at length the relations between the union and the community.

The National CIO summer schools, run in cooperation with state councils, have been held for CIO members in Alabama, Minnesota and New Jersey. Others are on tap for New Windsor, Md., for Maryland and District of Columbia members; Dowingtown, Pa.; Massachusetts, Colorado, Iowa-Nebraska, North Carolina, Missouri and California.

The program of the CIO Steelworkers calls for 24 training sessions at 18 colleges and universities: Cornell, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Colorado, Oregon, Rhode Island, Utah, Washington and Wisconsin.

The CIO Auto Workers have scheduled 21 schools in 11 states, using UAW-owned camps, colleges and other sites besides cooperating with the Michigan CIO Council in running the six-week sessions at the FDR-CIO Center in Port Huron.

Newest thing in the UAW program, featured at the Port Huron camp and used at other UAW schools, is a mock session of Congress where the student body acts as lawmakers.

Committees are set up, bills are introduced, hearings are held, senators debate the issues and finally the bill, such as the George tax bill, Taft-Hartley, or the housing bill, is passed or defeated.

THE FDR Center also offers 21 specialized courses during the six-week program including such subjects as teacher training, radio and television, union programming for retired workers and labor's stake in world affairs.

The CIO Communications Workers and Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers held a school at Penn State. And 70 members of the CIO Clothing Workers are spending their vacations at a union-sponsored institute at Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, N. Y.

"UNION MEMBERS are rapidly becoming one of the best-informed groups in their communities," Ruttenberg observed.

"The school of hard knocks has given them a basic training in political science and economics. Our schools take on from there.

"People who are unemployed, who are only partially employed, or who fear loss of jobs are people who want to know more economics—and they want to learn it fast.

"Our staffs try to give these men and women an understanding of the nature of our economy and what we believe to be the basis for a democratic, full employment-full production society."

International

Canadian students — 125 of them—dominated enrollment at the Michigan CIO leadership training institute at FDR-CIO Labor Center, Port Huron, Mich., during the two-week session that ended last week.

By paying 10c a vote to select a king and a queen each week, students at the camp have raised more than $500 for the education work of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

'Organized Greed' Blamed For New Open Shop Law

BY SIGNING instead of vetoing the open shop bill passed by the Louisiana Legislature, Gov. Kennon (D.) "inflicted a grievous blow on the patriotic working men and women" of the state.

That's the judgment of Rev. Jerome A. Drolet, pastor of St. Charles Church in Lafayette, who hit out at what he called the "organized greed" which motivated passage of the act.

Father Drolet said that were Kennon, who bolted the Democrats in 1952 to support Pres. Eisenhower, "a true southern statesman," he would have "tried to keep Louisiana progressive by vetoing the bill."

Before the bill's passage, the priest had testified against it, calling it "un-American" and "the worst kind of class legislation." He said the "right-to-work" title of the bill was a "dishonest slogan behind which organized greed hides as organized crime hides behind a 'home rule' slogan."

$60 Million In Vacation Pay

TWO-WEEK paid vacations for the 400,000 members of the CIO Clothing Workers, which began with the men's clothing industry, will net the union members an estimated $60 million in vacation pay, ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky said.

The ACWA members whose vacations started July 5 got an extra day's pay, since July 4 is a paid holiday under Amalgamated contracts. Other segments of the industry will schedule vacations at various times in the summer months.

MERITS of union made pen and pencil set are expounded to Rep. Ribicoff (left), Democratic candidate for Governor, by Intl. Rep. Ed Collins of CIO Rubber Workers during presentation at Connecticut Democratic convention. Collins was a delegate.

CIO COUNCILS In Action

SPURRED rather than discouraged by the defeat in the House of a Democratic proposal to set up adequate federal standards for unemployment compensation, CIO councils are continuing to press for action to relieve the increasing number of jobless.

Another Democratic attempt to enact the standards was defeated in the Senate. While councils sought congressional action, they also were demanding action on better state laws.

2 Languages

The Community Services Committee of the New York City CIO Council is issuing its newsletter in Spanish as well as English to reach the large number of Spanish-speaking union members in the metropolis. The newsletter has two parallel columns, one in English and the other in Spanish.

- The Ohio CIO Council encountered stiff business opposition to its initiative petition drive to improve the State unemployment compensation law. The Council exposed the tactics used by the Ohio Chamber of Commerce and the Ohio Trucking Association.

The association advised its members to "suggest to their county boards of elections that all petitions and signatures be thoroughly scrutinized to see that the law, which is quite strict, has been fully complied with."

- Similar efforts by business to resist an improvement in the State unemployment compensation law were met by the Washington State CIO Council which also is circulating an initiative petition to improve the jobless act.

One business group asked what's the use of changing the law? The organization pointed out there are sufficient funds to pay increased benefits—$51 million has been refunded to employers from the unemployment compensation fund!

The indifference of the Republicans on the national and the state levels has helped spur CIO councils to step up political action. Increasing emphasis has been placed on the participation of CIO women members and the wives of CIO members in PAC.

- The Atlanta CIO Council is planning a family participation conference to be held July 27-28 in cooperation with National CIO-PAC. Council Sec.-Treas. Helen M. Hain, conference coordinator, pointed out that "there are 25,000 more eligible women voters than men in the City of Atlanta."

- Two such conferences have been held under the auspices of the Indiana CIO Council—one on July 10 at Webster Lake and another July 17 at Turkey Run State Park. And still another conference will be held for CIO families in the southern part of the State in September at Spring Mills State Park.

- Leadership of CIO locals in Iowa was taken to task recently by housewives and women union members at the first Iowa CIO Women's Political Conference, held at Iowa City. They said:

"We can be of great assistance to our local unions in community relations, political action, and in other ways if the unions would only ask us and help us to understand what they are trying to do."

- The California CIO Council demonstrated that political action pays off. "With the nomination—and in some cases, election—of 95% of the candidates endorsed by the California CIO Political Action Committee, the voters have given the nod of approval to the liberal-labor legislative program of full employment, security and world peace," said Council Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol.

- Carl A. McPeak, CIO assistant director of councils, announced that the Niagara County (N. Y.) and the Berrien-Cass-Van Buren (Mich.) Counties CIO Councils were chartered recently.

- The Knoxville Area CIO Council is conducting an eight-week counsellors' training course with the aid of the United Fund and the Council of Community Services of the Tennessee city.

Skeptical CIO Backs Brownell On New Bills To Aid Wetbacks

THE CIO last week backed two Administration requests for new laws to deal with the growing problems of illegal "wetback" labor, but declared it "will remain skeptical till we see them passed and effectively administered."

Testifying before the Senate Immigration subcommittee, Nicholas Dragon, CIO regional representative in Arizona and New Mexico, said that need for federal legislation to accomplish the stated objectives of two measures recently requested by Atty.-Gen. Brownell is "unmistakable."

WHILE GIVING unqualified support to a bill authorizing seizure of all vehicles used to transport "wetbacks," Dragon expressed doubt as to the effectiveness of the other bill. That would give the Justice Dept. power to obtain an injunction against employers who "knowingly" hire illegal Mexican labor.

"This is in spite of our thorough concurrence in its objectives," Dragon said. "Our misgivings are based upon the absence of any penalties in the measure against employers of illegal aliens."

Dragon said it is doubtful that the mere seeking of an injunction is likely to halt the practice. He recommended that provisions for penalties be added.

THE CIO also protested the Attorney-General's statement that once an injunction were obtained, aliens would have no right to demand and receive wages due them for services to the offending employer.

"There are possibilities in this of additional hardship on the poverty-stricken hordes of Mexican workers struggling for better wages than they obtain in their native land—possibilities that will cause some foreboding," Dragon said.

He emphasized that the mere passage of legislation is not enough, and that effective administration also was necessary after adoption. Labor's experience in seeking such enforcement of laws already on the books "has not been a happy one," he added.

"The Dept. of Labor, entrusted with the administration of these laws and subject to the pressures of the big growers (who are substantial contributors to political campaigns)," he said, "has been found by the labor movement to be vacillating in administering them, to say the least."

Dragon emphasized that the "wetback" problem was due to depressed economic conditions throughout most of Latin America and urged a program to help raise living standards through technical assistance, financial aid and other means.

"The real answer to the wetback and all similar problems," he said, "lies in intelligent aid to our neighbor nations to the south."

PAC Unit Formed In California

The CIO Legislative Committee for Northeastern California has been formed to coordinate efforts to elect to office candidates "who will represent all the people."

Temporary officers are Don Acker, CIO Woodworkers, Susanville, chairman, and Bob Crimmins, IWA-CIO, secretary.

Vandercook Says

GM Huffs And Puffs, Patches Up Beef With Wall St. Journal

By JOHN W. VANDERCOOK

(CIO-sponsored commentator on a recent ABC broadcast)

IT WILL, I am sure, come as a great relief to all of us to learn that one war—albeit the littlest war, the silliest war—may be coming to an end.

The sharp and bitter quarrel between the financial newspaper the Wall Street Journal and General Motors Corp. may be in sight of a peace settlement.

The Wall Street Journal about six weeks ago published an article, accompanied by some rather sketchy sketches, giving some information about the shape of General Motors' cars to come, about 1955 models.

Well, sir, General Motors was fit to be tied. In automotive circles, the secret of whether next year's automobiles are to be shaped like a loaf of home-made bread or a dill pickle, or whether they're going to have headlights both fore and aft so traffic cops won't know which way they're going, is supposed to be guarded more closely than the secret of the H-bomb.

IN A FIERCE FIT of petulance, the giant GM corporation cancelled some $250,000 worth of advertising a year it had been placing in the Wall Street Journal. General Motors officials were given orders not to speak to Journal reporters. Free publicity handouts were no longer to be sent to the sinning paper.

What seems really to have hurt GM most was the horrid thought that somehow, perhaps, some vice presidential viper right at its own bosom may have spilled the beans. And if you can't trust a Corporation Executive not to reveal to some reporter what the butt end of next year's Chevrolet is going to look like, then what, in this tottering world, CAN you trust?

There were terrifying rumors that General Motors' security system had broken down! Since then, there has been a good deal of heavy breathing.

NOW IT is announced, with a solemnity fitting the occasion, that the two commanding officers on both sides have exchanged communiques. GM has been kicked sharply in the shins for having used the power of its advertising money to threaten the freedom of the press, and little things like that.

The giant corporation, in just six weeks, has become conscious of that criticism. Dimly realizing that what was bad for almost anybody might also be bad for General Motors, GM's president, Harlow Curtice, has now written a stately letter to the president of the Wall Street Journal.

"It was never," he says, "our intention to interfere in any way with your publication of news or your editorial policies, and," declared Curtice, "I am surprised that anyone would seriously think otherwise."

One can sympathize with GM's surprise. Just cancelling a lousy quarter of a million bucks worth of advertising! Who'd ever think that was interfering?

The Wall Street Journal's president replied he is pleased "we have reached an understanding on the differences that existed."

But there's not a word about those missing ads.

CONTRACT RENEWED.—Contract continuing John W. Vandercook's daily radio newscasts under CIO sponsorship was signed for a second year at New York. From left, seated: ABC Vice Pres. Charles T. Ayres, Henry Fleisher, CIO Publicity Dept. director, and Vandercook; standing: ABC Vice Pres. Thomas Velotta and Robert Maurer of Henry J. Kaufman and Associates advertising agency.

Ike's Health Bill Killed In House; Kennedy Urges Old Age Boost

ADDITIONAL support for improvements in social security benefits, similar to suggestions made by CIO, came last week from Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.) in testimony before the Senate Finance Committee.

Kennedy asked for disability benefits, increased retirement benefits, an increase in the amount of outside earnings allowed a retired worker, an increase of .5% in benefits for each year of contributions plus a delayed retirement credit of 2% a year.

The Senate Finance Committee, in a week of closed-door sessions, voted to knock out of the House-approved social security bill sections to provide compulsory coverage for farm operators and self-employed professionals except doctors.

The action was a set-back to the Administration, which had sponsored compulsory coverage for the groups.

KENNEDY SAID his proposals were necessary to "more fully meet the retirement needs" of America's older and disabled citizens. He pointed to the fact that "since 1900 the total population of this country has doubled, but the population of older citizens has quadrupled."

Stressing the importance of maintaining the living standards and purchasing power of older citizens, he said "it is my hope that this committee and Congress will meet what has been called 'the essential test of a civilized society' by making adequate provision for the decent and dignified retirement of our aged and disabled citizens."

In other testimony filed with the committee, Research Dir. Solomon Barkin of the CIO Textile Workers called for "immediate action" to assist "tens of thousands of older textile workers who are losing their jobs through mill liquidations or discriminatory lay-offs designed to rid non-union mills of their older employes."

SEN. KENNEDY

BARKIN said many of these people have lost their jobs in areas of chronic and growing unemployment where alternative jobs, even for younger persons, are scarce.

"Few textile companies provide private pensions for the aged persons who have lost their jobs," he emphasized, "so that they must fall back exclusively upon their own resources and the federal old age and survivors' benefit program for their support."

ANOTHER plank in Pres. Eisenhower's "dynamic, forward-looking program" got tossed overboard by Congress last week as the House killed the Administration's health reinsurance plan.

The vote was 238 to 134.

Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.) criticized the proposal as an attempt to "bail out a lot of insurance companies."

The central feature of the bill, which had been opposed by the CIO as "totally inadequate," was the proposed creation of a $25 million federal fund on which insurance companies could draw to offset abnormal losses.

At his press conference last week, the President protested that House members who voted against the reinsurance plan "just don't understand the facts of life." He backed up his statement by asking Congress for a supplemental appropriation of $25 million for re-insurance.

THE REINSURANCE plan was the heart of Eisenhower's health program, which also included increased hospital construction and rehabilitation training program funds. The vote to recommit the measure to committee means that it is dead for this session, according to Republican leaders.

The importance put on the reinsurance system by the President was reemphasized just recently when he introduced Health, Education, Welfare Sec. Hobby on a national broadcast to speak for the program.

It was the third serious reversal the Administration suffered on its legislative programs this session. The other two, both in the Senate, were defeat of Taft-Hartley changes and the teen-age vote amendment.

Supporters of the measure conceded that it probably would not cut costs of hospital and medical insurance materially, or even make it available to many who cannot now afford it. Minority Leader Rayburn (D. Tex.) called it a "blundering, stupid way to start" a health program.

Soldier's Vote Law Is Widened

A House Administration subcommittee has voted to broaden the war-time soldier vote law to cover peacetime elections as well.

The law requires states to accept absentee ballots of servicemen in elections for president, vice president and congress without registration or payment of poll tax, provided they are otherwise eligible. In an advisory provision, the bill recommends including servicemen's wives and civilians serving overseas with the armed forces.

Handicapped Bill Approved

An expanded vocational rehabilitation program has passed the House by a vote of 347 to 0 and now is in a Senate-House conference committee to iron out differences with a similar measure earlier approved by the Senate.

The House bill sets up a new formula, increasing the federal government's share in the program from the present 50% to 60% for basic grants. The government would pay 75% of the cost in the proposed two-year expansion.

COUNCIL AIDS HOSPITAL—On behalf of the Clearfield-Center County, Pa., CIO Council, Ronnie Coon, 10, presents check for $2287 to Paul E. Loubris, Clearfield Hospital administrator, to pay for equipment to treat polio victims.

CIOers On TV To Report On Scandinavia

FOUR CIO members just back from an official union visit to Scandinavia will tell about their experiences on the CBS-TV Morning Show on Wednesday, July 28.

The show runs from 7:00 A.M. to 9:00 A.M. in the eastern and central time zones.

The four are part of a group who visited Denmark and Sweden for study and meetings with union and cooperative officials, under a plan worked out by the CIO Dept. of Education and the Danish unions.

Appearing on the show are Magne Repaal of the Rubber Workers, Eau Claire, Wis.; Annette Fabrizio of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Newark, N. J.; Betty Skiring, a UAW aircraft worker from Los Angeles; and Reginald Gisborne, a Steel worker from Hamilton, Ont., Can.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

MRS. M. R. E., of Bremerton, Wash., voices a complaint other car owners have expressed recently; some of the lower-cost auto insurance companies seem to tend to cancel after one or two small claims.

Auto Insurance Firms Get Tough

She had carried insurance for 10 years with one company listed as one of the lowest-cost. During that period "the insurance never cost the company a dime." Then recently her car slipped its emergency brake, backed out of the garage, crossed the alley, stopping against a neighbor's garage. The cost of the accident was $75, which the company paid after cancelling Mrs. E.'s policy.

The same difficulty has been reported with several other of the low-cost companies, including some mutual companies and farm-sponsored insurance companies.

One car owner reports his insurance was cancelled after two claims. The first was for a damage which was dubious because there were indications it might have been caused by ordinary wear and tear. But the company paid it. The second was for damage to the car from vandalism (the car was habitually parked in the street). Then the company cancelled.

YOU CANNOT BLAME Mrs. E. and other car owners for being angry. They paid in for years without a claim. Also the insurance companies acted in a somewhat high-handed manner, cancelling with little time to shop for new insurance, refusing to answer letters, and giving no real explanation of the problems involved even though the companies are more to blame for this situation than the car owners.

The real root of the trouble is that auto insurance is much too expensive, more expensive than it need be or should be.

Mrs. E. says that during the previous 10 years her insurance never cost the company a dime. But the money is not there. Part went to pay other drivers' claims, but much went to the excessively high selling and administration costs of auto insurance companies in general.

Most auto insurors use 30 to 50% of the premiums for sales, administrative expenses and profit. Thus, you really only get 50c to 70c worth of genuine insurance for your premium dollar.

Except for the notorious accident and health insurance industry, no other insurance industry takes so much of your premium for sales and operating expenses. Both fire and life insurance operate at less cost.

Just to show how cheap auto insurance could be if the companies got to work on the real problems, in Saskatchewan, Can., where the provincial government sells auto insurance, you can get $120,000 of public liability insurance plus $50-deductible collision insurance on your own car at a total cost of $25 a year.

The auto insurors here have been able to get away with expensive operating methods because auto insurance is almost a must commodity. Only recently have the companies gotten worried about their own high-cost operation since one company, Sears Roebuck's Allstate, has introduced a low-cost method and is running away with the business.

The public has to make known its resentment of high rates and abrupt manners to the companies, so they will be compelled to find methods of reducing their costs, possibly through group selling, just as life and health insurance is sold on a group basis through union locals and employers, with savings of up to 40%.

NEXT WEEK: More tips on buying auto insurance and a list of low cost insurance companies.

(Copyright 1954, by Sidney Margolius)

Middlemen Keep The Cake As Farm Income Drops

BOTH CONSUMERS and farmers are still getting the worst of the price situation, new figures show.

Farmers are getting about 17% less for their products than they did during the Korean war period. But consumers still pay about the same prices for food at the store. Food prices are nearly 1% higher than a year ago.

Reason: Middlemen's costs between the farmer and the consumer have completely absorbed the farmers' losses.

Back in 1945, the farmers got 54c out of every dollar the consumer spent at retail stores for groceries. The middlemen got 46c. Today, the farmers get only 44c out of the consumers' food dollar and the middlemen get 56c.

Some members of Congress would like to have a full-scale investigation of "price spreads."

Processors blame increased costs of processing and marketing food on transportation and labor costs. Federal Trade Commission reports, however, show that food industry profits have been gaining year after year whether farmers were taking losses or not. They were up $80 million in 1953, when farm income dropped nearly $1 billion.

Last year the FTC started its own study of the subject. Congress promptly attached a rider to the FTC appropriation bill forbidding use of any of the money to study price spreads.

(PAI)

CIO on ABC
Monday thru Friday
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

(While Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe is recovering from an illness, his column is being prepared by the Dept. of Organization.)

THE UNITED STEELWORKERS of America-CIO fought off a determined bid by the Spencer Wire Corp., Inc., Union, N. J., to break their union. The Steelworkers whipped an "independent" union in a representation election by a better than four-to-one vote. USA-CIO came up with two other victories; one at Champion Dishwasher Machine Co., Erie, Pa., and the other at Buffalo Tank Corp., Raleigh, N. C.

After its resounding victory over the Communist-dominated UE at the General Electric plant, Schenectady, N. Y., IUE-CIO continued its mopping up operations in four other divisions of GE. UE was driven out of Unit A, Newark Lamp Workers; Unit B, Seaboard Lamp Dept.; Unit C, Newark Service Dist., Warehouse Lamp Dept.; and Unit D, also in the Newark Service Dist., Truck Drivers-Lamp Dept. IUE-CIO was also selected as bargaining representative by the workers of the Shampaine Co., New Rochelle, N. Y.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports CIO victories at Federal Business Products, Inc., New York, N. Y., where the CIO Lithographers were chosen collective bargaining representatives by the workers. UAW-CIO won out at Frank Roth Co., New York, N. Y., and the CIO Shipbuilders were victorious at Base Electric and Repair Corp., Brooklyn, N. Y.

CIO Woodworkers report a great victory following their win at Ocala Lumber Sales Co., in Ocala, Fla. The Ocala election involved 176 workers. Their latest report covers a representation election at the Southern Lumber Co., Warren, Ark., where 385 workers were eligible. IWA-CIO won out over the AFL Carpenters by a vote of 204-138.

From CIO Chemical Workers' Hugh Brown, organizing director of Reg. II, we learn of a victory at the John Housely Cigar Co., Knoxville, Tenn.

CIO Oilworkers' Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick sends word of an election at Sinclair Oil Co., Salt Lake City, Utah, a victory for OWIU-CIO at the Bulk Station Terminal.

And good news comes from Brother Walter Harris, director of the United Shoe Workers Pennsylvania Organizing Committee, who advises of a victory at the Mosser plant in Harrisburg. The Shoe Workers face one of the most difficult organizing problems in the nation, and each victory may be counted a mile of progress.

Improving

The many friends of Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe will be glad to know that he is making rapid recovery from his recent illness. It is expected that Brother Riffe will leave the hospital this week, and will return to his office after a period of convalescence at home.

Employers Agree To Meet In Coast Lumber Walkout

REPRESENTATIVES of employer associations in the Pacific Northwest lumber industry, who had refused to meet with union spokesmen since 100,000 members of the CIO Woodworkers and AFL Lumber & Sawmill Workers walked out June 21, changed their minds last week.

IAW-CIO officers were still negotiating with them late in the week, but a tip-off on what was to be expected was provided by an earlier session with the LSW-AFL. They merely offered the AFL negotiators a letter refusing to meet with them again until the union was prepared to re-sign the old agreement without change.

The walkout was voted by members of the two unions after the employers had flatly rejected their demand for a 12.5c an hour wage increase and refused to make any pay offer whatsoever.

The employers' action prompted the two unions to sign the first joint action and mutual assistance pact in their history.

Meantime, IWA-CIO officials were awaiting the outcome of injuries received by Charles Marrin, Bend, Ore., who was run down by an automobile driven by an employer, before swearing out a warrant for the arrest of his assailant.

Marrin, newly elected president of Local 6-7, was gathered with other strikers in a road leading to an entrance at the Ponderosa Sales Co., Bend., when Phil Dahl, head of another company, turned the corner, accelerated his car and bore down on the group. All were able to scramble to safety except Marrin.

Ore Boats Pact Signed

THE CIO Steelworkers signed a two-year agreement with Inland Steel Co., extending terms of the basic steel contracts to crewmen on company ore boats.

Inland, usually first of the steel companies to reach an ore boat settlement, agreed to the 12c package negotiated by USA-CIO which included a 5c hourly pay hike and improvements in pensions and health insurance worth an average 7c an hour.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

New NLRB Rulings Exclude Thousands In Small Plants

THOUSANDS of workers in small and medium-sized businesses will no longer enjoy federal protection of their right to organize under a new National Labor Relations Board policy amending Taft-Hartley by administrative decree.

In two announcements of policy in the last fortnight, the NLRB exempted labor relations of thousands of concerns from federal control by narrowing its own jurisdiction and putting these employes in a "no man's land" so far their relationships with employers are concerned.

The exclusion means that workers may not obtain federal elections to determine their bargaining rights and that they may no longer file unfair labor practice charges against employers. This leaves vast numbers of workers at the mercy of state laws which are, almost without exception, more harshly restrictive of their rights than Taft-Hartley.

TECHNICALLY, the NLRB policy decrees take the form of setting up new standards for determining whether it will take jurisdiction in a case.

The first upped various financial requirements for determining whether or not a firm is engaged in interstate commerce. The more recent one spelled out standards which will exclude concerns in a variety of industries, chief among which are defense industries, newspapers, radio and television stations, retail stores and utility and transit companies.

The changes take effect immediately, and apply to cases pending before the Board as well as to future cases.

Chairman Guy Farmer, an Eisenhower appointee to the now Republican-dominated NLRB, said the decision is part of his expressed determination to bring about "a gradual but nevertheless marked withdrawal of the hand of the NLRB from strictly local disputes."

CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg called it "an inexcusable evasion of the Board's clear responsibility under the statute."

The financial standards defining the Board's jurisdiction over a firm in interstate commerce have generally been doubled. In addition, financial requirements have been set up in some instances where none existed before.

Thus, a company must ship interstate at least $50,000 instead of $25,000. A supplier firm must now do $100,000 worth of business with interstate companies instead of the former $50,000. And "intra-state trucking companies which are 'links in interstate commerce,'" must do "at least $100,000 worth of business with other interstate firms," where no dollar criterion existed before.

SPECIFIC industry standards suffered a similar fate. Goldberg pointed particularly to radio and television stations which now must gross $200,000 to meet NLRB standards instead of former automatic inclusion. "Here is an industry," he said, "every part of which is under government licensing and control except, as of now, its labor relations."

In the case of retail stores, one financial requirement, dealing with sales outside the state, has been quadrupled. It is now $100,000 instead of $25,000.

13,000 Gain In New Bell Wage Pacts

A NUMBER of new contracts between the CIO Communications Workers in Bell System and independent phone companies have been settled with wage increases ranging from 3.5c to 7c per hour for some 13,000 workers.

In New Jersey Bell, the raise ranged from $1 to $1.50 a week and averaged 3.5c an hour for 10,000 operators and traffic clerical employes.

Other contract improvements included some job reclassification, cuts in progression schedules and boosted differentials for Christmas and New Year's eves.

TWO WESTERN Electric contracts, at Queensboro, N. Y., and Duluth, Minn., resulted in settlements of from 4c to 7c an hour.

At Queensboro, where CWA members had been working without a contract since Apr. 23, piece rate workers got boosts of 4c-6c and day rate workers won 5c-7c. At Duluth, both groups got pay hikes of 5c-7c per hour.

The number of new CWA-Bell System agreements is now up to 11. They cover 62,000 workers and account for about 20% of CWA's 1954 bargaining with the telephone company. Negotiations are currently in progress for another 70,000 workers.

Grievance Review Is Won As Atomic Walkout Ends

ASSURANCES that all grievances would be heard by the Atomic Energy Commission and that the whole problem of labor relations at AEC plants would be re-studied brought an end to the nation's first strike of atomic energy production workers.

Some 4500 members of the CIO Chemical Workers voted to go back to work at AEC facilities operated by Carbide and Carbon Chemicals Co. at Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Paducah, Ky., after Labor Sec. Mitchell and top CIO and UGCCW officials had worked out an acceptable peace plan.

The proposal calls for a government review of health, housing and community problems of all the nation's atomic workers. Presidential Press Sec. Hagerty said Pres. Eisenhower was "gratified that the CIO members returned voluntarily to work."

Since the strike's end, a presidential fact-finding board, appointed under terms of Taft-Hartley prodecure in "national emergency" strikes, formally reported that a prolonged strike in atomic plants would create a "state of crisis" affecting the country's health and safety. Such action paved the way for an 80-day T-H injunction should the strike be resumed.

ORIGINALLY, the strike broke out after UGCCW-CIO members rejected a 6c hourly wage increase recommended by the Atomic Energy Labor Relations panel headed by Cyrus Ching. AFL Atomic Trades and Labor Council members at Oak Ridge also voted to reject the offer, but did not strike.

The UGCCW's executive board gave CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther a vote of thanks in a special resolution commending his role in mediation of the dispute.

Meanwhile, a second major stoppage occurred at Oak Ridge as a wildcat walkout of AFL construction workers idled 8000 employed on the highly secret Y-12 and K-33 construction projects. AFL leaders said the strike was "unauthorized."

PAYDAY came despite strike of CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers that had closed Oak Ridge, Tenn., atomic energy plant. Pay Clerk C. E. Williams hands checks to (left to right) John Hitch, J. A. Cawthorn, C. T. Stour and J. H. Loveless, as Company Guards S. E. Murphy and A. D. Tucker look on.

Dixie Lawmaker Battles TWUA Drive

By ED LASHMAN

WHEN A congressman owns a southern textile mill, the people who work there have a tougher time organizing a union than even the normally rough opposition they face in most places in the South.

That's the conclusion the employes of Chatham Manufacturing Co. in Elkin, N. C., have drawn from the anti-union pressure, coercion and intimidation they've faced at the blanket factory owned by Rep. Chatham (D. N. C.).

Seven of Chatham's mill workers came up to Washington last week to tell their story to the Congressman, but he refused to see them, contending that he does not actively participate in operation of the mill.

Get CIO Backing

At a press conference in CIO headquarters, the workers told their story and received assurances of full CIO support from Victor G. Reuther, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, and R. J. Thomas, acting executive vice president and director of organization.

TWUA has some 20 to 30 affidavits, borne out by the personal testimony of the seven employes, as to the active anti-union campaign being waged by Chatham's two sons, Hugh and Richard.

The workers have been subjected to pressure from four ministers, Chatham's two sons, plant foremen, a town banker and the Elkin chief of police. They have been refused any meeting place in three counties including the YMCA, to the support of which they contribute, while Chatham's sons have called them into the Y for anti-union speeches.

The campaign started spontaneously when a number of workers wrote TWUA-CIO Southern Organizing Dir. Boyd Payton of their desire to form a union because of work-load increases and lay-offs of older employes without regard to seniority.

At its inception, Payton talked to Chatham, a self-styled liberal with "friendships" with many union leaders, and asked assurances that the workers' right to organize would not be interfered with.

"You should know me well enough," Chatham responded, "to know I would not permit any unfair practices in my mill."

Since that time and up through last week, when TWUA filed unfair labor practice charges with the Labor Board, workers have lost their annual $100 average vacation-time bonus, company officials have threatened them and asked them to spy on the union, and they have been threatened with loss of pension rights.

Ministers—one of whom just got a $5000 contribution from the Chatham family—have made home visits and preached anti-union sermons in churches, state and local police and deputy sheriffs have put them under surveillance, and at least one worker had the town banker visit in his home and threaten foreclosure of his mortgage.

All of the employes who came to Washington, whose seniority in the plant ranges from 10 to 16 years, were warned they would be fired if they made the trip.

One of them, Edward Wagoner, got his first two warnings from the company in the 15 years he's worked for Chatham for alleged offenses he had committed.

Another worker, Clyde Gentry with 16 years, had been called into the office eight times in recent weeks, once for two and a half hours. Hugh Chatham warned him his father's pension could be revoked if he persisted in helping organize a union in the plant.

Meetings Blocked

Meeting places have been denied the workers in three counties, and even one meeting which was scheduled for a school building in an adjoining county was cancelled as the result of company pressure.

William Baldwin, who was injured on the job three weeks ago and doesn't know if he'll have his job back when he gets well, said he'd probably lose it, "but there's no other way of being free."

ANTI-UNION—That's the tag put on Rep. Chatham (D. N. C.) by employes trying to organize a union at blanket factory he owns. Edward Wagoner (at left) holds up two warnings, first in 15 years, he got after telling foreman he was "for" union. At right, seven Chatham employes, with organizer Paul Swaity (seated, left) and CIO Textile Workers Vice Pres. Boyd Payton, hear of CIO support pledged by R. J. Thomas, acting CIO executive vice president.

How Active Is Active?

Thurmond Chatham, the North Carolina congressman whose sons are running an anti-union campaign at the family blanket factory, refused to see a delegation of his workers because he "takes no active part in operating the mill."

That's the letter he wrote CIO Textile Workers Southern Organizing Dir. Boyd Payton.

But William Baldwin, one of the Chatham employes who came to Washington, refuted that statement at a press conference when he told of Chatham personally talking against the union to workers on the mill floor.

Rail Union, TWU Agree On Amalgamation Plans

PLANS for an amalgamation of the CIO Transport Workers and the CIO Railroad Workers were announced last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

The enlarged union—headed by Michael J. Quill, also a CIO vice president—will have about 150,000 members.

Reuther said the proposed amalgamation "has the full support of the National CIO."

The details were worked out at a series of meetings between TWU Sec.-Treas. Gustav Faber, John O'Connell, TWU international administrative assistant, and URRWA Chairman Richard Leonard.

TWU officers already had authorization, voted by the last convention, to unite with other CIO unions in the transportation field.

APPROVAL was voted by the URRWA executive board at a meeting in Washington last week, and the proposal will go the membership for a referendum vote within the next few weeks. If it is ratified, the TWU will issue charters to URRWA locals, and they will constitute a division of the union.

The TWU has about 110,000 members employed principally on rapid transit, trolley and bus lines in New York, Philadelphia and other metropolitan centers. In addition, it has substantial membership among airline employes.

The URRWA, which had been in existence since the end of World War II, has about 40,000 members in some 60 locals. Many are non-operating employes under union shop agreements with the Pennsylvania Railroad.

"It is my sincere belief," Reuther said, "that through this voluntary amalgamation a stronger and more effective trade union organization representing workers in the transportation field will be established; and through this unified organization, benefits will flow to the workers directly involved and to the general public through improved contracts, working conditions and more stable labor-management relations.

"The amalgamated organization will be in a better position to provide greater service and greater effectiveness at the collective bargaining table for all the workers involved and to carry on the work of organizing the unorganized."

Faber, O'Connell and Leonard, in a joint statement, expressed gratification that they were able to work out amalgamation plans.

"This amalgamation has been a 'natural' for some time," they said. "It offers obvious advantages to the workers of both organizations. It will increase our collective strength. It will provide a stronger voice for transportation workers everywhere.

"We look forward to speedy ratification of the amalgamation proposal by the members of the United Railroad Workers."

Tin Smelter Bill Is Voted

CONGRESS completed action last week on a resolution calling for continued operation of the government-owned tin smelter at Texas City, Tex., until June 30, 1955, pending a congressional study of its permanent use.

Continued operation of the smelter, which is staffed by some 800 members of the CIO Oil Workers, was urged by the CIO on the grounds of national security and economic help for a friendly democratic nation.

Inquiry Sought On Hate Sheets

A report on hate propaganda being distributed through the mails by right wing groups was sought from Postmaster General Summerfield by Rep. Javits (R. N. Y.).

Javits told the House he asked for information on 10 specific publications, "one of them from Sweden of all places," which attacked Jews, Protestants, Catholics and religion generally.

'Mohawk Valley Formula' Used By Kohler, Charge

THE KOHLER CO. is trying to use the discredited "Mohawk Valley Formula" to break the three-month strike of 3600 CIO Auto Workers at Kohler Village near Sheboygan, Wis.

That charge was made by the UAW-CIO after the company broke off negotiations.

Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the UAW had participated in the talks in an effort to bring the new contract up to the standard of other agreements in the bathroom fixture industry.

Harvey Kitzman, director of UAW-CIO Reg. 10, charged that the firm hired men to commit acts of vandalism against non-strikers and then blamed the strikers as an excuse for ending the bargaining.

Union officials said they believed that the company was using the strikebreaking plan developed in 1936 by James Rand, Jr., head of Remington-Rand, Inc., and known as the "Mohawk Valley Formula."

The National Labor Relations Board has described the policy as "industrial warfare."

UAW-CIO leaders said that Lyman C. Conger, Kohler's industrial relations director, was using methods similar to those of the formula.

They said he has labeled union leaders as "agitators" and called for the establishment of "law and order" when there was no disorder.

Conger also was accused of seeking to have the Sheboygan County sheriff form a large armed police force in an effort to create incidents which could be blamed on the strikers.

It also was pointed out that he tried to organize a "back-to-work" movement, encouraged a puppet association organized by the company and repeatedly said that "the plant is in full operation."

As evidence of the union's sincerity in making the charges, Mazey announced that the UAW-CIO offered a $1000 reward for information leading to the apprehension and conviction of person or persons responsible for the shotgun blast fired at the home of Harold Curtiss, a strikebreaker.

The Border War
See Pages 6 and 7

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., July 26, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 30

Muscle . . . And Money Brawn backstopped dollars when CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald (right) helped break ground for new wing at Roselia Foundling and Maternity Hospital, Pittsburgh, after presenting $150,000 from Philip Murray Memorial Foundation. CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg also digs, and Mrs. Andrew Sherman shovels. Admiring (left to right) are George W. Eby, C. R. Wilson and Norman Mervis, of Variety Club, and Mother M. Claudia. (See story and more pictures on Page 2.)

Public Housing Gutted Again By GOP Vote

—See Page 3

GOP Tax Bonanza To Big Boys Rapped

—See Page 3

GE Runaway Shop Drive Is Charged

—See Page 11

CIO Joins In Appeal For U. S. Grants Now To Schools

—See Page 3

The Old Heave-Ho Like a scene from "The Grapes of Wrath," this is the ramshackle camp on the U. S.-Mexican border where thousands of "wetback" migratory workers were dumped recently after roundup by U. S. border patrolmen. At Mexicali, border town opposite California's rich Imperial Valley, thousands of workers were pushed across frontier during the two-week roundup. Some 80 deportees died and 500 were treated for sunstroke. But for all the headlines, the roundup was something of a phony. Big growers were warned well in advance. Once the U. S. immigration agents left, the illegal farm workers began moving back across the border. (Picture story on Pages 6-7.)

Presentation By McDonald—

Children's Home Aided By Murray Fund

GIFT OF $150,000 for Roselia Foundling and Maternity Hospital, Pittsburgh, from Philip Murray Memorial Foundation was presented by David J. McDonald (left), Steelworkers' president, who also spoke at ground breaking for new wing. In center, CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg gives scroll to Mother M. Claudia, head of Roselia trustees, as McDonald and George W. Eby, of Variety Club, look on. Spectators at presentation included (right photo, left to right) Sister Matthias, Founder-Sister Marie Fidelis, Sister James Regis and Mother Claudia.

HIGH ON A HILL overlooking the winding Monongahela River and downtown Pittsburgh, the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation last week tendered financial aid to a charity close to the heart of the late president of the CIO and the CIO Steelworkers.

It gave $150,000 to the Roselia Foundling and Maternity Hospital to help build a new wing which, when completed, will be the first home of the youngest of the unfortunates, a place where they may be helped through the first few months of life by self-sacrificing Sisters of Charity.

Philip Murray kept a kindly eye on Roselia during the long years he fought for a better life for everybody. David J. McDonald, his successor as president of the Steelworkers, maintained this interest, and fittingly, it was he who presented the check and who delivered the principal address at ground-breaking ceremonies for the new wing.

The new building was made possible through the efforts of the Catherine Variety Tent of the Variety Club of Pittsburgh, which helped raise funds for its construction through public subscription. The Murray Foundation grant was the largest gift received during the campaign.

McDONALD formally handed the check to Reggie Wilson, vice president of Pittsburgh's Commonwealth Trust Co. and chairman of the fund-raising drive. Joining with him, and briefly discussing the work of the Foundation, was Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel of the CIO and the Steelworkers and Foundation director. Goldberg also introduced Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes and Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel of the steel union.

The scroll was read by Msgr. George S. Higgins, associate director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Council.

Other speakers were City Councilman Patrick Fagan, former mine union official and an old friend of Murray, who represented Mayor David Lawrence, and Norman Mervis, president of the Variety Club, which has had a long-term project of aiding Roselia.

Guests of honor included George W. Eby, president of the Catherine Tent, other Variety Club officers, Roselia directors and officials, and members of the campaign committee.

"This contribution is a particularly fitting one, for Philip Murray, who was a great trade unionist, also was a sincere humanitarian," Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers, who also is chairman of the Murray Foundation, said in a statement.

"Roselia Foundling and Maternity Hospital is a fine humanitarian institution. It is doing God's work and I know that Philip Murray would be happy that we, in making this contribution, are helping in this great work."

THE NEW wing will be a typical "Pittsburgh building," built of Pittsburgh area products. The skeleton of the four-level structure will be of structural steel, the exterior of cream-colored face brick with aluminum windows and trim. The interior was laid out with the assistance of Dr. Tracy B. Hare, Miami, Fla., hospital consultant.

Stark Memorial Is Aided

The Philip Murray Memorial Foundation has given $2000 to the Louis Stark Memorial Fund, created to honor the memory of the late Louis Stark, veteran labor reporter of the New York Times.

The presentation was announced by officers of the Murray Foundation headed by the chairman, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers. In turning the money over to Joseph Loftus, Washington, a Stark Fund trustee, Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel and director of the Murray Foundation, said:

"It is our understanding that the Louis Stark Memorial Fund will be devoted to the perpetuation of Mr. Stark's life work in improving a knowledge of labor-management relations.

"It is likewise our understanding that the Fund will, therefore, be used exclusively for educational purposes in this area.

"The trustees of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation feel it a privilege to participate in the constructive memorial which the trustees of your Fund have conceived in memory of our departed friend."

Flanders Says McCarthy Acts Like An 'Amateur' Hitler

SEN. McCARTHY, "perhaps without conscious intention," is acting like a "weaker" and "amateurish" version of the late Adolph Hitler, Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.) charged last week.

Twenty-three outstanding citizens from all walks of life last week sent senators a telegram urging them to vote for Flanders' resolution censuring McCarthy.

"We believe that you should disregard party and lesser considerations and meet this issue squarely," they wired. "We urge you and your colleagues to show by your vote on this issue that the U. S. Senate is prepared to assume responsibility and deal resolutely with an abuse of power or contempt of its traditions, within its own ranks, which threatens the orderly and equitable processes of our constitutional system."

SIGNERS included CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Pres. Albert J. Hayes of the AFL Machinists.

Flanders, only member of the GOP Senate majority who seems interested in trying to cut the Wisconsin Republican down to size, made his charge in a formal speech to the Senate.

At the same time he announced changing his original motion, which was to strip McCarthy of his committee chairmanships, to a reprimand, without any punitive action.

He based his action on a claim that McCarthy's conduct "is unbecoming a member of the U. S. Senate, is contrary to senatorial traditions, and tends to bring the Senate into disrepute."

Flanders in addition formally served notice that he would not call up his resolution for action on July 20, as he originally had announced, but was delaying it until July 30 to avoid interfering with the legislative program and to assure greater support.

He also said the delay was asked by Sen. McClellan, ranking Democrat on the McCarthy subcommittee, who has been campaigning in Arkansas for renomination. He was reported assured of influential Democratic support when the showdown comes.

FLANDERS released his speech in advance of delivery, he explained, in the hope of building up understanding and support for his move, particularly among Republicans. Only 21 senators—14 Republicans, McCarthy not among them, and seven Democrats—were present as he spoke.

When he finished, the only comment came from Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.), who congratulated him on his "eloquent and convincing remarks, "assured" him of "wholehearted support," and expressed the hope the resolution would not be lost in the adjournment rush.

In his address, Flanders said he hoped to end McCarthy's "harmful influence" in the affairs of "the Senate, the nation and the world." The Wisconsinite has done "some useful work" in exposing Communists, he conceded, but it has been "greatly overadvertised and overestimated."

Humphrey Files For Re-election

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) last week formally filed papers for his candidacy for re-election. His campaign director will be Herbert J. Waters, assistant to the Senator in his Washington office.

CIO on ABC
Monday thru Friday
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS

High Noon in Washington
—Herblock in Washington Post and Times Herald

Travel Bias Ban Bill Gets First Okay

A BILL strengthening constitutional bans on segregation went through the House Commerce Committee by a 19 to 7 vote last week.

The measure, sponsored by Rep. Heselton (R. Mass.) provides for a $1000 fine for any interstate carrier which, through an agent, "wilfully" and "unlawfully" segregates passengers.

Heselton was "optimistic" that the bill will pass both House and Senate at this session. He acknowledged the possibility of touching off a possible civil rights wrangle, but said the problem of eliminating segregation "is our responsibility."

"The bill establishes very clearly the committee's effort to implement the clear law of the land which declares that segregation is unconstitutional," he said.

It provides that a carrier or officer would be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to the fine for each violation or attempted violation.

MERGER PLAN DISCUSSED—Proposals for merger of the CIO Oil Workers and Chemical Workers were discussed by (from left) OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and UGCCW Pres. Elwood Swisher at Detroit. Another meeting, of rank-and-file committee of 12 from each union, is planned in Washington Aug. 9.

House Vote Gives Knife To Ike On Public Housing

THE HOUSE last week adopted a compromise on the housing bill from a conference committee which didn't have nerve enough to kill public housing, but came up with a back-stabbing version which gives the appearance but not the reality of support for Pres. Eisenhower's program.

Final approval came by a 358 to 30 roll call vote after the House beat down a Democratic attempt to write Eisenhower's proposals into the bill by a roll call tally of 234 to 156.

The watered-down compromise which came from the conference committee by a 9 to 5 vote contained the amendment sponsored by Rep. Widnall (R. N. J.). This "authorizes" a program of 35,000 public housing units in the next year, compared to 140,000 over four years sought by the Administration, but hedges it about with so many restrictions that it stands little chance of doing any good.

As it stands, the bill limits construction to units intended to re-house families displaced by any local, state or federal government action in communities where the governing body has approved slum clearance, redevelopment or urban renewal programs under Title I of the Housing Act of 1949. (Title I has been declared unconstitutional in some states.)

THE GOP desertion of Eisenhower's public housing program came on a motion by Rep. Spence (D. Ky.) to refer the bill back to the conference committee with instructions to write in the President's proposals. Only 50 Republicans joined 105 Democrats and Rep. Reams (O. Ind.) in voting for the motion, while 155 Republicans and 79 Democrats voted to buck Eisenhower.

Rep. Multer (D. N. Y.) told the House before the vote that the GOP would knife Eisenhower's program, and that the President then will announce "that he endorses Republican candidates who support his program."

"I wonder where he's going to find them," he asked.

The CIO had wired House leaders asking them to recommit the bill along the lines Spence later proposed.

"We believe the American people deeply resent the destruction of the only program that can give some faint hope to millions of families condemned to live in substandard and slum housing," Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, wired House party leaders.

THE HOUSE action gave approval to the rest of the conference report, which included:

1. A watered-down version of Eisenhower's low-cost housing program which puts mortgage terms on virtually the same basis as conventional home mortgages.

2. An "anti-windfall" clause limiting to about 10% builders' profits on construction financed under the Federal Housing Administration's mortgage insurance program.

The "anti-windfall" provision reflected recent testimony before the Senate Banking Committee of fantastic profits by builders who obtained FHA-insured mortgages on apartment buildings and defense housing for amounts greater than actual construction costs.

Among those who have told of huge profits were William J. Levitt, large-scale open shop builder operating in and around New York, who admitted making a net of more than $5 million on the sale of 4082 homes in Levittown, N. Y.; and Alfred Gross, New York, who said his family corporation made $6 million on a $90,000 cash investment in a housing project, and that he got advice on how to split the melon from Harry Rudick, tax consultant with the law firm in which Atty.-Gen. Brownell formerly was a partner.

CIO Backs Appeal For School Funds

MAJOR LABOR, school, farm, veteran and church groups, joined by the CIO, last week opened a last-ditch fight for congressional action this year to provide federal funds for badly-needed school construction.

Led by the National Education Association, the 20 national organizations made a public appeal to Pres. Eisenhower and the Republican leadership in Congress for adoption of similar bills now pending in both houses.

The measures, which would make only a modest beginning to the job of building classrooms for America's youngsters, have not had Administration support, despite their sponsorship by Republicans.

IN THE SENATE a bill proposed by Sen. Cooper (R. Ky.) has already received committee approval and is on the calendar. In the House, a similar emergency proposal introduced by Rep. Frelinghuysen (R. N. J.) is still stalled in the Labor and Education Committee.

CIO, in a separate appeal to House GOP leaders, urged prompt action to get the measure out of committee so America can meet this "immediate and pressing need."

The joint appeal from the 20 organizations said the U. S. possesses "no more precious national treasure" than its children. It urged the Republicans to remove the roadblocks to insure action this year on the bills which provide a half billion dollars, over a two-year period, for emergency school construction.

THE NEA documented the need for 340,000 more classrooms, costing from $10 to $12 billion. The NEA noted that only two out of every five school children are housed in satisfactory schools.

CIO's appeal, sent by Robert Oliver, assistant to Pres. Walter P. Reuther, noted the Cooper-Freylinghuysen bills called for an expenditure that was only 1% of the sum the President recently proposed to spend on roads over a 10-year period.

"If the school children of America are to get their education in a school building that is not an outmoded fire trap, crowded beyond capacity, that building must be available now, not 10 years from now," Oliver said.

Pension Bill Is Approved

THE Administration's social security measure, which CIO has said does not go far enough, last week won unanimous approval from the Senate Finance Committee.

Before approving the bill, the committee substantially narrowed the proposed expansion of coverage under the old age insurance system. Knocked out were approximately 4,100,000 farm operators and professional persons and about 150,000 federal employes.

Thus 6,800,000 additional persons would be covered by the measure. The committee approved the Administration's formula for increasing benefits to retired persons over 65 and their survivors, thereby duplicating approval previously granted by the House.

The new maximum benefits would be $108.50 for single persons and $162.50 for married persons, as against $85 and $127.50 in the present law.

GOP Tax Bonanza To Big Boys Rapped

THE FINAL version of the Administration's tax-favors bill was condemned by the CIO last week as "an unjust and unwise" measure which hands out a $362 million bonanza to stockholders and gives the average wage on salary earner precisely nothing.

The bill, approved by a House-Senate conference committee, "could lead to still greater bonanzas in the future," the CIO warned, adding that in an election year it "will do whatever it can to bring this story to the attention of the American people."

As reported out, the bill provides a lush measure of relief from taxation on stock dividends, although less than the $1.2 billion-a-year hand-out which graced the legislation when it made its bow in the House. The Senate, by a vote of better than five to one, later killed all such favored treatment even though the House had modified its original stand.

THE FINAL version excludes from taxable income the first $50 of dividends received, and authorizes the deduction from taxes owed—not from taxable income—of 4% of the remainder of income from dividends.

This means that a taxpayer with an income of $100,000 from dividends will be permitted to cut his tax bill—not the amount of income on which he pays taxes—by $4000, it was pointed out by Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who aired the CIO's views.

"This provision makes a mockery of progressive taxation," Oliver declared, accusing the Republicans of hypocricy, "since unearned income in the form of stock dividends would be taxed at lower rates than earned income.

"THE AMERICAN people, when they fully comprehend the significance of this action, will surely show their resentment.

"The health of our economy requires tax measures which would place in the hands of the low and middle income families added purchasing power which could keep the wheels of industry turning. There is not a single provision in the bill granting general tax relief to all taxpayers.

"The simplest, fairest and most effective way to accomplish this would have been an increase in personal exemptions. Instead, the Administration has pushed, and Congress has yielded to, a tax program based on the discredited 'trickle down' theory. CIO has rejected this as being just as dangerous in 1954 as it was in 1929.

"The CIO now looks to the 84th Congress to correct the mistakes of the 83d in this vital area of tax policy."

Curran Slate Wins NMU Election

THE ENTIRE administration ticket headed by Pres. Joseph Curran has won in the election of officers of the CIO Maritime Union, returns showed last week.

Curran, unopposed for the presidency, was re-elected with 19,728 votes. Election results were announced by George J. Abrams, executive director of the Honest Ballot Association, which conducted the vote.

A high percentage of some 40,000 NMU members voted. A total of 26,037 ballots was cast.

John B. McDougall defeated Hulbert B. Warner by a vote of 13,661 to 6618 in the race for secretary. M. Hedley Stone was re-elected treasurer, defeating Neal Hanley by a vote of 12,718 to 8406.

Warner and Hanley, incumbent vice president and secretary respectively, had lead the opposition ticket.

Adrian L. Duffy was re-elected vice president. Steve Federoff and David M. Ramos were chosen vice presidents. John T. Hunt was re-elected New York City port agent.

Al Stecyk, Thomas O. Carlsen and St. Clair Parris won the races for steward, engine and deck department members, respectively, of the union's national port committee.

A few days before the results were announced, vandals broke into the high school where the association was tabulating the ballots, Abrams said that about 2000 ballots were strewn on the floor, but less than a fourth had been damaged.

JOSEPH CURRAN

Libel Award Cut Refused Pegler

Federal Judge Edward Weinfeld in New York denied a motion last week to cut down the $175,001 libel judgment Quentin Reynolds won from labor-hating Columnist Westbrook Pegler and two Hearst corporations.

Reynolds, correspondent, author and broadcaster, was awarded that amount by a jury. In rejecting the motion for a slash, Judge Weinfeld maintained the award warranted "no judicial interference."

Mrs. Hobby Regrets . . .

. . . But she's not at home today, not even to a fellow Texan, not even to the new president of the National Education Association, and particularly not to anyone who thinks Uncle Sam has a responsibility which is more than talk on coping with the nation's school crisis.

Such was the experience last week of Miss Waurine Walker with Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby of what's come to be known as the "Dept. of Not-Too-Much Health and Welfare and Mightly Little Education."

Miss Walker, the NEA's new president, came to Washington from Austin, Tex., had an appointment with Mrs. Hobby, but made the mistake of announcing she planned "a personal appeal to my fellow Texan" to support emergency U. S. grants for school construction.

Mrs. Hobby hastily took off for the Capitol, leaving the school teachers' representative to cool her heels.

Congress—despite all the hemming and hawing of the Eisenhower Administration and all the plans for another round of conferences—has hemmed and hawed long enough on the question of federal aid to schools. In these closing days of the present session, there's a final chance to vote federal funds for schools. Considering the record of the 83rd Congress to date on meeting the people's needs, it's little enough to ask.

'A Masterful Job'

Speaking of that record of Congress, the House the other day—for the second time this session—gutted Pres. Eisenhower's recommendation on low-rent housing. After the deed was done, Rep. Wolcott (R. Mich.) proclaimed: "We have done a masterful job." It sure was.

Walking With The Devil

Far be it for us, under normal conditions, to defend Joe McCarthy or his stooges, but we wonder whether there isn't an extraordinary condition of a clear civil rights violation —another case of McCarthyitis—in the news.

We refer to the "transfer under fire" of Don Surine, who left the FBI under a black cloud, and the failure to reappoint Thomas La Venia. Only charges against these McCarthy staffers were unsubstantiated. They never were confronted by their accusers. They never had the opportunity to cross-examine them.

Everyone just sort of assumes they're guilty because of their long association with McCarthy. Of course, that's contrary to our American system of "innocence until proven guilty."

We guess that Surine and La Venia must feel exactly like the witnesses hauled before the McCarthy committee, who also have been denied the fundamentals of American justice. Or, as the Bible reminds us:

"Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary, the Devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour."

Blair Moody

The death of Blair Moody, as he was campaigning to return to the U. S. Senate, is a tragic loss to all of the nation. As CIO Pres. Walter Reuther said, he was "a gallant champion"—and there are few enough of them—"of the cause of freedom, social justice and brotherhood."

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS

Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII July 26, 1954 No. 30

Flunked

In Other Words—

GOP Chickens Come Home To Roost

In a recent address at Colgate University, former Commerce Sec. W. Averell Harriman called for "competitive co-existence" as the kind of "realistic" foreign economic policy which "can preserve freedom and avoid a major war." Excerpts from his address follow.

By W. AVERELL HARRIMAN

AS I AM SURE you realize, this is not an easy time to appraise our foreign policy, for it is hard to find an official root or branch of a policy to cling to. The sky is black with chickens coming home to roost.

With a rush that is—to put it mildly—bewildering, the flow of human events and reactions around the world to our policies, our attitudes and our lack of policies have obscured the guidelines set out to mark our way through a dangerous and troubled period.

HARRIMAN

Only a year and a half ago the West, united in spirit, policy and action, had created situations of strength in Western Europe and in Korea that had checked and rolled back Communist aggression and subversion there and promised a breathing space in which to help build strength elsewhere. We knew, generally, where we were going. Morale was high, likewise confidence in American leadership.

Today, our policies are confusing and uncertain, our leadership is questioned, our alliances are creaking, and American prestige in the world has suffered a major eclipse.

We must face squarely the fact that our chief allies in Europe—and this goes for both governments and peoples—are thoroughly confused regarding our approach to the problems of Asia and decline to follow any longer our leadership there.

We must also recognize the unhappy fact that our leadership is not attracting a large or enthusiastic following in many of the countries of Asia itself, or elsewhere.

Allow me to paint in another corner of this melancholy picture. I listened to the Secretary of State as he went on the air to apportion congratulations over the happy outcome of the complicated and frightening situation in Guatemala. We can consider ourselves fortunate in the result.

But only a battle has been won against communism in Latin America, not a war. As I listened to Mr. Dulles I kept expecting—hoping rather desperately—that he would arrive at a point in his speech where he would discuss the economic and social conditions that the pro-Communists have been exploiting and pledge the aid of the United States in remedying them. Well, he never arrived at that point.

I would not mention this one speech did it not indicate an attitude and a lack of understanding of the nature of the struggle against communism.

—And Charging Downhill

Carrying slogans reading "liberalism," "instant retaliation," "new look," and speaking in multiple and contradictory voices, we have charged up the hills, and then we have charged down again. We have weakened our alliances by short-cutting the rules of coalition diplomacy, the most fundamental of which is not to put the leaders of a foreign country in the position of having publicly to knuckle under to American will, or of flouting it.

We are failing to impress the world, by word and deed, that we are prepared to use adequately our tremendous economic and technical resources and our power over the world economic machine to help create rapidly—with dignity and freedom, too—greater independence and better material conditions of life.

The Kremlin leaders believe that the Soviet system can, over a period of years, out-compete the free in economic growth, political stability and military strength. The Kremlin has challenged the validity of the entire system of free and independent nations.

This is no trifling challenge. But we are challenged in an area where we can be strongest, if we use our strength wisely. I suggest that "competitive co-existence" all across the board is the realistic term, rather than "peaceful co-existence."

And I believe that if we accept the full implications of competitive co-existence of the kind I am talking about, we can preserve freedom and avoid a major war.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ONE OF THE REVEALING facts about Pres. Eisenhower is the things he gets angry about, the other things about which he manages to contain his soul in patience.

He showed no sympathy whatever, at a recent news conference, for Democratic senators attacking his directive to the Atomic Energy Commission to start destroying the expansion of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The AEC is supposed to be an independent agency. The TVA is definitely an independent agency, subject only to the budgetary control of the President and Congress. Eisenhower, nevertheless, claimed adequate authority to run the AEC, and tell the AEC what to do about contracting with a private-utility combine to scuttle TVA.

When Ike Gets Mad—

At another news conference the President was indignant about defeat of his reinsurance proposal in a public-health bill. His scheme for having the federal government underwrite potential losses of private insurance companies was a cheap shabby substitute for a genuine social insurance plan in the field of health.

The House of Representatives turned Eisenhower's plan down—whereupon the President showed real anger, and authorized direct quotation of his promise that he would "fight" for his scheme forever. The congressmen who voted against him, he suggested, weren't interested in the people's health. This seems an odd attitude for an Ike who doesn't know what the people's welfare means.

When Ike Isn't Angry

On the other hand, there are things the President is notoriously reserved or un-angry about.

He wasn't indignant about the congressional committee "compromise" on the housing bill which practically scuttled public housing. Eisenhower has blown hot and cold on public housing for 18 months, but when Congress achieved a "compromise" providing less public housing than the President eventually recommended, there was no indignation shown in the White House.

Sen. Ives (R. N. Y.), who ran a million votes ahead of Eisenhower in New York State in 1952, refused to sign the conference committee report. But the President, asked his opinion, blew hot and cold again. He would make up his mind again, he intimated, next year.

There is the issue of Indochina. The French signed a cease-fire agreement, dividing Indochina in such a way that Dean Acheson, if he were still Secretary of State, and had agreed to the division, would have been accused violently of gross "appeasement." Eisenhower has not seemed, in his public appearances, indignant about this—although he helped assure his election by promising to "go to Korea" then accepted a cease-fire no less disastrous than the French settlement in Southeast Asia.

Eisenhower's capacity for indignation is highly selective.

He isn't tough in foreign policy or public housing. He seems remarkably tough in kicking around the TVA and congressmen who don't agree with him on a piddling health plan.

And Calm On McCarthy

He had no comment on the Sen. Flanders resolution to "censure" Joe McCarthy because, he told reporters, nobody had officially talked to him about it.

Anyone who thinks that Bill Knowland, GOP Senate leader, hasn't told the White House that he wants the Flanders resolution buried in a deep freeze is entitled to this week's booby prize.

The Flanders resolution, to censure McCarthy, is scheduled to be called up July 30. Knowland, breathing fire, threatened that he had several "plans" for dealing with the problem. Despite the President's undeniable hostility to McCarthy, Knowland didn't want to lose Joe as a possible campaign asset.

It isn't exactly clear where McCarthy would be a Republican "asset." Sen. Ferguson of Michigan, for example, definitely stated that he didn't want McCarthy campaigning for him—and this before the death of former Sen. Blair Moody, running for the Democratic nomination, made Ferguson's problems seem easier.

There really isn't anyone in the Republican crowd who actively wants Joe as a campaigner. That would be too risky, one must assume, considering the fact that the Great White Father in the White House seems to have turned his face—tentatively—from McCarthy.

Still, Knowland acts as if the Flanders resolution was an insult and an unbearable indignity for a GOP floor leader.

If Mr. Eisenhower, before July 30, manages to learn "officially" of the Flanders resolution, and to work up some indignation about the way McCarthy has kicked Eisenhower appointees, business might result.

★ Sen. Capehart of Indiana (R.) heads a committee probing "windfall" profits in the rental-housing racket. According to Miss Betty Beale, a Washington society writer, Sen. and Mrs. Capehart sent "two dozen yellow roses" to a party given by a Washington builder, Morris Cafritz, and his socialite wife, Gwendolyn, a somewhat weary rival of Mrs. Perle Mesta in the social racket of this town.

Cafritz has not yet been summoned for public hearings on "windfall" profits he may have made in the postwar rental-housing game. But he and "Gwen" got "two dozen yellow roses" from Sen. Capehart.

Washington Window—

Climbing Prices And Declining Income Put Chill On Optimists

By Public Affairs Institute

IT'S AN OLD GAG that you can prove almost anything with statistics. And that is exactly what is happening now.

No sooner are the latest statistics on the cost of living or unemployment or business investment issued than two schools of economists go to work on them to prove diametrically opposite claims—either that prosperity is about to swamp us or that it isn't. As a rule each group picks the set of figures that appear to prove its point best.

Thus the June employment figures showing employment up one million were used for flaring headlines to prove that we had turned the corner of the recession. The increase in unemployment—some 45,000—were brushed off as being less than seasonally normal.

Just Around The Corner

Again Dr. Gabriel Hauge, economic adviser to Pres. Eisenhower, has just told the recent conference of governors that a business upsurge was just around the corner.

"The economy is catching its breath for a new advance," he said optimistically. One of the reasons he advanced for his optimism was that "the shrinkage in the hard core of unemployed over 15 weeks, which dropped 18% from May to June, is a very significant factor."

Actually a good many of the governors who listened to Dr. Hauge were highly skeptical of his prosperity talk. Many said that they hadn't seen evidence of any potential booms in their states.

Gov. G. Mennen Williams, Democrat of Michigan, in fact, declared that "many pockets of retardation" still existed in the economy including the key auto industry, with which the Michigan Governor is best acquainted.

Two highly significant if little publicized sets of statistics have been issued in the past week throwing a good deal of cold water on the prosperity-is-just-around-the-corner talk.

One was the most recent report of the reliable National Industrial Conference Board, which is the research arm of the National Association of Manufacturers. This stated that the Consumer Price Index for 39 cities surveyed in May was more than 5% higher in May 1954 than it had been in May 1953, using January 1939 as a base. The May 1954 figure was an all-time high.

Still A Retreat

Deputy Sec. of the Treasury Randolph Burgess, at a press conference of financial writers, objected to one story which said that the Administration was "retreating" from its hard money policy.

He said the Treasury's policy was to establish an "honest dollar."

"Well, would you have preferred that the Treasury was retreating from the honest dollar?" the accused financial writer asked. Even Burgess joined in the laughter. —(PAI)

Even more importantly, the Conference Board declared:

"The purchasing value of the dollar in May, 1954, was 53.9c, reaching its lowest point in the 40-year history of the Conference Board's index and representing a decrease of 2.9% over the year. In May 1953, the dollar was valued at 55.5%. (January 1939, dollar=100c.)"

In less elegant language this means that Ike's dollar is worth less than Harry's, despite all the campaign talk of a "sound dollar."

A second vital statistic that ties in closely with this is that while the dollar today is worth less than it was a year ago, we have fewer of them with which to do our shopping.

Fewer Spending Dollars

This is revealed in the July 1954 issue of the monthly report, "Economic Indicators," made public by the President's Council of Economic Advisers. This says:

"Per capita disposable income in both current and constant prices continued to decline slightly in the second quarter of 1954."

This means that during April, May and June the number of dollars that the average American had to spend fell in quantity as well as in purchasing value.

Thus during the second quarter of 1953 estimated annual per capita income, after taxes, was $1555 in current prices. In purchasing power this was worth $1558. During the second quarter of 1954, value of his dollars based on the price index was only $1526.

Falling figures of this kind, in the opinion of economists less optimistic than Dr. Hauge, are not the material out of which prosperity is made.

Book Review

Steps To School Integration

THE PROBLEM of integrating schools is not so difficult as many people have warned, particularly since the Supreme Court decision ending school segregation.

That's one of the important points made in a pamphlet, Segregation and the Schools, published jointly by the Public Affairs Committee and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The pamphlet summarizes the Ashmore Report, an objective appraisal of the Negro in the public schools, which took no partisan stand on the issue, and which was prepared by a distinguished group of 45 scholars under the direction of Harry S. Ashmore, editor of the Little Rock, Ark., Gazette.

'It Wasn't As Bad'

Studies of some 25 communities which had made or were making the transition from segregated to integrated schools revealed that "it wasn't as bad as people thought it would be."

The facts in that report, the pamphlet says, "point to many things we can do—as parents, voters, club members, teachers, church workers and so on—to help our public school administrators develop a calm, sensible and democratic method of carrying out the recent Supreme Court decision."

Segregation and the Schools, with a joint foreword by Frank P. Graham, former Senator and a past president of the University of North Carolina, and Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, traces the history of the fight for equality of education from 1849 in Massachusetts, when abolitionist Charles Sumner tried such a case before that state's Supreme Court and lost it.

But more importantly, it reviews those sections of the first volume of the four-volume Ashmore Report which deal with the experiences of integration in a number of early situations.

"For the most part, with only a few exceptions, Southern universities have followed a consistent pattern," the pamphlet reports. "First, official resistance to Negro enrollment until—either voluntarily, or as a result of court action—the admission policy is changed; then impartial treatment of the Negro students, once they are admitted."

The report also deals with a number of non-Southern communities, and suggests that the "gradual approach" makes for "more, rather than less, public resistance."

"No two communities are exactly alike," the pamphlet reports, "and no two studied went about integrating in the same way. In general, in communities (which) have gone the whole way at a stroke . . . the transition was rated a complete success." —E. L.

Segregation and the Schools, Public Affairs Committee, 22 E. 38th St., New York, N. Y., 25c.

"Greetings, Travers, what's new with you?"

The Border War 'Wetbacks' Flood Back

$2.60 A DAY—Jesus Navidad Rojo earned $200 for 75 days' work in Coachella Valley.

GRIEVANCES—"Braceros," legal Mexican workers, talk over problems caused by "wetbacks" with Dan Chavez (hatless, center), assistant manager of the Labor Dept.'s El Centro Farm Labor Recruitment Center.

LOOKING FOR WORK—These lega "wetbacks" by hundreds cross borde even the pitifully inadequate legal mir

By MILTON PLUMB

JUSTICE DEPT. press agents have been working overtime in an effort to make the current special drive to round up Mexican "wetbacks" seem like it's working miracles.

But the day the drive ended in the Imperial Valley of California, I saw "wets"—literally hundreds of them—again crossing the border. And the following night I rode on a train with at least a score of them as they made their way about 100 miles inside the U. S. en route to where the migrant jobs now are.

These are the facts about the current much-publicized "roundup" as I got them first hand from "wetbacks" legal Mexican braceros, U. S. migrants, growers, CIO and AFL experts and key officials of both the U. S. and Mexican governments.

In Mexico, I was conducted on a personal tour of "wetback" camps by the State of Baja California's Lieut. Gov. Enrique Villegas Leyva, and obtained an interview with the man who has had the most headaches from this country's handling of the problem—Gov. Braulio Maldonado.

Looks Like a Phony

The only conclusion I was able to reach was that, in its net effect, the Imperial Valley roundup of "wetbacks" was a phony.

By this I do not mean to question the sincerity of the Justice Dept. in undertaking the drive, nor to deny that the additional men sent to supplement the inadequate Border Patrol in the area didn't effectively halt most of the traffic and clear the Valley of Mexicans illegally in the U. S.—while the drive was in progress. Our Border Patrol is effective and efficient if it's given even half a chance.

Nor do I want to understate the amount of misery and hardship it meant for at least 100,000 Mexicans who were the unfortunate victims of its circumstances.

But the following facts must be considered in appraising the June 17 to 30 drive and the net effect it will have on Imperial Valley farmers' use of illegal Mexican workers in the future:

1. The drive was launched only after advance warning was given to the growers. As a result, the one remaining perishable crop — melons — was harvested before it began. "Wetbacks" just aren't needed at this time in the Valley.

Growers Were Happy

2. Growers using "wetbacks" were actually glad to have the Valley cleared of them during the slack season, since it solved the critical social problem of having so many unemployed workers looking for work.

3. The number of "wetbacks" rounded up during the 14-day drive, in which about 500 additional immigration officers were assigned to California and Arizona, was considerably less than the number rounded up by the normal Border Patrol's operations in the first 16 days of June.

4. Once the drive was over, "wetbacks" began returning to the valley.

Official border patrol figures show that, during the drive, 21,000 Mexicans illegally in the U. S. were rounded up in California. From June 1 to 16, before the Border Patrol was "reinforced" in the area, the total caught was 34,000. The June total, accordingly, was slightly lower than that for California in recent months.

The Border Patrol explains this drop by contending that most of the "wetbacks" went back to Mexico in order not to get caught. In many cases, especially those near the border when the drive began, this undoubtedly was true. But the movement was northward also.

Following the normal shift of the crops, large numbers also went to the Parjaro and Salinas and San Joaquin Valleys where lettuce and carrots and citrus crops are just beginning to come in. While the roundup was concentrated in the Imperial Valley, where big crops won't be harvested again until December, immigration posts in other areas were left shorthanded.

Moving Northward

This northward movement is indicated by Border Patrol statistics. Bruce Barber, immigration director for the San Francisco district, reported sending 8237 "wetbacks" back to Mexico during the two-week drive. That was nearly 400 more than the total apprehensions his district reported for the two months of May and June.

Assuming a real desire to round up "wetbacks" and persuade farmers to shift to legal labor, it appears that whoever planned this first task force operation understood little about the migrations of California's agricultural workers or the psychology of "wetback" employers.

Crops are harvested—and wetbacks are hired—at their peak in the Imperial Valley from September through March or the middle of April. From that time on, there is a steady falling off so that from the time the drive began until next December the need for illegal labor is at its lowest point.

On the other hand, crops begin to get ripe in northern valleys of California in April and May and continue to be harvested throughout the summer and fall. Migrant workers—including the wetbacks—move with the harvesting season.

Even without the advance warning, no farmer in the Imperial Valley would have been seriously affected by a round-up of wetbacks during the 110-to-120-degree temperature from June until fall. Some cotton and sugar beets are now being harvested, but these aren't perishables demanding immediate picking.

This is borne out by the totals of legal Mexican contract workers hired through the El Centro Reception Center of the U. S. Labor Dept. On July 2, when I visited it, only 36 braceros were being processed. This compares with totals of as many as 1285 a day during the rush hiring season in the fall.

Delayed Action

It was fully 10 months before the roundup began that Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell called the wetback traffic the "nation's Number One law enforcement problem" and expressed shock and dismay at its extent and implications. Yet the first move he made came at a time and place where the roundup of wetbacks had almost no effect whatever upon the growers employing them.

CIO Rep. Nicholas Dragon, of Phoenix, and Ben Perry, regional director at El Centro of the CIO Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Workers Union, accompanied me on most of my Imperial Valley travels. Dragon said that the effect of the round-up in Arizona, which was conducted jointly with the California operation, was essentially as meaningless.

"All of the crops here are up," Perry,

Fox Holes

Newest development in the wetback game of hide-and-go-seek being played along our southern border is the introduction of fox holes and camouflage.

Since the border round-up of wetbacks began, CIO representatives report having seen the wetbacks dig deep holes in the fields where they are working. When border patrolmen arrive they dive into them and cover the tops with alfalfa.

Previously—and sometimes even now—ditches and furrows were sufficient for escape.

Old Story

Once again authorities in the Rio Grande Valley announced that "the day of 'wetback' labor in the valley is over." The occasion this time was a highly mechanized "round-up" of some 2000 aliens, using observation planes to sport them and jeeps to herd them.

Informed sources report that such statements seem to occur regularly—as regularly as a particular harvesting season is over and growers no longer need "surplus labor pools."

Kibitzers From Ezra

By HENRY ZON

ON SEPT. 24, 1952, the people of Point Pleasant, W. Va., who gathered around the rear end of a campaign train heard a presidential candidate say:

"You are being threatened . . . by the fact that we have got so many Washington bureaucrats who want to move in on you and show you how to run your business, particularly your farms. They want to tell you what to raise, how much of it, when to plant it, and what to get for it and how much to pay for everything you use on that farm.

"Certainly we believe in proper price supports, proper protection of the farmers against disaster, but we certainly want him to run his farm as he thinks it should be run and not the way some long-haired bureaucrat behind a desk in Washington thinks it should be done."

It came to pass a few months later that the same presidential candidate was elected to office and, presumably, the long-haired bureaucrats in Washington either got their hair cut or got out.

Comes now the Wall S carrying the following he Federal Advisers Will Off ter Plan for Living." Th Cover Fertilizer Use, Pest Raising Children."

The story goes on to ture Benson—no long-hair cided that what the mode plete master plan" worked for each farmer with the dispatched to his doorstep

Sometime this summe Street Journal, Benson w dreds of Agriculture Dept. preaching the gospel of "p

Details, says the news out "but the outlines o 'dynamic new program'—a tial document currently c of the Agriculture Dept."

The idea is for a gove with the farmers complete

Into West After Phony Roundup

immigrants can't find work, while to fill illegal jobs at rates far below mum pay standards.

HOMEWARD BOUND—With crops harvested and growers protected, Mexican laborers head back carrying clothing for wives and children. Most of the little they've earned has already been sent home ahead of them.

ORPHANED — Ten-year-old Juan Gasca lost both parents crossing Rio Grande during a flood.

who probably knows more than any other individual about the condition of crops in the Valley, declared. "We won't be busy here again until we start picking some cotton in August and planting new crops in September."

Perry expressed skepticism about the thoroughness of the roundup. He pointed out that it had been confined to farm workers who were no longer needed, and added:

"There was no real roundup in the city. Nothing was done to arrest 'wets' working in hotels, as clerks in stores, or as household workers."

Walter Francis, director of the El Centro Reception Center, also confirmed that "repatriations (Mexican farm laborers returning home) pick up at this time of the year when crops run out."

Below The Average

He pointed to statistics on the number of braceros processed through the center during the peak of the roundup and compared them with a rate of about 1000 a day in May and September. From June 21 to 30, the average was only 175 a day, although his center services all Pacific Coast states and Utah, Nevada and Idaho.

If farmers had really needed labor at the time of the roundup these figures would certainly have jumped.

Chief Inspector J. E. Parker of the Border Patrol at El Centro, who has a normal staff of about 220 men to patrol 180 miles of border, said that during the roundup an average of about 125 additional men worked in his district.

He reported that since the drive began his office had been beseiged by calls from farmers who had heard of Brownell's request for new legislation to penalize those hiring "wetbacks," and wanted to know if this were the law.

"They say that if they're going to be prosecuted, they want to get in line, but they won't comply without a law," Parker said.

Despite its small and inadequate staff, the El Centro Border Patrol and that at McAllen, Tex., annually have the largest totals of "wetback" captures. Most border patrolmen at these and other stations advocate a much more direct system of penalizing wetback employers than those called for in the proposed "injunction" method requested by the Administration.

They will tell you privately—and unofficially—that the only workable solution is to give the border patrol authority to administratively fine growers caught with wetbacks in their employ. To prevent abuses, they agree that those fined should have the right to appeal to a court. Such a system is now in use on steamship lines —and it works.

Need More Power

Parker's station accounted for about one-quarter of the more than one million "wetbacks" apprehended in the U. S. last year. Moreover, the rate is increasing. The El Centro station captured 416,837 wetbacks in fiscal 1954 as compared with 237,188 the year before.

Statistics on the number captured each month by the El Centro station also bear out the fact that the roundup came during a "slack" season. There were only 11,822 captured in July 1953 as compared with 16,580 last December.

There is no question, however, that the roundup, despite its ineffective timing, might have been a good thing if the border had been kept closed after it was over. The special task force, however, now has been pulled out of Arizona and California and sent to Texas.

Here crops are coming in and a round-up might really leave growers short-handed. But, as this is written, I have before me a wire dispatch quoting Harlan Carter, Washington chief of the patrol, who is directing the field operations, to the effect that he was postponing the start of the drive in the Lower Rio Grande Valley to "play fair with valley farmers."

Meanwhile, the California-Mexico border once more is—as Chief Justice Earl Warren once called it—"an open sieve." I stood one night this month near the Mexicali-Calexico gateway and saw "wetbacks" break through even this relatively protected entrance.

Only a short distance away, where there is no fence or natural barrier, many wiser heads were simply walking across. Hundreds more were piled up on top of freight car loads of sugar beets, waiting for the Southern Pacific's night train which runs from Yuma through Mexico to Mexicali to pick them up and carry them northwards.

Not all of them made it—there are many caught en route—but the wise hands get off before the train reaches inspection stations, and then reboard it when it starts up again.

Commute By Cab

The best summary of the current situation I know was the remark my cab driver made the morning I arrived in El Centro, on July 1, the day after the roundup was over.

"You're lucky I got back in time," he said. "I picked up five wets this morning and got them through to a farmer for the first time in two weeks."

"What happened in the meantime?"

"Oh, I got caught several times. That means I lost my fare."

For him the end of the drive meant resumption of normal business. For the "wetbacks" it meant once more an easy access to the "Land of Opportunity."

Recruiting

While thousands of U. S. farm hands are already displaced from their jobs by Mexican migrant braceros, the Labor Dept. last week announced plans to recruit an additional 90,000 Mexicans on grounds that the round-up makes them needed.

Dir. of Employment Security Robert C. Goodwin said the department's program now calls for recruiting 350,000 Mexicans this year instead of the 260,000 planned. He asked Congress to provide an additional $350,000 to finance the expanded recruiting.

Church Council Aids Migrants

MORE THAN 300 ministers, seminarians, students and teachers, under the direction of the Migrant Ministry of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., are moving into camps throughout the country to serve the two million migratory agricultural laborers working on the nation's farms.

They went into action as the workers, fanning out from the southern states, began to spread to all parts of the country. The National Council recently received $200,000 from the Philip Memorial Foundation to further its work in industrial relations.

As part of a program that has been under way for 30 years, the Migrant Ministry is setting up schools, churches, child-care centers and community health and welfare services at migrant labor camps and other centers in 25 states. They range as far north as the Canadian border.

Wage and other working conditions for migrants may suffer this year, Edith E. Lowry, national director of the Migrant Ministry, warned. Their status is always affected by general economic conditions, she explained, and this year may be influenced by the "back to the land" movement of jobless industrial workers and the reduction of acreage of some staple crops that use such labor.

Enforcement

If U. S. government representatives really want to do something about abuses of migratory labor, they can follow the example of New York State Labor Commissioner Edward Corsi.

He announced that his State Labor Dept.'s field staff has been doubled, that it will "follow the crops" to insure proper inspections, and that growers as well as all known labor contractors and crew leaders have been warned of the law requiring the latter two groups to register as well as be certified.

Move In On Farmers

treet Journal with a story
adline: "Farm Kibitzing—
r Individual Farmer Mase subhead reads: "They'll Killing, Bookkeeping, Even

late that Sec. of Agricul-d bureaucrat he—has de-farmer needs is "a com-
out down to the last detail
elp of a government agent

, according to the Wall
l pass the word for hun-gents to go about the land anned farming."

per, haven't been worked the scheme—billed as a e contained in a confiden-
culating in upper echelons

nment agent to work out plans covering their entire existence. The plan will answer questions like these: what crops to plant and in what quantity; what fertilizers to use; how to deal with farm pests (including government agents?); what repairs to make on farm buildings or machinery and how to raise money; how to keep books and pay taxes; how much profit a farmer should make to be able to afford to redecorate the front parlor or buy a television set or a new refrigerator.

For instance, an agent might advise a farmer to shift land from barley to tomatoes if he wants to make enough money to buy the freezer his wife is pleading for. Raising tomatoes might mean making Junior work on the farm in the summer instead of taking a job in town.

And if Junior doesn't want to work on the farm, his mother will know how to handle the situation on tips she'll get on child psychology from some of the women agents of short-haired, non-bureaucrat Sec. of Agriculture Benson.

To finance the new program Benson will use $8.3 million this year with which to hire 1000 additional county agents, and 24 policy-makers to be located in—Washington.

PAC Sessions Feature Glass Convention

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WHEN Pres. Burl Phares of the CIO Glass Workers outlined the union's problems, progress and plans in his keynote speech at the 11th biennial convention in Cleveland, he mentioned two important brand new matters.

First was the addition of a new Dist. Six, extending the union's membership to some 3000 glass workers in Canada.

This came through the affiliation of a group of six Canadian locals whose members work in various glass, pottery and glass container plants in Montreal, Hamilton and Toronto. (Around 8000 workers are employed in the Canadian glass and ceramic industries.)

Growing Union

Affiliation of the Canadian locals brings the membership of the Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers up to some 55,000 glass and allied products workers in the U. S. and Canada and adds Dist. Six Pres. Oliver Hodges to the union's executive board.

Second was an experiment in union democracy designed to give all delegates a chance to take part in convention proceedings on the subject of political action.

The program was designed to draw forth their ideas and first-hand observation on improving political activity at the grass roots level by encouraging family participation in union PAC affairs. Wives of delegates and other members of their families, who were guests at the convention, were invited to take part in the program.

PAC Sessions

On the third day of the proceedings, instead of assembling all together, the delegates and their wives were divided into 10 groups of 20 or more which met separately, each under a union PAC discussion leader. Later the groups reported their findings to the whole convention.

Tried out by the Glass Workers for the first time at an international union convention, the PAC family participation project was hailed as a great success by both officers and delegates. Sec.-Treas. Lewis McCracken called it "the most important day of the convention."

McCracken and Second Vice-Pres. Ralph Reiser, co-chairmen of the union's PAC Committee, arranged the one-day discussion for the convention. First Vice-Pres. Leland Beard, in charge of research and education, who urged the importance of strong political action in his report to the convention, also worked to make it a success.

National PAC Reps. Darrell Smith and Esther Murray planned and directed the program with the cooperation of all the union's officers, including the six district presidents — Willard Pelican, Don Berger, Henry L. Wingert, George Laiben, Martin E. Judge and Hodges.

National PAC Dir. Jack Kroll called the family participation day one of the important events in the history of unionism in this country.

"When union people take a whole day out of their convention to understand their role as citizens, they are reaffirming their importance in a democracy," he said.

CIO Pres. Walter Reuther, who addressed the delegates the same day, was given a big ovation at his first appearance before a Glass Workers convention since becoming head of the CIO.

Reuther Is Applauded

The importance of union members understanding political problems, which deeply affect their lives both on the job and at home, was his theme. He explained the difference between the programs of the Republicans, Democrats and labor on issues vital to the American people, and emphasized the need for an expanding economy to bring about full employment.

"We must expand purchasing power at the base," Reuther said, instead of relying on the theory of "trickling down" from the top. "Cut down the legs of the table loaded with all the good things the rich enjoy," he said, and bring it within reach of all Americans.

Guest speakers who addressed the delegates earlier included R. J. Thomas, assistant to CIO Exec. Vice-Pres. John Riffe; Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labor, and UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey.

Labor Unity Stressed

Thomas emphasized the importance of labor unity "in these critical times." "Ever since I've been in the labor movement," he said, "we seem to have been in a critical time. It seems to be chronic. But it's a fact that in the present critical time we need unity more than ever before."

Mosher, who has headed the Canadian Congress of Labor since its formation, told the delegates that the CCL has grown from some 40,000 members in 1940 to its present membership of close to half a million. He explained that the CCL, with which CIO unions in Canada are affiliated, "is a Canadian body, wholly autonomous and carrying on its business in Canada just as the CIO does in the United States. It rules its own roost."

Mazey recalled the long-standing common problems of both glass and auto workers, and on that point Thomas jokingly suggested that perhaps the two should merge. "After all," he said with a smile, "an auto is only a little bunch of tin wrapped around a lot of glass."

PAC PLAN—Esther Murray (left), speaks to political action group leaders at CIO Glass Workers convention. Pictured at right are the union's officers with CIO Pres. Walter Reuther. Standing in front are Vice-Pres. Ralph Reiser, Pres. Burl Phares, Reuther, Sec.-Treas. Lewis McCracken and Vice-Pres. Leland Beard. Others are Dist. Presidents W. Pelican, seated, H. Wingert, D. Berger, M. Judge, O. Hodges and G. Laiben.

Scatter

Some harsh words about Pres. Eisenhower's so-called "middle-of-the-road" Administration were included in the officers' report to the Glass Workers' convention.

"Most of these men and women would have difficulty recognizing the 'middle-of-the-road,'" the report stated. "They are instead driving their Cadillacs down the right-hand sidewalk—the poor pedestrians are forced to scatter for safety."

CANADIAN GROUP—CCL Pres. A. R. Mosher, center, and Glass Pres. Burl Phares, on his right, shown with the delegates from Canada. Canadian Dist. Pres. Oliver Hodges, wearing glasses, is directly behind Mosher.

'The Snake Has Shown Its Fangs,' Warning On T-H

SOME of the people who poke fun at labor for condemning the Taft-Hartley Act and believe that unions have finally come to accept it meekly should have been at the CIO Glass Workers convention.

No other issue discussed there provoked such an outburst of angry, bitter words.

"The snake has now shown its fangs," said Emil Oxfeld, a union attorney, during the floor discussion on Taft-Hartley. He told how the law's red tape and the unfair rulings of the present NLRB often make it practically impossible to win a case against a die-hard, anti-labor boss who can get away with all kind of tricks under the law.

"Taft-Hartley is the club that is used nearly every week against us," said Second Vice-Pres. Ralph Reiser, the union's director of organization.

He described the difficulties the union has in trying to get a contract even after winning an election, and said that companies often get away with simply ignoring the results of an election and flatly refusing to negotiate a contract.

No delegate had anything but complaints against the T-H law, and the resolution condemning it and calling for fundamental amendments was passed unanimously.

Another resolution that drew forth extensive discussion from the floor, this time in the affirmative, was the one supporting the CIO Community Services Committee. Delegates told of the extensive activities of Glass locals in their home towns, in support of campaigns in behalf of hospitals, the Red Cross, Cancer Society, Community Chests, and other social welfare agencies.

The convention also went on record in favor of a $1.25 minimum wage and improvements in state unemployment and workmen's compensation benefits.

A proposal to change the union's name to the United Glass and Ceramic Workers of North America, CIO-CCL, in view of the union's new Canadian locals, was adopted.

CCL Leader Comes To Speak And He's On Honeymoon

A UNION couple on their honeymoon were two of the honored guests at the Glass Workers convention.

Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labor and Miss Pearl Hull, former union steward at the Hotel Chateau Laurier in Ottawa, who were married shortly before the convention, took in Cleveland on their wedding trip.

Having promised to speak at the convention on the occasion when delegates from the new Canadian locals were represented for the first time, Mosher solved his problem by combining his honeymoon and his speaking date.

The couple met six years ago during an organizing drive by the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes and Other Transportation Workers which Mosher led. He was the first president of this union.

CCL PRES. A. R. Mosher and his bride honeymooned at the Glass Workers convention.

AT MEETING of several members of Labor Advisory Committee with Foreign Operations Administrator leaders are (left to right) CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Deputy Dir. Everett M. Kassalow, FOA Office of Labor Affairs; AFL Pres. George Meany, Dir. George Meskimen, FOA Labor Affairs, and FOA Dir. Harold E. Stassen.

Labor's World—

CIO, AFL Aides Warn Guatemala To Give Free Unions A Chance

THE CIO and AFL joined forces last week in an effort to assure the workers of Guatemala a chance to set up their own free, democratic trade unions under the revolutionary, anti-Communist government of Col. Carlos Castillo Armas.

Daniel P. Benedict, assistant director of the CIO Dept. for International Affairs, in Guatemala City to investigate reports of a possible trend in the new government away from the land reform program that grew out of the 1944 revolution, encountered Serafino Romualdi, AFL representative, and immediately joined forces with him.

The two attended a meeting of a committee representing 14 national unions which had been called to reorganize the labor movement.

NAMED PRESIDENT of the group was Reuben Villatoro, who was arrested, tortured and exiled after he had helped form an anti-Communist union last year. Villatoro appealed to all unions to cooperate with the committee.

The Americans were in touch with Armas, and were planning to impress upon him the desirability of permitting the formation of free trade unions to safeguard the interests of the workers.

The Inter-American Organization of Workers (ORIT), western hemisphere arm of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, is fully prepared to assist democratic unionists to organize.

Communist leaders of the Red-controlled unions under the ousted Arbenz government have vanished into hiding. Many pre-Arbenz union officials were imprisoned, and some of them were murdered. Others who were exiled are gradually drifting back.

Armas was reported considering issuing a decree withdrawing recognition from all unions.

Prior to going to Guatemala, Benedict visited Mexico City, where he met with union leaders; Honduras, where he conferred with officers of the then striking Honduras Banana Workers Union, to whom the CIO gave $1000, and Costa Rica.

UAW Aide Leaves For Singapore

William H. Oliver, co-director of the CIO Auto Workers' Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Dept., left last week for Singapore to attend a conference of the anti-Communist World Assembly of Youth, opening Aug. 1.

He will confer with representatives of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trades Unions in Europe, Pakistan and India enroute to Singapore, and with union leaders in Malaya before returning home. At the conference, he will be a member of panels on "Increasing Industrialization" and "Workers—Rural and Urban."

ILO

The Intl. Labor Organization plans on playing an "increasingly useful part" in the field of labor-management relations, Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse told the United Nations Economic & Social Council in his annual report.

In addition, he said, every effort will be made to maintain the ILO's high standards in its work for the UN Expanded Technical Assistance Program, and programs on freedom of association and forced labor, including the investigation and conciliation of disputes, will be pressed.

Italy

Luigi Morelli, deputy secretary general of the Italian Confederation of Labor Unions (CISL) and one of Italy's leading anti-Communists, was killed last week in an auto accident near Ferrara. A partisan fighter during the war, he had been a member of the Chamber of Deputies since 1947 and was one of the leaders of the CISL group within the Christian Democratic Party.

East Germany

An anti-Communist East German underground is well launched on a campaign of sabotage which has cost that Soviet puppet millions of dollars in industrial and farm products, and thus far has escaped detection, the U. S. Information Agency has reported. In the first three months of 1954, it said, 327 acts of sabotage were reported in nationalized industries alone.

West Germany

The National Metal Workers Union, largest in the German Federation of Trade Unions (DGB), obtained a 6% wage increase for 300,000 of its members in the State of Wuerttemberg-Baden after a strike vote.

The union's insistence on a pay increase was the most aggressive major move by a labor group in more than two years. It encouraged 300,000 Bavarian members of the union to demand a 15% increase, and to back it up with a strike vote. Some observers predicted the settlement would set a pattern in the metal working industries. —G.N.L.

CIO Urges Aid For Zinc Miners

REJECTION of the U. S. Tariff Commission's recommendation for higher import duties on lead and zinc, and in its place the institution of a program which will permit the survival of the U. S. metal mining industry, was urged on Pres. Eisenhower last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

A study of the lead and zinc tariff problem, he wrote, has convinced the CIO and its affiliated unions that the domestic industry "is in serious difficulties and needs assistance." The Tariff Commission recommendation "would really solve no problems," he added.

The CIO Steelworkers represent thousands of lead and zinc miners.

REUTHER pointed out that higher tariffs would hit free nations which supply this country with more than one-third of its lead and zinc needs, but would be of no direct help to the miners.

"The so-called panacea resulting from higher tariffs would not materialize," he declared. "An indirect subsidy would be given producers which would result in higher prices to the consumers. The majority of producers would, as a matter of fact, not be aided. The higher prices may well result in the substitution of other metals."

In urging the President to set forth an assistance program for the industry, Reuther pointed out that it also "is essential for security reasons that the supply of lead and zinc available from domestic mines be sufficient to meet the requirements of our mobilization base."

"This objective could be obtained immediately," he continued, "by re-examining the size of the stockpile and authorizing, as was done in June, purchases for the stockpile.

"HOWEVER such purchases should not be made at the market price, but at a varying price that will enable domestic lead and zinc mines to stay in production."

Legislation also should be enacted, Reuther wrote, designed to keep the mines operating at a level of production high enough to satisfy basic defense needs.

"Guaranteed prices should be the difference between the market price and what it takes for each individual mine to operate at a reasonable profit," he wrote.

"In principle, this is similar to the recommendations made at the time you rejected the U. S. Tariff Commission's recommendation to increase the duty on wool."

WINNER of Democratic nomination for Senate in Montana primary was Sen. Murray (above), outstanding liberal who has served since 1934. His GOP opponent will be Rep. D'Ewart, who wants to give U. S.-owned land to cattle, lumber and mining barons.

Feighan Sees Russ Drive To Rule World

CO-EXISTENCE with Soviet Russia is impossible so long as the Kremlin continues its campaign for world domination. Rep. Feighan (O. O.) charged on his return to America last week.

The Ohio Democrat, reporting on congressional hearings throughout Europe at which workers, clergymen, farmers, soldiers, diplomats and children described their personal experience under Communist tyranny, said:

"In all our dealing with them (Soviet Russia), we must recognize them as the leaders of a ruthless criminal conspiracy and accordingly must discard any notion that we, as a free and independent nation, can co-exist with this conspiracy."

Feighan said many of the witnesses heard by the committee had "suffered unbelievable torture" at the hands of the Communists, who regard the U. S. as the "principal road-block" to their plans for a world colonial empire.

Ike Hears CIO Plea On Shipbuilding

ADMINISTRATION support for the merchant marine repair and building program was pledged at a White House conference last week.

Vice Pres. Andrew A. Pettis of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers attended the conference with Pres. Eisenhower, along with some members of Congress, a spokesman for the shipyards and an AFL representative.

Three principal measures are pending in Congress. One bill, which the Senate has passed, would provide $45 million for the rehabilitation of 205 vessels in the U. S. reserve fleet.

Another measure is in conference. The Senate version authorized private construction of 20 tankers for long-term charter to the Navy, but the House changed it to have the work done in private yards with Navy funds.

On the third bill, the House last week restored $71 million out of the new ship construction program, but this must be approved by the Senate.

"The thinking of the meeting," Pettis said, "was that passage of the charter and the repair measures would relieve the situation in the shipyards. If these measures become law, the core of skilled workers who are drifting into other industries would be saved for a national emergency."

Sen. Butler (R. Md.), who acted as spokesman for the group, said the President "pledged his full support" to the repair bill which is pending in the House Merchant Marine Committee. "The President favors having the tankers built by private industry," the Senator declared, and added that Eisenhower also wanted restoration of the $71 million cut in the ship construction program.

House Defeats Postal Pay Hike

The House last week decisively defeated an Administration bill to give postal workers a 5% pay raise and also to hike postal rates by $223 million a year. The roll call vote was 228 to 171, or 28 votes short of the two-thirds majority needed.

Shouting "gag rule," a coalition of dissident Republicans and Democrats balked at a leadership maneuver to push the bill through without amendments.

You And Your Money—

U.S. Probe Of Gas Price Hikes Looks Like 'Lost Cause' Now

By Press Associates PAI

DO YOU REMEMBER about 13 months ago when gasoline suddenly jumped in price several cents on the gallon?

There was great public indignation. The Justice Dept. announced that it was investigating the "collusive" gasoline price increases at the filling station.

Since that time all has been quiet. Within the department, however, it is admitted that little or nothing is being done. They say that they have only a limited number of men to assign to such an investigation and they are being tied up with other probes.

One of the cases on which the department has done some work is a civil, anti-trust suit against five major oil companies in New York: Standard Oil of New Jersey, Socony-Vacuum, Gulf Oil, Standard of California and Texas Company.

The companies were charged originally with violations of criminal anti-trust laws, that they had conspired to control the world market. However, when the Eisenhower Administration took over the charge was watered down to a civil suit.

The companies have until Sept. 15 to provide the department with documents necessary in pre-trial proceedings. At that time the decision will be made on whether additional data is required.

When will they go to trial? The department admits that it will be many months.

THE JUSTICE DEPT. promised to take action in the gasoline price increase in the spring of 1953 after the House Committee on Interstate Commerce held hearings following the oil price increase of 25c or more a barrel in most producing areas.

The committee said there was "apparent collusion" in the price hikes at filling stations.

On the basis of normal use, the Public Affairs Institute estimated that the increase would cost American users of petroleum products more than $750 million annually.

"A lost cause," said Paul E. Hadlick, general counsel of the Oil Marketers Association, who originally demanded the investigation.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

PREVIOUSLY this department reported the growing resentment of many auto owners caught between high insurance rates on one hand, and the recent strictness of some lower-cost companies in discontinuing coverage when a policyholder makes a dubious claim or one that indicates carelessness.

Low-Cost Auto Insurance Tips

Following is a list of low-cost insurors licensed in at least several states. However, we cannot vouch for the rating attitudes of individual companies. There have been complaints that some have been tougher than others in discontinuing policies. The companies generally lowest in net cost are listed first, and all we can suggest is that you work from the top of the list down to try to secure coverage at least expense.

My own feeling is that you save more in the long run by insuring with a low-cost company, even if it is strict about border-line claims like $2.50 for a hub cap claimed to be stolen, or signs of carelessness. These are reliable well-established companies that have satisfactory records for prompt payment in case of actual road accidents. Sometimes for the sake of a borderline $10 or $25 claim, you might find yourself paying $25 more every year for insurance.

HERE IS A LIST of low-cost companies and their home offices: Factory Mutual Liability Ins. Co., Providence, R. I.; State Farm Mutual Auto Ins. Co., Bloomington, Ill.; Mutual Service Casualty Co., St. Paul, Minn.; Farm Bureau Mutual Auto Ins. Co., Columbus, O.; National Farmers Prop. & Casualty Ins. Co., Denver; Government Employes Ins. Co., Washington, D. C.; Liberty Mutual Ins. Co., Boston; Farmers Insurance Exchange, Los Angeles; Hardware Mutual Casualty Co., Stevens Point, Wis.; American Mutual Liability Ins. Co., Boston; Keystone Auto Club Casualty Co., Philadelphia; Employers Mutual Liability Ins. Co., Wausau, Wis.; Lumbermen's Mutual Casualty Co., Chicago; Michigan Mutual Liability Ins. Co., Detroit; Penn. Threshermen's & Farmer's Mutual, Harrisburg, Pa.; Shelby Mutual Casualty Co., Shelby, O.; State Auto Ins. Assn., Indianapolis; Utica Mutual Ins. Co., Utica, N. Y.; Employers Mutual Casualty Co., Des Moines; American Motorists Ins. Co., Chicago; Auto Owners Ins. Co., Lansing, Mich.; Merchants Mutual Casualty Co., Buffalo, N. Y.; United Pacific Ins. Co., Tacoma.

Several others generally offering savings and worth "shopping," although we cannot compare their costs because we don't at this time have their current deviations from standard rates, are: Federal Mutual Implement & Hardware Ins. Co., Owatonna, Minn.; General Casualty Co. of America, Seattle, and its affiliate SAFECO Ins. Co. of America; Farmers Mutuals, Madison, Wis.

ANOTHER BIG LOW-COST company is State Farm Mutual, which charges only one rate for all drivers. Thus, drivers under 25 can save up to 60% if they can get insured by State Farm Mutual, and people who drive to work can save up to 35%. But State Farm Mutual also is highly selective and seeks only the most careful drivers.

Be wary of buying insurance from the company that finances your car. Sometimes finance companies provide only fire, theft and collision insurance to protect themselves against any damage to the car, but no liability insurance to protect you if you are sued. You'll generally do much better shopping the low-cost companies listed here than accepting finance-company insurance.

Your real need is for liability insurance. In fact, in an older car it doesn't pay to carry collision insurance because of the high rates for this coverage. Remember that Uncle Sam partly insures you against collision damage to your car since such loss is deductible from income tax.

(Copyright 1954 by Sidney Margolius)

Beirne Protests Decision On Phone 'Learner' Wages

DECISION of Wage-Hour Administrator Willliam R. McComb to increase the legal minimum wage for "learner" telephone switchboard operators by 7.5c an hour has been protested by the CIO Communications Workers.

The learner rate should be eliminated entirely, CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne wrote McComb, or failing that, should be increased by at least 10c. McComb proposes to boost it from 60 to 67.5c an hour for the first 325 hours of work, and from 65 to 72.5c thereafter.

"Wage levels generally," Beirne wrote, "and in the independent portion of the telephone industry particularly, have increased substantially in excess of 7.5c per hour since January 1950, effective date of present telephone learner rates.

"Telephone learner rates have not accomplished the purposes for which they were established (to prevent curtailment of opportunities for employment in industries which would not have learner programs if they had to pay the full legal minimum), and therefore should be eliminated."

The CWA-CIO represents some 300,000 telephone workers, more than 150,000 of them operators. Increases since January 1950, when the present rate was promulgated, range from 10 to 20c an hour.

CIO Offers New Pamphlet Telling Farm-Labor Story

IN ANSWER to requests from the field for literature suitable for CIO distribution at state and county fairs this summer, the National CIO has prepared a pamphlet, "Partners in Production—Farmers and CIO," which tells briefly of the CIO's support of legislation desired by farmers.

In a letter to presidents of international unions, CIO regional directors and state and local industrial union councils, Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, urged widespread distribution. Because the National CIO has absorbed about half the production cost, the pamphlet is available in quantity orders at about $10 per thousand. There is room on the back page for a local imprint.

Price Spread Probe Asked By Humphrey

SEN. HUMPHREY (D. Minn.) got to wondering last week what ever happened to his proposal for an investigation of price spreads between farm producers and consumers, which the Senate Agriculture Committee, of which he is a member, decided to undertake last October.

So he sat down and wrote a letter to Sen. Aiken (R. Vt.), the committee chairman.

"I was pleased that you concurred and announced such an inquiry would be made," he wrote. ". . . If I recall rightly, you appointed Sen. Williams (R. Del.) to head a special subcommittee for that purpose.

"May I inquire what happened to this investigation? Was it in fact ever conducted? Have any hearings been held about which I have not been informed?"

The inquiry should be pulled out its pigeon hole, Humphrey indicated, in view of efforts to turn consumers against farmers on farm price supports.

IF CONSUMERS had the results of such a query, he added, "they could know the real relationship between prices producers get and prices consumers pay."

"It might help clarify some of the widespread misunderstanding resulting from propaganda blaming farmers and our price support programs for high food prices," he noted. "I'm sure it would help consumers to better understand the present problems of America's farmers, and the importance to agriculture of an effective price support program."

IWA Charges 508 Operators With Refusing To Bargain

CHARGES of refusal to bargain are being filed with the National Labor Relations Board against 508 Pacific Northwest lumber and wood products operators, the CIO Woodworkers announced last week.

The action was based on the adamant stand of the Fir Operators Committee at a meeting a few days earlier against doing any negotiating to end a strike that has kept 100,000 members of the IWA-CIO and the AFL Lumber & Sawmill Workers out of logging and processing operations since June 21.

The two unions, which have formed a mutual assistance compact, are seeking wage increases of 12.5c an hour. The IWA-CIO also wants three weeks' vacation after five years and a wage analysis program.

The meeting with the fir operators followed two days of sessions between the AFL and the employers. The two unions exchanged observers. Both got what amounts to a refusal to bargain, a further refusal to supply wage, hours, job classification and similar data, and a demand that they renew their old contracts.

IWA-CIO Pres. A. F. Hartung told the operators:

"If this is not the most bold-faced refusal to bargain that this union has ever seen, we would like to know what collective bargaining, in this democratic country, is supposed to mean."

FPC Sets Price Of Natural Gas

The Federal Power Commission temporarily froze natural gas prices at the June 7 level as a move toward regulating 4100 independent producers brought under FPC jurisdiction by the Supreme Court.

Steel Local Holds Contest

Unions Make Life Worthwhile, Says High School Graduate

"LABOR organizations have made living worthwhile and comfortable for the majority of people in the United States."

That was the conclusion of Betty Gervais, in an essay that won the $100 first prize in a contest conducted by Local 4312, CIO Steelworkers, at Calumet, Mich. She is a 1954 graduate of Lake Linden High School.

"There is still work to be done, but labor has won its fight for collective bargaining," Miss Gervais wrote. "It is winning the fight for large labor participation in the planning and in the conduct of business enterprise.

"Labor is of age—economically, politically and socially."

Paul Orth and Geraldine Hammes, both members of the 1954 class of Sacred Heart Parochial High School, Larium, Mich., won the $50 second prize and the $25 third prize, respectively. The contest was open to members of this year's graduating classes of all Copper County high schools.

JOHN COLE and Daniel Sullivan financial secretary and treasurer respectively of the local, presented the awards in a ceremony at Calumet Theater. Arthur Chaput, Sr., chairman of the local's entertainment committee, was master of ceremonies.

Recording Sec. Emil Primeau, Robert C. DeNault and Russell Jolly also aided in making the contest a success. L. M. Koski is the local president.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

While CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe is recovering from his recent illness, his column is being conducted by guest writers. This week the writer is CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers.

By JAMES B. CAREY

WE LIVE in a dynamic society, and to stand still is in effect to retreat. The fact that the American labor movement today has more members than at any time in history should lead us not to relax but to redouble our organizing efforts. For we also have the largest labor force in our history.

For example, we in the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO, represent more than 400,000 workers in the electrical industry. We have done that in five short years. But there are one million workers in that industry. Every worker who remains unorganized or disorganized is a threat to the standards of those who are now organized in the IUE-CIO.

The significant fact today is not the strength of the labor movement, but the strength of our enemies. Much of our energy in recent years has had to be devoted to holding back further reaction. The goal of our enemies remains always the same—crushing the organized labor movement.

Part of their techniques has been to run away from organized areas; from big industrial centers to rural areas; from the East and midwest to New England, or to Canada, but mostly to the South.

How To Win In The South

Because the South beckons to big and little industry and offers a working force which in substantial measure has never enjoyed the right freely to organize, employers in our industry have selected that area as a fertile field for reaping profits in substandard wages, hours and working conditions.

Thousands of our members have already suffered unemployment because of relocation of entire plants or certain lines of production in those lower-paying areas. Our very successes in organization have driven our employers to decentralize, to flee to the South.

But we have followed them to the South, and we are exploding the myth that union organization in the South is virtually impossible. With the proper type of approach, participation, cooperation and understanding, the South can be organized, as we have proved in Anniston, Ala., Anderson, S. C., and other places.

A social revolution is taking place in the South, and IUE-CIO is in the vanguard of that revolution.

In our own union, we face not only unscrupulous employers in the North, decentralization, the runaway shop, and the disruptive tactics of the Communist-led United Electrical Workers, but also another problem—the industrial revolution being brought about by the gradual, almost unnoticed approach of the automatic factory.

There workers are replaced by machines, and production workers give away to technicians. They don't produce; they don't make. They watch gauges and turn knobs or throw switches. We are stressing organization of salaried people—the engineers, the technicians, the people who now work in offices, who are salaried rather than hourly-rated workers.

The Goal Remains The Same

But whether they are production workers or maintenance workers, or technical workers, we must continue the task of organizing. For the aspiration, the dream, the goal, is always the same: A better life for the people of today, and for those who come after us.

All our hopes and dreams and ambitions for ourselves and our children, for the nation and the world, are bound up in our ability to organize the unorganized. We must continue to be the spokesmen for the little people of our nation and of the world.

For organized workers fight not only for themselves but for everybody who believes in human decency and economic progress. Labor groups are one of the spearheads of human progress in a free society.

Organized labor is the core of American liberalism. Trade unionism is an essential counter-balance to the concentration of economic and political power in the hands of a privileged minority; in fact, the only counterpoise to rule by reaction and economic aristocracy.

We know today, more than ever before, that organization of workers into free trade unions, the development of sound economic and social programs, vigorous political action to elect liberal minded legislators, and programs for international unity and peace, are all part of the same way of life.

GE 10-Year Runaway Shop Drive Is Charged By IUE

GENERAL Electric Co. is embarked in a gigantic 10-year runaway shop plan, which will cause a depression in seven cities where GE is the dominant industry.

The CIO Electrical Workers said the electrical industry's biggest corporation plans "to break up its big plants into dozens of small operations throughout the country, primarily in the South."

"The depression GE has in store for seven cities," said IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey, "is the direct result of GE's calculated quest for greater and greater profits, which already are the highest in history and the highest of any manufacturer in the entire electrical industry."

Carey, who also is CIO secretary-treasurer, identified the cities as Schenectady and Syracuse, N. Y.; Lynn and Pittsfield, Mass.; Fort Wayne, Ind.; Bridgeport, Conn., and Erie, Pa.

"GE has an obligation to each of the communities where it is located," Carey added, "and we intend to see that it lives up to its obligation. GE cannot use, and then discard, people the way it does steel, copper and other scrap metal."

The IUE-CIO News gave details of the plan, which it said was outlined at a conference of some of the highest GE officials in Schenectady. The paper said it obtained a document containing minutes of the meeting.

THE PROGRAM features moving the jobs of present GE employes to "smaller towns where we can have a more favorable market." IUE-CIO said that means communities where the firm can get the same work done for rates as much as $1 an hour under the present ones.

The plan also envisons an intense speed-up to get the same amount of production without increasing the labor force, collossal rate cuts in practically every job that is not moved, and new automatic equipment that will do the work of even thousands of employes.

The program's aim is to double GE's net income by 1963, according to The IUE-CIO News.

GE Sales Dip As Profits Set Record

Despite a 7% drop in sales, the General Electric Co. chalked up record earnings of $93,856,000 in the first half of this year, Pres. Ralph J. Cordiner announced last week.

He indicated a $81 million cut in the firm's tax bill enabled GE to set the profits record in the face of lower sales.

N. Y. Transit Workers Okay Wage Pact

THE CIO Transport Workers employed by New York City's transit system approved by a lopsided vote of better than four-to-one a contract giving them wage increases of 6.5c to 11c an hour, retroactive to Jan. 1.

The vote was: 17,643 for the contract, 4089 against, 157 void and 419 challenged.

The election was conducted in 13 polling places under the supervision of a joint committee consisting of TWU members and representatives of the state-created Transit Authority, which operates the city's subway and surface lines.

THE TWO-YEAR contract covers some 35,000 members of the union's Local 100. The transit employes, who are covered by civil service, had been working under a memorandum of understanding.

Local 100 Pres. Matthew Guinan, who is also executive vice president of the international union, hailed the victory as "a guide post for other civil services employes throughout the country."

TWU-CIO Pres. Michael J. Quill, who led union negotiators, is in London attending sessions of the Intl. Transport Federation.

The agreement also calls for consideration of a further increase next Mar. 15. Other provisions provide for the appointment of an impartial arbiter to settle contract disputes and a promise by both sides to end alleged abuses of sick leave by seeking a legislative remedy.

Michigan CIO Wins Plea On Jobless Pay Benefits

AN ATTEMPT by Michigan's Republican attorney-general to deprive jobless workers of unemployment compensation due them has been blocked by the Michigan CIO Council.

In the first legal test of the ruling, vital to workers unemployed for lengthy periods, the CIO contention was upheld by a referee. Indications were that the battle would be carried to the Michigan Employment Security Commission appeal board.

The case resulted from an increase in unemployment compensation benefit periods, approved by the Michigan Legislature. The new law became effective on June 27 and CIO contended that workers who had exhausted their benefits before that date were eligible for six more weeks of compensation.

GOP Atty.-Gen. Frank Millard ruled that those who had drawn their final checks before June 27 were ineligible to receive the extra compensation. His ruling ignored the clear fact that workers jobless for a long period of time were desperately in need of compensation.

THE MICHIGAN CIO Council took the case of Murrel L. Rose, denied compensation because she collected her "last" check on May 10. At the same time, a fellow worker was advised to fail to pick up her check until after the June 27 deadline, so that she would not be declared ineligible.

The referee, upholding the CIO position, noted the unemployment compensation law was clearly designed to assist jobless workers and the courts had held it should be liberally interpreted to achieve that purpose.

The employer, the Packard Motor Car Co., was expected to appeal.

Joint River Organizing Drive Set By 3 CIO, AFL Unions

A CAMPAIGN to organize the thousands of workers who man the nation's river boats will be undertaken jointly by three CIO and AFL unions, R. J. Thomas, assistant to the CIO executive vice president, announced last week.

Joining in the membership drive are the CIO Maritime Union, CIO Marine Engineers, and AFL Masters, Mates & Pilots, which set up a Rivers Joint Organizing Committee at a meeting in St. Louis last week.

An organizing program, to be financed and staffed by the three unions, was approved, and it was voted to establish a headquarters in St. Louis. CIO Rep. Charles Barranco will be coordinator of the drive, Thomas said, and will take over at a national conference in Houston, Tex., on Aug. 4.

Presiding at the St. Louis meeting, at the request of the three unions, was William J. Smith, representing the office of CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe. He named a committee of James Hughes, NMU-CIO; Samuel P. Simons, MEBA-CIO, and E. A. Adams, MMP-AFL, to open the new office.

THE COMMITTEE also will prepare a leaflet, announcing that the three unions are acting jointly to bring the benefits of unionism to the nation's waterways, which will be distributed among licensed and unlicensed river craft personnel.

Barranco, whose home is in Baltimore, is a member of the CIO Steelworkers. He has been on the CIO organizing staff for several years.

Utility Workers Win 7.5-9c

THE CIO Utility Workers have won package settlements of from 7.5c to 9c an hour in new contracts with two companies.

An arbitration board awarded the union a 9c package in its dispute with the West Penn Power Co. The award included wage increases ranging from 5c to 7c an hour, and payment in full by the company of hospitalization, which formerly was paid by the employes.

A 7.5c an hour raise in wages and other benefits were obtained from the Ohio Edison Co., which serves a dozen cities in that state. UWUA-CIO members had struck after rejecting the firm's offer, and the settlement was arranged with the aid of the mayors of the cities affected and the U. S. Mediation and Conciliation Service.

Dispute Settled At Armour Plant

Some 4000 members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers last week ratified an agreement in a dispute over job loads at the Armour & Co. plant at Chicago and ended a week-long walkout.

Intl. Harvester To Lay Off 4900

International Harvester Co. said it is furloughing 4875 workers at seven farm equipment and three truck plants this month.

Big Utility 'Invasion' Of TVA Gets Senate's Okay

ANOTHER Republican giveaway of the people's resources was voted last week as the Senate blasted open a path for high-rate private utilities into the Tennessee Valley.

The Senate's decision to curb the Tenessee Valley Authority—by means of an involved deal between the Atomic Energy Commission and a big utility firm—came in the midst of around-the-clock debate over the Administration's atomic energy bill.

After a renewed plea by Pres. Eisenhower, the Senate defeated an amendment to block the TVA deal. Vote on the amendment, sponsored by Sen. Anderson (D. N. M.), was 56 to 36.

AN ALMOST solid lineup of Republicans plus 11 Democrats—many of them from Southern states—killed the move to block the big utility "invasion" of the TVA area.

Majority Leader Knowland (Calif.) charged that the week-long debate on the bill—which was continuing late last week—was "an attempt to filibuster and block the whole legislative program." He moved to close debate.

The Administration suffered a setback when the Senate approved, by a vote of 45 to 41, an amendment authorizing AEC to erect a string of government-owned power producing reactors that would supply rural cooperatives and public plants on a preferential basis.

Effect of the Senate's action okaying the AEC-private utility deal was described by the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association as opening "the way for invasion of TVA."

And the whole Administration atomic bill, covering both domestic and international aspects, was described by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther as a "colossal bonanza" for big business.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) described the measure as "another Administration give-away project" containing "many booby traps."

HE WARNED that there are "literally no safeguards for the people" in the measure. Pointing to the $12 billion U. S. investment in atomic energy, he warned the bill would "deny the federal government the right to use its own resources" in developing electric power from atomic energy.

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) called it a "$42-trillion give-away." He said it would provide "a blank check for the private utilities."

Earlier in the week-long debate, Democratic fire was targeted upon what Sen. Gore (D. Tenn.) called a "crooked deal" in the TVA area.

The Eisenhower move is an outgrowth of the refusal of Congress to vote funds for a new TVA steam plant in the growing Memphis area. Instead, the President ordered:

1. That the Atomic Energy Commission contract with with the Dixon-Yates utility combine—on a noncompetitive basis and with special income tax favors—to build a private utility steam plant in West Memphis, Ark., to supply the Memphis area.

2. That TVA channel public-produced power, which otherwise would go to Memphis, to atomic installations around Paducah, Ky.

A majority of the AEC members were opposed to the move, but Eisenhower ordered them to go ahead. The extra cost of private power vs. public power, according to AEC and TVA estimates, will be from $3.6 million to $5.5 million annually for 25 years.

If such a deal had been proposed by former Pres. Truman, Gore suggested, "impeachment proceedings probably would have been filed . . . scandal would have filled every headline."

Gore suggested that "the doubtful legality if not the illegality" of the Dixon-Yates deal was suggested by an amendment by Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.). This amendment, which was adopted, would give the AEC power to go ahead with the agreement.

STRONG CRITICISM of the attack on TVA came also from one of Eisenhower's strongest supporters in Congress, Sen. Cooper (R. Ky.).

Other Senators who joined in attacking the GOP give-away included Democratic Sens. Lehman (N. Y.), Neely (W. Va.), Jackson (Wash.) and Hill (Ala.)

(See Willard Shelton's comment on Page 5.)

'Colossal Bonanza' Seen By Reuther

Passage of Administration amendments to the Atomic Energy Act would cause the public "an incalculable loss," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther warned last week in letters to all senators urging their defeat.

He claimed the amendments delete anti-monopoly provisions and put "nothing adequate" in their place; do not protect the public from private control of patents on new developments by present contractors, and contain inadequate provisions for extention of the five-year compulsory licensing period, while the licensing process itself is ineffective.

Passage of the bill, he wrote, would yield "a colossal bonanza to giant industrial concerns and utilities."

HONORARY MEMBERS—Victor G. Reuther, center, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, pins CIO buttons on Jorge Ayala, right, and Idelfonso Quisbert, Bolivian Miners Union members who bicycled entire way to U. S.

Pedal-Pushing Miners—

It's Long Way To U.S., La Paz Cyclists Find

IT'S 11,200 miles by bicycle from La Paz, Bolivia, to Washington, D. C.

Two men who ought to know are Jorge Ayala and Idelfonso Quisbert, members of the Bolivian Miners Union, who pedalled the distance in the interests of better relations between workers in the two countries.

Quisbert, who was recording secretary of his local union, and Ayala, who was a shop steward, stopped off at CIO headquarters in Washington on their way to New York, Montreal and Ottawa. They were made honorary CIO members by Victor G. Reuther, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

THE TWO are traveling under auspices of the Federacion Sindical de Trabajadores Mineros de Bolivia, affiliated with the Central Obrera, the Central Labor Body of Bolivia. They brought special greetings to the CIO from Sec. Gen. Juan Lechin of the Bolivian Miners Federation and the union's foreign relations secretary, Mario Torres.

They have averaged 130-140 miles a day on their British-built bicycles on U. S. roads "but much less than that in other countries where the roads are not so good." They spent about $6 a day "mostly on food," sleeping nights by the road side.

Reuther welcomed the delegates on behalf of the CIO and told them the CIO "is willing to help all free labor movements in their fight against reaction."

Ayala and Quisbert will return to Washington from Canada for visits and talks with other American trade unions.

Tight Lobby Curb Urged By Kennedy

TIGHTER governmental control of lobbyists was urged last week by Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.) in a bill offered in the Senate.

Kennedy said the measure would eliminate flaws in the Federal Lobbying Act, pointed out by the Supreme Court earlier this year.

The Massachusetts Democrat said no action would be possible this late in the session but he urged consideration of the measure for action next year.

Kennedy's bill would provide for the registration and regulation of lobbyists. They would have to register with the attorney general and reveal how much they spent.

THE SENATOR'S proposal would outlaw "contingent fee" contracts—contracts which link a lobbyist's fee to passage or defeat of a particular measure. Kennedy called these contracts a "serious reflection on the legislative process."

He also urged the elimination of provisions which are vague or of "dubious constitutionality."

Kennedy said the Supreme Court's decision, upholding the present law's constitutionality was based on a narrow interpretation and demonstrated the need for changes.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

Moody Mourned As 'Freedom's Champion'

BLAIR MOODY
Devoted public servant dies

THE DEATH in mid-career of Blair Moody was mourned by CIO last week as "the loss of a gallant champion of the cause of freedom, social justice and brotherhood."

Moody, veteran Washington newspaperman and former Michigan Senator, died while recovering from a recent attack of virus pneumonia. He had been expected to resume his campaign for the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator, opposing Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.).

The death of Moody at 52 was described by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther as "a tragedy to the state and to the nation. In every field in which he was active, he was a fearless fighter for the ideals in which he believed. . . ."

Reuther praised Moody's brief service in the Senate as "a devoted public servant" who constantly sought "the greatest benefit, spiritually and materially, to the greatest number of people, here and throughout the world."

Moody had served as Washington bureau chief of the Detroit News for many years. In 1951, he was appointed by Gov. G. Mennen Williams to fill out the term of the late Sen. Vandenberg (R.). The next year, Moody was defeated in a close race by Sen. Potter (R.).

Returning to Detroit, he was active in a printing firm and as publisher of community newspapers, and was interested in proposals for a new Detroit daily. He also produced the national TV show, "Meet Your Congress."

House Unit Sees Peril In Brownell Bills

THE HOUSE Judiciary Committee last week sharply slapped Atty.-Gen. Brownell, charging his bill dealing with subversives in defense plants was "hastily drawn" and endangered the "constitutional rights of individuals."

The committee report, rejecting two Brownell measures dealing with Communist infiltration of labor unions and defense plants, agreed with the reasoning advanced by the CIO and AFL.

Both organizations had urged creation of a 12-man special committee, representing labor, industry and the public, to study the matter.

The report praised CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany for supporting the suggested special commission to investigate the problem. The fight for the commission was led by Rep. Walter (D. Pa.).

MEANTIME, the Senate Judiciary Committee did approve the Brownell bill for handling subversives in defense plants, ignoring the House committee's warning that it endangered individual rights.

Previously the Senate committee had okayed the Brownell union proposal, which CIO has charged would create a "propaganda jamboree" for the Communists.

The Senate committee also approved a bill providing the death penalty for peacetime espionage.

Looking to November (See Page 6)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., August 2, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 31

Atom-Powered Steamroller Wins

—See Page 3

It's Not One For The Road— Under flood-lighted Capitol dome, three senators took time out for a cup of coffee during "breather" from the Senate's around-the-clock debate of the Administration's atomic give-away bill. In the group (from left) are Sens. Murray (D. Mont.), Wiley (R. Wis.) and Beall (R. Md.). Last week the Senate approved a modified atomic bill. (Story on Page 3.)

Primaries In Summary—

Shiverscrats Get Setback At Polls

A WHOLE flock of chickens came home to roost in Texas as the biggest state totted up its primary election returns.

Gov. Allan Shivers faced an Aug. 28 runoff election against Ralph W. Yarborough, Austin attorney.

Shivers led the defection of the Lone Star State's Democrats to Eisenhower in 1952. He then beat Yarborough by 345,000 votes. His margin this year was about 20,000 ballots.

On the other hand, Sen. Johnson (D.), minority leader, won his re-election fight easily although in 1948 his margin was only 87 votes out of more than a million cast.

A BITTER FOE of labor, Rep. Lucas, of Grapevine, trailed Mayor Jim Wright of Weatherford by more than 12,000 votes in his re-election bid. Lucas last year sponsored the amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act which provided for completely open shop "right to work" legislation.

Eighteen other congressmen, all Democrats, won re-election. Among them was Rep. Rayburn, former House Speaker, who was returned to his 22nd term.

Party regularity was a key issue in Texas voting, with Shivers' unprecedented third term try a substantial factor. Shivers broke with Adlai E. Stevenson in the '52 campaign and helped lead his state into the Eisenhower column.

For this reason, the balloting in 1954 attracted national interest and may have important repercussions in the next presidential race.

SHIVERS INJECTED the CIO into his campaign, claiming he was running against CIO-PAC, the AFL and assorted "Northern" interests. He even included a vague reference to "Wall Street."

Yarborough led the "Loyalist" faction, with loyalty defined as adherence to the Democratic Party. His forces have been trying for two years to wrest control of county Democratic organizations from the conservative or "Shivercrat" wing of the party.

Shivers failed to carry his home county, Jefferson, for the second time in the recent voting. He trailed Yarborough by 1000 votes in the county, which includes the cities of Beaumont and Port Arthur, where the CIO Oil Workers are heavily organized.

County conventions last week will go far towards establishing control of party machinery in the state through elections to the state convention on Sept. 14.

Here are the results of primary election contests held in three Southern states last week:

ARKANSAS: Sen. McClellan (D.) won his bid for a third term, defeating former Gov. Sidney J. McMath and two other candidates by a scant margin. As the ranking Democrat on the Senate subcommittee hearing the Army-McCarthy dispute, McCellan got wide publicity.

McMath was known as a leading Southern liberal in contrast to the extremely conservative views and record of the incumbent. McCellan answered charges that he was a "Republican" by widespread publication of laudatory letters from 43 fellow Democrats in the Senate.

A runoff election was set for Aug. 16 to decide the governor's race. While Gov. Francis Cherry piled up a commanding lead over his nearest opponent, Orval Faubus, Huntsville weekly newspaper publisher, the total vote of the other candidates left him short of a clear majority.

LOUISIANA: Light voting swept Sen. Ellender (D.) into a fourth term despite the stiffest fight of his career. His nearest rival, Frank B. Ellis, had early leads in the cities but they vanished when returns came in from rural sections, where Ellender had support from the politically-powerful Long family.

OKLAHOMA: Fred Mock ran up a slim lead in the Republican Senate primary race and will face incumbent Sen. Kerr (D.) in November. Kerr was renominated when former Gov. Roy Turner dropped out of the runoff.

State Sen. Raymond Gary defeated his former campaign manager, William O. Coe, for the Democratic nomination for governor.

A rancher, Cowboy Pink Williams, unseated Lieut. Gov. Herry in the runoff, ending Herry's 20-year tenure. Williams' postcards condemning Pres. Eisenhower were labelled "obscene" by the Post Office Dept., some months ago, after GOP protests.

(The campaigns in Oregon and Tennessee, see Page 6.)

Douglas Drive Is Looking Up

The figures say that things are looking up for Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) in his campaign for re-election to the U. S. Senate.

In 1948 when he spoke to a rally in Danville, Ill., only 15 persons showed up. Recently, some 700 voters turned out at Douglas Park to shake his hands and listen to his talk. —(PAI)

Big Steel's Earnings Dip

U. S. STEEL CORP. sales and earnings were down for 1954's second quarter, compared to last year's, but directors declared the usual 75c dividend on common stock.

Net income for the quarter was $49 million or $1.63 a common share as against the 1953 second quarter figures of $55.6 million or $1.89 a share. Sales of the world's largest steel company totaled $840 million in the June quarter and shipments amounted to 5.3 million tons.

Earnings for the year's first half amount to $93.8 million or $3.11 a share. In the first half of 1953 earnings were $105 million or $3.54 a share.

Steel Output Falls

Steel production last week was at a scheduled rate of 64.5% of capacity, down from 65.3% for the week before.

FIRST CONTRACT is signed by TWU-CIO and the Transit Authority, which operates New York City's transportation system. Seated (from left) are TA members Henry K. Norton and William Fullen; Pres. Matthew Guinan, TWU-CIO Local 100, and TWU-CIO Sec.-Treas. Gustav Faber. Other TWU and management officials are standing.

CIO Aide Sees 'Excellent' Chance For New Guatemalan Unions

CHANCES are "excellent" that a free, democratic trade union movement will develop in Guatemala, Daniel Benedict, associate director of the CIO Dept. for International Affairs, said last week on his return from a visit to that country.

Benedict worked closely with Serafino Romualdi, of the AFL, and with representatives of ORIT, western hemisphere arm of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to get a Guatemalan labor movement off to a good start in the wake of the revolution that unseated the Communist-dominated government of Pres. Arbenz.

Col. Carlos Castillo Armas, leader of the revolution and head of the present government, "sounded as if he were willing to go along on the existence of free trade unions," Benedict said in recounting a meeting with him.

IN ADDITION, he told a press conference in National CIO headquarters in Washington, Armas said he would not attempt to make the union movement a political tool of his government.

"The Guatemalan workers felt the need for unions badly," Benedict said. "They had a strong feeling that a vacuum was created when the Communist leadership was removed, and that someone or something had to move in quickly. If not a strong labor movement, they felt, it possibly could be the Communists or the Peronists.

"We—representatives of the Cuban labor movement, the AFL and myself—worked with the key union, the railroad workers; with the postal workers, other groups and exiles back from Mexico to try and set the basis for a national labor federation on democratic grounds. We think we helped."

The new government had ousted all elected labor leaders from their posts, regardless of whether or not they were Communists, and ordered new elections in three months.

Those active in getting a new federation started, Benedict said, include both newcomers to labor leadership and veterans, many back from exile, who had struggled for union principles and against the Communists even during the Arbenz regime.

"BETWEEN US we managed to get sort of a provisional organization established under the leadership of Reuben Villatoro, who had formed a democratic union under the Arbenz government, was arrested, tortured and exiled," Benedict said.

"We got in touch with a second legitimate group trying to organize along religious lines, and attempted to get them together in anticipation of the coming elections.

"ORIT is sending in a delegation to help the Guatemalans organize. It has not yet been named, but probably will be headed by a Mexican and manned principally by unionists from other Latin American countries, with possible one or two Canadians and Americans.

"We were not trying to set up a Latin American branch of the U. S. labor movement."

NLRB Nails Carolina Mill For Fighting Textile Union

MANAGEMENT of the Royal Cotton Mills in Wake Forest, N. C., has been told that it was guilty of unfair labor practices in refusing to bargain with the CIO Textile Workers.

The National Labor Relations Board censured the company for refusing to recognize or bargain with the union. It ordered it to meet and bargain upon request as the exclusive representative of the employes.

A strike at the plant in 1951 was marked by dynamitings, shooting and bloodshed. TWUA-CIO officials said it will call on the mill owners to resume negotiations where they were interrupted more than four years ago.

Royal Cotton broke off negotiations with TWUA after receiving an unconfirmed report that the majority of workers had switched to the AFL Textile Workers Union.

The NLRB scored the mill for this break-off, saying that the firm "did not have and could not have had a bona fide belief that the union may have lost its majority status."

Since the end of negotiations in May 1951, the TWUA charges have bounced back and forth between state and federal courts and the NLRB.

(More on NLRB policies, Page 8)

$1.25 Wage Floor Asked By Bailey

A BILL revising the Wage-Hours Act, including a boost in the statutory minimum wage from the present 75c an hour to $1.25, was introduced in the House last week by Rep. Bailey (D. W. Va.).

The measure also would wipe out many of the "unjustified exemptions" in the act as it was passed in 1938 and amended in 1950, and bring about six million additional workers under its coverage. In addition, Bailey said, extension of coverage would give protection against wage chiseling to some three million more workers.

The CIO has long demanded a $1.25 minimum wage, broader coverage and fewer exemptions.

Bailey pointed out that if his bill were to become law, it would have little effect on most workers. Primarily, he said, it would affect "industries whose wage standards have lagged and those employers who have failed to grant prevailing wage increases."

Hirings, Layoffs Slightly Better

The factory hiring rate in June was the lowest for that month since the end of World War II, while the layoff rate was the highest for any June in five years, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

However, both figures showed some improvement over May. The hiring rate rose from 27 to 36 per 1000 employes during the 30-day period, sparked by employment of temporary workers such as students.

Senate Puts Curbs In GOP's Atomic Bill

"AN ATOMIC-powered steam roller" rammed an atomic energy bill through both houses of Congress last week but not before a doughty band of senators forced considerable modifications of the worst provisions of the GOP measure.

The longest, most sustained debate in Senate history crumbled suddenly after 13 stormy days and four all-night sessions. The Administration bill was passed 57 to 28 and went immediately to a House-Senate conference committee to resolve the difference in the two versions.

The House quietly passed the original Administration bill which contained no safeguards against monopoly practices or protection from the exploitation of a future source of abundant cheap electric power from the atom.

The vote was 231 to 154 with Republican leaders beating down every effort to offer amendments similar to those being hammered out on the Senate side of the Capitol. (See Page 5 for a review of issues behind the atomic energy debate.)

Amendments Won

While the atomic energy measure ranks as one of the colossal give-aways of the Eisenhower Administration, opponents of the bill took comfort from the significant changes their amendments made in the legislation which Majority Leader Knowland (R. Calif.) originally had tried to bulldoze through in one day.

There was apprehension that the conference committee report might worsen the Senate-approved version. If the upper chamber's progress in the public interest is undermined in the report, the same group who fought for the amendments will attempt to have the Senate recommit the bill.

A valiant effort was made by about 30 Democrats, a handful of Republicans and Sen. Morse, the lone Independent, to make the real issues behind the atomic energy clear to the public and protect the $12 billion investment by U. S. taxpayers in atomic research.

They clamored for the reasons behind the undue haste in attempting passage of the Republican version even before there was a report on industrial use of the atom from the Atomic Energy Commission, created in 1946 under the McMahon Act as the watchdog for the public's security and interests.

Bonus For Business

Bluntly they stated the GOP urgency was dictated by a desire to get the bonus-for-business bill through Congress while Republicans remain in control.

Twelve amendments to the original bill were voted by the Senate before the showdown on passage.

Eight of these were authored by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), the others by Sens. Johnson (D. Colo.), Gore (D. Ky.), Kerr (D. Okla.) and Gillette (D. Ia.). Amendments offered by Morse were ruthlessly tabled by Knowland without opportunity for debate.

The most significant of the amendments broke down the monopoly implications which had heavy GOP support, strengthened the anti-trust provisions applying to those licensed to produce atomic power and required atomic licensees using electric power in interstate commerce to come within the regulations of the Federal Power Commission.

Others empowered the AEC to produce, market and distribute its own power generated through the atom to serve as a "yardstick" against privately built plants; gave the AEC control over atomic patent rights for 10 years, instead of the five in the Administration bill; and banned reimbursement of income taxes to firms with AEC contracts.

The Power Issue

Another opened up atomic power sources to rural electrical co-operatives, public power companies and small private power companies. All of these had been virtually excluded in the GOP measure, with preference given to a tight, small group of big operators.

While battling for the public interest against the spectacular GOP grab-attempt, the minority bloc of senators had to defend themselves against charges of favoring a "socialistic scheme" to reserve atomic power sources as the exclusive domain of the federal government.

Sponsors of the amendments voiced no strong objection to admission of private concerns into the field of atomic development but insisted on the right of the federal government to operate "yardstick" plants to serve as a check on rates charged by private utilities in much the same manner that TVA operates within its area.

Shortly before the vote on passage an appeal was made to Knowland to lay the bill aside for this session by labor, farm and public power leaders.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Elwood D. Swisher of the CIO Chemical Workers, Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock, CIO Textile Workers and Sec. John Lawson, CIO Stone Workers, were among those signing the appeal.

They pointed out that no public hearings had been held on the present version of the bill and charged that it was being steamrollered through Congress. "This is our first experience with an atomic-powered steam roller," they declared.

Taxes

The "relief for the rich" tax bill went to the White House after Senate approval by a 61 to 22 roll call vote. The House voted the "tax favors" measure the day before, 315 to 77, after Democrats failed in a last ditch fight to knock out the Eisenhower Administration's $204 million handout to wealthy stockholders.

Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.) blasted the "trickle-down" theory of taxation contained in the GOP tax bill.

"We all recall the 'rich man's tax bill' of the Republican 80th Congress," Dingell said.

"You would think that the fate which the Republicans met at the polls as a result of their actions in the 80th Congress would have taught them a lesson. Apparently they have not learned. They are back again with a bill to take care of 'coupon clippers'."

Housing

A 59-to-21 Senate vote of approval sent the housing bill to the White House, accompanied by Democratic charges that the measure sounded the "death knell" for public housing.

The compromise public housing section calls for only 35,000 units in the next year, instead of the 140,000 units over four years urged by the President.

Even the 35,000 units are hedged with almost prohibitive restrictions. They can be built only in cities where slum clearance, urban renewal or redevelopment is being carried on and where local governing bodies certify the units are needed for persons displaced by slum clearance operations.

Economy

A warning that corrective measures must be taken now to prevent a worse recession next year was voiced by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.).

"Moving sideways is not good enough," he warned. "Arrested development is not a desirable goal."

Sparkman cited "a startling decline in the farm sector of the economy" and unemployment amounting to 5.1% of the civilian labor force as indicating the need for anti-recession action.

Farm

With a decision on the farm price support bill a major unanswered question in the final days of the session, several other lawmakers slapped at the Administration's program to whittle down price supports.

Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) said the Benson farm plan would slash farm income by 25% and speed the country toward depression, while there would not be a noticeable reduction in consumer food prices.

Rep. Metcalf (D. Mont.) interpreted the overwhelming vote for wheat production quotas by U. S. wheat farmers as a vote "against flexible price supports, against the sliding scale and for the present price support program."

Foreign Aid

The last money bill of the session, a $5.2 billion foreign aid appropriation, was approved by the House by a 266 to 128 vote. The mutual security bill was cut by 13% in committee from Pres. Eisenhower's request, principally in technical assistance funds, but further cuts were defeated on the floor.

Statehood

The final knife was stuck in the corpse of statehood bills for Hawaii and Alaska. The House Rules Committee tabled a motion to send the Senate-voted joint statehood bill to Congress.

Schools

A House Labor Subcommittee began hearing Rep. Kearns' (R. Pa.) bill for a $5-billion federal program to help communities in school construction. Kearns, an educator, said the GOP Administration has been moving too slowly on federal school aid.

CIO earlier joined with a number of educational groups in calling for action by the present Congress on federal school grants.

Investigations

The Senate Rules Subcommittee considering possible "fair play" rules governing congressional investigations heard some frank testimony from Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.).

McCarthy, the Senate's chief investigator as chairman of the Government Operations Committee, said:

"No rule on earth can endow a man with brains. I don't think you can ever pass a rule making an irresponsible man responsible."

Rep. Javits (R. N.Y.) demanded that the one-sided investigation of philantropic foundations be reopened, to give the foundations a chance to testify.

National Debt

The question of raising the national debt—which came up at the end of the first session of the 83rd Congress—will be on the floor again before the present session ends. Pres. Eisenhower said an increase of the present $275-billion debt ceiling is inescapable.

FORTY WINKS—That's what Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) was catching on a Senate cloakroom cot, between speeches denouncing atomic give-away bill. He warned it would set up a "gigantic private monopoly" in atomic power field. One Morse speech set a new Senate record, lasting 12 hours and 22 minutes.

Reminder

Senate GOP leaders tabled without opportunity for discussion an amendment by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.), although he charged that without the amendment the atomic energy bill would produce a "scandalous situation that will make the FHA scandals look like nothing."

Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) had asked if the amendment was designed to prevent the power trusts from netting the "same kind of windfalls" that builders have been reaping under the federal housing programs.

Tempers

Tempers grew raw-edged as the atomic energy debate went into its third week. Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) assailed Majority Leader Knowland (R. Calif.) as the "real obstructionist" of orderly legislation.

"The majority leader is not Louis XIV, he is just another senator," Humphrey shouted at one point.

Hey, Joe! Here's Something You Better Investigate! ⟶

THE SECRET is out now! They're raising little Russians on the old homestead of Joe McCarthy.

McCarthy and his family have rented the comfortable farm, near Appleton, Wis., where Joe was born, to an Appleton banker.

The banker's wife, Press Associates has discovered, raises Russian wolfhounds in Joe's barn as a hobby. Maybe the Senate should investigate. —(PAI)

Fighting The Good Fight

Outcome of the Senate's bitter fight over the Administration's atomic energy bill, as Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) observed after the day-and-night sessions ended, was "a defeat for the best interests of the American people, but in no sense a victory for the Eisenhower Administration."

In that fight, the foes of the atomic give-away in the Senate faced "an atomic-powered steam roller." But that steam roller stripped a few gears in GOP Leader Knowland's drive to push the bill through in only a day. A fortnight later, he got his vote, but with these consequences:

First, the spelling out of the potentials of electric power through atomic energy by the small band of Senators was beginning to reach home to the American people, who already have a $12 billion investment in atomic development.

Second, some of the wide-open loopholes in the original Administration bill were closed by a dozen-odd amendments. These amendments broadly would apply to atomic electricity development some of the lessons, some of the guidepost standards now well-established in the field of public power.

Third, the vote of both the Senate and House to open the door of the Tennessee Valley to high-rate private utilities—through the Atomic Energy Commission's deal in the Memphis area—was a stark revelation of the Administration's program for whittling away the nation's resources. The National Association of Electric Companies, biggest-spending lobbyists in Washington, has plenty of results to show for the $547,789 it shelled out last year.

Now the atomic energy bill goes to conference, to resolve the differences between the House bill, passed just as the Administration wanted it, and the Senate measure with several important amendments. The fight still has to be resolved in these closing days of the 83rd Congress.

Whatever the final outcome, America is fortunate that there are so many men in the Senate with the fortitude to stand up to the "atomic-powered steam roller" in defense of the people's interests.

No Peaches And Cream

"Miss America and Agriculture Sec. Benson drank milk today and agreed it's fine stuff for beauty," according to a recent Associated Press report.

We bet he still looks the same to the farmers.—PAC Pipeline.

Nutcracker Suite

Watch out for the "states' rights" nutcracker which big business now is trying to snap on labor.

One arm of it is the new policy rules and regulations of the National Labor Relations Board. These decisions bar thousands of workers in hundreds of types of businesses from going to the board to seek union recognition or to fight unfair labor practices by employers.

The other arm is the drive—a drive that seems to be gaining speed—for enactment of "right to scab" open shop laws in the states. Three states have enacted such laws recently; more are threatened next year.

This situation (reviewed in detail on Page 8 of The CIO News this week) is another demonstration that union organizing and bargaining requires political action as a strong right arm. How about you?—Have you given your buck to PAC, registered, checked the candidates? Are you prepared to vote?

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS

Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII August 2, 1954 No. 31

Never Darken Our Door Again

In Other Words—

Peron's Drive Against Labor

"Peron's Infiltration Tactics," describing the Argentine dictator's moves to establish beachheads in the labor movements of other nations, is reprinted in part from the Free Labor World, official organ of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

DESPITE THE CHECKS his agents have suffered in most Latin American republics, Peron has not renounced his efforts to penetrate the trade union movements of various countries.

One of his methods is to appoint labor attaches with the duty not only of exchanging information in the normal way but also of entering into intelligence of quite another kind with responsible trade unionists and leaders. These officials do a great deal of propaganda for justicialismo, and have frequent recourse to corruption in the form of invitations to such leaders to stay in the most luxurious of Buenos Aires' hotels, travel free.

An interesting observation about these labor attaches is that not only in their printed propaganda but also socially as well as officially, they are careful to abstain from any utterance of an anti-Communistic nature. On the other hand, no opportunity slips them of criticizing both the traditions and the everyday practices of free trade unions.

Nor are all their activities limited to the Latin American countries. They are noticed also in Europe, particularly in Geneva, where the Intl. Labor Organization has its offices, also in Paris, the Scandinavian countries, Holland and Belgium, where free trade unionism is very strong and enjoys great prestige. They are manifest also in India, Japan, Turkey and the Middle East.

In 1952, the government of Costa Rica found it necessary to inform Peron of its desire that his labor attaches be recalled. It had been amply proved that they had fomented and financed strike movements with no real foundation, thus creating a social situation which might have developed into a serious national threat.

In the same year, the labor attaches in Rio de Janeiro carried on such activities in the Brazilian trade union movement that the authorities were forced to take action to curb them. The Argentine Embassy was using these officials for the distribution of propaganda, and it was a matter of public knowledge that professional agitators, financed by the embassy, were trying to create a general atmosphere of social disintegration and to bring nationwide unions into the network of Peron's own rump trade union organization.

Towards the end of 1952 and during 1953 the activities of Peron's labor attaches in Uruguay assumed such a character that the government was forced to declare them personae non gratae.

In Venezuela, where one of the most ferocious tyrannies in Latin America prevails, the Argentine labor attache is maneuvering to bring the state trade unions under the Peronist wing.

It is in Colombia that Peronist infiltration, through the labor attache, has had its greatest success in Latin America.

Peron's agents are waging an intense propaganda campaign with pamphlets, periodicals, reviews and posters—and as usual, paid journeys to Buenos Aires to impress the leaders of those organizations. They have even succeeded in creating a pseudo-trade union federation, the National Confederation of Workers (CNT), under the leadership of the former secretary of the Colombian Confederation of Labor (CTC), Hernando Rodriguez.

Distribute Red Propaganda

In India and Japan, the Argentine Embassy is publishing monthly bulletins which are actually weapons of infiltration into workers' institutions.

In Turkey, since 1952, the Argentine labor attache has begun the dissemination—particularly among unions—of enormous quantities of Communist propaganda. The Turkish government had to ask the embassy to change its labor attache because of his interference in internal affairs.

Peron, who has set himself up as a champion of an hysterical brand of nationalism, attempts thus to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries. The agents of Peron, like those of the Kremlin, pretend great interest in the material and moral welfare of the workers. Their real intentions are to impede the development of free trade unions. Proof of their ineffectiveness in Latin America is that the so-called Association of Organized Latin American Workers (ATLAS) has no support but that of a few mercenary ex-leaders.

The results of the activities of Peron's labor attaches in Europe and Asia are precisely nil. Free workers in all countries should nevertheless be warned.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE GREAT Sen. Norris (R., Neb.) fought for 20 years to keep the government's World War I investment in power facilities at Muscle Shoals, Ala., from being sold to "free enterprise." Out of that fight, crowned within 1933 with total success, grew the great Tennessee Valley Authority, built with funds furnished by the federal government but a model of cooperation in regional redevelopment.

Talking About Windfalls

It may take another 20 years, now that Pres. Eisenhower has been sold a bill of goods by the self-proclaimed "free enterprisers," for the people to regain control of the values from their $12 billion investment in atomic energy. Still the senators who made the good fight against the vicious features of the President's atomic energy bill could take courage from the example and ultimate success of Sen. Norris.

"Free enterprisers" was a laughable term to apply to the private utility combine described as the Dixon-Yates group, with whom the President "directed" the AEC to negotiate a contract to undermine the TVA in the Memphis area.

The Dixon-Yates "free enterprisers" didn't even have the engineering specifications to guide them in making a bid for the right to build a power plant to hem in TVA's natural expansion.

A Rosy Prospect

What they did have was the rosy prospect of a 25-year contract to sell power to the TVA—whether or not TVA liked it—at rates that would pay for their plant, cover local, state and federal taxes, give them a profit, and at the end of the 25 years give them their plant free of debt.

Is this "free enterprise," the prospect of a gain or loss as a result of a risk of private capital? Nonsense. It is state capitalism with the government furnishing funds and a favored few private citizens pocketing a guaranteed profit.

Talk about "windfalls!" Sen. Capehart (R., Ind.) professes indignation at the profits reaped by builders of postwar rental-housing projects—in strict accordance with the law written by Congress—but he had no indignation about Eisenhower's attack on the independence of both the AEC and the TVA, or about the windfall the President ordered for Dixon-Yates.

The President is so hot against public power that he abandoned the Hells Canyon project on the Snake River before launching his attack on the well-established TVA.

Why doesn't he look north to Canada, a conservative country with little addiction to Socialism, but a country in which even conservatives recognize the tremendous virtues of public power?

More Power Means Jobs

The Province of Quebec, most conservative of them all, is building a Bersimis River project, costing $225 million, to produce 1.1 million horsepower. It is planning a huge Hamilton River project to produce between five and six million horsepower.

Ontario is in the power business, so is British Columbia.

Why? Because all Canada recognizes that cheap public power is the key to an expanding private-enterprise economy, to increased industrialization, to a growing population.

Both the TVA and our Grand Coulee and Bonneville projects contributed enormously to the development of profit-making, tax-paying business and commerce. They contributed to bigger payrolls, bigger income taxes, an expanding ecenomy—and better living.

The Eisenhower attitude would both hamper our present public power program and sell out our atomic energy investment by preventing the AEC itself from building reactors for the commercial production of electricity.

The senators fighting this scheme—fighting to defend the people's rights in their own atomic investment, fighting to save the TVA—will win their battle in the end. Even if a temporary defeat tastes sour in their mouths, let them remember George Norris.

Quite A Contrast

J. A. Livingston, a syndicated business columnist whose observations are always rewarding, had a column recently deploring the "impublicity" favored by business executives who like to conceal part of their "take" from their jobs.

It turns out, according to Livingston, that Security and Exchange Commission rules requiring corporations to list the "aggregate remuneration" of their executives are pretty loose.

The figures on "aggregate remuneration" don't include what an executive may get in stock options, in funds set aside to pay future pensions, in fat expense accounts "which are a cost to the corporation and an emolument to the executive."

The stockholder who gets a report from his company's management may think he has the facts about what the executives are paid, but in reality he has only part of the facts, courtesy of the looseness of the regulations of the SEC.

On the other hand, James C. Worthy, assistant secretary of commerce for administration, told an audience the other day that "too many managements" try to "buy the loyalty and and goodwill of their employes" through the "easy way" of "generous wage scales, liberal benefits, attractive working conditions, etc."

This isn't the answer, said Worthy, adding "basically, the problem is a moral and an ethical problem."

The Capitol Hill Scene—

The Potential Of Atomic Power Is Reason For Senate's Debate

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

THE FATE of the people's stake in power generated through atomic energy was the real issue in the marathon debate over the Administration's bill in the Senate.

The issue was all but lost in the confusion of parliamentary maneuvers. A torrent of words nearly drowned out the theme and the reason for the record-breaking sessions.

The stake for which a small, doughty group of senators fought the Eisenhower Administration and the power monopolists is immense. It amounts to $75 for every man, woman and child in the nation. It totals $12 billion in taxpayers' money.

Private power companies and a handful of corporations have been eyeing that lush prize hungrily almost since the days when A-bombs were revealed to the world in fireballs over Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Utilities Muscle In

Scientists have shown that the tremendous power within the atom can be as great a force for good as for destruction. Production of electric power through peaceful use of atomic energy is practical.

With the blessing and all the help the Eisenhower Administration can rally, the private power firms are trying to muscle their way to control of this electrical production. It was against this give-away of America's future that some senators stood firm so long.

Stripped of the peripheral issues that threatened to obscure the motives of the Administration, the legislative hassle concerned GOP efforts to rewrite the Atomic Energy Act of 1946. This act set up an Atomic Energy Commission to have exclusive control of all nuclear development as the agent of all the people.

Not unexpectedly, the GOP Administration wants to turn over the peaceful uses of atomic energy, developed at public expense, to private industry. Rep. Cole (R. N.Y.) introduced the necessary legislation as chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy.

Not content with grabbing at this fantastic prize, the private power firms have put a price tag on their acceptance of the public's property. They want to be given and own outright all the fissionable material they will need in development, they want the federal government to pay the estimated $150 million to build the necessary experimental plants and to subsidize the operation of these plants indefinitely.

U. S. Picks Up The Check

With the government picking up the check, the companies want the sole ownership and control of any basic patents on the developments, products or processes that may be discovered in their experimental work.

In short, the "free enterprise" power companies ask only that the American people pay for the materials, the plants and the costs of experimentation, give up the basic patents—and then pay whatever the companies want to charge in the way of profits.

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) told the Senate during the debate that the GOP attitude and that of Eisenhower apparently coincided with the views of the National Association of Manufacturers which published a booklet, "Free the Atom." The booklet quotes Pres. Alfred Iddles of the Babcock and Wilcox Co., one of the firms now participating in the atomic program.

It was Iddles' belief that the taxpayers' expenditure for atomic research was primarily a military investment. As such, he maintained, "we have already received the benefit in terms of national security at a critical period when equal security was unobtainable by other than atomic weapons."

Morse declared that if any doubt remained of the intention of big business to take over the people's atomic power resource and exploit it without regard for the public interest, it should be dispelled by that statement of the spokesman of the NAM.

Morse and others called attention to the glaring loopholes in the GOP legislation. Among the heavy losers, they noted, would be the rural electric power co-ops and other small producers and distributors of power.

"The great number of these systems represent a tremendous financial investment by American small businessmen and farmers," Morse said. "In the not too distant future power produced from nuclear sources will be lower in cost than power from conventional sources, if the atomic power plant is large enough.

Small Firms Doomed

"If the smaller systems are unable to obtain the cheaper power from the federal government the utility giants will be in a position to victimize them or put them out of business by refusing to furnish them with cheap power and underselling them on the customer market.

"The history of monopoly big business in America shows that the giants of industry have not hesitated to resort to such practices when the opportunity has been afforded them."

Senate Democrats and a very few Republicans who deserted their party in its latest give-away attempt had warned of the weaknesses in the compulsory licensing provisions of the proposed legislation, now pegged at five years in a feeble gesture against monopolies.

If cheap atomic electric power becomes practical within five years, opponents of the bill asked, what guarantees were provided that it would not be withheld by the power trusts until they had worked out their investments in already existing facilities?

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther expressed the CIO's "strong conviction" that if there is to be private ownership of atomic facilities for electric production, there must also be federal participation and adequate safeguards to prevent development of monopoly.

—Herblock in Washington Post and Times Herald

"It Must Be Nice To Be A Friend Of The President."

Service With A Smile

The "opportunities for exploitation" in the Administration's give-away of atomic energy rights "dwarf anything" presented to the Congress during his tenure, Sen. Gore (D. Tenn.) declared. He added:

"All that is required is for a company to bring up a roll of blueprints, a cheerful smile, a slogan of free enterprise willing to take over, and the contents of the public storehouse can be handed over without question with wheelbarrows furnished to cart it away."

Skipped On Facts

Most of the nation's press, throughout the long debate over the future of atomic power, failed to adequately report the facts of the fight.

Washington dispatches treated the battle as though it were a championship baseball game, reporting, to the exact second, the time taken by each speaker and detailing all of his humorous remarks.

The major portions of the speeches, in which the Democrats seriously outlined the defects and give-away features of the law, were not printed. The papers also ignored the notable feature that the speakers concentrated on the issues and did not burden the record with quotes from the Bible or other extraneous matter.

Looking To November—

So Goes Oregon, Perhaps Out Of GOP Camp

(Another in a series of The CIO News features on the major political campaigns.)

By MILTON PLUMB

SHADES of "the Oregon system" — the tradition of democratic legislation which was part of the original Progressive movement of 50 years ago—seem to be hovering over the State today.

Traditionally Republican Oregon in 1954 may elect its first Democratic Senator since 1914. There's a good chance that young, popular and progressive Richard L. Neuberger, whose writing on the West has made him known throughout the nation, will be sent to Washington.

That Neuberger should even be conceded a chance against Sen. Cordon (R.), chairman of the committee which reported out the $40 billion "tidelands" oil give-away, is a good indication of how the GOP Administration's policies are being received by resources-conscious Oregonians.

Discontent is in the air, and it may be enough to make the State—which usually gives the Republicans a greater margin of victory than even Maine or Vermont—tip the scales the other way.

"If there's a Democratic trend this fall, I'll be in the Senate," Neuberger predicted in an exclusive interview with The CIO News.

"Cordon, however, definitely has the advantage of money and the press.

"We Democrats in Oregon need a trend to neutralize the huge campaign expenditures that are being made by our opponents. If it's possible just to buy an election, the Republicans will win."

On this point, The Congressional Quarterly has noted that Oregon has the greatest disproportion of political expenditures between the two parties.

Cordon Owes A Debt

For example, in 1948 when the late Manley J. Wilson, then editor of The CIO Woodworker, ran against Cordon, the Republican State Committee spent $211,071. The Democratic State Committee total for all candidates was only $1025.

Even in 1952, the best Democratic year to date, the Republican total went up to $315,400 as compared with the Democrats' $29,800.

Since oil and timber interests owe Cordon a tremendous debt of gratitude for his leadership of the Republican offshore oil give-away, as well as his bill to permit lumber operators to take over the national forests, the GOP fund this year should be larger than ever.

Fortunately for Democratic hopes, however, issues are apt to loom larger than expenditures so far as getting votes goes this November. And Neuberger, who has been a State senator since 1948, has been unusually vocal in spelling out those issues.

RICHARD L. NEUBERGER
Discontent is in the air.

Oregon's 60,000 CIO members also are doing their best to get the Republican record in the hands of the voters in spite of the one-sided partisanship of the press.

"Our main effort this year," says Oregon State CIO Council Pres. J. A. Bell, "will definitely be in support of Neuberger and the Democratic nominee for governor, Joe Carson. We have real hopes of unseating the present governor, Paul Patterson, who signed a new State anti-labor law in the last session."

Bell agreed with Neuberger that the Democratic slate as a whole is particularly strong and that the candidates for Congress are "the best as a group we've ever had." CIO-PAC help will go to Democratic candidates in each of the four congressional districts.

In the 1st Dist. Donnell Mitchell, a Williamson plywood mill worker, is challenging the record of Rep. Norblad (R.) effectively for the first time. Charles Porter (D.) of Roseburg, in the 4th Dist., is making the most of the fact that Rep. Ellsworth (R.) joined Cordon in sponsoring the timber give-away

Public power will be an issue in the 2nd and 3rd Dists. Democrat Albert Ullman, who is president of the Idaho-Oregon Hells Canyon Association, is giving Rep. Coon (R.) a tough battle in the 2nd because of the unpopularity of GOP power policies.

A former schoolteacher, Edith Green (D.), hitting effectively at public power and other give-aways, is conceded the best chance of breaking the GOP stranglehold on congressional seats. The incumbent, Rep. Angell (R.), was beaten in the 3rd Dist. primary.

Labor Is Active

A Joint Oregon Labor Committee is working effectively this year, with CIO, AFL, the railway brotherhoods and independent unions united in their efforts. State CIO Council Sec.-Treas. George Brown represents CIO on the joint committee, and the CIO Woodworkers, largest CIO union in the state, is throwing its resources into the drive.

Through a new understanding with the State's two dominant agricultural groups, the Grange and the Farmers Union, both fed up with Republican power and farm policies, labor this year will find it possible to concentrate on its areas of membership. The farm groups are doing the same for candidates backed by labor.

"Right down the line, between labor and labor, and between labor and farmers," Bell said, "this year's political activities are the closest relationship we've ever had."

So far, Cordon's campaign has been identical with those of the past. A poor speaker, he has never had to compaign actively because of his great superiority of funds. Right-wing supporters work over his opposition throughout the State, while Cordon usually just broadcasts from the privacy of his home.

Neuberger, who is 41, has constantly been challenging Cordon to debate the issues. His own active campaign throughout the State may force Cordon into a real fight.

Wife Greatest Asset

Neuberger, who was unopposed in the May primaries, believes that his biggest asset in his race is his wife, Maurine, who is one of Oregon's leading Democratic State representatives. In this year's primary, she polled a total of 53,000 votes —11,000 more than any other candidate for the Legislature.

What has the Republicans worried is that in 1952, both of the Neubergers polled more votes in their districts than Pres. Eisenhower. Since that time their brilliant records in the State Legislature has made them even better known.

Moreover, Sen. Morse (Ind.), whose popularity in the State is at the highest point it has ever been since he broke with the Republicans, has announced he will campaign for Neuberger for the Senate.

'A Good Deal'

Oregon State Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D.) predicts that his State "will be hit over the head with $3 million worth of Republican lies between Labor Day and November."

He points out that a few million is "a good investment for the utilities companies," since gross revenues to the government from the Bonneville Power Administration have amounted to $315 million in 16 years.

"The utilities behind Sen. Corden will have made a good deal if, by spending a few million, they are able to grab off BPA power," Neuberger declared.

Stenos, Too

Republican National Committeeman Jess Gard last month told the Oregon Republican Club just how the GOP is handling patronage at the Bonneville Power Administration.

"Within a few days, we will have changed all the top jobs in Bonneville," he said. "Little by little we're getting down to the department heads and stenographers, and we want to replace them, too."

Patronage at the Bonneville Power Administration, under Republican policy, is controlled by Sen. Cordon (R. Ore.).

Kefauver Fights Wild Charges In Tennessee

By Press Associates PAI

ONE OF LABOR'S staunchest friends in Washington, Estes Kefauver of Tennessee, is facing a barrage of wild-swinging charges as he seeks the Democratic nomination for re-election to the Senate.

His opponent, Rep. Sutton (D.), now appears to be a growing threat as the Aug. 5 primary nears.

Sutton's campaign got off to a slow start. No one gave him much of a chance.

From somewhere Sutton found himself with a campaign treasury. A helicopter was furnished him. This enabled him to get around and arouse attention that he had failed to attract before.

Funds were also supplied for radio and TV talkathons. Kefauver forces charge that much of this money is being supplied by out-of-state money, especially from Texas oil millionaires.

Kefauver, himself, is running on his record, not even mentioning Sutton's name.

He has called for the "rewriting" of the Taft-Hartley Act so that it "should be fair" to both labor and management, and the implementation of the Full Employment Act of 1946 of which he was a co-sponsor.

"I shall continue to urge that we follow this law," Kefauver said as he opened his campaign. "In this nation there is no reason for mass unemployment. We have too much unemployment today. I shall continue to strive to correct the situation."

Sutton's primary charge against Kefauver is that he "coddled Communists." To back up this charge he lists nine votes of his opponent. Six of these votes were against appropriations for the House Un-American Activities Committee, a committee which Kefauver feels does as little for the national security as does the McCarthy Committee.

Another vote was against the McCarran Internal Security bill which Kefauver thus defends:

"Instead of punishing wrongdoing (as we do in this nation), the bill presented to Congress sought to control our thinking and beliefs; it sought to base guilt on association and accusation; but—worst of all—I felt the effect of it was to drive the Communist movement underground."

Just how much support Sutton has within the state of Tennessee is uncertain. A number of wealthy and conservative businessmen are getting behind him but E. H. (Boss) Crump, who controlled the state for years before Kefauver upset him in 1948, has refused Sutton any support.

The same labor-farm-liberal forces that propelled Kefauver into his Senate seat six years ago are working hard. That senators like Kefauver are not expendable seems to be the tone of PAC and other labor groups as they point toward Aug. 5.

Registration Up

Despite the fact that 1954 is an "off" election year, registration for the primary election in Memphis, Tenn., and surrounding Shelby county has risen to 192,329. Shelby is the State's "key" political county.

This marks an increase in registered voters of 31,027 over July 1952, when registration for the primaries closed. And 1952 was a presidential election year. PAC has been stressing registration.

CAMPAIGN OPENER—Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) speaks at Cleveland, Tenn., as he opens his campaign for the Democratic nomination. His father, R. C. Kefauver, is at right. Kefauver has support of State CIO Council in his drive for a second term in the Senate.

SURROUNDED—Carl Holderman, New Jersey State labor commissioner and former State CIO Council president, likes his new job—and who wouldn't when he's visited by two CIO Communications Workers. They're Marian Scharibone (left) and Irene Kall, Local 1000 stewards in Trenton on "Visit Your Representative Day."

CIO COUNCILS In Action

KANSAS workers and farmers are agreed that their prosperity is indivisible. That was demonstrated at a series of farm-labor legislative forums sponsored by the Kansas CIO Council. At meetings at Randolph, Wichita and Parsons, they called for 90% parity on farm products and increased purchasing power for workers.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wired the most recent forum—at Parsons attended by 180, about a third of them farmers—"CIO believes that labor and farmers constitute two great partners on both production and consumption." "Neither can prosper," he added, "without the prosperity of the other."

• Registration campaigns are being stepped up by councils in anticipation of the November election. The Connecticut CIO Council is setting up 15 registration centers. Council Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff said that the Council—which with the State PAC has endorsed the entire Democratic state ticket—has compiled a list of 300,000 unregistered persons.

Cooperate

The State CIO Council of Wisconsin, which is both a large industrial and agricultural State, urges workers to help farmers get a decent price support law.

Pointing out that farmers' and workers' incomes are falling, the Wisconsin CIO Council called up members of its affiliated unions to let their congressmen know they don't think much of the "Eisenhower prosperity" and to urge them to back fair farm price legislation.

• The Los Angeles CIO Council adopted a resolution calling for "a well-planned and coordinated" drive to continue until registration closes Sept. 8. It also urged its affiliated unions and its committees to work "with any and all groups that have the same aims and objectives as ours (in getting a heavy registration), such as the Community Services Organization, the Democratic party, the AFL and railroad brotherhoods."

• In its latest blast against the Ohio CIO Council's initiative campaign to improve unemployment compensation, the Ohio Chamber of Commerce said it is unconcerned over the inadequacy of the benefits. In a pamphlet, it said it only wants an efficiently administered law. The pamphlet failed to mention that the Legislature recently cut the employers' contribution to the unemployment fund by some $40 million a year.

• The Texas CIO Council has issued a 12-page pamphlet on the voting records of members of the Legislature on a number of key issues. "Is your legislator voting in your interest?" the Council asked.

• The Buffalo CIO Council is circulating a petition to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey calling for raising maximum unemployment compensation to $45 a week, plus $5 a week for each dependent up to four, and increasing the duration of the payments to 39 weeks.

• Affiliates of the Montgomery County CIO Council contributed $2025 in one week to the Dayton, O., Boy's Club.

• Here and There: The Lorain, O., CIO Council is campaigning for a United Funds Drive to end frequent appeals for money . . . The Minnesota CIO Council will award livestock prizes to two 4-H club members and two chapters of the Future Farmers of America for the best slogan on the interdependence of farm and city workers . . .More than a score of workers were graduated from a community services course conducted by the Delaware CIO Council.

High Court Picks First Negro Page

The first Negro to serve as a page has been named by the U. S. Supreme Court. He is Charles Vernon Bush, 14-year-old honor student and son of a Howard University official.

Labor's World

Ike's 'Retreat' On Tariff Hike Rapped By CIO As 'Tragic'

ACTION of Pres. Eisenhower in sharply increasing the import duty on Swiss watches last week was denounced by the CIO as "a retreat by the U. S. from our previously well-advanced position on international trade."

"This action is certain to be interpreted throughout the world," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said, "as a first step in the return of the U. S. to its former protectionist position.

"The President's decision is more than unfortunate. It is tragic."

Eisenhower rejected urgent appeals from the CIO that he not accept recommendations for the increase made by the Federal Tariff Commission on the plea of the industry that higher duties were needed to prevent "serious injury" to the U. S. industry.

HE ORDERED increases up to 50% over present rates, effective the following day, on imports of Swiss watches containing no more than 17 jewels. Under the new schedule the tariff ranges up to $2.50 per watch.

Reuther declared the action will impose "further burdens on allied nations whose economies we have sought to bolster for many years."

"Creation of this barrier to international trade," he said, "is certain to create hostility in those very countries whose friendship we seek, want and need in these trying times."

The CIO had opposed the proposed increase when it was being considered by the Tariff Commission. A few weeks ago, when Eisenhower was weighing the commission's recommendation, Reuther renewed the appeal.

IN A LETTER to the President, he cited the necessity of foreign trade for this country, and pointed out that "more employment in the U. S. is dependent on continued American exports than would be adversely affected by increased imports," describing the watch industry as "a very good example of this fact."

He also reminded Eisenhower that "a substantial amount of subsidiary employment" is created in this country by the assembling and processing of Swiss watches.

Instead of higher import rates to ease the plight of the industry, Reuther urged that curtailment of defense orders for the precision parts it manufactures be re-examined, and that serious consideration be given to an industry wide adjustment program as recommended by Pres. David J. McDonald, of the CIO Steelworkers, in his dissent from the majority report of the Randall Comimssion.

The CIO's appeal was welcomed with "deepest appreciation" by the Swiss Metalworkers & Watchmaking Union. In a letter to Reuther, Pres. Konrad Ilg expressed "our most cordial thanks for your very positive support" on behalf of 70,000 workers in the Swiss watch industry.

Pesky Robins Don't Work In Canada, Either

THE CANADIAN government, like that of a certain nation across its southern border, held rosy hopes that its unemployment problem would vanish with the arrival of spring. But—

"Every region and every single place on the list is worse than last year," Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labor declared in commenting on the latest report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

The bureau reported 185,000 unemployed who are seeking jobs, and 295,700 unplaced job applicants for June. The former figure, Mosher pointed out, is 105.6% higher than last year. Sixty-seven of 109 local labor markets had labor surpluses, the official report showed, compared to 21 last June, while those in "appropriate balance" dropped from 79 last year to 41 in 1954.

"THE TIME for government action on this problem is long overdue," Mosher said. "An expanded public works program, increased aid to underdeveloped countries, and improvements in the Unemployment Insurance Act are but a few of the measures that labor has recommended.

"There is ample evidence that the unemployment is not seasonal.

"There is every indication that unemployment will be even worse next fall and winter than last, which was the worst since the end of the war."

SAILING recently for Foreign Operations Administration post in Paris was Oliver Singleton, CIO staff representative.

CIOers Visit Murray Unit In Israel

THREE regional officials of CIO unions will go to Israel this summer to inspect the site of the Philip Murray Memorial Center being constructed with funds given by the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation.

They are Ray Dryer, Milwaukee, Wis., director of the Communications Workers' Dist. 5; William Snoots, Dayton, O., vice president of the Electrical Workers and president of Dist. 7, and Sec.-Treas. Albert Lunceford of the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council.

Accompanying them will be Harry Block, Philadelphia, vice president of the IUE-CIO, president of the union's Dist. 1, secretary-treasurer of the Pennsylvania CIO Council and a member of the CIO Executive Board. Mrs. Block will accompany him.

THE TRIP is sponsored by the American Christian Palestine Committee and Histadrut, the Israel Federation of Labor, whose guests they will be while in Israel. In addition to visiting the Murray Center in frontier Elath, they will make trips to all parts of the country.

CSC Offers Aid On Refugees

CIO MEMBERS who wish to bring friends or relatives to this country from Europe under the Refugee Act of 1953 may now utilize the services of the Intl. Rescue Committee, Chairman Joseph A. Beirne of the National Community Services Committee has announced.

Beirne, also president of the CIO Communications Workers, said the committee had accepted the offer of the IRC to make its facilities available to the CIO. These include offices in nine European cities through which contact can be made with prospective immigrants.

The IRC will prepare all necessary forms for submission to the State Dept., Beirne said, will arrange transportation, and will advance all incidental costs. Its agents will meet the immigrants when they arrive in the U. S., and make arrangements for their travel to their destinations.

In addition, he said, it will endorse the guarantees of employment, in a specific job, and housing, which the sponsors must make.

The IRC has biographies of many trade unionists who are eligible for immigration in case those without friends or relatives wish to sponsor an undesignated refugee.

Beirne said the 250 local CIO Community Services Committees throughout the country are prepared to help sponsors find jobs and housing for the immigrants. CIO members may obtain further information from the CSC in their area, or directly from the Intl. Rescue Committee, 62 W. 45th St., New York 36, N. Y.

Labor Gets Works Under New NLRB Rules

By GERVASE N. LOVE

ANY LINGERING doubt that the National Labor Relations Board, like the old gray mare, ain't what she used to be can easily be ended by even a casual review of policy decisions handed down since the Eisenhower business administration took over its control.

Such a review shows clearly that it's the business organized labor has been getting.

The board has cut its jurisdiction, leaving millions of workers who need protection of their right to organize unions in sort of a no-man's land.

Employers have been given the sign to throw their weight around rather freely on such important things as intimidation of workers and anti-union propaganda.

A door to raising and jurisdictional strife has been opened, although another was kept closed.

Despite some of the most impressive lip service the Republicans have ever devised, every doubt has been resolved against organized labor and in favor of the employer.

The new trend was indicated by board votes on basic policies even before the Republicans took control. It quickly became evident when the Senate, despite bitter protests from organized labor, confirmed Albert C. Beeson, a San Jose, Calif., industrialist, as a member.

The New Lineup

Beeson lined up with Chairman Guy Farmer, Washington lawyer whose firm had done much labor relations work for employers, and Philip Ray Rodgers, onetime assistant to the late Sen. Taft (R. O.), to form a GOP majority and set policies.

Holdover Democrats still remaining are Ivar Peterson, who usually votes with the Eisenhower appointees, and Abe Murdock, who usually dissents.

The board's sweeping revision of its jurisdictional standards was made public in two installments, one on July 1 and the second on July 15.

The surrender of control over labor-management relations affecting millions of workers, most of whom badly need unions, was heralded as a return of jurisdiction to the states and the removal of the federal government's heavy hand insofar as thousands of small operations are concerned.

Actually, in many large areas it re-creates the jungle era of labor relations, for only a few states have legislation adequate to safeguard workers and their unions in the fields where the NLRB has now deprived them of federal protection.

The changes in jurisdictional standards are too many to be detailed here, but generally they sharply raise the required dollar volume of interstate business which has been used as the line of demarcation between federal and state control, or set such standards where none existed in the past.

Rules Changed

In addition, the board abandoned its jurisdiction over firms operating under franchises from national companies in cases where that had been the sole reason for taking jurisdiction. Also, it is no longer taking cases involving general or public office buildings merely because the tenants may come under board jurisdiction.

The new policies affecting office buildings and retail trade are probably the most important from the viewpoint of organization and the number of workers involved. CIO unions have thousands of members in these fields.

In some states—notably New York—a degree of state protection is provided. In others there are no such laws, and the workers will be forced to depend exclusively on their own strength to assure themselves of the rights the Wagner Act protects within the federal jurisdiction.

Other significant fields in which the board changed its ground rules to the disadvantage of the workers are defense industries, newspapers, radio and television stations, and utility and transit companies.

Captive Audiences

The GOP board's unique contributions to its version of industrial amity also:

- Authorized employers to make captive audiences out of their employes by permitting the bosses to preach against unions on company property and time, but WITHOUT giving the union a chance to reply, as the old rule provided.
- Specifically designated union-sponsored work slowdowns, partial strikes and refusals to work overtime as unfair labor practices. Formerly, such acts were merely denied the protection of the Taft-Hartley Act.
- Widened the loophole for employer intimidation by declaring that if an employer faced with a representation election prophesies he "might" move or close down should the union win, he's still within his rights. But if he says he WILL move—and no reasonably smart employer would be that dumb—he's guilty of an unfair labor practice.
- Upheld the principle of guilt by association by approving the discharge of employes who did not participate in an illegal strike and who either reported to the job or were home sick. Reasoning: They did not sufficiently disassociate themselves from the strike.
- Encouraged raiding by abandoning the principle under which a newly certified union is protected for a year. Under the new rule, the union's status can be challenged if its contract expires during the first year of certification. Reason: The old rule acted as a "restraint" on the workers' right to choose their bargaining representative.

A couple of white spots appear on the NLRB's otherwise black record.

It has ruled that craft groups cannot be indiscriminately carved out of existing bargaining units, a view that had been pressed by the CIO; and reiterated the old board policy that an employer must furnish a union, on request, a list of the names and wage rates of employes in the bargaining unit.

The NLRB is a quasi-judicial agency which is supposed to maintain the nonpartisanship of a court in its task of seeing that the workers' rights to self-organization and collective bargaining are maintained.

It is responsible to Congress, not to anyone in the executive branch of the government. This makes the outcome of its "re-examination" of old policies a little astonishing—the old ones had stood since 1947 without Congress disturbing them.

Example

Typical of the cases which the National Labor Relations Board no longer handles under its new jurisdictional policies were those involving two firms operating solely within their home states under franchise from interstate companies. Both have been dismissed.

One involved an auto sales agency franchised by a national manufacturer, the other a firm making synthetic fireplace logs under a franchise from an interstate company.

Both had been accepted by regional offices under old standards, but were dismissed solely because their interstate business did not meet the requirements of the new criteria.

How's That?

It's little things like this quotation from a recent speech by NLRB Chairman Guy Farmer that make workers wonder and wonder and wonder:

"If I thought the Taft-Hartley Act was a union-busting statute, or if it were ever administered in that spirit, I would be among the first to advocate its repeal."

Paper Ordered To Give Pay Data

A National Labor Relations Board examiner has decided that the refusal of the Boston Herald-Traveler to give the CIO Newspaper Guild salaries and commissions paid employes is an unfair labor practice.

Examiner Lloyd Buchanan's recommendations followed a recent NLRB ruling that employers must disclose wages upon the request of unions representing them.

Scrap Monopoly Charged To Firms

Bethlehem Steel Corp. and two subsidiaries have been added to a list of 15 companies charged by the Federal Trade Commission with monopolistic practices in the iron and steel scrap industry.

Warning: Watch Out For Big 'Right-To-Scab' Drive In States

WATCH OUT for a new drive for state anti-labor laws in the 44 legislatures which meet next year.

That's the word from expert observers of trends in the legislatures.

They pointed to the fact that Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina this year enacted "right-to-scab" bills, and Virginia strengthened the existing law.

They viewed as significant the fact that three new laws were put on the statute books this year when few legislatures were in session. All of the 13 other states—with the exception of Alabama — passed "right-to-work" measures in 1947 or earlier under the impetus of the Republican congressional election victory of 1946.

Activity this year, the experts say, therefore reverses the trend of the past six years when no state passed a "right-to-work" law. Targets for next year include Idaho, Kansas and Oklahoma, it was reported.

The extent of the anti-union legislation was further revealed by a survey made by the CIO Newspaper's Guild Southern Regional Wire Council, the Public Affairs Institute reported.

The survey shows that 26 states already have legislation on their books either outlawing the closed or union shops or tightly regulating them.

There's a brighter side, however. Open shop bills were introduced and defeated in the following 14 states in 1953: California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Maryland, Missouri, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Utah and Wyoming.

In Missouri, Pres. John I. Rollings of the State AFL has warned that the State Chamber of Commerce is preparing to open a drive for a so-called "right-to-work" law.

Rollings estimated that the business group is planning to spend $250,000 for full page advertisements in newspapers throughout the State. The ads will carry coupons for contributions from individuals and business firms, he said.

The Missouri AFL head said that such advertising is the usual attempt to "bribe" small town editors to take a favorable attitude in news and editorials to the proposed law. He urged union members to write newspapers protesting "the misleading and slanderous advertising."

Anti-union groups also are pushing for court action. There are some 15 suits in the works on the issue of union shops in railroads. The Railway Labor Act last year was amended to permit union shop agreements.

Drive In Idaho Set Back

Sponsors of a Idaho "right-to-scab" initiative on the fall ballot have failed to get the necessary number of signatures.

Action by the CIO and the AFL in getting a State Supreme Court ruling on the bill helped to stop the sponsors, the People's Right To Work Committee, Inc., Blackfoot, Ida.

In a four to one decision the court ruled that a "free riders" bill cannot be called a "right to work" bill, and directed Atty.-Gen. Robert E. Smylie to prepare another short title for the measure.

The court held that in failing to say anything about labor unions, the short title given by Smylie "is defective and does not comply with the statutory requirements."

The union action prevented the committee from circulating its petitions while the title was under question. The court fight against the measure was headed by Sec.-Treas. Fred L. Garrett of the CIO Political Legislative Council; Chairman Fred McCabe of the AFL Legislative Committee, and Executive Sec. Elmer McIntire of the State Federation.

Vote Issue

The drive for the "right-to-scab" law will be a campaign issue in the St. Charles, Mo., area.

Local 176 of the CIO Paperworkers at the Missouri city will question the four candidates—two Republicans and two Democrats—in the State representative race to determine what they think of the law. It was believed that other union members would be guided by the results of the poll.

Shipyard Wage Talks Continuing

OPERATIONS continued last week on a day-by-day basis at Atlantic Coast and Great Lakes shipyards while the CIO Shipbuilding Workers negotiated with some 30 companies.

Some 34,000 IUMSWA-CIO members are involved. Union Pres. John J. Grogan reported "no progress" in talks with Bethlehem Steel Co., the industry's bellwether which operates eight yards on the Atlantic Seaboard.

A strike was set to begin 10 days ago upon the expiration of a 30-day truce with the yards. The truce followed the termination of the contracts.

An appeal by the Federal Conciliation and Mediation Service to Bethlehem Steel and the union that the talks continue "in the interest of national defense" led to the day-by-day negotiations.

IUMSWA-CIO demands include a 21c hourly pay increase, a guaranteed annual wage, and a company-paid health and welfare program.

Status of the negotiations with three of the principal firms follows:

BETHLEHEM: No progress. The day before the postponed strike deadline the company made a package offer which it said the union would have to accept in order to continue talks. IUMSWA-CIO flatly rejected the proposal.

"The company's imperious demands," Grogan said, "were in the nature of a stick-up. Bethlehem sought to undermine security rights, scuttle overtime and call-in pay and torpedo other benefits and standard working conditions enjoyed by the workers for 10 years.

"The CIO Shipbuilding Workers will not capitulate to any brass knuckle tactics. It will insist on collective bargaining in a fair, democratic way."

TODD SHIPYARDS CORP.: This firm, which operates yards at Hoboken, N. J., and Brooklyn, N. Y., made an offer unacceptable to the union.

MARYLAND DRYDOCK CO.: Talks continued with this firm, which has a ship repair yard at Baltimore.

IUE Victor In 4 Elections

VICTORIES in three National Labor Relations Board elections and the repelling of a raid in a fourth have been reported by the CIO Electrical Workers.

In a contest at the Ludlow Typograph Co., Chicago, based on a petition filed before June 9, the IUE-CIO defeated the AFL Machinists by a 286-165 vote.

The CIO affiliate won rights at the unorganized Angell Manufacturing Co., Dayton, O., by a vote of 53 to 28, and for cafeteria employes in the new Sylvania plant at Batavia, N. Y., by 9 to 1. A raid by the AFL Electrical Workers at the Magnavox plant in Paducah, Ky., was beaten back by a 186 to 95 vote.

"LET HER BUCK!" So says Lloyd Goodale, CIO Steelworker of Pueblo, Colo. At 23 he holds Colorado amateur bronco busting title.

Dr. Terrell, Capital Bias Critic, Dies

A FIGHTER for human equality, Dr. Mary Church Terrell, 90, of Washington, died last week at an Annapolis, Md., hospital.

She helped start a court test of a District of Columbia ban on serving Negroes in restaurants in 1950 after they were refused service. Three years later the Supreme Court established the right to equality of service in Washington.

A former high school teacher in Washington, Dr. Terrell organized and became the first president of the National Association of Colored Women in 1896.

In 1909, she helped organize and became a charter member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Rhode, daughter of the late William Jennings Bryan, died July 26 at Copenhagen, Denmark. Formerly U. S. Minister to Denmark, she was the first woman named as an American diplomat.

Oregon Sets Strike Probe

APPOINTMENT of a committee to study the facts in the West Coast lumber strike, planned by Gov. Patterson (R. Ore.), was warmly welcomed last week by the CIO Woodworkers.

Approximately 100,000 members of the IWA-CIO and the AFL Carpenters & Sawmill Workers have been on strike in the area since June 21 in a dispute over wages and other contract issues.

Pres. A. F. Hartung of the IWA-CIO said the union stands "ready to meet with any fact-finding committee the Governor may appoint, because the union position is absolutely sound."

He expressed the hope similar committees might be named in Washington and California, and join with Patterson "in his constructive proposal for trying to settle this strike."

Buckmaster Raps Goodyear Chief For Attack On URW

A CHARGE that Pres. E. J. Thomas, of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., is trying to destroy the confidence of striking employes in their union, its bargaining committee and themselves was made last week by Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers.

The 23,000 URW-CIO members have been on strike in 10 Goodyear plants since July 9 in a dispute over wage increases and elimination of inequities. Buckmaster's charge was based on a letter Thomas sent to all "Fellow Goodyearites."

"The obvious purpose of his letter is to destroy confidence in your bargaining committee and in your union," the URW-CIO president wrote the strikers.

"This seems to have become a common practice in industry since the Taft-Hartley Act was passed and since a Republican-appointed majority of the National Labor Relations Board has so interpreted the law as to give employers more and more freedom in their effort to weaken and destroy labor unions.

"IT HAS been reported to me that management of the Goodyear plant in Lincoln, Neb., is asking members of Local 286 to scab on their fellow workers.

"It has been reported also that the company made a strong effort at Windsor, Vt., to intimidate the few peaceful pickets at the plant gates by the use of a strong force of state police, city police and sheriff's deputies.

"A further effort was made to make life miserable for the members of Local 289 in Windsor by organizing merchants, the Chamber of Commerce and the townspeople against our members.

"In effect, Mr. Thomas is trying to accomplish the same purpose through his letter—of destroying your faith in your union and in yourself."

Union contracts with the U. S. Rubber Co., covering 35,000 members in 19 plants, and the B.F. Goodrich Co., covering 18,000 members, also have expired. However, work is being continued on a day-to-day basis during negotiations.

Thomas in his letter complained the union is discriminating against Goodyear because the other companies whose contracts have expired were not struck. Buckmaster called his "special pleading" to get employes of other companies to strike "a strange role for a big industrialist to play." Goodyear made no such plea in other years when the situation was reversed, he recalled.

Meantime, the union was continuing negotiations with Goodyear, Goodrich, U.S. Tire & Rubber and the fourth member of the "Big Four," the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

CIO Agents Approve New Hancock Pact

RATIFICATION by 5400 members of the CIO Insurance Workers of a new contract with the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. was completed last week.

Pres. Kenneth O'Dell, following a count of the ballots, said the pact undoubtedly would be signed within the next few weeks. The contract already has a union shop clause.

The new argeement, covering agents in the 33 states where the company operates, provides for an average wage gain of $1.60 per week and about $2.10 a week in fringe benefits, O'Dell said.

The agents are paid on a commission basis. The new wage schedule, based on a percentage of policies in force in each agent's territory, has been jumped from a scale of $2 to $7 to a new scale of $3.25 to $9.50. In addition, the guaranteed weekly minimum wage was boosted from $60 to $65.

The fringe benefits include improvements in the pension plan; a new medical insurance program with benefits equal to 75% of expenses in any two-year period up to $5000; higher hospitalization and surgical benefits for both employes and their dependents, and improved allowances for disabled agents.

Oak Ridge Hatch Act Indictments Hit By CIO

ATTEMPTS to apply provisions of the Hatch Act banning political activity by federal employes to workers at the Oak Ridge atomic energy installation were condemned by CIO.

CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg asked Atty.-Gen. Brownell to "look into the matter personally" of AFL union officials being indicted for soliciting political contributions for the current Tennessee senatorial campaign.

Knoxville newspapers reported the indictments were secured by the U. S. attorney there.

GOLDBERG expressed confidence that Brownell's investigation would reveal "these Knoxville indictments should not be brought." The indictments, he said, were "presumably" based on Sec. 602 and 603 of the Criminal Code, relating to political activity by federal employes.

He pointed out that the Oak Ridge workers are not government employes. Although the plants are owned by the federal government, they are operated by private corporations under cost-plus contracts with the government.

Workers are paid by the contractor, Goldberg noted, and non-supervisory employes have their terms and conditions of employment negotiated by their union with the contractor.

"THESE WORKERS are not federal employes for any other purpose," Goldberg protested. "Why should they be deemed federal employes for the sole purpose of depriving them of political rights possessed by other private citizens? Their employer is a private corporation and they are private citizens."

Goldberg said that to apply Hatch Act provisions "to employes of government contractors would bring within the statute's scope millions of industrial workers, a result never even remotely contemplated by Congress."

'Ohio Bosses Get Bonanza On Benefits'

OHIO employers are enjoying an annual $50 million unemployment compensation bonanza—the gift of the state legislature—while nearly 250,000 Ohioans are jobless.

That fact was exposed last week by the Ohio CIO Council as it began distribution of initiative petitions designed to force the Ohio General Assembly to liberalize and humanize the state's unemployment compensation law.

The $50 million-a-year bonanza was voted by the legislators at the same time as they refused to make badly needed changes in the jobless insurance law. Ohio workers now can receive no more than $35 per week, if they have two children under 18. Persons on public charity rolls can receive more.

FIGURES now available show that employers paid $20 million less in premiums during the first five months of this year — a 50.8% tax rate cut. Figures for the same period showed the number of unemployed standing at near the 250,000 mark.

During the first five months of 1954, 21,951 Ohio workers exhausted their unemployment compensation rights, the Ohio CIO Council said. This was 306% more than in the same period of the previous year.

Ohio CIO Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman predicted employers would use at least part of the windfall voted them in reduced rates to fight the CIO's initiative petition.

Harriman Seeks N. Y. Nomination

W. Averell Harriman, former Secretary of Commerce and head of the Mutual Security Agency, last week said he is available for the Democratic nomination for governor of New York. He added that he wouldn't actively campaign. Also running is Rep. Roosevelt (D.), son of the former President.

Shell Oil Sets Earnings Record

Record earnings in the first half of 1954 have been reported by Shell Oil Co. and its subsidiaries. Profits were $63.4 million or $2.31 a share, compared with $50.7 million or $1.85 a share for the same six month period in 1953.

For The Ladies—

PAC Family Conferences Give Men Some Union 'Partners'

By ESTHER MURRAY
CIO-PAC Field Representative

THE temperature was 102 in Little Rock, Ark., but the enthusiasm of the 50 women who attended the family participation conference there didn't wilt.

The way they all pitched in and worked made it seem like a breeze.

The conference, under Chairman Ann Cameron, took the form of a school in campaign techniques. Delegates divided up into groups, according to the communities in which they lived, to discuss mutual problems, and the hows of campaigning.

One of the clever devices used was a set of dummy telephones with which the women demonstrated and practiced "politicking" via telephone. They all went home with calling lists to try their newly acquired skills in actual campaigning.

LATER there was a meeting in Tulsa, Okla., to make plans for a family participation conference there. Oneita Schaefer was named chairman, and Betty Hammons, secretary, of a steering committee of some 10 members.

The conference, to be co-sponsored by the State and County CIO Councils, has been set for Sept. 21-22. There seems to be a great deal of interest in the project among the women in Tulsa and we are looking forward to a very effective meeting there.

The Indiana CIO Council is putting a lot of effort into its family participation conferences. The plan of holding three area conferences instead of one state-wide meeting has worked out well.

ESTHER MURRAY

The CIO state leadership is pleased with the results of the first two such conferences and are looking forward to the third, on Sept. 11, at Spring Mill State Park. At Turkey Run State Park, there was a delegation of 66, of whom 42 were women.

The discussion group technique was employed to good advantage, with delegates encouraged to ask questions and give their opinions. One wife said, afterwards, "This is the first time I've ever felt I was really wanted and needed as a partner in my husband's union."

Wilma Anderson, recording secretary of the Webster County CIO Council in Iowa, writes that they will have a family participation conference in Fort Dodge Aug. 7.

OUR IOWA women certainly are busy. They held a conference in Sioux City on July 24 and set Aug. 21 for a Des Moines conference. Committees have been organized, but no dates set, as yet, for conferences at Newton, Waterloo, and Ottumwa.

Plans for another conference, at Denver, Colo., Aug. 28-29, are in the making. Nettie Sides, State CIO Council vice president, will be chairman of the affair, which will be sponsored by the Colorado Council.

Speculation Cause Of Big Coffee Price Boosts—FTC

SPECULATION, not shortages, is responsible for stratosphere coffee prices, the Federal Trade Commission reported last week.

The FTC called for corrective action by Congress, the courts and its own staff.

In a 1351-page survey made over four months the FTC found "skullduggery" in the swift ascent of coffee prices from 91c to as high as $1.40 a pound between last December and April.

It scoffed at industry explanations that last July's Brazilian frost ruined supplies and said the cool weather had "no significant effect."

Instead, it found that "the concentrated state of the coffee roasting industry places considerable power in the hands of a few large roasters to influence prices."

The December-April price jump, the FTC reported, "was assignable almost wholly" to five large roasters: Hill Bros., Standard Brands, A. & P., General Foods and Folger & Co. of Kansas City. General Foods' activities were "of startling proportions," the FTC said.

THE SMALL number of companies trading on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange makes the coffee futures market "unduly maneuverable and subject to wider price swings under abnormal speculative and commercial trading than are consistent with the actual conditions of supply and demand."

The FTC also rapped restaurants for raising their coffee prices by from 5c to 10c a cup in the wake of price hikes.

The standard five-ounce cup of coffee cost only 2c a cup to make when coffee was $1 a pound and only 2.8c when coffee soared to $1.40 a pound.

Life took on a slightly rosier glow last week when several leading coffee roasters announced immediate price reductions of 5c a pound at the wholesale level in the New York-New England areas.

Food Bill Signed

Pres. Eisenhower has signed into law the residual pesticides bill setting rules on use of chemical sprays on fruits and vegetables.

Coffee, Fruit Price Hikes Nudge BLS Index Higher

CONTINUING higher food prices sent the cost of living up for the second consecutive month in the 30-day period ended June 15, according to the newest Consumer Price Index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The mid-June reading was 115.1, an increase of one-tenth of one per cent from the May figure of 115.0, the highest this year except for the 115.2 chalked up in January, and close to the all-time record of 115.4 set last October.

Food prices, rising for the third consecutive month, increased by four-tenths of one per cent under the pressure of continuing boosts for fresh fruits and coffee—which averaged $1.21 a pound. For the first time since the end of World War II, no increase was reported in the rent item.

Ewan Clague, commissioner of labor statistics, claimed the increase was "so near stability it's insignificant." The stability, however, remained the kind that empties the housewife's purse a little sooner.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS index:

Period	Index		Period	Old Index	New Index
1939 monthly average	99.4		1953: Jan. 15	190.3	113.9
1943 monthly average	123.6		Feb. 15	188.6	113.4
1944 monthly average	125.5		Mar. 15	188.8	113.6
1945 monthly average	128.4		Apr. 15	188.3	113.7
1946 monthly average	139.3		May 15	188.8	114.0
1947 monthly average	159.2		June 15	190.9	114.5
1948 monthly average	171.2		July 15		114.7
1949 monthly average	169.1		Aug. 15		115.0
1950 monthly average	171.2		Sept. 15		115.2
1951 monthly average	185.9		Oct. 15		115.4
1952 monthly average	190.6	(old index)	Nov. 15		115.0
1953 monthly average	114.4	(new index)	Dec. 15		114.9
1954 monthly average	114.9		1954: Jan. 15		115.2
			Feb. 15		115.0
			Mar. 15		114.8
			Apr. 15		114.6
			May 15		115.0
			June 15		115.1

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

THE BIG SALES in August are furniture and carpeting, linens and domestics, and annual fur coat sales. Fur coats are shorter and cheaper this year.

As previously reported, the mid-summer furniture sales this year are offering considerably better buys than we have seen in the past four years. Price cuts are especially sharp on upholstered sofas and chairs. You'll get more for your money buying individual sofas and chairs, which need not match as long as they harmonize, than buying matched sets.

Buying Calendar

Carpeting prices are down too, but increases have been announced which will boost retail prices of rugs about 5% later this fall.

To the gratification of the buying public, price-cutting on sheets, towels and other domestics has been widespread this summer, with many stores offering 140-count muslins and 180-count percales for less than $2. The muslins are recommended for greatest durability.

Price-cutting of auto tires is breaking out in advance of the traditional Labor Day sales of tires and auto accessories. Some retailers and service stations are already offering 6.00x16 tires under $10.

Here are tips on August buying opportunities:

COATS: Furs and cloth coats have joined the parade of lower prices on most items except food, housing, medical care and transportation—the living costs that really hurt.

As far as cloth coats go, the general likelihood is that you will do as well or better in early-winter sales and clearances, than in the August sales. But in furs, the price reductions are sharp this August, and wholesale prices are beginning to rise again. The present comparatively low prices are caused not only by the recent reduction in the excise tax of furs, but by the fashion change to shorter coats, and the depressed state of the industry.

Fur coats have lost a good deal of favor in recent years, although ironically, while the muskrat coats of moderate-income women have been selling poorly, there has been a continuing boom in the mink coat end of the business.

Not only does a fur coat no longer have the prestige it once did among wage-earners and salaried people, but many women have learned that a good all-wool cloth with an all-wool liner is at least as warm as a fur coat, is more versatile in use, and is less costly to clean and store. What women have been buying in greater quantity in recent years are the so-called "small pieces"—boleros, stoles and capes. These cost comparatively little and are usable for many occasions, except in very cold weather.

In buying a fur, look for lustrous color, uniform down to the skin, a smooth feel, even texture with no matted or scarred areas or visible seams, and firm but pliable leather (the skin), but not stretchy or stiff. A long-haired fur should be thick over the surface to protect the underfur, but Persian should have tight, silky, complete curls.

Always shop at least five stores for an expensive item like a fur; you'll know more about quality and values in the fifth store than when you started out.

TIRES: Premium tires can be considered a good investment for an owner who drives heavily and on long trips, and for high-speed drivers. The premium tires have stronger cord material and more natural rubber. The thicker tread (and natural rubber) provides more skid resistance, and also can be regrooved after 20,000 miles or so, a potential economy which helps make up for the higher cost.

For people who use their cars moderately and travel at moderate speed, the lower-priced "first line" tires will give good service, especially if you don't expect to run your car 20,000 miles more. But beware of rejects at any price. A legitimate second may have some minor fault like a tread irregularity, but rejects may have dangerous defects like a split case which can crack open.

(Copyright 1954 by Sidney Margolius)

'Smoke Gets In Your Eyes' From Those Cigaret Blurbs

IF YOU had any visions of a relaxing evening watching TV, without being annoyed by cigaret commercials, you forget it.

At least, that is, as far as Chesterfields are concerned. For an examiner of the Federal Trade Commission has ruled that Chesterfields can go on hammering away with their slogans that its cigarets are "always milder," "cooler smoking," leave no "unpleasant after-taste" and are "soothing and relaxing."

In a decision full of legalisms, the examiner decided that there was no evidence as to whether Chesterfields were "cooler" or hotter; that it wasn't false to say they were "milder" because there was no claim that they were "milder" than any other brand; plus lots more legal lingo.

But the company still faces a hearing on the complaint that it falsely advertised Chesterfields have no adverse effect on the nose, throat or other vital organs.

That's an issue still to be fought out. Now, where's my pipe?

CIO on ABC
Monday thru Friday
John W. Vandercook
AND THE NEWS

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

While CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe is recovering from his recent illness, his column is being conducted by guest writers. This week the writer is Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO United Steelworkers of America. McDonald also is a member of the National CIO Executive Board and is secretary-treasurer of the CIO Political Action Committee.

By DAVID J. McDONALD

THE UNITED STEELWORKERS of America recently concluded successful negotiations with the United States Steel Corp. for a 12c-an-hour package for that company's 200,000 employes who are members of our union.

This set the pattern and within 24 hours, all other basic steel producers in the country under contract to the United Steelworkers of America, quickly fell into line. These agreements covered 600,000 USA members.

When U. S. Steel's Vice Pres. John A. Stephens and I signed the memorandum of agreement barely 24 hours before the old contract expired on June 30, the nation breathed a sigh of relief as television cameras recorded the scene.

Everyone agreed it was a tremendous victory for the United Steelworkers and the next day, newspaper headlines hailed the contract as an outstanding example of collective bargaining.

When negotiations began, we realized that we were in for a tough fight if any contract improvements were to be won. The sagging economy of the nation was a very real fact with which we had to reckon.

Steel warehouses were jammed and the industry was operating at approximately 65% of capacity. More than 180,000 USA members had been laid off and another 200,000 were working a short work week. No one knew better than I what a tough spot we were in.

AS TALKS PROGRESSED, it became increasingly apparent that U. S. Steel Corp. negotiators were under tremendous pressure from various sources to resist granting any sort of a wage increase. Bear in mind that last year, we had been successful in winning a 10c-an-hour package, and had at last wiped out the southern differential.

When our Executive Board and Wage Policy Committee were called to Pittsburgh on June 22, a mere eight days before the contract was due to expire, the situation looked extremely bad. The corporation had made a token offer which was considered totally inadequate. I so informed both the Executive Board and the Wage Policy Committee.

In years gone by, negotiations would likely have been broken off at this point. But the spirit of "mutual cooperation," generated by the tours U. S. Steel's Board Chairman Ben Fairless and I had made of the company's properties earlier this year, made itself apparent.

Instead of breaking off the talks, John Stephens and myself, the next day entered into intensified day and night sessions which ultimately resulted in an agreement.

YES, IT WAS A GREAT VICTORY. It was achieved in the face of almost impossible odds which make it even more remarkable. It was a tribute to the strength and determination of the men who make up our great union.

It was a striking example of the manner in which labor peace can be brought about by a union which is responsible, strong, and democratic and where management accepts the union and the principles of collection bargaining.

In conclusion, I would like to point out that had it not been for the all-out cooperation of the U. S. Steel negotiating committee, we could not possibly have achieved the results we did. We had the facts at hand and we utilized them in every possible way to justify our demands for a wage increase and improved pension and insurance programs. It was a tough job but it was done and it was done well.

VISITING THE MILLS—Continuing their joint tour of Big Steel mills, Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers and U. S. Steel Board Chairman Benjamin F. Fairless visited the Irvin Works recently. In group, from left: C. M. Nystrom, U. S. Steel division superintendent, USA-CIO Dist. 15 Dir. James J. Thomas, Local 4090 Pres. D. P. Carson, McDonald, Fairless, Local 1495 Pres. Minor Karr, and Local 2227 Pres. J. H. Hahn.

Steel Union Beats Mine-Mill, ILWU In Western Plant Votes

A TOEHOLD has been won by the CIO Steelworkers in what has long been regarded as a stronghold of the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers in the Coeur D'Alene metal mining area of Northern Idaho.

The Steelworkers took bargaining rights from MMSW at the Sunshine Mining Co. in Kellogg, Ida., emerging victorious in a National Labor Relations Board election by a vote of 262 to 225. The company has nearly 1000 employes, with 609 eligible to vote, and is reported planning extensive expansion.

The "toehold" description was applied by Ott Orr, the union's subdistrict director in Spokane, Wash., who was in charge of the campaign.

"We were sure we were going to win," he added. "Now we're going to try to take the rest."

The Mine-Mill union was one of those expelled from the CIO because of its Communist domination. The bargaining election was the first major contest it has lost to the USA-CIO, which has embarked on a long-range campaign to give hard rock miners the benefits of genuine unionism.

THE VICTORY was one of two in which the USA-CIO routed a Communist-dominated union.

The second, reported by CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler to the CIO Organizational Dept., was scored at Cold Metal Products, Los Angeles, Calif., where the workers voted unanimously to get rid of the Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union and replace it with the USA-CIO.

USA-CIO Reps. John Flannery and George Traviano, who directed the campaign, headed another drive that brought foundry workers at the Price Pfister Co. into the USA-CIO by a vote of 221 to 197, DeShetler added.

Other election reports to the Organizational Dept.:

Rubber Workers: Fleet Perrine, general organization director, reported the URW-CIO won a vote at the Henrite Products Corp., Ironton, O., by a tally of 196 to 151 for the AFL, with Field Rep. Claude Wisdom in charge; at the Nerbalt Rubber Co., North Baltimore, O., under the direction of Field Rep. Paul R. Weiker; and at the Mohawk Rubber Co., Littleton, Colo., where the effort was directed by Edward E. Hester, a member of the general executive board and president of Local 154.

Electrical Workers: CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reported IUE-CIO won bargaining rights in elections at the Metropolitan Telephone Supply Corp. and the Maspeth Telephone & Radio Corp., both in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Chemical Workers: Selection as bargaining agent at Mayflower Air Conditioning, Inc., St. Paul, Minn., was reported by UGCCW Pres. Elwood D. Swisher, who also is director of organization.

Steelworkers: At the American Gear & Manufacturing Co., Lemont, Ill., according to word from CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Cronin, the USA-CIO routed the United Electrical Workers and beat off an attempt to move in by the AFL Machinists. The vote: USA-CIO 101, UE 12, IAM-AFL 10.

"It's nice to know that my fellow union members are staunchly behind me on the job; but —"

CIO Hints Legal Action On Party-Line Magazine

"DELIBERATE fraud" was charged by CIO last week to a party-line magazine which claimed CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther's support for a circulation appeal.

A threat of legal action against the magazine, the March of Labor, was voiced by CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg.

He charged the publication "peddles the line of the Communist Party."

Goldberg said that if the publication did not immediately discontinue the use of Reuther's name in advertisements, he would bring suit against the magazine.

IN A LETTER to John Steuben, editor of the magazine, Goldberg noted the August issue "carries on its back cover, as part of an advertisement for subscriptions, a quotation attributed to Reuther. This is done with the evident purpose of creating the impression that Reuther endorses your publication."

"In seeking to give such an impression," Goldberg wrote, "you are guilty of deliberate fraud."

The CIO general counsel emphasized Reuther "does not endorse" this magazine. Goldberg added:

"Reuther is devoted to our democratic American system of government, and dedicated to advancing the liberties and material well being of American workers under that system.

"The objectives of your magazine are very different: masquerading as a labor magazine, it peddles the line of the Communist Party. Genuine American trade unionists like Reuther abhor and repudiate the purposes and methods of the Communist Party and its organs.

"For you to imply that Reuther endorses your pro-Communist magazine, is not only fraudulent, but the grossest effrontery."

Steel Union Signs Ohio Firm Pact

The CIO Steelworkers have signed a contract with the American Welding & Manufacturing Co., Warren, O., which provides a 5c an hour wage increase and other benefits.

The agreement, which generally follows pacts in the basic steel industry, improves group insurance by an additional 2c an hour payment by the company and adds to the pension plan by upping the maximum payment to $140 a month including social security.

Kohler Massacre Anniversary Marked On Picket Lines

THE TWENTIETH anniversary of the Kohler Co. massacre was marked last week by 3800 members of the CIO Auto Workers who have been on strike four months against the firm, whose plant is located near Sheboygan, Wis.

Two union members were killed and 47 persons were injured on July 27, 1934, when company plant guards fired into a crowd of 5000 during the abortive strike of an AFL union to gain recognition.

Meanwhile, UAW-CIO Local 833 was considering bringing the twenty-eighth count of unfair labor practice charges against the company, which is a leading manufacturer of bathroom fixtures.

Local Pres. Allan J. Graskamp said the concern "clearly violated federal laws governing collective bargaining procedures in attempting, by letters, to bargain only with the workers and ignore the union."

Further support for the strike was assured with the formation of the Sheboygan County Win-The-Strike Committee. The group, which represented 10,000 members of 23 CIO, AFL and independent unions, aimed to get $1 from each unionist.

The committee conducted a "Win-the-Strike Week" last week commemorating the 20th anniversary of the massacre.

A GOAL of $200,000 to support the strike was set at a meeting of presidents and financial secretaries of locals in UAW-CIO Reg. 10, which includes Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota. Speakers included UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey and Reg. Dir. Harvey Kitzman.

The union is seeking to bring the contract up to the standard of other firms in the industry. The Kohler Co. several weeks ago broke off negotiations and spurned a plea from Gov. Walter J. Kohler to submit the dispute to arbitration.

CIO Urges Ike To Outlaw Bias In FHA Housing

THE CIO last week urged Pres. Eisenhower to ban the use of federal funds for any private or public housing that does not completely bar racial segregation.

Signed by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, the letter warned the President that unless such action were taken immediately, the pattern of racial segregation in housing "will become crystallized upon such a vast scale as to negate the benefits" of recent U. S. Supreme Court decisions.

Thimmes is also chairman of the CIO Housing Committee and vice president of the CIO Steelworkers.

THE LETTER recalled the CIO's long interest and concern with problems of adequate housing for the U. S.

"We have opposed vigorously all racial restrictions which have prevented non-white families from bargaining for shelter in a free, open, competitive housing market," Reuther and Thimmes stated.

They cited their mounting concern "about the exclusion of Negro and non-white families from the vast FHA-aided and redevelopment housing in spite of the evidence that substantial profits accruing to builders and lenders are made possible because of various forms of liberal federal aid."

If current trends continue, Reuther and Thimmes warned, "racial tensions and divisions . . . will disrupt relations through the cities of our nation."

The CIO spokesmen pointed out that the CIO Housing Committee had taken up these issues with officials of the Housing and Home Finance Agency and the Veterans Administration. These officials recognized the problem but, Reuther and Thimmes continued, "it is evident that the decisions necessary can only be rendered at the highest levels of national policy."

They praised the President's "stated position that wherever the federal government is clearly involved, there is no place for any form of discrimination, segregation or restriction based solely upon race."

Reuther and Thimmes expressed their conviction that "the time has come for you to exert full influence of your leadership and your great office in applying this precept to the entire field of federally aided housing."

They made the specific request that the President "direct all federal agencies offering aid to private developers or to local communities for the development of housing to announce a clear cut policy that all such federal aids are to be extended only to those who commit contractually that the housing and related facilities made possible by federal funds . . . are not to be denied to any eligible families . . . because of their race, religion or national origin."

THEY FURTHER asked that federal aids "shall be directed to a systematic program of making adequate new housing available to those most in need because of the accumulated years of racial discrimination in home building activities."

They concluded by stating the steps they had outlined "would serve to establish the same type of free, open, competitive market in the field of housing as exists in practically every other essential commodity available to American families."

Housing Yearbook For '54 Issued

For the first time in its history, the National Housing Conference, of which the CIO is an affiliate, has prepared a Housing Yearbook for 1954 which details major developments in the field during the past year.

Local and international union and CIO council activists in housing will find the volume a valuable source of information on legislative and other developments. The price is $3 per copy, and it may be ordered from the National Housing Conference, 1129 Vermont Ave., N. W., Washington 5, D. C.

Ike Urged To Oppose Travel Bias

PRES. EISENHOWER has been urged to speak out boldly for passage of legislation to end segregation in interstate travel.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People advised the President his aid is "urgently needed to assure passage" of the bill.

The House Interstate Commerce Committee has approved the legislation but it is still pending for Senate and House debate.

NAACP BOARD Chairman Channing M. Tobias in a telegram said that congressional leaders are looking to the White House for guidance in the matter.

"We ask that you urge the leadership of both houses to pass this bill before adjournment," Tobias said, "we are certain that with your support it can be done."

At his press conference several weeks ago Eisenhower flared angrily when asked by Ethel Payne, a correspondent of Defender Publications, whether his Administration would support the legislation.

An official of the Illinois Central Railroad admitted to an Interstate Commerce Commission hearing that the line has developed a pattern of handling passengers "that tends to keep the races apart." But he added that Negroes are free to move to any car they wish and practice is to "treat everyone alike."

$650,000 Wage Chisel Charged To Big Business

TAXPAYERS and tenants aren't the only ones to be gypped by builders who got federal help to erect housing projects.

Labor Sec. Mitchell blamed "unscrupulous employers" for cheating building workers out of more than $650,000 in wages on some of these jobs in 10 states and the District of Columbia.

The wage chiseling involved false classification of workers—journeymen carpenters listed and paid as apprentices—and falsification of payrolls. Government agencies will try to recover the differences in wages for the cheated workers involved.

It's Not The 90c—It's Pay For Voting Time

A CIO AUTO Worker's claim for 90c in overtime pay is going to the U. S. Supreme Court for a fifth and final airing of his case.

Arthur Williams, member of UAW-CIO Local 1171 in Liverpool, N. Y., claims his employer, Aircooled Motors, Inc., owes him the 90c since Election Day, 1952. The legal score is tied at 2-2 for Williams and the company by whom he is still employed as an inspector.

New York State laws say workers get two hours off on Election Day without loss of "usual wages" in order to vote. Williams says he was working nine hours a day during the period in question with one hour of overtime on top of his regular rate of $1.80 an hour.

But Aircooled scheduled only seven hours work on Election Day, paid Williams for two unworked hours at his regular rate. When his request for the 90c in overtime was turned down, Williams sued in Syracuse Municipal Court. This court found for the company and so did an Onondaga County Court.

Again Williams appealed, this time to the Appelate Div. of the State Supreme Court, which overruled the two lower courts. Then it was the company's turn to appeal to the Court of Appeals, New York's highest tribunal. It upheld Williams' claim and the company announced it would go to the U. S. Supreme Court.

"We brought the banners, athletic equipment, speakers' platform, sound truck, records, PAC leaflets, signs, floats and displays—but we forgot the food."

Boston Yard Loses Plea For Carrier

AN APPEAL to Pres. Eisenhower by Sen. Kennedy (D.) and six Massachusetts Democratic congressmen to award a super-aircraft carrier contract to a Quincy, Mass., yard went unheeded when the Navy Dept. gave the job to the Brooklyn Naval Shipyard.

Instead of the fourth carrier of the Forrestal-type, the Fore River yard in Quincy was given a sop in the form of two destroyers. Kennedy scoffed at the reasoning of Navy Sec. Charles Thomas that the experience of the Brooklyn yard enabled it to build the super-carrier for less than the Quincy firm.

"If this is a controlling factor, there is no need for any other shipyards to bid on future jobs," Kennedy pointed out. Kennedy and the Bay State delegation in Congress pointed out the "desperate" unemployment situation in their state.

Earlier, Kennedy attacked the recommendation of the Navy Dept. Bureau of Ships that the carrier be allocated to the New York Naval Shipyard in Brooklyn. He said that although the 1934 Vinson-Trammel Act provided that the first and succeeding alternate naval vessels of certain types were to be built in government yards, this provision could be waived by presidential directive in the public interest.

KENNEDY said Massachusetts yards had not received their fair share of government tonnage. He noted that layoffs had affected men at Fore River with long seniority and said that a contract was essential to prevent dispersal of shipbuilding skills.

Executive Sec. James F. McGonnigal of CIO Shipbuilders Local 5 in Quincy was a leading figure in circulating petitions directly to the President asking for the carrier award.

The House Merchant Marine Committee has approved a bill to authorize $25 million for modernization of laid-up merchant ships. The work would be done in private yards over the next two years, after which the vessels would be returned to the mothball fleet. A Senate-approved bill provides for spending $45 million within a year for the same purpose.

Reuther Aids CARE Flood Relief Drive

MEMBERSHIP on the CARE Committee for Austrian Flood Relief and Rehabilitation, formed to help victims of the recent Danube River flood disaster, has been accepted by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Reuther congratulated Sen. Hendrickson (R. N.J.) for his initiative in forming the committee with the cooperation of the Austrian Embassy in Washington.

"All of us in the CIO have been deeply touched by this tragedy which imposes additional suffering on the people of Austria," he wired Hendrickson. "Be assured that we are eager to do all we can to assist in every way possible to provide aid and succor."

CARE has authorized distribution of $10,000 worth of packages as a starter. The committee is seeking to raise $100,000 nationally, and donations may be sent to it at 1013 Dupont Circle Building, Washington 6, D. C.

Civil Defense Stepup Urged

ADOPTION without delay of a "positive and comprehensive" civil defense program has been urged by Rep. Yorty (D. Calif.).

Yorty, who has CIO support as Democratic candidate for Senator from California, suggested establishment of a Secretary of Civil Defense to provide a more effective civil defense program.

Under the present program, largely state controlled, he warned, "valuable time is ebbing away while we take only sporadic action."

A Program for Full Employment (See Page 6)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., August 9, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 32

Senate Sidesteps On McCarthy

—See Page 3

More Jobs Are A Bipartisan Matter— Republican and Democratic lawmakers joined with Ohio CIO officials as the State CIO Council officially began its initiative petition campaign for improved jobless compensation. First signer was Ohio CIO Council Pres. James P. Griffin, who is director of Dist. 26, CIO Steelworkers. Standing (from left): State Sen. C. J. Carney (D.); State Rep. G. D. Tablack (D.); State Rep. T. J. Barrett (D.); Al Shipka, Mahoning County CIO Council president; Youngstown Councilman George L. Stowe, Republican candidate for state senator; Pres. Mike Roberts, Local 1331; and Pres. Sam Camens, Local 1330. (See story, Page 9.)

Woman's Place Is In Politics— These delegates to the first Virginia CIO Family Participation Conference are studying up on literature before going into discussion sessions where they talked over women's citizenship responsibilities and women's role in politics. From left: Elizabeth Tiller, CIO Paperworkers, Josephine Stone, CIO Clothing Workers, Vivian Gontkovic, LIU 1779, and Ruby Johnson and Edna Sain, CIO Steelworkers. The conference, sponsored by Virginia CIO Council, drew nearly 100 delegates and guests from eight unions, three councils, 15 towns. The session in Roanoke was one of a series of conferences being held throughout the nation (Story on Page 12).

Balanced Budget Goes Way Of All GOP Promises

By MILTON PLUMB

LIKE OTHER GOP campaign promises, that $10 billion annual budget cut which Republican leaders were bragging they would make this year now seems to have just been quietly forgotten.

Appropriations experts on Capitol Hill have totalled up enough of the regular and hidden appropriations to say with certainty that the GOP-promised cut in government spending hasn't been made.

And the deficit, they add, is going to be just about double the amount reported in the Eisenhower budget figures. That's just what House Democratic Leader Rayburn (Tex.) predicted would be the case at the start of the session.

Accurate analysis of appropriations totals is difficult because of two factors:

1. "Phony" GOP bookkeeping which, although allowing the Republicans to claim huge budget slashes, merely defers appropriations to some later date and thus isn't a real saving at all.

2. "Cover-up" appropriations practices, such as the many provisions in this year's money bills which allow agencies to engage in deficit spending.

"Deficit spending doesn't show in any appropriations balance reported by Congress," Rep. Rabaut (D. Mich.), former chairman of the House Appropriations Deficiency subcommittee, pointed out. "Yet such spending throws the debt further out of balance, and it's still the people's money that's being spent."

This year was the first that Pres. Eisenhower, who ran on an oft-repeated pledge to balance the budget, reduce the national debt and end deficit financing, had full control in drafting the government's fiscal program.

THE EISENHOWER budget, despite campaign talk, was frankly unbalanced the day he submitted it. It estimated this year's government income at $62.7 billion and made initial government spending requests which exceeded this amount by almost $3 billion.

This was the first time since the end of World War II and the second time in peacetime history that a President has recommended deficit financing and an unbalanced budget.

Although in some years under Pres. Truman the government had operated with unbalanced finances, every Truman budget sent to Congress recommended sufficient tax increases to balance outgo with income. The deficit came when Congress refused to levy taxes to offset its higher appropriations.

The Eisenhower Administration, however, not only operated on the principle of an unbalanced budget and deficit financing, but also moved to reduce taxes for corporations and wealthy owners of corporation stocks.

The "relief for the rich" tax bill just passed over Democratic opposition is expected to reduce government income —and add to the deficit—next year by about $1.36 billion.

Last week, however, the Senate—in voting on the President's request for over $2 billion in "supplemental" appropriations—heard Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) open up on the Eisenhower Administration's "hokum" and "hypocrisy" in its budget practices.

EARLIER Congress had voted three other supplementals totalling over $533 million. Included in these, and in the latest $2 billion request, were many items which the Administration clearly should have known would require funds when the original budget was submitted. They weren't in the budget, however, and now they make the deficit, instead of almost $3 billion, most likely, somewhere between $5 and $6 billion.

Douglas called the $2 billion "catch all" supplemental appropriation "extraordinary" and "very bad fiscal practice." He accused the Administration of "withholding" items from the regular budget and then "rushing them through at the last minute."

"It raises the question of whether these items were withheld so the Administration could claim a low figure" on its budget presented to Congress, Douglas said.

TYPICAL of the phony GOP "economy" was the slash of $300 million cut in 1953 from the Veterans Administration fund for compensation and pensions, which are set by law. This year, the Eisenhower Administration had to request $215 million additional for this purpose in an earlier supplemental.

Because of such "cover-up" bookkeeping, however, the Administration now is in real fiscal difficulties. It has asked that the present limit on the national debt be lifted from $275 billion to $285 billion.

USA Gains In 2 Aluminum Pacts

WAGE INCREASES and other benefits for 30,000 aluminum workers were won last week by the CIO Steelworkers in contracts with the Aluminum Co. of America and Reynolds Metals Co., the nation's two largest aluminum producers.

The Alcoa pact was reached shortly before a strike deadline. The settlement with Reynolds terminated a three-day walkout of 9000 USA-CIO members in nine plants.

Both contracts provide for a package increase of at least 12c an hour for the aluminum workers, who now get from $1.545 to $2.245 an hour.

The contract with Alcoa provided for a straight wage increase of 5c an hour. Another 3c will be applied to adjust inequities in the present wage structure, 2c an hour will go toward improved insurance benefits and the balance will be applied to pension plan increases.

USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes headed the team that negotiated the Alcoa settlement. It covers workers in Alcoa, Tenn.; Badin, N. C.; Bridgeport, Conn.; Detroit; Edgewater, N. J.; Mobile, Ala; New Kensington, Pa.; Richmond, Ind.; Rockdale and Point Comfort, Tex.

The union regarded the signing of a master contract, which covers all nine Reynolds plants for the first time, as a highly impressive victory. Negotiations were conducted by Dist. 38 Dir. Charles J. Smith and Dist. 37 Dir. Martin Burns.

Smith said the Reynolds firm "insisted that the union give up certain rights in certain plants as the price of reaching a master agreement." The union refusal led to a strike at mines and alumina and reduction plants at Little Rock, Arkadelphia, Jones Mill and Hurricane Creek, Ark.; Richmond, Va.; Phoenix, Ariz.; McCook and LeGrange, Ill., and Troutdale, Ore.

Final negotiations in Washington resulted in the union retaining all local conditions which are better than those provided in the master agreement that have been put in writing in local agreements.

USA-CIO chalked up another victory in a raid by the AFL Aluminum Workers at the Reynolds plant in Corpus Christi, Tex., which had been under a Steelworkers contract since 1952. The tally was 723 for the Steelworkers, 301 for the AFL.

Door Closed On TWUA At Woolen Talks

CIO TEXTILE Workers have been locked out of a government-sponsored conference called by Commerce Sec. Weeks to discuss the problems of the woolen and worsted industry.

Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock of TWUA-CIO protested Weeks' action in barring union representatives from the parleys. TWUA has been urging a conference for almost a year to act on the industry's grave problems.

When the conference was announced TWUA inferred broadly that it was being summoned more to help Rep. Canfield (R. N. J.) in his re-election fight than to help the industry find solutions for its problems. In turning down the TWUA bid to attend the conference Weeks declared it would be restricted to "industry representatives."

POLLOCK replied that Weeks apparently thought the term "is applicable solely to employers." The term "industry," Pollock wrote, "properly includes both those who provide capital and management and those who provide labor, and industry's well-being depends on both.

"The future of some 150,000 people and an industry vital to the military defense of our country are at stake. You need the accumulated experience of all groups in finding a solution," Pollock told Weeks.

The TWUA official also asked Army Sec. Stevens to allocate orders for the Army's new green uniform cloth to areas in greatest economic distress. Pollock said the order "is the first sign of relief in two years."

Weeks Says Economy Needs Nudge —But You Can't Say That For Profits

PROFIT statements for the first half of the year from several hundred U. S. corporations show earnings and dividends running ahead or abreast of 1953's lush returns.

For many firms, record high profits were registered by the expiration of the excess profits tax even though sales declined.

The first 416 corporations to report half-year earnings showed net profits after taxes of over $3.3 billion, up 2% over the same period a year ago.

The government said that U. S. manufacturing firms made $5.1 billion in profits before taxes during the first quarter. This was 19% above the previous quarter but was 23% lower than the $6.6 billion reported in the first three months of 1953.

AUTO: General Motors, the world's largest manufacturer, rolled up a record $883 million in earnings before taxes, beating the previous $803 million peak in the first half of 1950.

GM's income after taxes was over $425 million, equal to $4.79 a common share, compared with $3.51 a share on a $312 million net in the initial half of 1953. Second quarter sales were $2.6 billion against $2.8 billion a year ago. The usual $1-a-share dividend was voted.

STEEL: Bethlehem Steel, the second largest producer, reported that sharp tax cuts sent earnings up despite lower sales. Directors declared a $1.25 a share dividend. Net profits for the first six months totaled $58.5 million or $5.77 a share compared with $59.4 million or $5.87 a share a year ago.

Inland Steel set a record half-year with profits of $19.4 million or $3.92 a share. In the first half of 1953 the firm equaled $3.20 a share on a net of $15.6 million.

ELECTRICAL: The billion-dollar Westinghouse Corp. received the highest six-month sales and earnings in its history. Net sales of $811 million were up 4% over the first half of 1953. Profits were up 27% to $45.3 million from $35.6 million. The result is equivalent to $2.75 a common share, compared with $2.19 a share a year ago.

Sales of the Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries hit a record $444 million for the first six months, up 8% over the previous high mark set in the same period of 1953. Net profits after taxes were $19.2 million, equal to $1.26 a common share, compared with $1.18.

OIL: The Standard Oil Co. of N. J. estimated its consolidated net earnings for the first half at $293 million or $4.84 a share. This compares with earnings of $268 million or $4.42 a share a year ago. Sales were up 3.6% over the 1953 period to $2.7 billion.

Sinclair Oil's gross income set a new high for any half-year with a total of $499 million. Net income climbed 20% to $36.5 million over the same period last year. This is equal to $2.96 a share compared with $2.47 last year. Sales were down 2.7%.

3800 Laid Off In Buffalo Mills

Some 3800 members of the CIO Steelworkers have been laid off in the Buffalo, N. Y., area alone in the past three months.

Dist. 4 Dir. Joseph P. Molony last week reported that a survey of 182 locals showed that mid-July employment was 60,125. A year ago, the figure was 76,853.

A report from Pittsburgh said that July was the low month of the year for basic steel production. Last week production was at a scheduled rate of 64.8 per cent of capacity, up from 64.2 per cent the week before.

AFTER many months of voicing unrestrained optimism on every occasion, Commerce Sec. Weeks has admitted the government needs to give the economy "a nudge here and there."

Weeks, at his latest press conference, said once more that the economic picture "looks promising." He saw a "real pickup" this fall. (A few weeks ago it was predicted for spring.)

Citing "nudging" by the government in the fields of shipbuilding, road and airport construction, Weeks said:

"There is a conscious policy to speed up procurement. We aren't trying to think up things to be done, but where there is something on which we are going to spend money three to six months from now, we will try to get started in a month or so."

Weeks' report that the economy needs a helping hand from the government contrasts with his past speeches. For example, at Detroit in mid-June he dismissed all concern with recession by claiming that "our home-grown Communists, echoing their Moscow masters, are trying to start a depression."

ANOTHER optimistic Administration prediction on the economy came from Sec. of Labor Mitchell.

He claimed that the over-all employment situation nationally is "very good" and predicted that "by September or October you will find an increase in employment and a decrease in unemployment."

Maybe the jobs which didn't show up with the robins of spring will arrive when the birds head South in the fall.

Pieper Mending After Surgery

Dir. Fred C. Pieper of CIO Region XII is making an excellent recovery at Union Memorial hospital, Baltimore, Md., where he underwent an operation recently.

Senate Sidesteps Showdown On McCarthy

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

A SKITTISH Senate last week sidetracked a showdown on a mild condemnation of Joe McCarthy for "conduct unbecoming a member of the U. S. Senate."

With Majority Leader Knowland (Calif.) and other top Republicans conducting McCarthy's defense, and gaining support from several southern Democrats, the Senate sent to committee the motion of censure authored by Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.).

By a 75 to 12 vote, the Senate set up a special six-man committee to investigate the Wisconsin Republican—and possibly to report before the 83rd Congress calls it quits.

The Senate's decision to order another look into the activities, charges, allegations and conduct of Sen. McCarthy came after three days of stormy and often acid debate.

Protective Cloak

Originally, Knowland had hoped to kill the Flanders censure motion outright. But he didn't have the votes for that.

Knowland's protective cloak failed to save McCarthy from the criticism implicit in the forthcoming investigation. In this sense, the Senate decision was a limited victory for the anti-McCarthy forces.

With only two exceptions, Republican Senators refused to stand and be counted for the censure move introduced by their colleague.

The central figure in the case voted "present" when his name was called during the Senate poll on referral of the Flanders censure motion to a committee. He took little part in the debate except to again smear Gen. George C. Marshall and, in effect, toss another spitball at the White House. That brought an angry defense of Marshall by Pres. Eisenhower at a press conference.

Several times during the debate, McCarthy slashed out at fellow senators—for example ridiculing Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) as "Halfbright." Fulbright had presented detailed specifications in support of the Flanders motion. And when the new investigation was voted, McCarthy indicated he may seek to turn it against his senatorial critics.

'Conduct Is Condemned'

The Flanders' motion of censure set forth: "Resolved; that the conduct of the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. McCarthy, is unbecoming a member of the U. S. Senate, is contrary to Senatorial traditions, and tends to bring the Senate into disrepute, and such conduct is hereby condemned."

Knowland proposed during debate that Vice Pres. Nixon name a bipartisan committee to consider the resolution. Sen. Ives (R. N. Y.) offered an amendment requiring the committee to report its recommendations before the Senate adjourns, probably about two weeks hence.

Three days later Nixon appointed three Democrats, Sens. Johnson (Colo.), Stennis (Miss.) and Ervin (N. C.), and three Republicans, Watkins (Utah), Carlson (Kans.) and Case (S.D.) to invesigate their fellow senator.

Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.) described the Senate's evasive action as a "hoax" and added that those who think any committee can make an investigation of McCarthy "that he will agree is fair and do it in a week or two weeks or a month or six months are the world's greatest optimists."

Several senators recalled the 1952 investigation of McCarthy when he failed five times to appear before a committee to explain his financial dealings. Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.) recalled that McCarthy had then called his investigators "a bunch of puny, cheap politicians."

In last week's debate, Sen. Welker (R. Ida.) who admitted he has been called "a junior McCarthy," asked if the CIO, the Americans for Democratic Action or other "left" groups "masterminded" the censure drive.

Senate foes of McCarthy asserted that the failure of GOP leaders to act against McCarthy had made him that party's leader "by default."

Some senators including Sen. McClellan (Ark.), ranking Democrat on the recent Army-McCarthy subcommittee hearings said Flanders' resolution contained no bill of particulars against McCarthy. In subsequent debate Sens. Morse (Ind. Ore.) and Fulbright introduced detailed reasons for such a move taken from McCarthy's record.

Flanders started the debate with his party's leadership ranged against him and with Democrats' leadership keeping aloof. Minority Leader Johnson (Tex.) took no part in the three days of debate.

Knowland frequently intervened on McCarthy's side, once accusion McCarthy's opponents of picking on him "when he is a little crippled."

Monroney retorted that Flanders "is not a man who would go around kicking cripples." He added that if McCarthy "is crippled he has crippled himself before the country by his own exposure of McCarthyism on the television sets of this nation."

Farm

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) appealed to Senators from non-agricultural states to vote approval of the farm bill approved by a majority of the Agriculture Committee. He asked them "not to be fooled" by Administration propaganda" against the measure on which the Senate began debate last week.

Among other things, the bill would continue for a year rigid 90% support prices on basic commodities and raise dairy price supports from 75% to 85%. Both of these are opposed by the Eisenhower Administration. Humphrey pointed out that a vote against the bill would be againsts the interests of farmers, the campaign promises of Eisenhower and the GOP, the platform of the Democratic party, the CIO and AFL.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, in a letter to all Senators, noted the CIO's "strong interest in the effect of farm income upon the opportunity of city workers to achieve full employment at good wages."

"We are concerned also about the survival of the independent family-type farm in America because of the vital contributions our farm families have made to the cultural and political life of this country," he said.

Reuther urged retention of firm price supports. He said the flexible price support program "will add to the numbers of unemployed persons seeking city jobs by forcing hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, of farm families to forego the hope of making a living on the land."

Atomic Energy

House-Senate conferees knocked out one of the public's safeguards won in the recent marathon Senate debate to keep atomic energy power out of monopoly hands.

Sen. Johnson (D. Colo.) had forced the right of the Atomic Energy Commision to operate A-power electric generators to serve as a yardstick on private installations. The conferees killed this, limiting AEC to operation of plants "to demonstrate" the practical value of atomic power.

Foreign Aid

Congress was in an end-of-session skirmish to reconcile the 75 points of difference between House and Senate foreign aid measures. Pres. Eisenhower at his press conference deplored as "unfortunate and too deep" the Senate's $500 million slash in the $3.1 billion authorization bill.

Within an hour the compromise committee agreed to restore $314 million in cuts, exactly half the difference between the amounts authorized by each branch. The amended version now must go before the Senate Appropriations Committee for final recommendation and action.

The Senate left intact funds for technicial assistance, a phase of overseas aid in which U. S. labor has an important interest, and for "Point Four" aid to under-developed nations.

Concern was felt that drastic cuts in overseas spending would furnish the Soviet with another propaganda tool and seriously hurt U. S. prestige aboard.

TVA

Senate friends of the Tennessee Valley Authority plan to question Brig. Gen. Herbert D. Vogel, who was named TVA chairman last week by Eisenhower to succeed Gordon R. Clapp whose term has expired. If confirmed by the Senate, Vogel will hold the $15,000 a year post until 1963.

"Not only the people of the Tennessee Valley but the people of the entire country are entitled to be assured that a director of TVA is completely sympathetic with—and highly qualified to carry out in a managerial way—the sound objectives of TVA," said Sen. Morse.

Morse joined with Sens. Gore (D. Tenn.) and Hill (D. Ala.) in calling for full hearings so that Vogel, largely unknown on Capitol Hill, can air his views.

Housing

The President signed the housing bill which is woefully short of public housing provisions but which he optimistically predicted will permit "millions of

(Continued on Page 10.)

—Herblock in Washington Post & Times Herald
Pussyfootprints On The Sands Of Time

Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch
The New Give-Away

The 'No' Votes

Nine Democrats and three Republicans voted against referring the censure move against McCarthy to a special committee.

The Democrats were: Sens. Chavez (N.M.), Douglas (Ill.), Fulbright (Ark.), Hennings (Mo.), Hill (Fla.), Humphrey (Minn.), Lehman (N.Y.), Magnuson (Wash.), and Monroney (Okla.).

The Republicans: Cooper (Ky.), Duff (Pa.), and Flanders (Vt.).

Guarantees

Adlai E. Stevenson last week flayed the Eisenhower Administration for allowing private power companies to get profits without risk.

He told a meeting of Democrats at Great Falls, Mont., that under the Administration's new power policies:

"Private companies will get the profits, which is electricity, and the government—you and I—get the flood control and reclamation.

"It is hard for me to see that all of us taxpayers should support the non-paying part while utility companies take a guaranteed return out of the profitable part."

Ike's Too Busy To Talk On Schools

LIKE SEC. HOBBY, of what's come to be called the "Dept. of Not-Very-Much Health, Education and Welfare," Pres. Eisenhower is also too busy to see national leaders about emergency help for overcrowded schools.

Miss Waurine Walker, newly-elected president of the National Education Association, wrote Pres. Eisenhower after Sec. Hobby ducked out of an appointment. She asked him to see John Lester Buford, NEA first vice president, and representatives of other national organizations interested in the pressing need for school construction.

But Miss Walker made the same mistake she did with Mrs. Hobby. She announced in advance what she was interested in—more and better schools for children.

The result of her emergency request was a letter a week later from Thomas E. Stephens, secretary to the President, regretting that "because of his heavily crowded schedule," the President could not meet with them.

Miss Walker had asked the President to meet with Buford, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Mrs. Clifford N. Jenkins, National Congress of Parents and Teachers legislation chairman; National Grange Master Herschel D. Newsom and Jewish War Veterans National Executive Dir. Benjamin Kaufman.

The White House letter passed the buck to Education Commissioner Samuel H. Brownell, whose boss, Sec. Hobby, some months ago blocked him from testifying before a congressional committee in favor of emergency school construction legislation.

Representatives of 20 national groups then scheduled a meeting with Brownell, brother of Atty.-Gen. Brownell, in the hope that somebody in the Republican Administration will listen to a plea for urgently needed federal aid for school construction.

Amending Taft-Hartley

Lots of people have thought that, because Congress didn't act on it, the Taft-Hartley Law wasn't being amended this year.

In fact, it's being amended every week—not by Congress, but by the National Labor Relations Board.

The latest decision by the NLRB says it's okay for a boss to ask a worker whether he's a member of a union. Of course, the Labor Board's 3-2 GOP majority protects itself a little bit.

It's "wrong," says the NLRB, for the boss to ask that question if he really wants to intimidate or coerce a worker from joining; it's "all right" only if the employer just wants some information.

Perhaps, unions will find themselves hiring psychoanalysts to find out just what is on the boss's mind when he pops the question to the worker.

More realistically, though, the Labor Board's decision throws one more roadblock in the path of unions trying to organize the unorganized. There's not a student of labor relations over the age of seven who doesn't know that a "question" from the employer can also be a command.

In its decision, the Labor Board has, in the words of CIO's lawyers, taken an "outrageous backward step"—one of very many, in recent months.

Probing Joe

Vice Pres. Nixon has picked a conservative-complexioned six-man committee to investigate the censure charges against Sen. McCarthy, presumably to report back before the end of the session.

On the face of it, no committee has ever had an easier assignment—for the junior Wisconsin Senator's record of irresponsibility is on the record.

We hope the committee looks squarely at the facts and brings in a report and recommendation that will measure up to the obvious facts.

Back The Rubber Workers

For more than a month now, some 23,000 CIO Rubber Workers have been on strike at Goodyear for a contract with decent wage adjustments.

The company, which has a long record of highly profitable operations, seems little interested in working out a settlement that will be fair to the workers involved.

The Goodyear strike is the business of everybody in CIO. Increasingly, America's big corporations have tended towards an attitude of "here's our offer—take it or leave it." That attitude by the companies is a mockery of collective bargaining. If Goodyear can get away with it, other companies in other industries will be tempted to try the same tactics.

Congratulations, Estes

The Democratic voters of Tennessee are to be congratulated for renominating Estes Kefauver for another term in the U. S. Senate.

Kefauver is a valiant liberal. He is an apostle of honest government, who has earned the hatred of the syndicated crime mobs all across America. In addition, Sen. Kefauver is a symbol, in many ways, of the TVA—which is now under attack from selfish private power groups.

In renominating Kefauver, the people of Tennessee have said in effect: "Hands off TVA." It's to be hoped that the Administration will hear that message.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS
Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.
Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII August 9, 1954 No. 32

'I Can't Get This Stuff To Stick'

In Other Words—

Elephants Crowd The Water Hole

By JOHN W. VANDERCOOK
(CIO-sponsored news commentator on ABC Radio)

ONE OF THE MANY problems that have plagued the Administration that once marched under a banner labelled "The Great Crusade," has been finding enough jobs on the federal payroll for worthy Republicans. (Curiously, another of the Administration's problems has been getting Republicans to keep some of those jobs after important places have been found for them.)

In ruder days gone by, patronage, of course, was a recognized feature of our government. The promise of lots and lots of not too strenuous government jobs (it was the less strenuous ones that had the greatest attraction) kept party stalwarts fired with hope of personal advantage while the party of their choice was out of power . . . and steamed up with nervous anxiety to keep the job when the party was in power.

VANDERCOOK

Both emotions, it was believed, kept ward heelers to heel. A devotion to the party, to the needs of the voters, and, to the need of getting them to the polling booths, was kept alive at the grass roots level. The only trouble with that rough and tumble, old style patronage system, of course, was that so many total incompetents ended up on the payroll.

So Civil Service—the theoretically politics-proof method of choosing men and women for government jobs on the basis of their ability (of all things) to do them—was invented.

The scarcely-concealed complaint of the Republican elephant now is that during 20 years away from the water hole, this Civil Service thing grew and grew. By the time the GOP got back to Washington, it seemed as if almost every job in sight was filled by someone who had earned the right to have it—and was hard to shoo away, to make room for a Republican appointee.

There has never been any question that upper-level, policy-making jobs should be filled by people chosen by the party in power. The Civil Service system deliberately does not reach over into that area.

Where an odor reminiscent of a wind off the town dump arises, is in connection with the repeated, uncontradicted assertions that the Republican National Committee, with cooperation from topmost ranks, is still trying to make room for GOP political appointees in a multitude of jobs that are, most clearly, supposed to be under Civil Service.

A staff writer of the Washington Post, Jerry Kluttz, recently made these startling statements:

That under constant pressure, more and more federal agencies have begun to clear with the Republican National Committee applicants for job vacancies, including applicants for places that are unmistakably under Civil Service . . . that anyone seeking a position on the payroll of Harold Stassen's Foreign Operations Agency—including clerks and stenographers—has to produce what is called "proper political clearance."

Clear It With GOP

This, though, is Reporter Kluttz's more startling story. In recent weeks, agency heads in Washington, he says, have received a letter, printed on White House stationery, marked "confidential, not for publication"—directing them to "clear" certain jobs with the Republican National Committee before making appointments to them.

The other side of the Administration's job problem — at the policy-making level where Civil Service has nothing to do with the case—is the difficulty which is being experienced in keeping higher-ranking Republicans working at all.

Cracks are going around about "one-year enlistments"—and so on. A glance at the list of Eisenhower appointees who have served their party and their country for only a very short period—and then have hightailed it back to executive suites where the pay is better and the responsibility is less, is most impressive.

Among the go-homes are: Budget Dir. Dodge; Deputy Sec. of Defense Roger Kyes; Under Sec. of State for Administration, businessman Donald Lourie, Asst. Sec. of Commerce Shaeffer.

"Crusade" was perhaps an unfortunate term. That's just what the original crusaders used to do—their mission to clean up that mess in Jerusalem unaccomplished.

(Hear John Vandercook and the news, every week night on ABC Radio.)

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE FLANDERS and Fulbright resolutions to censure Joe McCarthy brought a gaggle of newspaper stories about the last time the Senate censured a member, Sen. Bingham (R. Conn.) in 1929.

Nearly all the stories were inaccurate in detail, but the important thing is that in 1929—when George Norris and other honorable, courageous Republicans were in the Senate—a character like McThing, a mere racketeer in anti-Communism, would never have been allowed to gain importance.

The Decline Of Senatorial Guts

This observer, who has watched McCarthy since his stupendous four-hour Senate speech in 1950 trying to justify his irresponsibilities, does not underrate the junior senator from Wisconsin.

McCarthy is tougher than Huey Long, another demagogue who placed his personal bet on the theory that the United States would "go Fascist." Long died, irrelevantly, from the bullets of an obscure dentist w[illegible] decided, rightly or wrongly, that Huey had done his father wrong.

The point is that the U. S. Senate, in 1929, had more members of character and guts, ready to censure an errant colleague, than it seems to have now.

What did Bingham do? He merely introduced a tariff lobbyist of the Connecticut Manufacturers Assn. into a private meeting of Republican members of the Senate Finance Committee, and tried to pass off the paid lobbyist as a member of a congressional committee staff.

The present Republican leadership has tolerated more heinous political crimes from Sen. Joe.

Is it any secret that Pres. Eisenhower despises McCarthy but still doesn't know how to "handle" him?

The President spoke with emotion and anger, at his press conference, in defense of Gen. George C. Marshall, whom McCarthy violently assailed again while the motion of "censure" was under debate.

The President Is Indignant

McCarthy put into the record a letter from former Sec. of War Harry H. Woodring charging that Marshall would "sell out his grandmother" for personal advancement.

Eisenhower managed, at last, to get indignant about such accusations—although they were no worse than McCarthy's own earlier charge that Marshall deliberately sold anti-Communist Chinese down the river. The President, obviously at the boiling point, said Woodring's statements were a sorry reward for Marshall's 50 years of honorable and patriotic service.

The President in 1952 kept quiet about McCarthy's attacks on Marshall. He kept quiet, at least, in McCarthy's state of Wisconsin.

Let it be agreed, still, that Eisenhower has spoken out at last. Let it be agreed, also, that McCarthy is primarily the Senate's responsibility, and that a President can intervene only as party leader.

What about Bill Knowland, the peerless fighter for Formosa, the GOP majority leader from California who seems to owe some bullheaded allegiance to Chiang Kai-shek? Knowland's whole desire, in this fight, has appeared to be protection of McCarthy.

What about Lyndon Johnson of Texas, Democratic leader, who emerged from his own primary fight on July 30 and promptly cut the heart from fellow Democrats who thought the Flanders and Fulbright resolutions to censure McCarthy were a fine thing?

We don't have any George Norris in the Senate now, a man of such towering stature that he can insistently raise the voice of conscience against a recreant colleague. Flanders and Fulbright are doing the best they can, but the leadership is shifty and adroit.

We have a Democratic leader in the Senate who is apparently more interested in his own political future—a place on the national ticket—than the principle of McCarthyism. We have a Republican leader who refuses to help his own party's President deal with Eisenhower's worst problem.

Collapse Of 'Trade, Not Aid'

The President's decision raising tariffs on watch movements imported from Switzerland was defended by Eisenhower himself, as a special incident, involving the skills of tool and die makers who might later be needed for "national defense." Actually, it simply pointed up the general collapse of Eisenhower's dreamy notions of liberalized foreign trade.

The President surrendered to the high-tariff bloc of his party by dropping plans to push the Randall Commission program for legislative liberalization of trade. (He marched 10,000 men up the hill and marched them down again.)

Executive Dept. treatment of foreign bids for government business is generally weighted against the foreigners.

Eisenhower made a couple of bad appointments to the Tariff Commission—one of them simply an "error" in staff work—and he now has a high-tariff "protectionist" group on the commission with the legal duty of "advising" him.

One reporter observes that with Eisenhower: "The era of liberalized trade policy is always going to begin tomorrow, and tomorrow never comes."

(Willard Shelton is on vacation; his column will be resumed in The CIO News of Aug. 30.)

'Silence Would Be Shameful'—

Bishop Sheil Again Hits McCarthy As Destroying 'Our Way Of Life'

By BISHOP BERNARD J. SHEIL

The following article on religion and public issues is by the Most Rev. Bernard J. Sheil, D. D., and is digested with permission from Look Magazine. Bishop Sheil, Catholic auxiliary bishop of Chicago and founder of the Catholic Youth Organization, was a speaker at the recent CIO Auto Workers Education Conference in Chicago.

AMERICANS have a well-founded reluctance to seeing clergymen get too immersed in secular affairs.

But does that mean that clergymen should not speak out on public controversial issues?

To forbid clergymen to point out the moral issues in matters of public controversy would, in effect, mean silencing the churches and synagogues as spiritual influences in American life.

Some of the causes I fought for years ago—when they were still highly "controversial"—have since become eminently acceptable and downright respectable.

All my life I have fought communism. By identifying myself with the legitimate aspirations of the labor movement, at a time when the Communists were trying desperately to capture the trade unions, I hoped to counteract communism's undeniable influence.

It is almost ironic, against this background, that I recently should find myself involved in a public controversy because I spoke out against a certain kind of anti-communism, personified in the present junior senator from Wisconsin.

Case Of The Junior Senator

I made it clear in the speech, which I addressed to the United Automobile Workers educational conference, that I was speaking only as an American citizen who was disturbed by an ineffective "anti-communism" that I felt would lead to the slow destruction of our way of life if it were not checked. I emphasized that this was my personal judgment.

Labor And Religion

"Communism in this country will get nowhere with effective labor unions and a strong ministry," John G. Ramsay, CIO community relations representative, told the Conference on Christian Education and Vocations.

Ramsay, also a Presbyterian delegate to the conference, told the group that the church "should get into labor matters, politics, government and economic affairs with both feet."

Labor, management, business and the professions meet on common ground in the church on Sunday, Ramsay said, and should "both as American citizens and in citizenship under God meet on a common ground the rest of the week."

"We're all one basic humanity and if the church gives us fellowship, we'll find answers together," Ramsay declared.

The point is important because—through a series of misunderstandings, it seemed to me—the impression was abroad that a Catholic, just because he was a Catholic (and hence an anti-Communist), was obliged to support the junior senator from Wisconsin. There was certainly no basis in Catholic teaching for this belief.

Moral issues in public life simply cannot be ignored.

There may also be times when, as an American, the clergyman may feel—as I have felt—that silence would be a shameful thing.

Bishop Sheil's historic speech at the UAW-CIO educational conference describing McCarthyism as morally evil has been reprinted in pamphlet form. It is available at 15c a copy from the UAW-CIO Education Dept., 8000 E. Jefferson Ave., Detroit 14, Mich.

Labor's Direct Stake In TVA Told

Labor has a major stake in TVA, both because it is a major purchaser of electrical equipment and because families living in TVA areas have achieved a rising standard of living through TVA activities. In the IUE-CIO News, John Thomason described that stake. Excerpts from his article follow.

By JOHN THOMASON

IF YOU LIVE outside the nine states in the Tennessee Valley Authority, you may figure that you don't have a stake in the government-owned TVA.

No matter where you live, TVA has meant cash benefits to you during the past 20 years, and if allowed to grow, [illegible] mean ever greater benefits in the future.

The Authority itself is a principal purchaser of raw materials and manufactured goods, using electrical products, steel, cement, autos and thousands of other manufactured items.

The residents of the nine-state TVA area are the world's greatest consumers of electrical appliances, buying at the yearly rate of $200 million. This money for refrigerators, washing machines, ranges, freezers, water heaters, vacuum cleaners, fractional motors, radios and TV sets means jobs for hundreds of thousands of workers.

A Big Buying Area

Families in the TVA states, between 1946 and 1953, bought $1.35 billion worth of home appliances. Relatively few of these appliances are manufactured in the TVA area, coming principally from the industrial centers of the midwestern and northern states.

The critics of TVA charge that this benefit to you is essentially phony because the cost is being borne by all the taxpayers. Untrue, since TVA is repaying the U. S. Treasury for every cent appropriated for the agency and is paying 4% interest on the money appropriated by the Government.

TVA is operated on a sound financial basis and consistently earns a profit on its sale of power. These earnings are used to maintain the property and to repay the government. TVA actually is making money for the taxpayers since it will pay off debts within 40 years and will continue to be owned and operated by the people of the United States.

The magnificent contributions of TVA to the area and to the nation cannot be overlooked or ignored, so you may reasonably ask why anyone imagines the Administration would try to cripple this agency.

Many may wonder how TVA could be threatened today when the President is on record with wholehearted praise and firm commitment to maintain and build TVA. But there are other Eisenhower quotations on record. These statements were made after TVA residents had been lulled into voting for Eisenhower and after Eisenhower had safely taken office.

The truth began to appear when the President started repeating the hackneyed lies of the power lobby, when he cited TVA as an example of "creeping socialism."

Eisenhower continues to straddle the fence by saying he is for TVA while actively fighting it. In (a recent press conference), he said he would never wreck TVA, but he added, significantly, that he opposed any expansion of TVA facilities.

TVA is under threat from an Administration that shows it is determined to wreck this accomplished dream. The record of TVA means nothing to an Administration so deeply in debt to the power lobby.

"Hopkins has just come up with a problem that's going to cost the government $2,000,000 to solve."

A New Keyserling Report—

U. S. Action Urged To Gain Full Employment

A PROGRAM for getting the U. S. back on the full employment and full production track was spelled out last week by a new economic study group. Their analysis warned of the possibility of seven million unemployed by next winter unless the economy spurts quickly.

As a countermeasure against this situation they urged numerous steps by which the government could stimulate recovery.

While such measures would heighten the federal deficit, the group—the Conference on Economic Progress — warned that any deficit would be greater if the economy fails to achieve the desired goals.

The first publication of the conference, "Towards Full Employment and Full Production," notes that because of the recession that started a year ago, our total output is now at an annual rate of $27 billion under the full production level.

Lost Production

The staff director for the study was Leon H. Keyserling, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under Pres. Truman. His technical advisory committee included Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg of the CIO Research and Education Dept. and Research Dir. Nat Weinberg of the CIO Auto Workers. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther is a member of the Conference's national committee.

Because of the "deficit" in production levels, the study said, the true level of unemployment including reduced hours of work and "unrecorded" temporary unemployment is now equivalent to full-time unemployment of about five million.

"The irregular 'leveling-off' of recent weeks is not good enough," the 44-page report said. "The average worker's output per man hour is increasing. The labor force is growing. Thus total production must expand steadily to avoid excessive slack.

"If total output in the first quarter of next year were to be no higher than in the first quarter of this year (about $2 billion above the second quarter), the annual rate of output would be at least $37 billion below the full production level."

Balanced Economy

The report declared that the government should shape its fiscal policies with the paramount objective of maintaining a full economy, even when this means abandoning the idea that small Treasury deficits are worse than huge national economic deficits. Moreover, it added, the federal budget can be kept closest to balance in a balanced U. S. economy.

A tax cut of about $4.5 billion, mostly for low-income groups, was advocated by the report, while government spending should be stepped up by about $3 billion a year above present rates.

"If increases of this size in national security outlays are not needed—though they well may be—there are enormous backlogs of needs at home, for roads, schools, hospitals and many other public works," the report said.

Farm income should be stabilized and enlarged, the Conference said. Also urged were big increases in social security benefits and more public housing, with a goal of two million total housing "starts" a year.

KIBITIZING is popular at UAW-CIO Hudson Local 154 Drop-In Center at Detroit. Joe Rop, 70, plays for a kill and is encouraged (l. to r.) by Tom Birtles, George Brown, Barney Gagle and Walter Shaw.

THEY BAKED A CAKE—Toledo Pensioners Club marks second anniversary as Chairman Jake Burtchin of Reg. 2B Pensioners Club, UAW-CIO, cuts cakes furnished by members' wives. Some 200 retirees attend every meeting. Social activities are part of the program of every retirees' club.

UAW Program For Pensioners Is 4 Years Old And Expanding

THE OLD-TIMERS are kicking up their heels in the CIO Auto Workers.

UAW-CIO has developed in four years a recreation and education program for many of them, and the activities are constantly expanding.

The program is needed, for there now are some 36,500 UAW-CIO members retired on monthly pensions negotiated by the union. The first pensioners received a monthly total of $100 including Social Security payments.

Under the revised formula of the Ford, General Motors and Chrysler contracts, this amount has been upped to $137.50 monthly. The current UAW-CIO goal is a combined monthly minimum of $200.

It is estimated by the UAW-CIO Social Security Dept. that there will be 60,000 retired members by 1955, and 90,000 by 1957.

Active in the UAW-CIO for many years, the old-timers themselves wanted a union program.

OLDEST retiree at a meeting of Muncie, Ind., retired members receives prize. He is Charles Douglas, 83.

During the summer of 1951, a steering committee of retired workers from various Detroit area locals was set up. Simultaneously a staff advisory committee was organized. It included representatives from the UAW Recreation, PAC, Education, Community Services and Social Security Depts.

UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther directed the Recreation Dept. to serve as the coordinator of the program.

Hudson Local 154 had the first Drop-In Center, opened in February 1953. Activities of the center include showing of special interest films, counselling and hobby classes, card and checker tournaments, visits of sports authorities, television and radio shows, and trips to interesting points near the center.

The success of the Detroit pilot plan inspired the establishment of other programs. Among the first of these was that at Toledo, where the program is three years old.

Steps to set up similar programs have been taken in other cities where there are large numbers of UAW-CIO members.

FOUR RETIRED UAW members help fix up Lincoln Local 900 Drop-In Center, Detroit. A short time after they finished their painting and refurnishing, the club was ready for pensioners of the West Side.

TELEVISION takes to public some activities of UAW-CIO retirees. They are (from left): Walter McCandless, copper tooling; Bill Ward, leather work; Archie Baker, mat making, Ed Moore, drawing; Mrs. Thomas Birtles, knitting; Mrs. E. E. Birchall, crocheting; John Blue, reading.

MORE THAN 1000 UAW-CIO members attended the Old-Timers 1952 PAC Rally at Solidarity House, the international union's headquarters at Detroit. The role of the retirees in political life was stressed.

(All photos courtesy of The Auto Worker.)

'Anything Goes' As NLRB Puts Okay On Bosses' Questioning

"ANYTHING GOES" — almost—when the boss now wants to question workers about their union affiliation.

That was what the Eisenhower-appointed members of the National Labor Relations Board said in effect last week when they junked the traditional ban against employers quizzing their workers about union membership or activities.

CIO Assistant General Counsel Thomas Harris called the ruling "an outrageous backward step."

Harris added: "The decision opens the door to intimidation of workers and the employers' use of espionage against unions —providing they wink, as required by the Labor Board."

THE THREE Republican majority members of the NLRB turned back the clock in a case involving the Blue Flash Express, Inc., of New Orleans and Local 270 of the AFL Teamsters.

According to their reasoning, under "proper safeguards" the questioning of workers individually about whether they signed union cards "does not imply any threat." They concluded the boss only wanted to be guided in responding to the union's request for recognition and bargaining.

Presumably, unless a boss threatens to fire those who admit joining a union or promises to make them foremen if they don't join, employers can query workers as much as they please under the newest NLRB dictum.

The two Democratic holdovers on the board disagreed with the majority and said the decision is "unsound and ignores the realities of industrial life." They said the board had found from its inception that "interrogation by an employer prevents employes from exercising freely their right to engage in concerted activities."

NEW UNION HOME—Cedar Falls, Ia., Mayor Pat Touchae cuts ribbon as Pres. B. T. Kennedy (left) and Dist. 3 Dir. Russell Bull hold it, at dedication of new union hall for Local 46, CIO Packinghouse Workers.

Labor's World—

ICFTU Checks Apprentice Curbs On Women Workers

RESTRICTIONS on trade apprenticeships for women are under study by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The survey is being made at the request of the Intl. Labor Organization and the United Nations Economic and Social Council.

Affiliated organizations and international trade secretariats have been asked to provide the ICFTU with information about occupations for which apprenticeship is barred to women and girls and the reasons for such restrictions.

The affiliates are also asked to support ICFTU action urging enactment and enforcement of legal provisions aimed at banning discrimination by nationality, religion, race or sex, in employment or education.

ICFTU Rep. Herman Pateet reported to a UNESCO meeting in Geneva the views of free trade unions on the rights of women.

"Economic independence," he said, "is the way which leads to true equality and that is why the ICFTU attaches so much importance to the question of equal pay."

Pateet added that women also frequently suffered disadvantages in the spheres of social security, especially in unemployment insurance and pensions.

Germany

The campaign of West German workers for a new wage scale and a reasonable share in the country's prosperity has grown to the point where four million workers are now involved.

In some cases, the unions have already broken off wage negotiations and have taken strike votes or are preparing to do so. A considerable number of unions have cancelled old wage agreements or have served cancellation notices.

The average hourly wage for men in mining, capital construction and consumer goods industries is equivalent to about 44c, while that for women is equivalent to 27c. Most unions are demanding 10%-15% increases. The only increase won so far is a 6% boost for the 300,000 members of the Metal Workers Union of Wuerttemberg-Baden.

Venezuela

Workers' delegates to the new Governing Body of the ILO in Geneva voted against acceptance of the invitation of the Venezuelan government to hold the next session of the Petroleum Council in Caracas. The labor group urged refusal of such invitations until the dictatorial government of Venezuela restored trade union freedom in that country.

Sweden

An official study of the feasibility of introducing the 40-hour week has been started by Minister of Social Welfare Gunnar Strang with the appointment of a committee headed by former Minister of the Interior Eije Mossberg.

The 48-hour week now prevails in Sweden, combined by law with a three-week paid vacation. Strang told the committee the 40-hour week should be regarded as a goal that can be reached only in gradual changes. Anything that might lower living standards or affect adversely the national economy must be avoided, he said.

ILO

Steps to increase productivity "should be accompanied by appropriate policies to insure that the benefits are fairly distributed through higher wages or lower prices, or both, and by safeguards to insure satisfactory working conditions," the Intl. Labor Organization held in a recent report.

Such measures are essential, it maintained, to assure the rapid translation of productivity increases into improvements in social and economic welfare.

Summary Issued On Tariff Bill

The CIO Legislative Dept. has issued a summary of the trade adjustment bill introduced recently by Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.) and Reps. Williams (D. N. J.) and Eberharter (D. Pa.)

The bill incorporates suggestions of Pres. David J. McDonald, as a member of the Randall Commission on Foreign Economic Policy, for aid to workers and communities affected by tariff reductions.

Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Legislative Dept. director, said copies of the analysis and of the bill are available from the National CIO Legislative Dept.

UPA Wins Firing Case After 3 Years

EVEN WHEN the National Labor Relations Board rules in favor of a union on unfair labor practice charges, reactionary company management can use Taft-Hartley obstructions to stall off union organization almost indefinitely.

The CIO Paperworkers added one more such experience to the record when they finally won their 40-month fight against the Shedd-Brown Mfg. Co. in Eau Claire, Wis., which had fired 16 workers back in October of 1950 for union activity.

Shedd-Brown fought the case for two years in the NLRB. Then the case was taken to a U. S. Circuit Court and finally to an appellate court. All 16 employes must be offered reinstatement and must be compensated for all wages lost as a result of the company's action, the court decreed.

ALTHOUGH NLRB officials looked on the decision as a victory, UPA-CIO Area VI Dir. Donald Thomas expressed a different attitude, saying: "We wonder how much the company saved during these years in being able to continue operations paying substandard wages and fostering substandard conditions in the plant?"

UPA-CIO Pres. Harry Sayre said that anti-union managements may eventually have to face a day of reckoning for outright unfair labor practices, "but this case also demonstrates the weakness of Taft-Hartley in permitting abusive delay which is no more than outright frustration of the original intent of the National Labor Relations Act."

MEANWHILE, in a separate action, the NLRB ruled that a strike against one member of a group of employers justifies the whole group in locking out their employes.

The 4-1 decision reversed a doctrine laid down by former NLRB members under the Truman Administration. The earlier ruling held that a lockout by other employers, when one of their number was struck, was an illegal discouragement of union activity. The new case involved a group of Buffalo, N. Y., laundry supply companies bargaining with the AFL Teamsters.

CIO Councils In Action

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council is advocating a three-point program to encourage the registration of a million eligible voters who are not on the lists.

State CIO Pres. Paul Krebs has called on county election boards to open ward or neighborhood registration places, to keep county or municipal registration offices open at night, and to provide registration facilities in stores, offices and factories.

Kids' Camp

Some 160 children of CIO members in the Flint-Lansing, Mich., area are camping for two weeks at FDR-CIO Labor Center, near Port Huron, Mich.

The Michigan CIO Council and the CIO Auto Workers are joint sponsors of the children's camp. The last four weeks of the six-week camp are reserved for children from the Detroit area.

- The Michigan CIO Council will have a message for farmers at tents it will set up at 10 fairs. The Council will emphasize that the Republican Administration at Washington "has reversed the economic prosperity the nation enjoyed under years of Democratic Administrations." The Auto Workers, the Packinghouse Workers, other international unions, CIO county councils and the Michigan Labor Committee for Human Rights will cooperate in the program.
- Representatives of the New York State CIO Council urged the State Democratic leaders to include in the party's platform a demand for the repeal of the Hughes-Brees Law, which revised the formula for determining the employer tax for the unemployment insurance fund. Liberalization of unemployment and workmen's compensation laws also was asked by the group, which was headed by Pres. Louis Hollander.
- A report on Congress by Rep. Madden (D. Ind.) will be a feature of the Lake County CIO Labor Day picnic which will be held at Wicker Memorial Park, Highland, Ind.
- The Greater Buffalo CIO Council delegates unanimously urged Pres. Eisenhower to appoint Dr. Marvin A. Rapp to the St. Lawrence Seaway Commission because "his knowledge of our Great Lakes and seaways would make a tremendous contribution to the important work." Dr. Rapp is teacher of history at State Teachers College at Buffalo.
- So that CIO counsellors may see at first hand the good work done by a Red Feather agency, the Boston CIO Council arranged a visit for them to Camp Denison, Georgetown. The camp is operated by Denison Neighborhood House in Boston.
- The Pennsylvania CIO Council has sent to its affiliates a poster, Polio Pointers, issued by the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. The poster deals with polio vaccine and gamma globulin, as does a pamphlet which the Council is offering union members.

Locals Top PAC Buck Goals

LATEST EVIDENCE of the interest of CIO members in political action is the new record set in CIO Steelworkers Dist. 1 by local 3590 in Worcester, Mass.

The USA-CIO members at the Colorado Fuel & Iron Corp. plant contributed an average of $2.04 in this year's voluntary dollar drive, topping their last year's record of $1.92.

"Any local whose officers and members have a sufficient interest in their union" can do the same kind of job said Dist. Dir. Martin J. Walsh in praise of the local.

Pres. Harold Rommel of CIO Local Industrial Union 520, Philadelphia, has announced that the local has collected $410 for PAC, with every member of the local making a contribution.

HONOR KOHLER MARTYR—A wreath is placed on the grave of Henry Engelman at Sheboygan, Wis., on the 20th anniversary of his slaying by Kohler Co. police during an AFL strike. From left: Pres. Allen Graskamp of UAW-CIO Local 833, now on strike; Clarence Holden, chairman of joint strike committee; and Arthur F. Kuhn, president of AFL union in earlier strike.

GOP, Demos Aid Ohio CIO As Jobless Pay Initiative Begins

(Photo on Page 1)

THE BI-PARTISAN nature of the Ohio CIO Council's initiative petition to improve that state's unemployment compensation law was assured as both Republicans and Democrats participated in the signing ceremony launching the campaign.

First signer was Ohio CIO Council Pres. James P. Griffin, who is also Dist. 26 director of the CIO Steelworkers.

"We ask all citizens of Ohio to cooperate with the CIO in its efforts to amend the law to provide a more decent American standard of living for unemployed families," Griffin said at USA-CIO headquarters in Youngstown where the ceremony took place.

Youngstown Republican City Councilman George L. Stowe, who is a candidate for the State Senate, was one of those witnessing the affair and signing the petition. Others were State Sen. Charles J. Carney (D.), State Reps. G. D. Tablack (D.) and Thomas J. Barrett (D.), Mahoning County CIO Council Pres. Al Shipka, and two USA-CIO local union presidents, Mike Roberts of Local 1331 and Sam Camens of Local 1330.

New York

The Western New York Citizenship Council of the CIO Auto Workers ran a half-page ad in the Buffalo Courier-Express calling on the public to sign an attached petition to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey to improve the unemployment compensation act.

The ad pointed that because of inadequacy of the present act the purchasing power of 101,353 unemployed workers in western New York was lost to the community. The ad quoted Pres. Eisenhower: "Unemployment insurance is a valuable first line of defense against recession."

New Jersey

In New Jersey, almost as many unemployment insurance claimants exhausted their last possible benefit during the first six months of 1954 as in the entire 12 months of last year, State CIO Pres. Paul Krebs said.

Krebs wrote all members of the Legislature urging adoption of Pres. Eisenhower's recommendations on unemployment compensation because of record unemployment and exhaustions, high benefit reserves and the "miserably low $30 weekly maximum."

Krebs asked an increase in maximum weekly benefits to $45, extension of benefits to at least six weeks for all claimants and coverage of employers of one or more workers under the law as necessary to carry out Pres. Eisenhower's "minimum recommendations."

The CIO's letter noted that latest State Employment Security agency figures showed 102,940 unemployed collecting benefits in the week ending July 17. During the same week of 1953, only 58,609 were on the rolls. An estimated 30,000 more workers have exhausted their benefits.

Wisconsin

A special session of the Wisconsin legislature was urged on Gov. Kohler by the State CIO Council to save the state's "multi-million dollar building program as a part of a program to combat unemployment."

State CIO Pres. Charles M. Schultz and Sec.-Treas. Ross Baum, said the "state building program is looked upon by labor as one of the steps toward halting unemployment for many of Wisconsin jobless."

The action came on the heels of a "recent Supreme Court decision endangering the state building program," the statement said. The Wisconsin CIO reminded the governor that the program had been "number one on its list of state actions to cut down unemployment" submitted to the Legislature last January.

Kohler Strikers' Kids Need Shoes; CIO Seeks Money To Buy Them

THE WISCONSIN CIO Council last week appealed to some 200 affiliated unions to donate money to buy shoes and clothing for children of CIO Auto Workers on strike against the Kohler Co., near Sheboygan.

Some 3600 UAW-CIO members are in the fifth month of a strike against the manufacturer of bathroom fixtures. The issue is to bring the wages and other conditions up to the standard of other firms in the industry.

Council Pres. Charles Schultz wrote 197 Wisconsin CIO unions, with a membership of 113,000:

"To date the strike assistance by the UAW-CIO has cost a little more than a half million dollars. The UAW-CIO has pledged this support and will continue it, even though the burden has become tremendous.

"You can help on this basic problem; many of the strikers' children are in need of shoes and with the school year again approaching many of these children might not be able to go to school unless we, the CIO in Wisconsin, see to it that they have shoes."

The letter asked that money be sent to Dir. Harvey Kitzman of UAW-CIO Reg. 10, 225 East Michigan St., Milwaukee 2, Wis. He is chairman of the Kohler Strikers Defense Committee.

FEEDING three meals a day to between 3000 and 5000 persons at the strike kitchen costs $1000 a week, not including donations of groceries and farm produce. Strike assistance amounts to from $42,000 to $50,000 a week, according to UAW-CIO officials.

Solid support for the strike was indicated by the 7000 persons who attended a recent rally, where the speaker was Victor G. Reuther, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Negotiations were resumed last week, five weeks after the firm broke off the talks.

Ship Union Denies Todd Claim About Agreement

THE CIO Shipbuilding Union last week flatly denied that it had reached an agreement with Todd Shipyards Corp. as the firm stated.

"The Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America," said Pres. John J. Grogan, "flatly denies that its Locals 15 and 39 reached any agreement with the Todd Shipyards Corp., or that the membership of those locals ratified any such agreement, or the terms of the contract with that corporation.

"As a matter of fact, Todd did not even make an offer to the locals sufficiently firm to be acted on by them."

Shipowners are shy about putting their ships needing repairs in yards where contracts do not exist. Todd apparently was attempting to get work by representing that it had an agreement.

THE FIRM has not met with the union since July 24, despite repeated efforts by IUMSWA-CIO to resume talks. Todd has repair yards at Brooklyn, N. Y., and Hoboken, N. J.

It is one of 30 ship repair or building firms on the Atlantic Seaboard and the Great Lakes where IUMSWA-CIO members continue to work on a day-by-day basis after an appeal by the Federal Conciliation and Mediation Service that a work stoppage would be against the national interest.

Negotiations were continuing with Bethlehem Steel Corp., the industry's bellwether, and the other companies, except Maryland Drydock Co., Baltimore, which has set no date for resumption of negotiations.

UPA Wins 2 Elections

TWO VICTORIES in National Labor Relations Board elections were won by the CIO Paperworkers in as many weeks in Ohio.

UPA-CIO defeated the AFL at Aetna Div. of Howard Paper Mills at Dayton. At Cleveland the CIO union soundly trounced the Communist-dominated Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union at the Moser Bag and Paper Co.

The UPA also won a 9c an hour package increase at the Fleming and Sons mill at Dallas, Tex. A 7c an hour package was contained at the East Walpole, Mass. mill of Hollingsworth and Vose Co., and at the West Groton, Mass., mill of the same firm there was a 3.75% pay increase.

Peak Auto Layoffs Due For Model Changeover

UNEMPLOYMENT in the auto industry in the next few weeks is expected to reach its highest point since 1946, as car makers shut down for the longest model changeover period of the postwar era.

The impact will be felt in the November elections in Michigan as well as at plants and parts suppliers from coast to coast, says the Wall Street Journal. The protracted layoffs are also expected by the Journal to provide more ammunition for the CIO Auto Workers drive toward a guaranteed annual wage.

The Michigan Employment Security Commission anticipates the number of jobless may hit 300,000 this fall, reflecting the layoffs on assembly lines and suppliers' floors. Unemployment in the state now stands at about 230,000.

A UAW-CIO spokesman told the Journal: "When we approach the bargaining table for a guaranteed annual wage, all we have to cite is the experience of the past 18 months—we won't have to resort to anything hypothetical.

Auto output is scheduled to be pared anyway between now and early autumn as dealers get a chance to dispose of 1954 models, of which 574,000 were on hand July 20. Last year the industry turned out 6.1 million cars, 42% above 1952. This year output has been running 11.6% under the same period a year ago.

CHEVROLET is slated for the longest changeover shutdown since the end of the war. Layoffs of from two to eight weeks are scheduled between Aug. 13 and Oct. 1.

In its Detroit gear and axle plant employing 6000, about 5000 will be furloughed and another 1000 will be dropped permanently due to "technological improvements."

More than a third of Chrysler's 107,000 workers will begin varying periods of idleness this week. In early September, two-month layoffs start for over half the 6500 Packard workers. Ford layoffs may be the briefest.

Michigan's Gov. G. Mennen Williams promised "to do a lot of hollering" if the model changeovers "knock the bottom out of things . . . Undoubtedly it will be an election issue."

Ike Signs Handicapped Bills

LABOR-supported legislation to aid rehabilitation and employment of handicapped workers has finally passed Congress and has been signed by Pres. Eisenhower.

One of the measures, all part of the program of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, provides $65 million for the next three years for vocational rehabilitation.

The legislation also sets up a national advisory council of labor, management, handicapped persons and professional representatives to consider new projects.

Other action authorizes the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to report to Congress whether additional programs are necessary for teaching and training "shut-in" persons, particularly in rural areas. Another bill provides that each of some 1800 state employment offices should have an expert on job counseling for handicapped persons.

CIO leaders who testified for the measures included Joseph A. Beirne, Community Services Committee chairman and Communications Workers president; Michael J. Quill, Safety and Occupational Health Committee chairman and Transport Workers president; and Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers.

You And Your Money—

Individual Health Insurance Looks Like A Bad Buy

HOW GOOD a buy is individual health insurance? Not very good, according to a new analysis prepared by the Committee for the Nation's Health.

The non-profit group finds that those health and accident policies you can buy for yourself and your family from many commercial insurance firms aren't all their advertising claims make them seem.

The "freedom from worry" over medical bills so glibly guaranteed in the sales pitch over radio and television and in the newspapers fails to materialize when the insured collides with the fine print in the contract.

The analysis spotlights some of the objectionable features about these individual contracts, among the worst of which is the cancellation clause. An insurance policy which can be cancelled as soon as it is used is a commodity of very doubtful value.

Whatever reason the insuring company may give for its action, such a policy does not in fact give the subscriber any assurance of being able to prepay any of his illness costs—which is his only reason for buying the policy.

A Common Dodge

The most common dodge is to cancel the policy immediately after the first claim for benefits is submitted. The claim itself, often a small one, is paid. But then—just when the policyholder is apt to need healthy protection most—the company drops his policy or tries to sell him a new one with limited coverage or with much higher premiums.

Cancellability is a problem only in individual health and accident insurance—that is, policies which are sold to individual purchasers. This individual insurance is quite different from group insurance purchased as a unit by an employer or organization to cover a specific group of people.

CNH finds that compared with group health insurance, individual health insurance is much more costly and, on the whole, pays back much less in benefits per dollar of premiums. Reports show that, roughly speaking, individual insurance usually pays back in benefits between 45% and 60% of premiums, or about 50% on the average. Group policies usually pay back between 70% and 85%, or about 80% on the average.

Individual policies normally contain extensive restrictions on benefits, among them age limits for enrolling or renewing, refusal to cover pre-existing conditions and waiting periods and other restrictions for some illnesses. In addition, there's always the less clearly defined limitation on benefits in the "fine print."

Some individual policies are little more than rackets, even the honest ones are costly. Unions can reasonably advise members that individual insurance, cancellable or non-cancellable, is an expensive luxury. Any group insurance, whether provided by a union welfare fund or paid for entirely by the worker as a member of a group, gives much better benefits at lower costs.

CNH concludes with the proposition that only national health insurance—as proposed in CIO-supported bills before Congress—would make it possible for all employed persons to obtain through low monthly payments the kind of comprehensive services they need to keep their families in good health and to make immediately available to them the best medical care when they are sick.

A Directory of Prepayment Medical Service Plans is available at 25c each from the Committee for the Nation's Health, 2212 M St., Washington 7, D. C. Also available are copies of the analysis on individual health insurance plans.

AMA Policies Rapped

The American Medical Association has excessive authority over the practice of medicine, according to a report in the Yale University Law Journal. The results of the two-year study charged the AMA with failure to use its authority as an "instrument of progress."

National Commander Arthur J. Connell of the American Legion called on legionnaires to "fight" the AMA's "anti-veteran crusade." He told the New York State Legion convention:

"As long as the AMA is throwing down the gauntlet to the veterans of this nation, let's pick it up. As long as they want a fight, we're going to see that they get it."

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

MRS. DELMA CURTIS of Harrison, Ark., raises some good questions about buying cars: "Does it pay to keep a car several years or get one every year or two? Is it wiser to buy a new one when you do buy?"

This is a debate that goes on across many back fences and family dining tables. As a confirmed used-car buyer, this writer is convinced you save by buying a good second-hand car and also by holding on to a car for several years.

How To Beat Car Depreciation

That's because depreciation is the biggest single cost in car ownership. Latest cost figures reported by the American Automobile Association show that if you buy a new car—one of the three leading lower-priced models—and trade it in every two years, your operating costs for 10,000 miles a year would be: depreciation, $442; insurance (fire, theft, $15,000-$30,000 liability), $101; gas and oil (at 2.23c a mile), $223; maintenance, $74; tires, $51. Total: $891, but that doesn't include, licenses; garage, parking, toll fees; financing and other hidden costs.

The total expense is actually twice as much as the average family spends for rent in a year. You have to have pockets lined with gold to own a car on this basis, or sacrifice other needs.

IN THE PAST THREE YEARS, depreciation has become an increasingly large expense. In the first postwar years, cars depreciated in value very little. Now, one large manufacturer reports, the average car depreciates 2.4% of its value each month, or 28.8% a year. Thus, a car that costs, say, $1800 loses $518 of value the first year, and $375 the second year, at which time you can buy it for about $900, depending on condition, resale popularity of the model and prevailing market conditions.

Thus the first two years squeeze out half the original cost. Third year depreciation costs you $260; fourth year, $185; fifth, $130, and from then on less than $100.

Naturally you will have increasing repair costs as the car ages. Most service managers and mechanics report maintenance costs jump after 40,000 miles, when such costly components as clutch, brakes, wheel bearings, universal joints and steering gear start to go. But with good maintenance, many owners get up to 60,000 miles of comparatively inexpensive operation.

If body and chassis are in good condition, a new or factory-rebuilt engine can give you an additional 40-50,000 miles at only one-fifth or one-sixth the cost of a new car. Because of the increase in depreciation cost, adequate maintenance to extend a car's usefulness takes on new financial importance. Grease is cheaper than metal.

When you do find repairs plus depreciation add up to more than depreciation plus less-costly ordinary maintenance on a newer car would cost, you have probably arrived at the car owner's point of no return, when it will be cheaper to trade.

WHILE YEARLY MAINTENANCE COSTS on new cars run only about $74 a year, the AAA's National Automotive Service Dept. found that average maintenance costs among a group of members it surveyed, whose cars included older as well as fairly young ones, came to $287 a year. Of this, $105 went for major repairs, and $181 for general maintenance including replacement of ignition points, spark plugs, windshield wipers and lights, body care, lubrication, etc.

Generally people who live in rural areas can hold on to a car longer, than city dwellers. City driving builds up carbon quickly, and is hard on steering parts, brakes, transmission, axles and rear ends.

Here's a tip on shopping for used cars: be especially careful about those usually driven only in city traffic or on short trips. Also the car belonging to an old lady "who used it only to go to church an Sundays," traditionally supposed to be a "wonderful buy," is actually the worst car to buy. Have your own mechanic check any used car before you buy it.

More About Events In Congress

(Continued from Page 3.)

our families with modest incomes . . . for the first time to buy new or used homes."

Schools

Congress may adjourn without taking action on relieving the nation's critical classroom needs, warned Rep. Kearns (R. Pa.) The Senate and House Labor Committees have approved a bill providing $400 million in federal aid to help local communities build schools.

Labor Dept.

A move by Sen. Bridges (R. N. H.) to slip through an amendment to the supplemental appropriations bill which would have made the administration of the Labor Dept. subject to a patronage appointee was killed when Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) raised a point of order that the proposal was legislation on an appropriations bill.

Migrant Labor

Two labor-backed bills, designed to curb the flow of illegal Mexican "wetback" labor across the border into the U. S., won approval of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

One bill allows the confiscation of cars, trucks and other vehicles used in transporting Mexicans who illegally enter this country. The other sets fines and jail sentences for violations of injunction orders which could be obtained forbidding individual employers from hiring "wetbacks."

Subversives

The Senate Judiciary Committee approved a bill a strip convicted Communists of U. S. citizenship.

Still blocked are two anti-subversives measures sought by the Administration. One of these permits the use in federal courts of evidence gained by wiretapping.

The other could force reluctant witnesses to testify against themselves before grand juries or congressional committees, thus nullifying the terms of the Fifth Amendment.

Military Training

Just before resigning last week, Assistant Defense Sec. John A. Hannah tipped a secret and the Administration's universal military training apple cart. He said an active and reserve force of 6.1 million men was contemplated by next year. Not quite so, the White House answered the next day. Defense Sec. Wilson told reporters, the day following, that Hannah was substantially right.

The Administration will seek to extend the Draft Act before it expires next June 30 and may also try to make reserve service compulsory. The plans were to have been a secret until next January when the fall elections were safely over.

Social Security

The Senate Labor Committee approved, 11 to one, a bill to liberalize the Railroad Retirement Act. The measure passed the House earlier. The $82 million terms improving retirement and unemployment benefits for railroad workers, not now covered by Social Security, will be borne by the workers and railroads.

Don't Expect Price Dip To Show Up At Store

HOUSEWIVES can expect little real benefit from lower prices which farmers are receiving for their products, according to a report from the staff of the House Agriculture Committee. And it added, farmers can expect further drops in income, especially those who raise livestock.

Meanwhile, on both sides of the Capitol there were angry mutterings that investigations into juggling of coffee prices would be spurred by a critical Federal Trade Commission report that speculation and not shortages caused the sharp increase.

For homemakers interested in stretching the family budget the Agriculture Dept. said that "best buys" in the months ahead will be pork, eggs, turkey, fats and oils, fresh vegetables and dairy products such as butter and cheese.

THE HOUSE Agriculture staff report warned that housewives could expect no breaks from lower farm prices unless middlemen — the business boys — "stopped boosting their processing and distribution charges."

The statement was made in an analysis of the extent to which recent farm price declines have and have not been passed on to the consumer.

Rep. Hope (R. Kan.) released the report which noted that retail food prices have gone up an average of 1% since 1951 while the pay the farmer received for them dropped 18.8%.

The report implicitly criticized the Administration's plan to abandon rigid 90% of parity support prices and further leave the farmer at the mercy of processors and economic decline.

"The city housewife," the report said, "is paying the highest prices on record for bakery products and cereals, yet . . . farm prices of wheat are now at their lowest level for several years. In view of this record it is difficult to see how urban consumers expect to benefit from lower prices on wheat."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

While CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe is recovering from his recent illness, his column is being conducted by guest writers. This week the writer is Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock, of the CIO Textile Workers.

By WILLIAM POLLOCK

THERE ARE TIMES when all of us in the CIO tend to forget that we started out, first as a committee and then as a separate federation, with one primary goal—organizing the unorganized.

There are times when we tend to forget that this goal is still a long, long way ahead of us.

True, we have built great unions, with large memberships and big treasuries. True, as the pages of The CIO News reveal in every issue, we are occupied with all manner of administrative problems, including the very worthy one of negotiating better wages and working conditions for our members. True, a substantial share of our energy is devoted to broad social and political problems.

But if we lose sight of our original goal, if we grow complacent, our treasuries and our membership will shrink; we will no longer be able to negotiate gains; and our political and social programs will fail. Worst of all, we will have abandoned an ideal.

I don't think it is going to happen. Nevertheless I think it is well for us to re-dedicate ourselves, now and then, to the bitter struggle on the frontiers of organizing.

Undeveloped Frontiers

Where are these frontiers? One of them is in the so-called white collar field—office and clerical workers, salespeople and those on the fringes of the professions.

We have talked about white collar organization for years; we have made a number of efforts; here and there we have gained a foothold, or more accurately a fingernail-hold. But we haven't done the job.

Another frontier is in southern textiles—which, despite the industrial diversification of recent years, means the South itself. Thus no union in CIO—nor in the AFL, for that matter—has a more vital stake in organizing than TWUA.

About a third of the nation's textile workers are members of our union. Another 5% are in splinter organizations. More than 60% have no union representation at all, and most of these are in the South.

The Stake: Life Itself

Unless the South is organized, the percentages will get worse. The industry is shrinking, and the shrinkage is more rapid in the higher wage, better organized areas. What is true in textiles is also true in lumber, furniture, cotton garments and other industries.

What is at stake is not only the survival of TWUA, nor even the living standards of the textile workers, important though these are. The whole political and economic life of the South is at stake—and since one area inevitably affects others, of the nation as well.

An unorganized South means a low-wage South. And although some unions have succeeded in equalizing rates by applying pressure on nationwide chain companies, the job as a whole can't be done until it is done in textiles.

So while we take pride in our prowess in collective bargaining, while we gird ourselves for greater political action, while we use our treasuries for the general good, let us also remember that life is still harsh and bitter on the frontiers of organizing.

Until the last frontier comes within the civilization of unionism, we will not be safe, and we will not have fulfilled our high purpose.

Carey Challenges GE But Wage Talks Get Nowhere

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week "challenged" General Electric to share its "history-making" profits with its workers.

The challenge was voiced in a letter by IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey to GE Pres. Ralph Cordiner as negotiations reopened in New York City.

The talks held in the presence of a federal mediator got nowhere because of the company's unyielding attitude.

Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, noted that GE's profits after taxes for the first half of 1954 were $93,856,000, compared with $75,417,000 for the similar period last year.

"This represents an increase in net profits of 24.5% and gives GE its most profitable half-year in the company's history," he said.

"This extraordinary jump in profits also means a return of $1.08 per share of common stock as compared with the 87c in the same period last year.

"These are truly amazing figures, and it is very probable that no other company in the entire electrical, radio and machine industry will come close to these unprecedented GE profits."

Carey noted that the profits were made by discharging or laying off at least 20,000 employes, cutting the hours of other workers, starting a speed-up system and moving plants from unionized locations to rural areas where substandard wages could be paid.

CWA Gains 4.6c Hike In Illinois Pact

A TOTAL of 11 new contracts between the CIO Communications Workers and Bell System units have been settled so far this year covering about 62,000 of the more than 325,000 Bell employes represented by CWA.

Most recent settlement is with Illinois Bell, covering 11,000 traffic operators and other traffic workers. CWA said it is the best traffic wage settlement so far this year, with an average increase of 4.63c an hour.

Under the basic increase, half the workers covered by the Illinois contract receive a $1.50 weekly hike with reclassification of 13 towns adding a sizeable number of workers to that category.

BARGAINING is moving slowly elsewhere in the system, CWA reported. Negotiations are underway in 16 other units, including the Buffalo, N. Y., Western Electric manufacturing plant which has been struck since June 17.

All contracts have been settled peacefully except for the Buffalo strike, and a three-day strike of 16,000 Western Electric installers over the nation.

One new independent contract has been signed with General Telephone of the Southeast, a new company, which bought out the Bluefield, W. Va., Telephone Co., some time ago. It provides an average 3.5c hourly hike with increases ranging from 2.5c-17.5c for all workers.

In another independent company, Western Light and Telephone Co.—operating in Iowa, Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri—the National Labor Relations Board has ordered a representation election for 325 employes.

Vietnam Policy On U. S. Seamen Rapped By CIO

A PROTEST was lodged again last week by the CIO Maritime Committee against the confiscation by Vietnamese customs officials of money and other articles from merchant seamen.

Hoyt S. Haddock, committee executive secretary, who complained to the State Dept., said that as a result of the first protest some confiscated currency had been returned and fines lightened. He said that the situation remained unsatisfactory.

Haddock pointed out that the currency and articles were seized even though they were declared, and that in all cases heavy fines were imposed. He asked the department to make sure the Vietnamese government was not just interested in "picking up some quick U. S. dollars from seamen."

Guild Asks Vote In Charlotte

Employes of the Charlotte, N. C., Observer, largest paper in the Carolinas, have petitioned the National Labor Relations Board for an election to determine whether the CIO Newspaper Guild will represent them in collective bargaining.

GET the FACTS

. . . and spread the word. Here's ammunition from CIO-PAC for '54—

Just check the list of publications you want, sign your name and address, enclose payment, tear out this ad and mail to:

CIO Political Action Committee
718 Jackson Place, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Books and Pamphlets

1954 Political Action Handbook. The fourth edition of PAC's Speakers Handbook supplemented from time to time so that it is always up to date. Price for union members, $1.50.
☐ Send me _____ copies, sub-total price _____.

'54 Facts. The palm sized pamphlets that tell the story, a point to a page, of some of the main issues of the day. '54 Facts—Jobs. '54 Facts—Social Security. '54 Facts—Farmers. Price, $3 per 100.
☐ Send me _____ copies of Jobs, _____ copies of Social Security, _____ copies of Farmers, sub-total price _____.

Roll Call. Pocket magazine sized pamphlets that tell the story behind the roll call on a particular issue . . . what it means . . . why it's important to you . . . and how your congressman voted.

Roll Call-Majority Rule tells the story of the fight in 1953 for a rule to end filibusters in the Senate.

Roll Call-Giveaway tells the story of the fight to save the off-shore oil for the people of the United States. Price, $3 per 100.
☐ Send me _____ copies of Majority Rule, _____ of Giveaway, sub-total price _____.

Registration Manual, a how-to-do it manual on methods of conducting a registration campaign. Price, $5 per 100.
☐ Send me _____ copies, sub-total price _____.

A Manual For Precinct Workers, a how-to-do-it manual on political action published by the Labor Education Div. of Roosevelt College, has some useful tips on precinct work. Price, $5 per 100.
☐ Send me _____ copies, sub-total price _____.

Leaflets

Politics Is Your Baby, Too, a leaflet, addressed to the housewife and the woman trade union member, explaining what politics means to them. Price, $.50 per 100.
☐ Send me _____ copies, sub-total price _____.

Everything We Have, which tells in words and pictures how workers and farmers produce everything we have and should work together for mutual protection. Price, $3 per 100.
☐ Send me _____ copies, sub-total price _____.

What Is PAC, the basic pamphlet to answer the basic questions on what PAC is, what it does, and how it works. Free.
☐ Send me _____ copies.

Inside Story of Your PAC Dollar, a reprint of an old favorite that tells what happens to the dollar the member gives to PAC and how it comes back to him many-fold in the form of better government. (Ready soon.) Free.
☐ Send me _____ copies.

Speak Up For Prosperity, a handbill that tells what the Administration's thinking is on unemployment and urges people to speak up—the job they save may be their own. Free.
☐ Send me _____ copies.

Posters

Register Today So You Can Vote For a Better Tomorrow, a large 17x22 inch poster that pictures a family registering. Price, $10 per 100.
☐ Send me _____ copies, sub-total price _____.

Your Vote Is The One That Counts is a large size (17x22) poster and also comes in red, white and blue, in a small (8½x11) size. One series urges registration, the other urges voting. Free while they last.
☐ Send me _____ copies large size, _____ copies small size.

Periodicals

Political Action of the Week is a weekly, four-page newsletter that rounds up political developments during the week.
☐ Please enter my subscription, $1 a year.
TOTAL ORDER: $_____ (Check or money order enclosed.)

Name: .....

Local Union: .....

International Union: .....

Street Address: .....

City & State: .....

Ladies Get Dander Up At Virginia Parley

By ED LASHMAN

THERE'S an advertising slogan for one of the big women's magazines that says "Never underestimate the power of a woman."

Anybody inclined to underestimate the ladies should take a lesson from the Family Participation Conference in Political Action held in Roanoke last week under the sponsorship of the Virginia CIO Council.

For the 82 delegates—women members of CIO unions along with housewives and a sprinkling of husbands—who participated in the two-day session really got their dander up with their first major opportunity in Virginia to have their say about "woman's place is in politics."

ONCE THE LADIES realized the State CIO Council and the Virginia CIO Political Action Committee, both of which are headed by Lawrence Marine of the CIO Steelworkers, were really interested in their opinions and in their help, they began to sound off about what politics means to family members.

The conference was divided into discussion groups with a leader and a reporter for each group.

6-8

The groups talked over such things as whether women should be interested in politics, what reasons they have not been in the past, how they can work with the political action committees of CIO unions and state and area councils, how CIO women can work with other community groups, where they can look for information on political matters and Virginia problems of interest to women.

Most startling fact to most of the delegates was that there are more women in Virginia who are potential voters than men.

After seeing a list of 27 Virginia cities, in 25 of which there are more women over 21 than men, one delegate said "it's up to the women, then, to break the hold machine politics has in our state."

One of the groups made the point that since women are closer to "human problems" and have more understanding of a community, they ought to be working politically to improve the community.

Evidence of the fact that human problems do interest women was the list of community issues that the delegates felt were important. Such matters as improved schools and school transportation, the problem of juvenile delinquency and the need for more playgrounds, the need for more and better hospitals, the problem of full employment, better care for the mentally ill, abolition of the poll tax and improved teachers' salaries all came in for discussion and suggestions.

A lot of the worries that women have about participation in the political life of their communities were brought up and answered during the sessions.

All the women felt the lack of education and information in the field and they learned of ways in which they could become better informed. Chief among these were union literature and newspapers and CIO-sponsored ABC radio commentator John W. Vandercook.

Many of the women present said they realized for the first time that the issues of most concern to them had political solutions. And as one woman put it, "We mustn't let our husbands tell us how to vote. We want to use a little of gray matter we've got ourselves to learn how to solve these problems."

The conference, the first of its kind ever held in Virginia, was an outgrowth of a similar national conference held by the CIO Political Action Committee in Washington last January. PAC Dir. Jack Kroll has encouraged state and area conferences on family participation in political action because they "reaffirm the importance of the individual in a democratic society."

CHAIRMAN of the Virginia conference was Mrs. Lettie Marie Harrell, a member of the Top Committee of Local 495 of the CIO Chemical Workers at the Hercules Powder Co. arsenal in Radford.

Conference speeches were kept to a minimum so that the delegates could participate to the fullest extent. The two major addresses were by Col. Francis Pickens Miller, a leading anti-Byrd Democrat and former candidate for senator and governor, and Robert Whitehead, another anti-organization leader and a member of the Virginia House of Delegates.

MILLER TRACED the history of the Byrd machine in Virginia from the 1901-1902 constitutional convention when the late Carter Glass "evolved the poll tax—the most ingenious method ever invented by the mind of man to reduce suffrage." He called for establishment of a Joint Women's Citizens Committee to abolish the poll tax and "return to the people the government of Virginia."

Whitehead, who spoke at a final luncheon session, told the delegates that "family unity in political participation means greater family influence on our society."

WOMEN'S PLACE in politics is discussed at Virginia CIO Family Participation meet. At left, Mrs. Lettie Harrell introduces Mrs. Delia Trainham, CIO Paperworkers, to group as one of first women to vote in Virginia in 1916. At right, Mrs. Harrell and Virginia CIO Council Pres. Lawrence Marine register delegates.

No Problem

In one of the discussion groups at the Virginia CIO Council Family Participation Conference, a group of women delegates were talking about the question of getting information about political affairs.

"It's no problem for me," said one of the ladies. "I get it from reading my husband's mail!"

The Primaries: Kefauver Wins 2-1 After A Bitter Campaign

SEN. KEFAUVER won a landslide 2-1 victory last week in Tennessee's Democratic primary over Rep. Sutton (D.), thus virtually assuring his reelection in November in that normally Democratic state.

Gov. Clement won his primary fight against three-time former Gov. Gordon Browning by an equally wide margin. Judge Raulston Schoolfield who campaigned on a pro-segregation platform ran way behind with 22,381 votes.

The Kefauver and Clement victories were important triumphs for liberals, and both candidates had strong CIO support.

Incomplete returns gave Kefauver 331,617 to 141,271 for Sutton who campaigned as an isolationist and accused Kefauver of being a "left-winger."

Ray Jenkins, special counsel in the recent Army-McCarthy hearings, whose name was on the ballot for the Republican nomination for Senator without his authorization, won the primary. But Jenkins repeated he did not intend to run against Kefauver in the fall.

MICHIGAN: Former State Police Commissioner Donald S. Leonard won a four-way race for the Republican gubernatorial nomination to oppose incumbent Gov. G. Mennen Williams, who is seeking a fourth term in November with CIO support.

Williams, unopposed for the Democratic renomination, won a serious challenge to his party leadership with the nomination of Philip A. Hart to run for the lieutenant governorship over George S. Fitzgerald, a bitter foe of Williams.

In the U. S. Senate race, incumbent Sen. Ferguson (R.) was unopposed, and the death of former Sen. Blair Moody left a clear field for Patrick V. McNamara, ~~AFL~~ Plumbers Union official. Moody got an impressive "memorial" vote of 76,588. Seventeen of the 18 incumbent Congressmen won.

MISSOURI: All 11 of the incumbent congressmen won renomination, including Rep. Short (R.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, who had the most serious opposition.

One key general election race will be in the 4th Dist. where former Congressman George H. Christopher will face incumbent Rep. Hillelson (R.). Christopher, who probably will have labor support, lost his seat in a redistricting in 1950.

KANSAS: Top race in the Sunflower state was the Republican gubernatorial primary, won by incumbent Lt. Gov. Hall in a major defeat of the scandal-racked state Republican organization. He will be opposed by George Docking, Democrat.

Incumbent Sen. Schoeppel (R.) won easy renomination and will face former Sen. George McGill who took the Democratic nomination in a come-back try at age 75.

All six incumbent congressmen won re-nomination, three of them without opposition. In the 1st Dist. Rep. Miller, the first Kansas Democrat in recent history, will have farmer, labor and liberal support against Wm. H. Avery (R.). In the 2nd Dist. Rep. Scrivener (R.) will face liberal Democrat Newell George, former secretary to Sen. McGill. In the 4th Dist., Taft-Hartley supporter Rep. Rees (R.) will be opposed by State Rep. Robert Green (D.).

WEST VIRGINIA: Veteran Sen. Neely (D.) won renomination for a fifth term at age 79, over a field of three opponents. He will meet Thomas B. Sweeney, Wheeling insurance executive who won the Republican nomination, in November.

All six incumbent congressmen, including Rep. Kee (D.), the only woman in the delegation, and Rep. Neal, the only Republican, won renomination without trouble.

ILLINOIS: Despite his often-asserted comment that he would support candidates who favored his programs, Pres. Eisenhower has given hearty endorsement to Republican Senatorial nominee Joseph T. Meek, also backed by the Chicago Tribune.

OHIO: Democratic Party leaders, seeking to unseat Rep. Brown (R.) in the 7th District, faced a serious problem with the withdrawal of Charles West, former New Deal congressman, from the race for reasons of health.

The Answer To Your Question, Gals, Is 'Yes'

By LES FINNEGAN

"THE WORLD'S most beautiful union" was born in Rome, Italy, out of resentment against a single member of the Italian National Senate. Sen. Bartolo Galletto, 79 years old, announced he would introduce legislation prohibiting beauty contests anywhere in the country.

Italy's beautiful women, who have found beauty contests a road to movie, stage and modeling contracts, immediately announced they were forming a union to seek Sen. Galletto's defeat.

"There wouldn't be any sense in our setting up an association or club," said one beauty contest winner, "but with a union we can appear before other unions to ask their support. And if we appeal to them in our 'working clothes,' don't you imagine they'll go all out for us?"

CIO Union Conventions (See Pages 8 and 9)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., August 16, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 33

'Swat-The-Farmers' Bill Voted

—See Page 3

Kroll Sees Liberal Gains In Congress

—See Page 2

What The Shooting Is All About— Farm prices are big headlines, with the Senate approving the GOP Administration's plan for "flexible" price supports which will give farm income another downward nudge. One of the big issues for farmers and city workers alike is the wide spread between what farmers get for foodstuffs and what consumers have to pay at the grocery. That's illustrated by a farming-father and a unionist-daughter, Floyd Rutchin and Ruth Rutchin, at a recent Kansas CIO Council farm-labor conference at Parsons, Kan. She's a CIO Communications Workers steward. The chart shows the gap between retail food prices and what farmers receive. (For a report on Senate farm bill action, see Page 3, and a review of the farm-city price spread, see Page 10.)

Blacklist Firings Sweep Guatemala

—See Page 5

A Visit South Of Border

—See Page 7

Atom Workers Hit By T-H Injunction

—See Page 12

Job Figures Show Economy's Still On 'Dead Center'

"Well, you'd better use one to register to vote, before we all wind up with jobs like mine!"

"DEAD CENTER" is where the U. S. economy continues to perch, with no significant gains in employment or declines in unemployment contained in the latest government report.

Instead, the combined review of the Labor Dept. and Commerce Dept. (covering the week of July 5-11), showed continuing drops in non-farm and basic industry employment and lengthening layoff periods for workers without jobs.

Here are highlights of the U. S. report:

Total employment was 62,148,000, an increase of 50,000 from June.

Total unemployment was 3,346,000, a drop of only 1000 in a month, and affects 5.1% of all civilian workers.

Non-farm employment declined by 289,000, to a total of 47,900,000.

Thirty-day layoffs (which aren't recorded as unemployment by the government statisticians) increased by 70,000 in the month, to a total of 300,000.

Industrial unemployment continued to increase in such basic durable goods industries as fabricated metals, transportation equipment and machinery, and also in retail trade. Job gains were reported in construction, finance and service trades.

"The average duration of unemployment," the joint U. S. report said, "was estimated at about 11.5 weeks in July as compared to 11 weeks in the previous month."

Another government report, by the Bureau of Employment Security, said 19,000 workers in eight large states were dropped from rolls the last week in June alone.

With the July figures (which were comparable in many points to June's), the government claimed that "the employment downtrend of the past year has virtually ended."

"Although unemployment has not increased as much as expected this summer," the report added, "the jobless total in July was roughly twice as large as a year ago and the highest for the month in the postwar period except for 1949."

"It's a darned shame the way our business has been picking up so much lately!"

Kroll Hails Southern Primaries, Sees Liberal Congress Gains

RECENT victories of liberal Democrats in southern primaries brought a prediction from CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll last week that "this liberal trend will continue through the November elections."

Kroll's comment came after PAC-supported candidates in the South changed the political complection of five congressional districts, three gubernatorial and one Senate seats, and two PAC-backed incumbent senators were re-elected.

No incumbent with PAC endorsement has lost a race to date.

The "outstanding liberal victories," Kroll said, were attributable to four factors:

1. "Resentment against the obvious domination of our government by big business.
2. "A demand that the government face up to its responsibility to provide the country with an expanding economy in which there are full-time jobs for everyone who wants to work.
3. "Concern about our loss of prestige and friends abroad.
4. "Disappointment with a divided and leaderless Administration that offers only honeycombed words instead of action."

HERE IS A state-by-state rundown of the liberal victories, which PAC bucks contributed by CIO members helped bring:

Alabama: Incumbent Sen. Sparkman won a major victory over Rep. Battle heavily financed by Texas oil interests who were seeking to defeat Sparkman for his role in fighting the off-shore oil give-away.

Former Gov. James Folsom won over incumbent Gov. Persons, signer of the open shop bill passed by the last Legislature. And George Huddleston, son of a former congressman, took a runoff primary for the 4th Dist. seat vacated by Battle in his try to dump Sparkman.

North Carolina: Nomination of former Gov. Kerr Scott over incumbent Sen. Lennon was regarded as a major triumph for PAC, since power, textile and tobacco interests and arch-conservative Gov. Umstead, who appointed him, were all backing Lennon.

Tennessee: PAC scored a three-way victory in hotly-contested primaries. Sen. Kefauver bested Rep. Sutton better than 2-to-1 despite Sutton's heavy financial support, allegedly from oil, gambling and Republican sources. With a helicopter and radio and TV talkathons, Sutton covered the state, calling Kefauver a "left-winger" and drawing the issue between isolationism and internationalism.

PAC support paid off, too, for incumbent Gov. Clement, nominated for a first four-year term, under a change in state law, over former Gov. Browning who used state militia to help break a CIO Textile Workers strike some years ago. The other key election was that of Ross Bass for the 6th Dist. seat vacated by Sutton.

Texas: In the 12th Dist., Jim Wright beat Rep. Lucas, author of the notorious, unsuccessful Taft-Hartley amendment to ban industry-wide bargaining. In the 16th Dist., Rep. Regan bowed before State Sen. J. B. Rutherford, who had strong CIO and AFL support.

Virginia: Highlight of the 6th Dist. primary win of Del. Ernest Robertson was the attempt to use PAC support as a smear. Powell Glass, Roberton's Byrd machine opponent, tried to make capital out of CIO backing.

But in two radio talkathons in the district during which Robertson answered questions from all comers, he faced up to the charge by saying he was "proud" of the support of working people and listing the unions which had endorsed him. Result was that all the other candidates in the race wound up claiming or seeking labor backing, and Robertson was nominated.

Another important issue revolved around the fact that Rep. Poff, the incumbent Robinson will face in November, is a Republican. Glass, son of the late Sen. Glass, had been an Eisenhower supporter in 1952. He repudiated the support to run in the Democratic primary, but couldn't escape charges of party disloyolty.

Arkansas: Orval Faubus, a publisher, defeated incumbent Gov. Cherry—the first such defeat in that state for an incumbent governor seeking relection in 75 years.

Three other southern primaries are scheduled this month: Aug. 24 in Mississippi; Aug. 28 in Texas, a second primary where incumbent Gov. Shivers and his scandal-racked Administration face a serious threat from Ralph Yarborough; and Aug. 31, a second primary in Louisiana.

'The Veep' Gets Big Vote In Kentucky

THE VEEP, former Vice Pres. Alben Barkley, scored a smashing triumph in the first step of his return to politics in Kentucky's primary voting for U. S. Senator.

He led his nearest opponent better than 50-1 in the Democratic primary and polled more than two and a half times as many votes as were cast for incumbent Sen. Cooper, who won the Republican nomination.

Arkansas: Gov. Cherry, arch-conservative incumbent, was defeated for a second term by Orval Faubus in the Democratic primary. It was the first defeat of a governor running for a second term in 75 years.

Nebraska: In a complicated race for three U. S. Senate seats, Rep. Curtis, social security opponent, won the Republican nomination for a six-year term over Gov. Crosby, who had Eisenhower backing. He will be opposed by former Gov. Keith Neville, Democratic primary winner, in November.

Idaho: Former Sen. Glen Taylor, Progressive Party vice presidential candidate in 1948, by a close vote won the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senate. Incumbent Sen. Dworshak (R.) will be his opponent. Reps. Pfost (D.) and Budge (R.) had no primary opposition.

Delaware: Democrats nominated Sen. Frear for re-election by a scant 41-vote convention margin over former State Supreme Court Justice James M. Tunnell, Jr.

'It's Everybody's Fight'— URW Mobilizes Help For Goodyear Strikers

"SINCE IT'S everybody's fight, everybody should pitch in and help," said Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers, as he called on some 200,000 members to support financially the strike at Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Announcing that the URW Executive Board had called on all non-striking members of URW-CIO to contribute to the strike fund, he said:

"The members of our local unions who are not now on strike can best help Goodyear employes by contributing enough money so as to keep them and their families from suffering.

"Since it's everybody's fight, everybody should pitch in and help . . . Don't lose sight of the fact that they (the strikers) are making an all-out effort to establish a wage pattern which can be duplicated throughout the Big Four and among most of the URW plants as well."

"Not once during all of the present negotiating," Buckmaster added, "has Goodyear complained about inability to pay more than the 5c which it has offered. We all know that Goodyear and all other Big Four companies are in excellent position to absorb a decent wage increase (and that's more than 5c) this year."

The URW president pointed out that last year when "all of the Big Four companies made the greatest net profits in their history . . . Goodyear alone cleared more than $49 million, after paying all costs including the excess profits tax." Since then the excess profits tax has been dropped.

THE BOARD urged all non-striking members of the union to give $2 a week to support the strike and all offices and staff of URW-CIO to contribute substantial amounts to the strike fund.

Some 23,000 URW-CIO members have been on strike six weeks at 10 Goodyear plants. A key issue in the strike is improvement in wage area differentials at the various plants.

At the Topeka Kan., plant, the firm has a wage scale for tire makers which is 34c an hour lower than in comparable plants, 33c lower than the industry's average and the lowest paid by any rubber company.

The union also is seeking a substantial general wage increase.

Bulletin

Some 25,000 members of the CIO Rubber Workers late last week struck Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. plants after two months deadlock in negotiations.

Like their fellow URW-CIO members at Goodyear, Firestone workers rejected an offer of a 5c wage increase. Negotiations were scheduled to resume.

The struck plants are at Akron, O., Des Moines, Ia., Newcastle and Noble, Ind., Pottstown, Pa., Fall River, Mass., and Memphis Tenn.

CIO Leaders Set Labor Day Talks

Labor Day addresses of two CIO leaders will be broadcast nationally.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will make a Labor Day speech at 3:45 p.m. EDT, Sunday, Sept. 5, on NBC Radio.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey will be heard on ABC Radio at 4 p.m. EDT, Monday, Sept. 6.

Check your newspaper radio log for the time of local broadcasts.

Marcantonio Dies On N. Y. Street

Former Rep. Vito Marcantonio, for 14 years American Labor Party member in the House, dropped dead of a heart attack on a New York street last week. Unseated in 1950 by a Democratic - Republican - Liberal coalition, the 51-year-old Marcantonio had announced his intention to run again this year for the post he had lost.

Swat-The-Farmer Bill Voted By Senate

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

ACTING at the rate of 400 bills a day, the 83rd Congress last weekend was racing toward adjournment day—and the trip home to meet the voters in November.

There were two big developments last week:

1. Senate approval of the "swat-the-farmers" bill—the Administration's flexible farm price support measure.

2. Threats to free unions contained in a Senate drive for approval of the Brownell-Butler bills.

Still pending—and a big issue—is the GOP Administration measure which would improve social security benefits, but wouldn't go far enough.

The speed of legislative action was indicated when the Senate, on Aug. 11, passed more than 400 bills, most of them minor, in a single day. In comparison, during the first seven months of this session, the Senate acted on a total of only 1031 measures.

Farm

The Eisenhower Administration scored a major legislative victory last week. The victims were the nation's farmers and their bankrolls.

After six days of debate, the Senate voted 62 to 28 to pass the Administration's flexible farm bill. The measure slid through the House a month ago. A joint conference committee will resolve differences between the two versions, with dairy price supports providing the biggest issue.

Farm state Senators, with one eye fixed on angry constituents back home, fought a losing battle. The key vote was 49 to 44 for the Benson plan. Some Republican Senators even predicted the Eisenhower victory would cost the GOP seats in the next Congress.

The President and Agriculture Sec. Benson staked everything on ramming through a system of flexible price supports. The new bill provides for a sliding 82.5%-90% scale of parity in place of the former mandatory 90% support plan. Its passage greases the chute for another drop in farm income, which has been falling steadily for the past two years.

A further drop in the agricultural economy was guaranteed in the Eisenhower bill through a gimmick that provides a new formula for figuring parity prices. Instead of a mild 10% cut, the new formula will hack a whopping 35% from the old yardstick. (Parity is a system set up to give the farmer a fair price for the things he sells in relation to the necessities he buys.)

There was another GOP "give-away" angle, this time of government-owned forest and grazing lands. A 54 to 41 roll call vote on an amendment would require the government or a successor permit holder to compensate any permittee for water development or other permanent improvements made on federal land. Opponents of the amendment claimed it would give cattlemen and other permit holders a "vested interest" in federal lands and allow them the land's use forever.

Security

Prodded by the Administration's frenzied haste for an anti-subversive bill, both houses came up with identical bills that could cripple free trade unions. Here are the developments:

1. The Senate voted a revised bill by Sen. Butler (R. Md.) giving the government power to crack down on "Communist-infiltrated" unions and other organizations.

2. Chairman Velde (R. Ill.) turned in a similar bill from his House Un-American Activities Committee.

3. Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and several other Democrats introduced an amendment which would outlaw the Communist Party, which the Administration opposes.

The House Judiciary Committee—after CIO protested—last month rejected the measure that Velde sponsored. Velde's group held no hearings and heard no witnesses. Over protests from three Democrats, Reps. Walter (Pa.), Doyle (Calif.) and Frazier (Tenn.), Velde said his committee heard enough testimony "over the years."

Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) assailed Butler's bill as potentially "a deadly anti-union weapon." He noted that the CIO and AFL which have succeeded "in a very remarkable degree" in fighting communism "are strongly opposed to this measure."

An anti-union Attorney-General, warned Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.), could "wreck" any union by simply launching an attack upon it under the Butler bill. With Lehman, Morse said it could be used for breaking strikes.

Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.) tried to sidetrack the legislation by a resolution establishing a Presidential commission to study the matter and report next January. This was defeated by a 56 to 31 roll call vote.

In another roll call, 78 to 1, the Senate approved a modifying amendment by Sen. Ives (D. N.Y.) providing that any union in "good standing" with a labor organization opposed to communism "shall be presumed" not to be a "Communist-infiltrated organization." Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) was the lone dissenter.

Ives said his amendment would help unions that are "trying to clean their own house" by exempting unions "whose loyalty has been proven on numerous occasions." He particularly cited the CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods as having fought communism.

Sen. Daniel (D. Tex.) won 85-1 approval of a motion to combine the proposal outlawing the Communist Party with the Butler bill. Final passage of the joint measure was by a vote of 85-0. The bill goes back to the House, where, if Atty.-Gen. Brownell and the President maintain their opposition, it was predicted it will die in a committee pigeon-hole as the session ends.

The Administration's blanket measure to permit use of evidence obtained through wiretapping did not fare so well. The Senate Judiciary Committee voted 7-7 to table the bill.

TVA

Brig. Gen. Herbert D. Vogel was confirmed without debate by the Senate to be a director of the Tennessee Valley Authority for a nine-year term. He probably will be named chairman, succeeding Gordon R. Clapp.

Vogel said he did not share the Eisenhower view that TVA was "creeping socialism." He said he believed in "the wisdom and feasibility" of the project.

Atomic Energy

A new battle loomed as the Senate and House considered the compromise atomic energy bill. Minority Leader Johnson (Tex.) supported a move to redraft the Administration's bill along lines approved by the Senate after 13 days of bitter debate.

Democratic amendments inserted some safeguards for the public's $12 billion stake in the development of atomic energy that is now being considered as a source of cheap electric power. These safeguards were absent in the Eisenhower-backed measure which swept through the House. Some were knocked out in a conference between leaders of both houses to resolve the differences.

Pay Increases

The House voted a 7% pay increase for postal workers. On the Senate side a 5% increase for postal employes and all other classified federal workers first was approved and then reconsidered.

Unemployment

The President signed a bill, opposed by labor groups, which gives state politicians discretionary use over funds paid by employers to finance their unemployment compensation systems.

The Reed Bill sets up a $200 million reserve fund out of surplus payments by firms. Once this reserve is established, the remaining excess collections could be used in states for administrative or benefit costs at the discretion of the states.

Labor organizations opposed the measure, contending that states hit hardest by mounting unemployment need federal grants, not loans. Loans, they pointed out, must be repaid through higher taxes on employers with consequent tightening of the employment situation.

McCarthy

Hope faded for early action on the censure case against Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.). While this had been almost explicit in the Senate vote to investigate McCarthy's activities, the select committee named by Vice Pres. Nixon last week devised enough delays to defer a start until Aug. 30.

After at least two weeks of testimony-taking, another lapse would ensue before the committee report was written. When the Senate will act on the report could not be predicted.

Foreign Aid

The House approved a compromise $3.2 billion foreign aid bill that was $314 million over the Senate's version. The upper house has yet to act on overseas aid funds.

Bricker Amendment

Sen. Bricker (R. O.) introduced a revised version of his treaty-curbing constitutional amendment but will not press for action until the next session. The latest Bricker proposal differs only slightly from the one that tied up the Senate for five weeks a year ago.

Labor Dept.

The Senate lopped millions from the Labor Dept. request for funds to carry out its programs during the fiscal year. The action was taken during consideration of a supplemental appropriations bills.

Investigations

The House has given $2.7 millions for investigations during the two years the Republicans have been in control. This does not include $500,000 a year spent by the House Appropriations Committee.

—And Warmer

"Washington heat is usually alleged as the major reason for Congress's desire for adjournment. Given that this is election year, I suggest that it may be warmer for some at home than in Washington."—Rep. Williams (D. N. J.).

'How About Action Before We Quit?'

When is Congress going to act to help the thousands of unemployed working people?

That's the question asked Republican House leaders by Rep. Rhodes (D.), veteran Pennsylvania AFL leader, as he charged that jobless millions and their families are being ignored in the GOP rush to adjourn.

"How can the Republican leadership continue to ignore the plight of these people, or to say that it is not a serious matter?" asked Rhodes, citing his own hard-hit district.

REP. RHODES

"The prosperity now being enjoyed by big monopolies is of little comfort to the millions of workers and their families who must live on inadequate unemployment insurance benefits.

"It means much less to those whose unemployment insurance checks are running out.

"Tax advantages voted by this Administration to monopoly interests have permitted increased profits to empires like duPont, General Electric and General Motors. Yet the Eisenhower leadership has refused . . . to aid the average citizen with tax relief or a public works program.

"The rush by this Administration to give to the special interests natural resources, tax advantages, public lands and the people's investment in atomic secrets is a sorry contrast to its do-nothing policy on issues involving the health, prosperity and welfare of the people.

"Let's have some action before we quit!"

GOP Drive Against Farmers Hit

THE AGRICULTURE Dept. drew the fire of Senate Minority Leader Johnson (Tex.) during debate on the farm price bill.

Johnson charged the department with "the advertising campaign which has accompanied the effort to sell" the flexible price theory.

"It has turned—or sought to turn—city folks against country folks," Johnson claimed, "even more important, for the first time in more than 20 years it has convinced many of our farmers that the Agriculture Dept. is their enemy—and not their friend."

Flexible supports' "immediate effect would be to lower farm income" but their "long range effect would be to set a dangerous precedent that could be harmful to every segment of our economy," Johnson argued.

". . . Is the next step to be a flexible minimum wage law which lowers the floor whenever there is a 'surplus' of labor? I can hear the propagandists now crying that 75c an hour is a 'high, rigid' wage level."

The Eisenhower flexible support program could pave the way for another depression, according to Sen. Langer (R. N.D.). It was a Republican president who vetoed farm support bills twice in the 1920's and "laid the groundwork for what followed," he said.

"Now we have another Republican President going right down the same road," Langer reminded.

Sen. Young (R. N.D.) predicted his party's victory in the bitter farm price fight will turn into a Republican defeat in the November elections. He predicted the Senate's action will cost the GOP congressional seats.

Price supports, maintained Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), are "not a program for farmers alone but a program for national prosperity."

"It would be economic lunacy for Congress to deliver a blow against our agricultural economy," Humphrey said. "It would hurt the entire national economy. Farm prosperity and business prosperity go hand in hand."

Oh, To Be A Trout!

The House of Representatives spent two full days debating and passing a bill to require that restaurant menus clearly state whether the trout being served are 100% American or 100% alien.

It's possible there's merit in this proposal—though it's a little hard to guess what that merit may be.

But it's significant, perhaps, that the GOP Congress which has shown so little interest in the needs of plain people has devoted so much time to the alleged needs of plain fish.

We're led to the wish that the 83rd Congress, having started worrying about the needs of fish, may eventually get around to further consideration of the needs of people.

What Goes On There?

People throughout the western hemisphere were generally glad to see Communist influences halted in Guatemala.

But we doubt that the peoples of North, South and Central America had any desire to see the clock of progress turned way back in that little country. The CIO had made clear that communism can be beaten back by increased social and economic progress, not by a campaign of repression.

Yet it's the latter course that seems to be under way in Guatemala, with the outlawing and dissolution of some of the country's most important trade unions. That's no solution, there or elsewhere.

Two Important Strikes

Which part of the paper do you read?

The business pages are full of stories of continued corporation prosperity. Tucked away on the news pages, you're apt to find corporation alibis why they can't pay decent wages.

For weeks now, two big strikes have been in progress—the CIO Woodworkers and the AFL lumber union, seeking decent wage increases in the Pacific Northwest; and, in 10 cities around the country, the CIO Rubber Workers seeking decent wage increases from the Goodyear Co.

In both cases, management has given a haughty "no" to the unions' requests for substantial wage increases. The big lumber operators have even refused a suggested plan for arbitration of the issues.

Goodyear, perhaps taking a leaf from the book of General Electric and North American Aviation, has offered a nickel an hour—and refused to consider anything more. Goodyear, it is to be noted, made a record $49 million profit last year, a return of 17.5% on its owners' investment, and has been doing even better in 1954.

In both cases, justice and fairness lie on the side of the unions. They have the full support of the entire CIO in their fight against a callous and greedy attitude by management.

No Confidence?

An official of the toy industry predicts that sales, which have risen each year for the last 15 years, will decline in 1954. What's the trouble? Don't the kids have confidence in the Republican Administration?

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS

Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII August 16, 1954 No. 33

Souvenirs For The Folks Back Home

In Other Words—

10 Basic Facts About Asia

In an article in the New Leader magazine, Gen. Carlos P. Romulo, Philippine delegate to the United Nations and a 1941 Pulitzer Prize winner, spells out 10 basic facts on Asia for Americans. Excerpts from his article follow:

By GEN. CARLOS P. ROMULO

THE MOST dynamic single fact of our time is the awakening of Asia. This must be true, because everybody outside Asia seems to know about it and speaks about it constantly.

In Asia, however, we do not talk about it. We simply adjust ourselves to the fact, and we keep on with the process of awakening.

There is no excuse for hazy thinking about Asia. For it is not true that Asia is mysterious, enigmatic and unpredictable.

It is important to remember that there is no mystery about what hungry, impoverished and oppressed peoples will do in the end, if no relief is forthcoming. Asians are also human beings, and what Europeans or Americans would do or have done in the same circumstances, the Asians will do also.

Easy Solutions

To understand Asia, it is necessary, first of all, to realize that many of its problems will not yield to pat, easy solutions. One such solution is embodied in the common notion that Asia must somehow be saved. Saved from communism, we are told. But saved for what ends? In whose interest? And by what means?

I do not speak as an expert on Asia, or even as a spokesman for Asia. However, anyone who has studied the situation in Asia no further back than the last decade will be in substantial agreement with a capsule analysis of the Asian problem which I have tried to formulate in the following terms:

1. The Asian peoples will no longer tolerate the shackles of colonialism. What they want is a status of equal partnership and voluntary cooperation with other peoples.

2. The Asian peoples are fired with an aspiration to human dignity and economic well-being which can no longer be held in abeyance.

3. The Asian peoples will not fight for the vague concept of a free world; they will fight on the side of the free world only if they have a stake in freedom themselves.

4. The West must work with and through the responsible nationalist movements in Asia rather than through puppet regimes that have no popular support.

By denouncing and opposing genuine freedom movements in Asia as Communist-inspired, the West in fact exposes such movements to Communist infiltration and control.

The objective must be to isolate Communist agitation from the legitimate nationalist aspirations of the Asian peoples.

5. Military measures are at best a short-term device for staving off an immediate threat of Communist aggression. The long-term struggle against communism, however, requires economic and financial assistance that will enable the Asian peoples to raise their standards of living.

6. Assistance should be offered on a basis of equality and mutual respect, and not as a special favor with political strings or as a disguised survival of colonialism.

7. As there can be no world peace without Asia, so there can be no economic stability in the world without Asia. You cannot neglect Asia and, by continuing to pour dollars into Europe, expect to stabilize the world economy, including the European economy itself.

8. Asian political, economic and social organization is predominantly on an authoritarian pattern. Therefore, it should not be assumed that the Asian peoples will automatically adopt democracy of the Western type; rather, they will adopt it with necessary modifications and only as it demonstrates its superiority in the actual experience of daily life.

9. Asian neutralism must be recognized partly as the result of a genuine desire for peace, partly as dictated by the serious internal problems of many countries in the region, and partly as inspired by a lingering distrust of the motives of the colonial powers.

10. The Asian peoples will not give their support to any program, policy or course of action affecting Asia that is taken without consulting them.

COLUMBUS MAYOR M. E. Sensenbrenner (center) commends "the CIO for launching this humanitarian action" as he signs State CIO Council's initiative petition to "humanize" state unemployment compensation law. First Vice Pres. Joseph Mohler (left) and Recording Sec. James B. Ogden of the Columbus CIO Council look on.

'Turning Back The Clock'

Wave Of Blacklist Firings Hits Workers By Guatemala Edicts

By DANIEL BENEDICT
Associate Director of the CIO International Affairs Dept.

LATEST reports from Guatemala point to serious trouble ahead for that country, and its working people.

Pres. Carlos Castillo Armas was visited about a month ago by a representative group of Guatemalan unionists, who were accompanied by AFL Rep. Serafino Romuladi, Cuban CTC Rep. Paul Valdivia and this writer.

We heard the President's repeated assurances that there would be no attempt to hinder the development of free trade unionism and no attempt to destroy the land reform gains of the peasants.

U. S. Ambassador John Peurifoy, who makes no secret of his important role in the events which led Castillo Armas from exile in Honduras to the armed taking over of power in Guatemala, has also been quite vocal about no "turning back the clock" of social progress.

Yet non-Communist workers known for, or suspected of, strong trade union feelings have been, and are being, fired by the score.

ABOUT HALF the Communist Party members in Guatemala (reported to number about 2,000) have either taken refuge in foreign embassies—hundreds of them are sleeping on and under the desks of the bulging little Mexican Embassy—or fled the country. Yet, it is estimated that between 5000 and 8000 people have been thrown in jail.

The long lines of obviously poor Indian peasant women seen by this writer waiting outside the jails with little baskets of food to send in to their arrested menfolk were certainly no indication that the thousands in jail are foreign Communist agitators or local Party big shots.

One of the first steps of the new government, taking away the right to vote from the Indian peasants on the grounds of illiteracy, was immediately pointed to by Chairman O. A. Knight of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee as a danger signal of a move towards "turning back the clock."

The new land law not only stops the process of giving unused land to poor peasants, but now makes it possible for the rich landowners to re-open their cases and get their lands back.

As a New York Times dispatch of July 27 pointed out, this opens the way for the powerful United Fruit Co., a symbol of "Yankee" exploitation to millions of Latin Americans, to take hundreds of thousands of acres from the peasants.

IN SHOPS with five or six Communists, bosses have decided that the fall of the Communist-dominated Arbenz regime was a good opportunity to fire dozens of workers whose "crime" was merely union activity or protesting against wage cuts. Many of these workers have been thrown in jail.

The United Fruit-controlled IRCA (International Railways of Central America), which runs the railways of Guatemala, has taken the lead in the reactionary wave of drawing up blacklists of union men to be fired.

Even members of the National Committee set up provisionally to start a free trade union movement (the CNRS), have been menaced by the employers, although Castillo Armas has now given assurances that at least National Committee members would not be fired.

THE GOVERNMENT has decreed the abolition of all leadership committees of the old Communist-dominated union federation (the CGTG), including those of the few unions which had escaped Communist control.

A new government decree made Aug. 10 ordered dissolution of the CGTG and a number of its affiliated unions—including these of the railwaymen, teachers, and employes of the United Fruit Co. New union elections are to be held by October, but the employers are doing everything to make those elections impossible or meaningless.

If this trend towards the destruction of social progress and civil liberties in Guatemala is allowed to continue, the new government of Guatemala—and U. S. companies and officials who have influence with it—will bear the responsibility for driving more people into the arms of the Communist Party than there were under the regime which the Communists controlled.

That would also have a disastrous effect upon the people of other Latin-American countries who are watching closely the way things develop in Guatemala.

Direct support will be given to Guatemalan labor in this fight through the ORIT, the Inter-American Regional Organization of free trade unions, of which CIO is an active member along with the AFL, the Mine Workers and other democratic labor organizations from Canada to Uruguay.

CIO Tells Concern Over Firings

CIO "concern" was voiced last week over the dismissal and jailings of trade unionists by the new Guatemala government, which has suspended constitutional guarantees of labor rights.

Chairman O. A. Knight of the CIO Latin America Affairs Committee, in a message to the State Dept., said the United Fruit Co., through its rail subsidiary, is "among the leading employers in this drive to prevent a growth of a stable democratic labor movement."

"CIO is concerned," Knight said, "because continuance of this trend will weaken all democratic forces in the Americas, strengthen anti-U. S. feelings and add to the force of Communist and other totalitarian agents. We urge our government to impress upon all its officials and upon U. S.-owned business firms the danger of this course."

270.

"Men certainly value a good job that pays union wages! I'm glad daughter has one!"

Which Page Do You Read?

Big GOP Dailies Jubilant In Editorials—Job Layoff Stories Are Another Matter

By DON SMITH
(Publicity Director of Ohio CIO Council)

EVER SINCE unemployment started to increase under the present Administration, most Ohio papers have been beside themselves trying to cover the whole thing up.

You could hardly blame them in a way. After all, 20 years is a long time to wait for a Republican president.

The editorial page is an interesting page to read these days because it is here that the papers really ignore the facts. The papers' columnists also join in the campaign.

We noticed recently that the (Cleveland) Plain Dealer was doing a dandy job of ignoring the facts.

ONE of its columnists, Philip Porter, wrote a column in which he poked fun at what he called the "prophets of doom" for their warnings about the anemic state of our economy. Porter poked fun because he said such dire predictions were only echoes now. They were echoes now because things were fine and looking better, Porter wrote.

One editorial, entitled "The Recession Recedes," assured its readers, "Calm optimism over business prospects is sweeping the country."

But in the news columns which are based primarily on fact, the Plain Dealer reported—on the same day Porter's "everything is rosy" column appeared—that:

"Akron began to feel the pinch of poor relief today when City Council's finance committee approved transferring $50,000 into the relief account . . . This marked the first time since before World War II that the general fund was tapped for poor relief."

And this one from Mansfield, O.—"With county relief rolls growing here, Richland County Commissioners today announced a plan to put able-bodied but jobless men to work on county work crews. The relief roll workers will earn up to $5 a day which will be credited on their grocery and rent bills."

In short, the editorial writers fly in the face of the facts printed in their own newspapers. While they are attempting to put rose-colored glasses on their readers, their news columns are printing the true facts of the case.

Now that the One-Party Press has a Republican president, it just can't admit that business and people aren't as well off as under the Democrats.

If people started to believe such things, they might elect some Democrats to office. So, the papers must do their best to protect the "New Team." And they do it by constantly reassuring their readers that times have improved since January 1953.

The only trouble is, that many of their readers may be looking at such editorials and columns as they stand in line to collect their unemployment checks.

Vandercook Away; MacVane Substitutes

While CIO-sponsored Commentator John W. Vandercook is on vacation, newsman John MacVane will substitute for him on the nightly ABC news program.

An expert on world affairs, MacVane has covered key sessions of the UN after serving in World War II as a correspondent for newspapers, INS and radio from the fall of France to the fall of Berlin.

Oil Refinery Jobs Decline By 10,000

SHUTDOWNS of some refineries and modernization of others has led to a deep shrinkage in oil refinery employment, according to the CIO Oil Workers.

Citing figures issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the OWIU-CIO notes there are 10,000 fewer production workers in U. S. refineries now than in 1948. That year there were 147,000 workers, by 1951 it had dropped to 143,000.

Last April only 137,000 were at work in this phase of the oil industry. The OWIU says that only in the past few months can a "recession" be blamed for the drop in job opportunity. The downward trend has been consistent while at the same time refinery production was climbing steadily.

In April of this year refinery employment was 7% below the 1948, while refinery production was 22% over the 1948 mark.

A BIG FACTOR, according to the OWIU, is the modernization of refinery facilities, with an accompanying decrease in manpower requirements. Some of the older refineries have been completely shut down and new refineries, needing fewer workers, have been replacing the output of the obsolete plants.

Another element, OWIU points out, is the new technical skill and improvement in methods that have been provided by refinery workers themselves.

Note

Willard Shelton is on vacation. His column "It's Your Washington" will be resumed in The CIO News of Aug. 30.

Mitchell Cancels Certificate Plan

LABOR SEC. MITCHELL has called off his plan to allow for regional handling of learner certificates in industry in place of dealing with them through Washington.

The program was opposed by Research Dir. Solomon Barkin of the CIO Textile Workers. Barkin wrote Mitchell that the procedure had been rejected by two previous Secretaries of Labor and administrators of the Wage-Hour law.

"The granting of the learner certificates is a matter of major policy determination," Barkin wrote, "involving serious competitive interests and constitutes legislation through administrative action. To invest local officials with this authority is a policy decision of high order which should not be made unless there is the most careful determination."

Looking To November

Sen. Douglas Battles The King Of Lobbyists

By Press Associates PAI

STOCKY, jovial Joseph T. Meek, Republican, is warming up for his campaign in Illinois against labor-endorsed Sen. Douglas (D.).

Observers are betting that it will be one of the bitterest campaigns which this key midwestern state has seen in many years.

Joe Meek's profession is lobbying. For some 20 years he has represented a powerful pressure group, the Illinois Federation of Retail Associations, in the state capitol at Springfield. The 50-year old Meek, himself, founded the group which now numbers 60,000 members.

Some of the keystones of Meek's lobbying activities have been his opposition to minimum wages for women, fair employment practice legislation and a sales tax. Minimum wages and fair employment practices, he will tell you, increase the costs and cut production.

SEN. DOUGLAS

Joe Meek just never did like anything about the New Deal. To him, the great era of social welfare legislation was "socialism." And because Paul Douglas strongly supported the New Deal his opponent is already labeling him a "socialist."

Never Liked New Deal

Plain-talking and pleasant, Meek has made thousands of speeches over the state in the interest of retailers. In the primary last April, backed by the Chicago Tribune, he topped a field of nine candidates by a sizable count. He had a well heeled organization, making widespread use of such outlets as outdoor advertising.

Ike Is Embarrassed

One of Meek's opponents in the primary was Chicago Alderman Herbert F. Geisler, who warned that to have the Republican party nomineee a "paid lobbyist of an association of retail businessmen would be pitiful to behold."

Meek's victory in the primary left the Eisenhower Administration in an embarrassing position. The lobbyist is a staunch supporter of McCarthy (R. Wis.).

Three and a half months after the primary, the President has written Meek a hearty letter, warmly endorsing his candidacy.

Sen. Douglas commented on the Eisenhower action by noting he had supported the President's foreign policy while Meek had "taken an exactly opposite course."

JOSEPH T. MEEK

"I have also," Douglas said, "supported the President on those features of his domestic program which were in the best interests of the American people, such as housing, social security, health and so forth.

"I was working for these programs years before the President joined us. My opponent has fought these measures throughout his life."

Both Douglas and Meek have promised to conduct a clean campaign this fall. Said Douglas: "I'll wage my campaign without malice and in good temper."

Said Meek: It's always been 'Paul' and 'Joe' between us."

The fact is that Meek has a lot of solid ground to overcome. Six years ago Douglas won his seat by a margin of 407,000 votes and since has become a powerful figure in Washington. He has consistently been voted one of the ablest Senators and a recognized authority in many fields.

Most observers are sitting back, waiting for the fur to fly.

DISABILITY protection for the nation's workers will be sought by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) in an amendment to the Social Security bill pending in the Senate.

The Douglas amendment would permit workers who became totally and permanently disabled to retire on full annuities, on the same basis as those who retire at the age of 65.

"Meager though it is," Douglas said, "Social Security provides some help for persons who must retire after age 65. So far as it goes, it is a fine program. Nevertheless, workers who become totally disabled often have even greater needs than the aged since they are younger and generally have more family responsibilities.

"Protection against the personal disaster of becoming unable to earn a living stands today as a major gap in providing our nation's workers with adequate security," Douglas stated.

Organizing

Permanent precinct groups are being organized by the Cook County CIO Council and local union political action committees to support the campaigns of Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) and other PAC-backed candidates in the Chicago area.

A series of precinct leadership training courses are being conducted, as a preliminary to registration and get out the vote drives. Heading up the program are Bob Levin, Council PAC director, and John Alesia, State CIO-PAC chairamn.

The Low Road

A prediction that the Republicans will use "low-road tactics" against Sen. Douglas (D.) in the Illinois campaign was voiced by Stephen A. Mitchell, national Democratic chairman.

"It will be a campaign half Eisenhower and half McCarthy —half smile and half smear," he predicted.

"Eisenhower will take the high road and do the smiling. But down underneath, the bullyboys will take the low road."

Labor's World—

ICFTU Supports Tunisians; Strikes Grow In Germany

A CALL for "democratic self-government" in Tunisia and adoption of "substantial economic and social reforms" has been voiced by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The call was contained in a joint declaration adopted by ICFTU and Tunisian trade unionists, meeting in Paris as new resistance to French colonial rule was reported in North Africa.

In Tunisia, the French have set up a new colonial cabinet, but outlawed any representation for the Neo-Destour Nationalist Party.

In Morocco, there have been bloody outbreaks in Port Lyautey and other cities. Premier Mendes-France has been under attack from French colonists for his moves to moderate the stern military rule in Morocco.

THE ICFTU's plea on Tunisia was presented to Mendes-France by Sec.-Gen. J. H. Oldenbroek of the world free labor organization.

The labor group appealed for "a just and lasting solution of the Franco-Tunisian problem on the basis of the charter of the United Nations, which recognizes the right of the peoples to govern themselves."

The ICFTU statement "condemned violence from any source whatsoever" and said the present situation is "a vicious circle of repression and terrorism in which the one is used as a pretext for the other."

Earlier, Oldenbroek addressed the fifth congress of the Tunisian Trade Union Federation (UGTT), which reiterated previous calls for national liberation through negotiation. The ICFTU officer reaffirmed support of the world's free trade union movement for the Tunisian workers.

Germany

A half-dozen of West Germany's unions in basic industries, transportation and public services last week were pressing for substantial wage increases and reversal of the low-wage policy generally in effect.

An estimated two million West German workers either were on strike or were threatening strikes to enforce their demands. The West German Federation of Labor (DGB) declared that the postwar honeymoon with management is over because 80% of the country's labor force earns less than 350 marks ($83.33) per month.

Two major strike settlements broke the previously united front of employers. In Hamburg, 14,000 public service workers accepted a 1.7c hourly wage increase, and the big SKF ball-bearing factory settled with the Bavarian metal workers union. Still striking were 100,000 metal workers.

Outbreaks of violence occurred at a dozen plants in southern Germany as police clubbed pickets trying to prevent strikebreakers from entering. In one town, the Metal Workers Union summoned police to prevent leaflet distributions by Communist agitators.

Wage demands came from 900,000 metal workers in the Ruhr, river shipping workers on the Rhine, civil service employes, textile workers, office workers and chemical workers.

South Africa

According to a dispatch in the Christian Science Monitor, the Nationalist government in the Union of South Africa has named labor as its next target in its drive for absolute racial segregation.

Prime Minister Malan is driving for parliamentary approval of an industrial conciliation bill, containing several race segregation clauses which ban unions representing all workers and reserve some trades for whites.

The dispatch said the measure has resulted in united labor opposition and a warning that the bill would "stifle the freedom of the unions, divide the workers on racial patterns, and confine the non-white people to the most menial and worst-paid jobs."

Bad Foods Seized

U. S. Food & Drug Administration agents seized 40 shipments of contaminated food products and 11 drug and medical devices during June, the agency has reported.

Los Angeles CIO Urges End To Job Bias In Fire Dept.

IMMEDIATE action to end segregation in the Los Angeles Fire Dept. has been demanded by the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council.

Council Sec.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford, in a protest to Fire Chief John H. Alderson, said the department was practicing "the abhorrent and undemocratic policy of racial discrimination."

He pointed to the existence of fire companies containing all colored personnel as proof of "shameful Jim Crow arrangements."

"The reputation of the City of Los Angeles as well as the Fire Dept. is at stake here," Lunceford said, "and to allow such a situation to continue would be a mockery of our highly regarded American democratic processes.

Our armed forces have met the problem squarely and successfully, recognizing that if a man is good enough to die for his country, he is good enough to be promoted without regard for his race, creed or color. Our fireman, no less than our servicemen, may be called upon to risk their lives at any moment and deserve the same treatment."

LUNCEFORD's statement set forth three measures to end fire department segregation: breaking up existing "Jim Crow" companies; integrating white and Negro firemen in all city companies; and instituting and enforcing new regulations to insure that no discrimination is practiced in promotions.

Australian Unionist Is Guest Of CIO

Assistant Sec. James D. Kenny of the New South Wales, Australia, Trades and Labor Council last week renewed friendships during a visit to CIO headquarters and a luncheon at which he and Mrs. Kenny were guests of honor.

Other guests included CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Associate Education Dir. George T. Guernsey and Associate Dir. Daniel Benedict of the Dept. for International Affairs.

Kenny is enroute home after attending the Intl. Labor Organization convention in Geneva.

PAC Sets Three Family Parleys

Dates have been set for three more Family Participation Conferences in Political Action, two under the sponsorship of the Colorado CIO Council and one sponsored by the Philadelphia Council.

Olive Saits of the CIO Communications Workers will chair the Pueblo, Colo., conference Aug. 21-22 and Mrs. Nettie Sides, CIO Clothing Workers and state council vice president, will chair the other in Denver Aug. 28-29. Sara Fredgant of ACWA will be chairman of the Philadelphia conference Sept. 18 at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel.

'Germs Don't Need Passports'—

Your Health's Stake On Mexico Border

"DUMPED"—Recent U. S. action to deport wetbacks from California's Imperial Valley resulted in an influx of as many as 40,000 stranded braceros a day into the little border city of Mexicali. In an effort to alleviate suffering the Mexican government provided free transportation back home. At left, braceros register for transport; right, others wait their turn in 120-degree sun.

By MILTON PLUMB

"Los microbios no necesitan pasaporte."

Thus, Gov. Braulio Maldonado of the seven-month-old Mexican state of Baja California summed up what he regards as the most crucial immediate problem of U. S.-Mexican relations along our Southern border.

His remark, which can be translated as meaning that "germs don't need passports," is typical of his deep humanitarian concerns. These, translated into the far-sweeping social reforms inaugurated during his seven months in office, have already made him known as "the Abraham Lincoln of Mexico."

Contaminated Foods

The governor was referring to the serious health problems in his community and the fact that, without proper cooperation between the U. S. and Mexican governments, there is no way of preventing their spread over the border. This is reflected in a much higher communicable disease rate in Southern California counties than in the rest of the state.

Today, however, a serious threat to the health of the entire U. S. exists because of the fact that the Imperial Valley, which ships tomatoes, lettuce, peas, carrots, melons and other food to all parts of the country, is being irrigated in large part by a river contaminated with human manure.

BRAULIO MALDONADO
Governor of Baja California

Every visitor to Mexico is familiar with U. S. Health Dept. warnings against eating raw fruits and vegetables, but no one so far has discussed this unpleasant and tabu subject affecting the richest agricultural region within our own borders. The threat to health, as a result, has increased daily.

Last month a group of CIO officials stood, with handkerchiefs to their faces, on a bridge over the New River which runs through the heart of Mexicali. Along its banks were clustered the pitiful hovels making up the slums of this city claiming 100,000 inhabitants.

The stench was revolting, because this open river has long been the "sewer" of Mexicali. Yet this New River, leaving the border, runs for 60 miles through the heart of the U. S. Imperial Valley and collects in the Salton Sea.

Efforts by Maldonado soon will have removed much of this health menace as it affects his own people. His administration has almost completed a 10-million-peso sewer project to remove the contamination from that part of the river flowing through the city. But the waste must still be dumped into the New River and it will continue to flow into the U. S.

Maldonado is trying to get the Mexican-U. S. governments to establish an international sanitation plant because he realizes that, even the work he is doing inside the city, will not be enough to prevent disease germs from spreading back—this time from the U. S. into Mexico.

"I'd like to build it myself." Maldonado said, "but I'm afraid our state just hasn't money enough to undertake it alone."

Migrant Problem

Because growers' propaganda and the Eisenhower Administration's "go it alone" recruitment of Mexican farm labor early this year caused millions of Mexicans to rush across our California border in the expectation of work, Baja California had to bear the brunt of the problem.

ENRIQUE VILLEGAS LEYVA
Lieutenant Governor

The new governor showed his ability to act in a crisis without losing his head. When rioting broke out over U. S. policies, he got Mexican troops to restore order but issued strict orders that they were not to fire on the braceros who had congregated by the millions at our border.

The governor is quite proud of the fact that, during the recent "wetback" round-up, when as many as 40,000 braceros a day fled to Mexicali, not one bracero starved, due largely to emergency feeding facilities he set up. However, 88 died of sunstroke during the 14-day period.

Deaths would have totalled many more if the governor's wife had not only a few months before, given the land and building for a new Red Cross center.

Although Maldonado's progressive reforms have led to some charges that he is a "leftist," the true picture seems to be that he's one of those rarities of Latin American politics—a good, honest, progressive who, as the governor describes himself, is simply "a realist."

He chose as his able and devoted lieutenant governor, Enrique Villegas, former secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, who insisted upon disposing of his substantial business holdings before assuming office at a much lower annual income.

But the governor is definitely "of the democratic Revolution and a liberal." He also used to be a labor organizer in the Mexican miners' union, and only a few years back he was helping the U. S. win the last war by his work as a "wetback" in San Francisco shipyards.

His solution to the wetback problem is a novel one.

"Our problem is not to make contracts from government to government, but from unions to unions," he said. "Then there would be people from the ranks of the workers to see that the contracts were fulfilled."

HEALTH PROBLEMS—The first lady of Baja, California, Mrs. Carlota de Maldonado (left), and the lieutenant governor (center) show CIO delegates through new Red Cross Center. Middle picture shows part of the $38 million All American Canal near El Centro. At right, CIO representatives inspect the new 10 million peso sewer system which Gov. Maldonado is installing to replace open sewage in New River.

Guild Sets Defense Fund, Bars Communists

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN
Special Correspondent

A LONG-RANGE program to raise a $1 million Defense Fund—$250,000 of it during 1955—topped a broad program adopted by the CIO Newspaper Guild, in its 21st annual convention in Los Angeles.

Some 200 delegates from throughout the United States and Canada debated and voted upon basic Guild programs and policies. Joe Collis, ANG president, presided.

Highlight of the Guild's actions was adoption of a policy declaration aimed at barring Communist Party members from Guild membership. Adopted after several hours of debate was a report by a special committee which stated:

"This convention declares it to be the policy of the American Newspaper Guild to hold ineligible for membership in the Guild any proven or admitted member of the Communist Party or any similar subversive organization."

The report directed the ANG Executive Board to prepare constitutional changes needed to implement the declaration, and submit them to the Guild's 1955 convention in Albany, N. Y.

'Growing Pressure'

In order to begin building the defense fund, per capita payments to the international were upped 10c, from $1.40 to $1.50. The fund was proposed by Guild officers because of what they charged was "growing pressure" on the organization, "leading to costly and lengthy strikes."

While striking out at Communists, by moving to bar them from the Guild, the ANG convention also hit sharply at "unwarranted infringements" against the rights of individuals.

Convention delegates approved a resolution asking ANG officers and Guild locals to "resist by every means possible any discharge or discipline of Guild members on grounds that they refused to sign a loyalty oath, or that they exercised their right of freedom of expression, or that they invoked the protection of the Bill of Rights."

On collective bargaining, the Guild served notice it will continue to press for a $150 weekly wage for key classifications, and intensify its drive for a 35-hour week and four-week vacations.

The Guild noted the progress made in reducing hours, and that only some dozen Guild contracts now remained which do not provide for three-week vacations after three years. Top minimum weekly wages of $130 and more have been set in many contracts, while a growing number of contracts now call for severance pay of 30 weeks or more.

Membership Gains

On organizing, delegates were informed that membership had climbed to a new high, but that "at the same time, we have been forced to throw more and more of our organizing manpower and resources into a defense of bargaining rights and contract gains." A four-point organizing program adopted in 1951 was reaffirmed.

The convention made no change in the administrative set-up for the wire services (such as United Press and Associated Press), which presently operates as a council under the direction of the ANG. A move to give the council an administratively autonomous organization was voted down.

On political action, the Guild took steps toward strengthening its PAC program by urging district councils to take leadership and "provide a closer and more personal link between the locals and ANG."

While urging locals to increase their PAC activity, the report suggested that "political action gains in effectiveness when combined with a community service and citizenship program."

The Guild noted "encouraging results in organizing, bargaining and political action" during the past year, because of increasing attention to inter-union cooperation.

Press Union Unity

"Most dramatic example," said the Guild ". . . occurred in New York, when 4,000 newspapermen in all departments . . . honored the picket lines of 400 striking engravers and shut down six great Manhattan dailies for 11 days."

It was urged that Guild locals "integrate the Guild more closely with the CIO" through participation in state and local CIO Councils, and take the lead in their communities in forming newspaper union councils.

Concerned by the changes developing in newspaper production processes, the convention authorized a "continuing study of newspaper production methods as they may be affected by new machines and new processes."

A Human Rights report to the convention urged Guild locals to embark on a specific program during the year in one of four fields: freedom of opportunity, freedom of the press, responsibility of the press and freedom of the individual.

The convention took sharp issue with an arbitrator of a recent Guild case who stated he believed a newspaperman could be fired for "just and sufficient cause" if the newsmen took a position on a controversial subject, because, claimed the arbitrator, such would injure his ability to report the news objectively.

Decision Protested

The issue arose out of the case of a United Press staff member, fired after invoking the Fifth Amendment before the House Un-American Activities Committee.

The controversy went to arbitration, and the Guild was upheld by the arbitrator. However, the arbitrator added the wire service management could have justifiably dismissed the man involved for taking a position on a controversial subject.

"This gratuitous generalization," said the Guild, "if allowed to stand, imperils the right of any newspaperman to voice any opinion on any subject which is or might become controversial."

The convention directed that "every legal effort to force the reinstatement" of the UP staff member be exerted.

THE NATION'S newspapers must share the blame for "the weird development" of what has been called "the McCarthy myth."

CIO Reg. XIII Dir Irwin L. DeShetler attacked the record of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) in an address at the convention banquet of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

McCarthy was an obscure circuit judge only 15 years ago, DeShetler recalled, "yet now, he can make an otherwise sane Governmental body tremble with fear trying to decide whether he should have his wrist slapped in public."

"He can precipitate panic in our State Dept. or our Army, and cause chills to run down the spines of responsible people throughout the free world," the CIO aide noted. "He can thumb his nose at the President of the United States . . ."

This "weird development," DeShetler said, ". . . cannot be separated from the impact of headlines and newspaper stories on the public mind over a period of years."

Help From Press

DeShetler said that McCarthy's headline-producing "techniques" involved "hearings behind closed doors and 'developments' fed to the press by McCarthy, himself."

"McCarthy, who knows very well that a good newspaperman must report the remarks and antics of a public official, no matter how violent or irresponsible they may be, has coldly exploited this fact to produce headlines," DeShetler said.

"It is also true that too much of the press has been over-eager to let him get away with it—or has vigorously cooperated with him in doing so."

The CIO official pointed out that there is "an increasing tendency among our papers to size up McCarthy for what he is," but that "this has not been as wide-spread a fact as we would like to have it."

Twin Dangers

"Thoughtful, concerned newsmen—who observe closely the twin threats of totalitarianism—McCarthyism and Communism—know that we, as a nation, are faced with real dangers," DeShetler said.

"McCarthyism and Communism are both enemies of democracy. To join McCarthy to fight the Communists, or to join the Communists to fight McCarthy is to lead democracy into a death trap. We must continue to fight them both."

DeShetler also charged that "a heavy and shameful portion of the blame for helping to produce a climate in this country that made a McCarthy possible must go to those politicians who use reckless and irresponsible smear tactics in the partisan arena."

"The argument that McCarthy is, after all, fighting Communism and one should not be too squeamish about how he does it, because he has to use dirty methods to fight dirty opponents, falls with a pathetic thud in the face of McCarthy's own disgraceful record," he said.

"His own record makes it clear that McCarthy is a no-good phony."

STAR SPANGLED—Guild Pres. Joseph Collis, at left, is surrounded by Columbia stars Mae Winn, left, of Caine Mutiny and Kim Novak of Pushover at Guild banquet.

At right, Board Member Philip Price addresses convention session as Executive Vice Pres. Ralph Novak (left) and Board Member Adolph Rahm listen.

Sacrifice

ANG convention delegates contributed some $1625 in cash and pledges to strikers in their Wilkes-Barre, Pa., local — and lusty credit for the biggest sacrifice of them all went to the San Jose, Calif., representatives.

The $50 San Jose contribution may not have been the largest, but it had the most spirit behind it. The money represented their "whiskey fund," which had been set aside to entertain the delegates as part of San Jose's campaign to be considered as a future convention site.

San Jose went ahead with their entertainment—with beer.

Hollywood Was There For ANG Convention Festivities

GETTING acquainted with Canadian Board Member Joseph Beauclerc is Warner's starlet Ann Robinson.

THE STARS were out for the American Newspaper Guild convention last week —thanks to the host local, Los Angeles.

Jack Webb, star of the TV show, Dragnet, appeared at the Guild's convention banquet as master-of-ceremonies and introduced ANG officers. Leon Ames, star of "Life With Father," addressed the opening session as an officer of the Screen Writers.

Among the stage, screen, radio and television personalities who greeted delegates at the opening cocktail party were Ames, Rita Moreno, 20th Century; Spring Byington, CBS-TV; Ralph Story, CBS-TV; Lurene Tuttle, CBS-TV; Mae Wynn, Columbia; Kim Novak, Columbia; Joanne Gilbert and Martha English, Paramount; Gill Stratton, CBS-TV; Reed Hadley, CBS-TV (Public Defender); Patricia Lynn, TV, and Marian Carr, Warner Brothers.

"JUST THE FACTS" are given Dragnet TV star Jack Webb by CIO Reg. XIII Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler.

LONG HOURS of volunteer work are being given by an administration committee of CIO Twin Cities Newspaper Guild pending selection of successor to late Executive Sec. Wilbur E. Bade. Shown, left to right, are Local Pres. Frank Murray, Board Members Earl Almquist and William F. Brooks, Jr., and Treas. Harold Chucker. Not present when photo was taken was John R. Finnegan.

IWA Offer To Arbitrate Strike Is Turned Down By Operators

STALLING by Northwest lumber operators was charged last week by the CIO Woodworkers, now in the eighth week of their strike, as management rejected the union's offer to submit the dispute to arbitration.

Some 75 smaller operators have defied threats by lumber barons of a probable blacklist and signed contracts incorporating IWA-CIO's demands of a 12.5c hourly increase and other benefits.

(IWA has postponed its Milwaukee convention, scheduled for Aug. 23-27, because of the "emergency situation" of the Pacific Northwest strike.)

About 100,000 CIO and AFL lumber workers are on strike in five Western States.

The lumber operators, at a recent meeting with IWA-CIO's Northwest Policy Committee, rejected the union's offer to return to work if they would agree to submit the dispute to a three-man board to be chosen by the American Arbitration Association.

"WE PROPOSED that our members return to work and our case for a wage increase, employer-financed job study program and three weeks of paid vacation after five years of work be submitted to an impartial board of arbitrators," said IWA-CIO Pres. A. F. Hartung.

"The employers caucused among themselves for a short time and then returned. Their spokesman, H. J. Greeley, said that the employers would not agree to arbitrate because they knew it would cost them money.

"We told him we were interested to learn that even his group recognized our case was so strong that an impartial group of citizens would see the justice of our demands.

"WE REPLIED that usually in negotiations previous to 1952, the facts about profits, cost of living, increased national productivity and the conditions of the lumber market were considered as primary factors in bargaining.

"This year, however, the employers seem to think the only factor to determine is 'which can win the economic war?' We can assure them that we are not about to capitulate if that is to be their attitude."

SOLID SUPPORT of labor movement for the Kohler strikers was pledged by Victor G. Reuther, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, at win-the-strike rally cosponsored by CIO, AFL and independent unions in Sheboygan. Some 3600 members of CIO Auto Workers now are in fifth month on the picket lines.

Working Memorial Keeps Bade's Union Spirit Alive

SOME DAY, members of the CIO Twin Cities Guild are confident, there will be a permanent memorial to Wilbur E. Bade, longtime ANG-CIO leader who was executive secretary of the local when he died suddenly last Mar. 29.

The day after his death, leaders of the local met to talk over what had to be done to carry on his work. Bade, former editor of the CIO Newspaper Guild's Guild Reporter, had died as he left a meeting of the St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch unit called to discuss contract proposals. Negotiations with the Minneapolis Star and Tribune also were coming up.

Out of that meeting has come a living memorial to Bade and the work he did in the form of a dedicated administrative committee of five members who volunteered—and have carried out their pledge—to give up as much time as necessary for so long as necessary to keep the local functioning properly.

Heading the group is Local Pres. Frank Murray, of the Star and Tribune. From St. Paul are Earl Almquist, an executive board member, and John Finnegan. From Minneapolis are Treas. Harold Chucker, former local president, and William F. Brooks, Jr., a board member.

EVERY DAY one or more of them drops into the Guild office in Minneapolis to do, with the help of Mrs. Mary Hartmann, office secretary who has given unsparingly of her time, the essential things that Bade would have done. On Saturdays, all of them show up and put in anywhere from a couple of hours to a full day of work.

CIO News Is Applauded

THE CIO NEWS was given a pat on the back for "consistently high standards of journalistic endeavor" in a resolution adopted by the CIO Newspaper Guild at its Los Angeles convention.

The ANG commended The CIO News for a "notable job in covering the trial for libel against the notoriously anti-labor reactionary Westbrook Pegler," and pointed out it was "practically alone among newspapers" that gave attention to the trial.

Quentin Reynolds, well-known writer, was awarded $175,001 as the result of the libel suit he filed against Pegler and the Hearst newspapers.

The Guild resolution also urged affiliated locals to subscribe to The CIO News, saying it "easily ranks among the finest labor publications in the country."

Bade Award Planned For ANG Leaders

AN AWARD for "Guild leadership," honoring the memory of the late Wilbur E. Bade, veteran Guild leader, was established by the CIO Newspaper Guild convention.

The award will be granted each year to a Guild member judged to have contributed most to "the continuous development of strong, intelligent leadership from within the ranks of the Guild."

The Newspaper Guild paid tribute to Bade, former executive secretary of the Twin Cities local, who died "with his boots on" when struck by a heart attack following a Guild meeting.

JOHN BIDDISON, retired executive officer of the local, recalled for the delegates Bade's vigorous career in the Guild since its early years, when he organized the Lake Superior local.

In 1941, Biddison recalled, Bade began building what came to be known as the "Pro-Guild Caucus" which led to the successful drive to break Communist influence in unions.

"He was a large-scale study in complexity, a voluble mixture of generosity, humor, compassion and camaraderie," Biddison said.

The Guild voted an annual appropriation of $500 for the Wilbur E. Bade Memorial Award. The Twin Cities local volunteered to meet the first year's expenses.

Registration Week Gets A Push In Los Angeles

REGISTRATION WEEK was proclaimed in Los Angeles Aug. 15-21 by Mayor Norris Poulson, in response to a call by Albert T. "Blackie" Lunceford, secretary-treasurer of the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council.

Lunceford had asked the chairman of the Board of Supervisors and mayors of all sixth class cities in Los Angeles County to make such proclamations to help create the largest possible vote in November.

"The larger the vote in November," Lunceford said, "the better chance we have of getting public officials who truly represent the interests of all the people."

Celler Asks Dismissal Of McLeod

REMOVAL of Scott McLeod, State Dept. security chief, has been demanded by Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.), who blasted McLeod's hampering of the U. S. refugee program.

Celler said "only a trickle" of displaced persons have been admitted to this country under last year's law because McLeod "sees a subversive under every bed."

He said he would introduce a liberalizing amendment to the special refugee act to oust McLeod as administrator of the refugee program.

The goal of admitting 214,000 refugees "will never be achieved," Celler declared, as long as the program is operating under McLeod's "ridiculous attitude" toward security. He said only 2200 refugees have so far been admitted under the three-year program.

CELLER SAID McLeod's insistence that "his agents prowl around the countries from whence come the DP's" and determine the character, habits and associations of the applicants has "slowed down the process." The governments of these countries "refuse to allow McLeod to invade their sovereignty and act as local police," he added.

Pres. Eisenhower has "finally realized" the program has failed, Celler noted, and has "issued a proclamation asking aid from 48 governors."

Holder Is Named To Council Post

J. W. Holder has been named to the post of full-time executive-secretary of the North Carolina CIO Council by the executive committee. Holder, former president of CIO Communications Workers Local 3060 at a Western Electric Mfg. Co. plant in Winston-Salem, will serve for a three-year term.

NLRB Adds Strike Curb By Decision

A "NO-STRIKE" clause, in effect, has been written into labor contracts without such clauses, where the contracts also have no reopener provisions, by a new National Labor Relations Board decision.

The 3-2 decision by the Republican majority means that unions no longer are free to strike at any time during the life of a contract to change its terms where there is no reopener clause. The decision applies even if there is no prohibition against strikes in the contract.

The case in point, however, resulted in a victory for the CIO Oil Workers. The Board ruled that Lion Oil Co. of El Dorado, Ark., had to reimburse 600 strikers for six weeks' loss of wages. The company contended that the union had failed to observe waiting requirements before striking.

Provision was made in the contract for alterations during its life. The question of a right to strike over wage and other reopeners is currently before the courts.

Factory Pay Still Falling

Factory work-hours and pay slumped again last month, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

Blaming vacation production cutbacks, BLS said the mid-July weekly pay of factory workers was $70.92. This is 76c below the high set in mid-June and 41c under the average for a year ago. BLS estimated the average hourly earning of factory workers at $1.80 last month, down a cent from June.

The average factory workweek was estimated at 39.4 hours in mid-July, down two-tenths of an hour from June and the lowest month in five years.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own

You And Your Money—

'What's Going On Here?' Food Price 'Spread' Needs An Answer

THE HOUSEWIFE who goes into a food store to do her weekly shopping, comes out with little, if any, change from a $20 bill. Then she reads in her morning paper that the farmer is getting less and less for his products.

"What's going on here?" must be her reaction. And she is completely justified in asking that question.

During the past few years the "spread" between what the housewife pays for food and what the farmer gets for that same food has been steadily increasing.

This situation has been dramatized particularly during the past two years when the farmer's income has taken a sharp drop, accompanied by a warning that major American depressions start with the farmer and then spread to the rest of us.

The Investigation Was Killed

Take the latest figures on the cost of living issued by the Labor Dept. These show that between May and June of this year food prices led the way in boosting the cost of living by a tenth of 1%. It was the third consecutive month that food prices had advanced.

At the same time the farmer was getting less for his products, his cash receipts dropping from $258 million in May to $248 in June.

This phenomenon of the farmer getting less for his produce and the consumer failing to get a corresponding benefit in his grocery bill is something that has puzzled a great many people for a great many years.

Pres. Truman was enough intrigued by it to direct the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the problem while he was still in the White House.

Unfortunately for those who would like to know the answer, the Congress killed an appropriation for the study last year and even went so far as to forbid the FTC to continue it. Obviously there were a good many people who didn't want to know the answer.

Efforts to explain the "spread" have been frequent. The New York Journal of Commerce has blamed it on several factors, such as higher wages, expensive packaging, better store equipment and increased transportation costs.

Again it is pointed out that the cost of the amount of wheat in a loaf of bread is so small that fluctuations in the price paid to the farmer for his wheat have little influence on the price of the finished loaf. This conflicts with claims that farm subsidies are responsible for high food prices, but this, of course, is another study.

While net income for the farmer goes down, profits for the food processor and chain store are standing up handsomely. Thus, while the farmer's share of the food dollar has dropped 10c during the past nine years, the net income of leading corporations processing agricultural products has stood up well and even increased between 1952 and 1953. Since 1951 farm proprietors' income has dropped over $3 billion, or 20%.

Until a study of the "spread" of food prices from the farm to the dinner table, is made, it is likely that the farmer will continue to be blamed and labor continue to be blamed. But where the money really goes and who pockets it will remain a mystery. It may well be that there are powerful groups in America who would prefer to keep it that way. —(PAI)

Barbs At Benson

"No man in history has succeeded in bringing down the price paid to the producer so low or raising the price of food to the consumer so high."

That's the blast leveled at Agriculture Sec. Benson by Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) during the debate over the Eisenhower-Benson proposals for a "flexible" farm price support program.

Sen. Young (R. N.D.) countered Administration arguments for the program by citing the newest BLS figures showing a 13.8% gain in consumers' food costs since 1949 while the index of prices received by farmers dropped eight points in the same period.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

MANY FAMILIES, especially in industrial areas, have had the mystifying and costly experience of seeing their nylon curtains, hose and nylon goods seemingly disintegrate for no apparent reason.

Others have had such experiences as ironing an Orlon garment and finding that creases accidentally made by the iron could not be removed, or pressing a Dacron blouse or shirt with a hot iron and finding the material fused into a hard substance.

A Guide On Synthetics

Now that synthetic fabrics have come down to more reasonable prices and are coming into wide use, you need to avoid having such mishaps happen to you.

Many of these unfortunate incidents occurred because manufacturers themselves were inexperienced in how to make up and finish the new fabrics, some sought also to capitalize on the "wonder-fabric" publicity with poorly-made products, and Dupont's vast publicity campaign extolled the virtues of the new fibers without also explaining their defects.

The case of the disintegrating nylons is now explained this way: Industrial gases found in many large towns near factories attack nylon with damaging effects which have been observed often in nylon curtains and hose particularly.

Also, one type of nylon—the so-called "dull" nylon used in dresses because of its preferred appearance—deteriorates in sunlight, and many curtains have been made of this kind of nylon. This is the worst possible idea since curtains must be sun-resistant. The "bright" nylon, which more careful curtain manufacturers use, is more sun-resistant.

If you do live in an industrial center where fumes are a problem, note that for curtains, Orlon and Dacron resist gases better than nylon.

This department has prepared the following table of synthetic fibers indicating their chief characteristics and uses, and preferred laundering methods:

DACRON: Considered strongest and most resilient of the new fibers, it is often blended with rayon to reduce the cost, or wool to provide absorbency and other qualities of wool. Dacron can be washed in warm water with a synthetic detergent, or in a washing machine for a short period. It should be rinsed well and dried carefully because any accidental crease may become permanent and is not removable in ironing. It should be ironed at a low temperature.

ORLON: Orlon looks like silk but can be processed to resemble wool, and is often used by itself or in blends with other fibers for suits, sweaters, coats. It has good wear resistance (equal or better than cotton) and is highly resistant to sunlight. It should be washed by hand with warm water with a synthetic detergent, and rinsed well. Iron at a low temperature.

ACRILAN: One of the newest synthetic fibers, it is similar to Orlon in qualities and uses and sometimes a little less costly, but not quite as resistant to sunlight.

NYLON: Most familiar of the synthetic fibers, it has high strength and resistance to abrasion (excellent for socks) and good recovery from wrinkles. But is uncomfortable in humid weather, ravels if not properly woven and forms fiber pills in some types of goods (most frequently spun nylon). Even as little as 5% or 10% of nylon in a blend adds abrasion resistance, but 15% is needed for adding strength.

DYNEL: Looks and feels like wool, but is shrinkproof and quick drying, thus easier to wash. It is also mothproof. Best washing method: by hand, with a synthetic detergent, but don't try to iron Dynel as it is sensitive to heat.

(Copyright 1954 by Sidney Margolius.)

'Blank Check' Auto Deals Boomerang

A WARNING about unscrupulous used car dealers and phony home-repair outfits operating in the Linden, N. J., area has been issued by Lester Wiener, attorney for CIO Oil Workers Local 337.

The used car racket, Weiner explained, is based on getting the customer to sign blank forms after he and the dealer agree on the price of a car and he has paid his down payment.

In case after case, Weiner said, "the purchase price has been raised after the sale has been consummated, and the new purchase price inserted on the signed blank agreements."

In the home repair racket, the salesman promises all kinds of guarantees and high quality work. The customer then signs what he thinks is an order for the work. Actually, it's a contract and a note. The salesman's firm then discounts the note with a bank, getting its money and leaving the bank to collect from the home owner.

If the home owner then finds things wrong with the work done on his house, or that the work is not completed, and complains to the bank, he gets nowhere. The bank was not party to the contract and is only concerned with getting paid for the note it holds.

CIO Urges BLS Bring Price Index Up To Date

CIO and the CIO Auto Workers researchers joined hands to rap government statistics gathering for the second time recently with suggestions for specific changes in the Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumer Price Index.

Earlier the CIO had charged that government statistics are deteriorating for lack of funds. Further support for that charge came last week as the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report hit Congress for such "economizing."

The House-Senate group said the government should be compiling more and better data about the economy to help private groups and government policy makers make "intelligent economic judgments."

AS TO THE CIO and UAW criticism of the Consumer Price Index, three areas of the sampling methods came in for comment.

First, CIO said, geographic movements of population aren't reflected "to the extent that there exists a net migration from low-price areas to high-price areas, or vice versa."

Second, the importance of different types of retail stores changes, so, for instance, the sample of stores is bound to become "obsolete" because of the growth of suburban shopping centers.

Third, CIO said, construction of new housing requires changes in sampling methods to include the new and to record changing prices of the old.

CIO fire was also directed at pricing policies, especially for items newly added to the index, and procedures that don't take into account hidden price changes such as where a priced item disappears.

Inclusion of "boom towns" as a separate part of the index was also asked.

DELIGHT is written on the faces of the pupils as they try out the merry-go-round given by Steelworkers Local 4303, Dover, N. J., to the Mine Hill Township, N. J., School. Local Pres. Joseph DeCaro is third from left. Others are members of the local's Community Services Committee and township school teachers.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

While CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe is recovering from his recent illness, his column is being conducted by guest writers. This week the writer is Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers. Quill also is a CIO vice president and chairman of the CIO Safety and Occupational Health Committee.

By MICHAEL J. QUILL

WE IN TWU believe that we have set a hopeful precedent for public employes across the country in their struggle for decent working conditions and job security.

When TWU and the New York City Transit Authority officials sat down on Thursday, July 22, and signed a contract, a 14-year TWU effort was capped with success.

We are proud to have led the first successful union fight in the country for a signed collective bargaining contract covering civil service workers.

Besides substantial pay increases, the agreement sets up a genuine grievance procedure which culminates in a mutually-agreed-upon impartial chairman.

AT LAST, CIVIL SERVICE employes are getting their long-delayed trade union rights!

How did the New York transit workers achieve this great victory?

They did it by standing solidly united in their CIO Transport Workers Union and rejecting every effort over the past 14 years to either lull them into a false sense of security because of their Civil Service status or to threaten them with New York State's vicious anti-labor Condon-Wadlin Law.

They expressed it resoundingly on Friday, July 25, when they cast a hearteningly heavy vote in favor of their majority union. (Only 118 voted "no union" out of almost 30,000 ballots cast.)

IT WAS ONLY a few days later that the TA—whipped into submission by this outstanding expression of trade union support—really began to deal genuinely with the Transport Workers Union.

The trail-blazing document followed.

Now, the challenge is to duplicate this contract for every civil service worker in the country.

★

Here are recent representation victories as reported to the CIO Dept. of Organization:

CIO'S WOODWORKERS continued winning in their southern organizing effort with a 2-to-1 victory at United States Gypsum Co., Greenville, Miss., where 343 workers were involved in a representation election. IWA-CIO Vice Pres. Claude Ballard said that IWA organizers Claude Hill and A. C. Hudson were assisted by CIO staffers John Ritter and A. Stewart O'Bannon.

The victory follows close on the report of IWA-CIO triumph at Ocala Manufacturing Co., Ocala, Fla., and Southern Lumber Co., Warren, Ark. The three southern elections involved some 1000 workers.

IWA-CIO also reported a victory at the Tunison & Wilson Logging Co., Heppner, Ore. The campaign was conducted by IWA-CIO Council 6 and local union 6-312.

ACTING DIR. MICHAEL LIVODA, CIO Reg. XII, reported a CIO Steelworkers' victory over Mine-Mill. USA-CIO won bargaining rights for employes of Empire Zinc Div., New Jersey Zinc Corp., Gilman, Colo., by a 4-to-1 margin. USA-CIO Sub-District Dir. M. J. Soldren took personal charge of this campaign, which was followed by an equally impressive victory at Continental Can Co., Denver, Colo. Under the leadership of USA-CIO Rep. Llewellyn Johns, workers again defeated Mine-Mill by a 4-to-1 margin.

Another USA-CIO win was reported at Igoe Brothers, Inc., Newark, N. J., where USA-CIO defeated the AFL Teamsters by a vote of 85 to 3.

From Reg. I, CIO Dir. Hugh Thomson sent word of a CIO Auto Workers' victory at American Machine & Foundry, Boston, Mass. UAW-CIO Rep. Bob Walkinshaw was in charge.

CIO REGION II DIR. MICHAEL MANN, advised of victories for CIO Retail-Wholesale Workers at Glaser Lead Co., Inc., Brooklyn, N. Y. and CIO Furniture Workers at Glenham Mfg. Co., Beacon, N. Y.

RWDSU-CIO also was victorious at the Pepsi-Cola plant in Portsmouth, O., according to Asst. CIO Regional Dir. Robert Edwards. Gerald Hughes, Ohio Director for RWDSU-CIO, conducted the campaign.

Pres. Elwood D. Swisher of the CIO Chemical Workers reported victories for his union at Stebbins & Roberts, Inc., Little Rock, Ark.; U. S. Gypsum Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., and Huron Portland Cement Co., Detroit, Mich. These victories are in addition to others at Electro Metallurgical Co., Div. of Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., Marietta, O.

CIO Glass Workers now represent workers at Stylon Southern Corp., Florence, Ala., where CIO Rep. Miles M. Sweeney played a significant role in the campaign. CIO Rep. Carl Mahl headed a victorious campaign at Berol Pen Co., Waynesboro, Va., where workers overwhelmingly selected the CIO Rubber Workers to represent them.

LISTEN TO THE CIO RADIO PROGRAM

John W. Vandercook AND THE NEWS

every weekday evening on the ABC Network

3 CIO, AFL Ship Unions Start Joint Rivers Organizing Drive

By JULES WEINBERG

DELEGATES from three major CIO and AFL maritime unions met in Houston, Tex., last week to set up officially the Rivers Joint Organizing Committee — the first unified CIO-AFL organizing drive in history.

A hard-hitting program for organization of workers on barge lines, tugs and ships along 2800 miles of rivers and canals was set up at the initial meeting.

Participating in the Houston session were officers and representatives of the CIO Marine Engineers, CIO Maritime Union and AFL Masters, Mates & Pilots.

THE JOINT rivers organizing drive was hailed by William J. Smith, of the CIO Organizational Dept., as demonstrating that co-operation between CIO and AFL is a "matter of deeds as well as words."

Smith, field assistant to John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils, aided in setting up the committee.

Co-ordinator of the rivers drive is Charles Barranco, veteran CIO organizer. Headquarters have been set up in St. Louis, Mo.

MEBA Pres. Herbert Daggett and NMU Vice Pres. Steve Federoff praised the joint maritime union effort, for which support was pledged by fraternal representatives of the CIO Steelworkers and CIO Oil Workers.

Daggett praised CIO's efforts to coordinate the organizing efforts of the three maritime unions, while Federoff called the joint committee a "dream come true."

ALONG WITH the joint organizing effort, Capt. Thomas E. Kenny, MMP vice president, suggested coordinated legislative action in support of improved working and safety conditions for river boatmen.

Each of the three unions has assigned full-time staff organizers to the drive. They are: James Bennett and Martin Carey, MEBA; James Bruno and Gordon Knapp, NMU; and Capt. Thomas P. Craig, MMP.

A joint statement issued by the Houston meeting said:

"In the establishment of a Rivers Joint Organizing Committee composed of unions of the AFL and the CIO, we are proud that maritime unions within the two great labor organizations of the United States have taken the lead in bringing the benefits of labor's unity of purpose to the thousands of unorganized workers who man the vessels on our nation's rivers.

"There is every reason to believe that all workers will profit by the history being made at our inaugural conference of the Rivers Joint Organizing Committee, for we are pioneering in the kind of unified labor activity which makes for greater trade union organization. We pledge every resource available to the success of this drive."

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own

ALL SET TO GO are leaders of CIO-AFL Rivers Joint Organizing Committee at initial conference at Houston, Tex. Seated: Vice Pres. Thomas E. Kenny, MMP-AFL; Field Assistant William J. Smith to CIO Exec. Vice Pres. Riffe; Pres. Herbert Daggett, MEBA-CIO; standing: Vice-Pres. Steve Federoff, NMU-CIO; and National CIO Rep. Charles Barranco, coordinator.

IUE Wins Again At Big Jersey GE Plant

THE CIO ELECTRICAL Workers have scored their biggest victory over the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers in a General Electric plant since IUE-CIO won the right to represent the employes at GE's big Schenectady, N. Y., plant.

The IUE-CIO victory was at the GE air conditioning plant at Bloomfield, N. J., where it received 725 votes. UE got 544, and no union 43 in a National Labor Relations Board election.

Since the vote was held at the Schenectady plant, IUE-CIO has won a half-dozen NLRB elections at GE establishments, in two of which UE appeared on the ballot. In the four most recent elections IUE-CIO gained representation rights for more than 2000 workers.

UE OUTSMARTED itself in the Bloomfield contest. Organizers, including four who had lost their own shops to IUE-CIO, rigged up a merry-go-round on a truck. The merry-go-round bore a slogan blaming IUE-CIO for red smears on UE.

The effort boomeranged when IUE-CIO organizers simply asked the workers over an amplifying system whether they wanted to stay "out of the UE merry-go-round."

IUE-CIO also recently won at the GE Christmas bulb plant at Memphis, Tenn., by a vote of 345 to 30 for no union. CIO Rep. W. A. Copeland was in charge of the IUE-CIO campaign.

THE IUE-CIO victories included two over the AFL Electrical Workers at GE plants. At Quebec, Que., a card check by the provincial labor board showed that IUE-CIO was entitled to represent the workers at an electric computation plant, where they had voted earlier to disaffiliate from IBEW-AFL.

At a Charlotte, N. C., plant, the vote was IUE-CIO 20, IBEW 1 and no union 1.

CWA Gains Pay Raises For 11,000

CONTRACTS providing pay increases have been signed by the CIO Communications Workers with Wisconsin Bell and General Telephone of California covering some 11,000 employes.

The Wisconsin Bell pact brings to a dozen the settlements that have been reached by CWA-CIO in negotiations with AT&T subsidiaries.

Some 6500 workers got pay hikes in Wisconsin, with the increases for traffic workers averaging 3.64c an hour and those for plant employes averaging 6.5c.

Ten towns were moved in higher classifications, with tours ending at 9:30 p.m. cut by a half hour to seven hours.

THE NEW agreement with General Telephone of California, the largest independent telephone company in the U. S.—brought benefits to some 4500 employes.

The union won wage increases of from $1 to $2.50 a week for all except beginners. The increases brought the pay for both plant and traffic workers substantially above that paid in comparable towns in the Los Angeles area of the Bell system.

The efforts of Indiana Bell to set up an "independent" union for its accounting workers failed recently when CWA-CIO got 233 votes and the other union 105 in a National Labor Relations Board election.

Oil, Chemical Groups Push Merger Talks

By FRED ROSS

A RANK-AND-FILE committee of the CIO Oil Workers and Chemical Workers met all last week in Washington to discuss plans for a merger of the two unions.

Meeting in CIO headquarters, the committee devoted most of its time to drafting a proposed constitution for the new union which would have some 200,000 members and a much larger potential membership.

The constitution must be submitted for approval to conventions of the two unions, and a merger convention. UGCCWA will hold a convention at St. Louis, Sept. 13. The time and place of the next OWIU convention has not been set, but it will be held later this year.

RICHARD LEONARD, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, was impartial chairman of the Washington meetings.

Also participating in the discussion were the executive officers of both unions, except UGCCWA Vice Pres. Joseph R. Joy, who was engaged in negotiations for union members employed at atomic energy plants at Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Paducah, Ky.

CHART UNION MERGER — Representatives of CIO Oil Workers and Chemical Workers met in Washington to draw up proposed constitution for merged union. From left, seated: OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight; Richard Leonard, assistant to CIO Pres. Reuther and impartial chairman; UGCCWA Pres. Elwood Swisher; standing, Arthur Marcos, Rodeo, Calif., and Bernard Schultz, Alloy, W. Va., members of OWIU and UGCCWA committees, respectively. Meetings were held in CIO headquarters.

The rank-and-file committee discussions grew out of meetings of the leaders of both unions to explore merger possibilities. The meetings were held in Cleveland, O., and Denver, Colo.

THOSE sessions were prompted by the almost parallel jurisdiction of OWIU and UGCCWA in certain phases of the chemical industry, especially in the petrochemical field.

Participating in discussions at Cleveland, Denver and Washington were Pres. O. A. Knight, Vice Pres. B. J. Schafer and Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick of the Oil Workers; Pres. Elwood D. Swisher and Sec.-Treas. Cecil Martin of the Chemical Workers. Joy participated in the two meetings prior to the one in Washington.

Members of the joint rank-and-file committee included:

OWIU: C. E. Robinson, Bakersfield, Calif.; Arthur Marcos, Rodeo, Calif.; Edward Martian, Laurel, Mont.; Arthur Griggs, Pampa, Tex.; L. L. Crane, Port Neches, Tex.; Vincent Lena, Port Arthur, Tex.; James Diemert, Cleveland, O.; Raymond M. Davis, Westville, N. J.; Hubert Burden, Lawrenceville, Ill.; B. J. Reilander, Regina, Saskatchewan; Len Yarborough, Tulsa, Okla., and Charles C. Lipscomb, Dawes, W. Va.

UGCCWA: Austin Prendergast, Lynn, Mass.; Warren DeLong, Tonawanda, N. Y.; John Heza, Long Island City, N. Y.; Arthur Ernst, Edgewater, N. J.; Charles Douglas, Kobuta, Pa.; Joseph Bommarito, Detroit, Mich.; Clarence J. Spies, St. Paul, Minn.; Arthur E. Junghaus, St. Louis, Mo.; W. B. Roberts, Radford, Va.; Bernard Schultz, Alloy, W. Va.; L. E. Redden, Sarnia, Ont., and Leo Schnell, New Orleans, La.

A COURT TEST will be made this week over the national emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, under which Pres. Eisenhower obtained a no-strike injunction in the long dispute over wages to be paid atomic energy workers.

The President last week got an injunction halting the walkout of some 4500 members of CIO Chemical Workers employed at privately-operated Uraninum 235 plants at Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Paducah, Ky.

For four months, UGCCWA-CIO has been seeking a 21c an hour wage increase from the Carbide & Carbon Chemical Co., which operates the two plants.

It also presented its arguments before the Atomic Energy Labor Management Relations panel of AEC, but the company adamantly refused to offer more than a 6c an hour increase. AEC Chairman Lewis L. Strauss refused to intervene in the dispute.

BENJAMIN C. SIGAL, UGCCWA-CIO counsel was planning to appear this week before the the U. S. District Court at Knoxville, Tenn., which issued the temporary injunction.

He will seek to keep the court from making the injunction permanent. Sigal has told a Taft-Hartley board of inquiry set up by the President that a recent four-day walkout of atomic workers at the plants did not constitute a national emergency.

At that time, Supt. G. H. Dykes of the Oak Ridge plant said supervisory personnel "are maintaining normal operations and intend to do so."

Sigal reminded the board that company representatives did not deny the statement at an earlier hearing.

He also recalled that the company spokesmen were apprehensive of the effects of a prolonged strike on production and on the completion of new facilities at Oak Ridge.

"NO DATES were given," he said, "as to when operations in these additions might be expected even under normal operations and in the absence of a strike.

"The union further reported to the board that it was informed that representatives of AEC had advised the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy of Congress that the atomic energy plants could probably operate for 30 to 40 days with the supervisory and technical staff.

"Although Mr. Cook, who spoke before the board on behalf of AEC, was pressed to do so, he did not deny that some such figure had been given to the Joint Committee.

"If there is no present peril to the national health or safety, or if it cannot be shown that such peril would occur within the immediate future, there would be no justification for pursuing the national emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. It is the position of the union that no such peril has been shown."

GOP Moves To Save Defense Contractors Who Gypped Guam Workers Of Millions

THE GOP Administration last week asked Congress to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act so as to deprive foreign workers who have been cheated out of several million dollars in wages by contractors at defense bases of their right to collect.

Acting for the Administration, Chairman Smith (R. N. J.) of the Senate Labor Committee promptly introduced a bill to accomplish this objective. It is now before the Senate Labor Committee.

The Fair Labor Standards Act sets a minimum wage of 75c per hour and requires that time and one-half for all hours beyond 40 in a work week be paid to employes covered. As far back as 1948, the Supreme Court held that its provisions covered persons employed by U. S. contractors engaged in constructing military bases even on foreign territory.

THE ACT itself clearly states that its coverage applies to "any Territory or possession of the U. S."

In introducing his bill, Smith read into the record a request for the amendment from Acting Navy Sec. Thomas S. Gates, Jr. In it Gates disclosed that "the principal problem" is that for "a large number" of workers imported from the Philippines to work on defense facilities at Guam, a U. S. possession, "total compensation and benefits had not amounted to the 75c minimum prescribed by the Fair Labor Standards Act."

"This proposal would forestall claims that could amount to several million dollars from foreign workers on defense bases who have been paid less than the 75c minimum wages," Gates said. "It also would make unnecessary increases in the wage scales for foreign workers on such bases to pay all employes who may be covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act not less than this minimum."

Gates said that, on Guam alone, "if the Fair Labor Standards Act is enforced" the Defense Dept. is faced with a potential cost of "more than $3 million" for retroactive wage payments, and that annual wages would increase by a minimum of $1.5 million.

2 Tanker Bills Signed By Ike

Pres. Eisenhower last week signed two bills to boost the government tanker fleet and stimulate tanker construction.

He said the measures would "reduce our serious mobilization deficit in such tonnage and create a government-owned and maintained tanker reserve essential to our mobilization requirements."

So He Joined A Union—And Learned!

By BARRY MATHER
(Columnist in the Vancouver, B. C., Sun)

HOW MUCH BETTER would we all be without unions? Yes, how much? A gentleman, and no doubt a scholar, had a letter in one of the papers advising workers against getting organized.

He said that employes joining unions lose their liberties as individuals and become dominated, also regimented. How true this is!

Before the unions came, a man was free to do an honest day-and-a-half's work for an honest day's pay. He was at liberty to stand on his own heels and bargain with the boss. He could be pushed around at any time. Nobody regimented him against it.

The unions have changed this. Today not even the non-union employe is free from the evils of unionism. As a result of union people being dragooned into accepting raises, many non-union people have been intimidated into accepting raises, too.

I speak with sad personal experience. I once, misguidedly, helped organize a union. My hopes for greater individuality were high. Imagine my remorse when I saw what unions really do to you!

The good old six-day week, that we employes know so well and were so attached to, was scrapped!

In its place the five-day week was foisted on us!

Instead of being free to work 70 hours in six days, we were quickly dominated into working 40 hours in five!

And from the very moment the union got us we had to take more pay!

To show you how unions treat you—for every $20 a month raise the union forced on us we had to pay, I believe it was, as much as $1 a month in dues!

The fate of union members' wives must be particularly trying.

In place of the happy times of long hours, low pay and personal insecurity, unions have dominated entire families, indeed, entire communities, into a better standard of life.

Utility Local Sends 2 Children To Camp

Local 105, CIO Utility Workers, Pontiac, Mich., has sent two underprivileged children to the FDR-CIO Center at Port Huron, Mich.

Ike Challenged On Job Hopes
—See Page 2

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., August 23, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 34

MONUMENT AT GRAVE of the late Philip Murray, president of CIO and Steelworkers, in St. Anne's Cemetery, Castle Shannon, Pa., was dedicated last week. USA Pres. David J. McDonald here places a wreath on the memorial. (More pictures on Page 7.)

'Selective Optimism' On Jobs Challenged

THE MID-YEAR economic statement by Pres. Eisenhower represents a "case of selective optimism" and is not a realistic appraisal of the economic scene, Chairman Emil Rieve of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy declared last week.

"It concentrates on the few statistical trends from which optimism can be derived," he said, "and ignores important areas of economic data from which no objective student of economic matters can derive optimism.

"Is this an objective economic report? The conclusion comes inevitably that it is the spiritual product of Republican politicians and publicity men whose eyes are focused on the hope of winning the November election."

The President, in his statement, went out on a limb by declaring the economic decline "has come to a halt." He came to this conclusion by listing what he called "numerous signs" of improvement, and glossing over others less hopeful.

The CIO would like to be as cheerful as the President about the state of the nation, Rieve said, but "we have a responsibility to our members and their families—millions of whom are unemployed or on short work-weeks—to call the shots as they are."

"WHEN THE President tells the American people that the economy is operating at a slightly higher level than in 1952, he is dodging the issue," Rieve maintained.

"The American economy is a dynamic economy that must constantly expand if it is to maintain its health. Our economy must operate at considerably higher levels each year in order to sustain prosperity.

"Looking back to 1952 will not solve our problems. We should be looking forward to continued economic growth and taking realistic steps to attain it, rather than to exhibit the unjustified complacency which characterizes the President's economic statement."

Eisenhower's statement was just that, and nothing more. It was not the usual midyear economic report to Congress, which the country has come to expect at this time of year, and did not bear the imprimatur of the Council of Economic Advisers, whose chairman, Arthur F. Burns, makes a weekly economic report to the President.

DISSENT from Eisenhower's conclusions was registered by Leon H. Keyserling, who was Burns' predecessor as head of the economic advisers.

He particularly noted that it is "irrelevant" and "beside the point" to compare this year's economy with that of 1952—the country's best year under the Democrats, the President said, and not as good as either 1953 or 1954.

"The true measure," Keyserling explained, "is where we are now against where we would be with maximum production and full employment."

The answer, he added, is a gross national output at least $25 billion a year higher than at present.

While the President was exuding optimism, additional signs of economic storm were rolling up on the horizon.

Steel production scheduled for last week was 62.1% of capacity, the lowest level since industry-wide vacations were in progress during the first week of July. Pittsburgh, with 50,000 steel workers idle and thousands more on short weeks, viewed the message with a jaundiced eye. So did Detroit, where the Great Lakes Steel Corp. greeted it by laying off 1000 employes—its second layoff of that size.

Another economic indicator, the index of man-hours worked in manufacturing industries, in July dropped to the lowest point in more than four years. The index in July was 97.9, down 2.2% from the previous month.

In railroads, the job situation is the worst since the early 1930's, Pres. W. P. Kennedy of the unaffiliated Railroad Trainmen told a union conference in Fort Worth, Tex.

The automobile industry, according to the Wall Street Journal, is getting rid of unsold new car stocks by ruthlessly cutting back production—with, of course, additional layoffs.

Since the first of the month, 28,000 employes have been furloughed by the Chrysler Corp. alone, with another 7300 facing the ax on Aug. 25.

In textiles, the American Woolen Co. told the CIO Textile Workers of its "irrevocable" decision to liquidate all but seven of its mills in New England and two in the South. The remaining mills will employ about 2200, one-tenth of the number formerly employed in the chain's more than 20 plants.

Among the mills scheduled for liquidation are three in the Lawrence, Mass., area which three years ago employed over 13,000 workers. Shrinkage of the woolen and worsted market was blamed by the company for the closings.

A company spokesman said that if Lawrence mill workers would work for 40c an hour it would not affect the decision to close the plants. TWUA-CIO Sec.-Treas. John Chupka and Arthur W. Brown, the union's American Woolen coordinator, were told that the firm had no quarrel with the union or employes in the areas to be abandoned.

In New Jersey, unemployment compensation payments to 140,000 jobless (as of now) are expected to total well over $100 million for the full year. This is the highest since 1946.

—Belland in The CWA News

"Let's Hope This Works By Nov. 2"

Some Questions for Ike

"How can the President be satisfied with the state of the economy?" Chairman Emil Rieve, of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, asked in view of the following facts:

1. Employment in manufacturing industries has declined for 11 straight months and is now almost two million less than a year ago.
2. The average work-week in manufacturing industries is now more than an hour less than it was a year ago.
3. By the end of July, over 800,000 people had exhausted their unemployment compensation.
4. Steel production is down almost 30% from last year, and is now operating at 63% of capacity.
5. New auto sales in July were down 20% from June's sales figures, and 15% below July 1953. The auto industry is now witnessing widespread lay-offs throughout the nation.
6. Retail sales in July were still lagging behind a year ago.

IUE Wins 3 More Elections In Week

THE CIO Electrical Workers within a week won three more National Labor Relations Board representation elections involving some 1100 workers.

The largest was at the Anaconda Wire & Cable Co., Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y., where the IUE-CIO defeated the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers 434 to 340. This was a bitter defeat for UE, because it had held representation rights 15 years.

The Westchester County CIO and AFL Councils joined in running a quarter-page ad in a Yonkers newspaper the day before the election urging Anaconda workers to vote IUE-CIO. IUE-CIO conducted its campaign orally and in literature printed in English, Italian, Polish and Russian.

EMPLOYES at two plants of the Donnelly Electric Co. at Boston and Hingham, Mass., cast 112 ballots for the IUE-CIO and 48 for the AFL structural iron union.

Clerical workers at the Underwood Typewriter Co. in Bridgeport, Conn., chose IUE-CIO by a vote of 63 to 13 for no union.

In another election covering Monroe Calculator Co. plants at Orange and Morris Plains, N. J., IUE-CIO obtained the largest number of votes, but a run-off will be necessary. The results were IUE-CIO 398, UE 248, AFL Electrical Workers 192, and no union 9.

CIO Leaders Set Labor Day Talks

Labor Day addresses of two CIO leaders will be broadcast nationally.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will make a Labor Day speech at 3:45 p.m. EDT, Sunday, Sept. 5, on NBC Radio.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey will be heard on ABC Radio at 4 p.m. EDT, Monday, Sept. 6.

Reuther will give two major Labor Day speeches, the first in Windsor, Ont., and the second in Detroit.

Stevenson Hits Republicans For 'Smile and Smear' Campaigning

COMEBACK — In drive to return to Senate, former Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney got a big complimentary vote in Wyoming's Democratic primary, will oppose Rep. Harrison (R.) in November.

THE "SMILE and smear" campaigning of Republicans was criticized by Adlai E. Stevenson, 1952 Democratic nominee for president, as he addressed the Illinois State Fair in Springfield.

Speaking the day before Pres. Eisenhower's visit, Stevenson said he hoped the President would make it "emphatically clear" to the GOP that their campaigning this fall "is not to be just smile and smear—his smiles and their smears."

"But I hardly see how he can be very convincing when his reason for coming here is to smile on the smears and nonsense of the Republican candidate," Stevenson added.

He criticized the President for offering his "good wishes" to Joseph T. Meek, GOP candidate for the Senate seat of Sen. Douglas (D.). Stevenson said Meek "has indicted much of what the President has said is good for America."

"It is with all respect that we remind the President that he leads not only his political party but our country, and that we view with misgiving such obvious subordination of even his own view of the national interest to party expediency," he added.

Meek, he went on, seems to favor "peace, private enterprise and chicken for Sunday dinner," but is "irritably opposed to virtually every step towards these objectives." The former Governor said the election in his state will determine "whether democracy will hang on to yesterday or meet tomorrow . . . whether democracy . . . is to stand still . . . or go forward."

Douglas, on the same program, charged that Republicans have "scuttled" Eisenhower's "great crusade" and that Democrats are his only "real friends."

He termed the GOP "a party of irresponsibility and incapacity" since it returned to power, while the Democrats "are the party of public responsibility."

"The great crusade has broken down," Douglas said. "It has broken down because the Republican pastime has been throwing monkey wrenches into the machinery."

Congress-In-Summary—

GOP Plans Backfire As Red Ban Is Voted

By MILTON PLUMB

THE EISENHOWER Administration's insistence on passage now of anti-Communist legislation aimed only at unions backfired last week as the 83rd Congress neared adjournment.

The Republican Party and the President got the anti-labor provisions they asked for, but they had to swallow with them a bill they didn't want—a bill which outlaws the Communist Party and establishes severe penalties for being a member.

The original Administration bill would have barred unions found to be "Communist-dominated" or "infiltrated" from using government labor facilities such as the National Labor Relations Board.

CIO Urged Inquiry

CIO had opposed the measure because of its loose language, and had warned against hasty action. Its spokesmen urged that the bill not be reported until a special committee had studied the problem and the constitutional issues involved.

The House Judiciary Committee concurred in this view. In the Senate, however, Republican leaders insisted on bringing the anti-union and anti-Communist proposal to a vote. They voted down an amendment offered by Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.) which would have set up a committee as a substitute.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), who had supported the Magnuson proposal, then moved to outlaw the Communist Party and make membership a felony subject to fines up to $10,000 or five years' imprisonment, or both. This bill passed 85 to 0.

Hoping to save face, the Administration drafted a substitute House bill which would have stripped the Communist Party of its rights and privileges. But it softened the Senate proposal by knocking out all penalties against being a Communist. The House passed this 305 to 2.

The Final Bill

GOP haste on the anti-union bill, however, opened a Pandora's box of trouble not to be turned back so easily. The Senate by a vote of 41 to 39 rejected the Administration attempt to water down its anti-Communist penalties, and insisted on the stronger Humphrey amendment.

By this time the House—all of whose members are about to go before the voters—would no longer back the subsititute. It sent the bill to conference, but with instructions, voted over the protests of House GOP leaders, that the conferees should accept all Senate provisions.

Frantic behind-the-scenes negotiations followed between the Administration and the Republican conferees to find some way of getting the GOP off the political hot seat. They resulted in a final bill which still makes the Communist Party illegal, but does not "outlaw" membership as such.

Under the compromise, individual Communists will, however, be subject to penalties provided for "Communist action" organizations under the Internal Security Law.

This forbids them to obtain passports, hold federal jobs or office, or hold jobs in defense plants. Moreover, if they fail to register as Communists, they become subject to $10,000 fines and imprisonment.

The Butler Bills

Besides its anti-Communist features, the bill carries the provisions aimed at unions, familiarly called the Butler Bills, to which all branches of organized labor have objected.

Charging that the bill is the "culmination of a very unfortunate situation" for which the Republicans are responsible, Sen. Kefauver (D. Ten.) warned that the measure is so broadly worded the Justice Dept. now can crack down on one of the major political parties if it chooses to do so.

"Certain people in the Republican Party," he said, "brought this on themselves by bringing accusations on practically every Democrat" of softness toward communism.

Farm

The Administration's "flexible" farm bill, which Rep. Cooley (D. N.C.), ranking minority member of the House Agriculture Committee, charged makes farmers "the only victim," passed both houses and went to the White House.

Most Democrats and a number of farm state Republicans, led by Sen. Young (R. N.D.), voted against the measure. Despite the recent drop in farm income, the bill puts reduced price supports on five basic crops for the first time since World War II.

The measure also establishes a "modernized" and lower parity, which further cuts income under the price supports program. Wool growers, however, came out with a special provision allowing price supports up to 110% of parity under a system Republicans previously had attacked as "the Brannan Plan."

Despite strong White House pressure for passage, many farm state Republicans agreed with Rep. Gross (R. Ia.) when he said it was "selling the farmer down the river."

Wetbacks

While Congress continued to sit on the legislation requested by Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell, Jr., making it illegal to employ or transport "wetback" Mexican farm labor, Chairman O. A. Knight of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee sought to stir up some action.

He wrote Brownell expressing "skepticism" over the fate of the legislation "unless you take a new strong position in support of this recommendation."

Brownell had promised representatives of all major labor and religious organizations on Mar. 29 that he would seek enactment of such laws this session.

Atomic Energy

The Republicans took a setback on their plan to turn the fruits of the people's $12 billion investment in atomic energy over to private monopoly. Both Houses approved a conference report knocking out this effort.

But GOP leaders made it clear that the fight is not over. Chairman Cole (R. N.Y.) of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee served notice that "the first bill I shall introduce in the session of Congress in January will be to repeal the provision of this bill calling for compulsory licensing."

If this safeguard is knocked out next year as Republican leaders hope, patent holders would then be able to prevent others from using their product. Such monopoly, opponents of the proposal pointed out, could hold back atomic development for years.

In announcing his plan to make another try in the next Congress, Cole indirectly made clear where he thought credit for blocking the give-away should go.

He labeled the licensing feature a "highly un-American provision" promoted by the CIO, Americans for Democratic Action, the Rural Electrification Association and the American Public Power Association.

Rep. Price (D. Ill.) noted that Pres. Eisenhower himself had seen the possibility that a few companies could set up a patent monopoly, and had urged Congress to adopt the five-year licensing provision.

Shortly before, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers, also is CIO secretary-treasurer, joined leaders of 17 other organizations representing electric consumers in signing a letter to all members of Congress calling for enactment of the section and other safeguards.

Finances

The rivers and harbors appropriations — usually regarded as the top "pork barrel" measure in each Congress—was sent to the President, carrying authorization for the government to spend $1 billion. But it was a mere piker compared with the $1,669,000,000 supplemental appropriation which Congress also approved.

Rep. Cannon, senior Democrat on the House Appropriations Committee, called the latter—which contained money for items left out of the original Eisenhower budget—"one of the biggest, juiciest, pork barrel bills ever brought to the floor of the House."

House and Senate conferees also agreed on a $2.7 billion foreign aid appropriation—a cut of nearly $700 million in the total asked by Pres. Eisenhower. The bill passed the House and awaited Senate action.

These last-minute appropriations involved deficit financing certain to lift the national debt far above the $275 billion ceiling. To get around this failure to reduce spending and balance the budget, Congress authorized what it called a "temporary" $6 billion increase in the debt limit until June 30, 1955.

House Republican Leader Halleck (Ind.) conceded, however, that the debt may still be above $275 billion on that date, and Congress may have to pass legislation next year continuing the higher ceiling.

Social Security

A House and Senate conference committee was deadlocked on the issue of expanding social security coverage to include farmers and most professional groups. A compromise —last major barrier to adjournment—in sight.

House conferees were insisting on inclusion of 3.5 million self-employed farmers and some 400,000 lawyers, dentists, architects and accountants. Senate members, however, were just as strongly opposed to putting these groups under social security.

A companion measure which extends the unemployment compensation program to four million workers, but does nothing to increase benefits, was sent to the President. It will become effective Dec. 31, 1955.

The Balance Of Power

GOP worries over keeping control of the Senate in the next Congress increased last week when Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) announced that he will vote for Democratic control next January.

Twice during the 83rd Congress, Morse held the balance of power. Although sharply critical of Republican policies, he refused to vote his former party out of control on grounds that the people had voted the GOP into office.

Morse said that the Republicans have had their chance and made their record and "if they have a clear majority in the Senate after the elections, then my position will be academic."

"If not," he continued, "then they will have been repudiated. The public interest demands a check on the Eisenhower Administration by the Congress."

Relief

The New York Herald Tribune quoted the following item appearing 100 years ago:

"Congress finally adjourned yesterday, immediately after meeting. In consequence of a breakdown in the telegraph, we have no details of the dispersion. The whole country will experience a grateful sensation of relief, when they hear that their representatives have really separated." —(PAI)

'Fair Play' Code Gains Support

A code of "fair play" to protect the rights of witnesses before congressional committees has been endorsed by the American Bar Association.

The wide-ranging resolution covers such matters as right to counsel, objections to questions, permission to make brief statements at conclusion of testimony and the right to testify without television or radio coverage.

Well, Tax Lawyers (And Clients) Are Happy

SEVERAL senators fired another barrage at the White House while Pres. Eisenhower was signing the Republican soak-the-poor tax bill last week.

The President was beaming as he used nine pens to sign the measure, presenting them to GOP leaders who led the congressional fight to deal tax favors to corporations and wealthy families.

At the Capitol end of Pennsylvania Ave., Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) assailed the tax bill, saying he knew of no legislation more opposed to the "general interest of the American taxpayer."

Morse said the "sugar-coated features" in the bill, giving relief to working mothers and a few other classes, should have been granted but "there ought to have been relief for millions of other Americans that Dwight Eisenhower didn't give."

"If you really want a tax bill that protects the interest of the people," Morse said, "elect a Congress that will place a check on Dwight Eisenhower."

Sen. George (D. Ga.) said the tax bill is "nothing to be bragging about." He declared he could not understand why Senate Republicans and the President have been "misled into believing that it makes a real contribution to the economy of the country."

George recalled that he had sponsored the first medical expenses exemption some years ago and commented that the new baby-sitter allowance for working mothers was actually sponsored by a Democrat.

He contended that relief would not have had to be given to special groups if the increased personal exemptions, which he proposed several months ago, had been granted. George said it was "perfectly ridiculous" in the days of a "54c dollar" that the individual exemption is only $600.

Tax relief on stock dividends, George went on, should have been given only when Congress could give tax relief to everybody. He maintained the tax bill should not be billed as "a great accomplishment" because its "philosophy leads very definitely away" from what is needed for an expanding economy.

Sen. Long (D. La.) criticized the tax bill because he said 80% of the tax relief goes to 20% of the taxpayers. More than 50% of the tax-paying families will get no relief, he predicted.

As Eisenhower held up the 929-page tax bill he had just signed into law he grinned broadly, exclaimed:

"Boy, there's a lot of work in there for lawyers."

Dog Days In Washington

Maybe it's all a coincidence, maybe not, but this is what happened within a few days:

Herbert Hoover went out to West Branch, Ia., for his 80th birthday, made another speech calling for the repeal of the last 20 or 21 years of history.

The former President's son, Herbert Hoover, Jr., was named Undersecretary of State.

And then Hoover's famed prediction, that "grass will grow in the streets," came true—in the Year Two GOP, in the City of Washington, no less, and only four blocks from the White House at that. The offending grass, sprouting on Pennsylvania Ave., was soon uprooted. At any rate, Hoover's first prediction has come true.

Looking Through Blinders

Isn't it wonderful to live, as Pres. Eisenhower apparently does, in a nice cheerful world where troubles can be made to vanish simply by ignoring them?

Isn't it wonderful to wear economic blinders with a fringe on top—to come right out and say that the recession "has come to a halt" when 5.1% of the country's labor force isn't working and heavens knows how many more are working short work weeks for slim pay envelopes?

However wonderful it may appear in reports from the White House, we wish to remind the President that it isn't so wonderful when you're one of that 5.1%, one of the 3.5 million unemployed. It's not very wonderful to wonder if you can stretch your unemployment compensation to pay the butcher and the grocer, to wonder what the landlord is going to say when the first of the month comes around again, to worry about what the kids are going to wear when school opens up again.

The President should be reminded that Emil Coue, with his philosophy of "day by day, in every way, I'm getting better and better," was not an economist.

Off To A Good Start

For the past several days, 12 unionists from the ranks of the CIO Oil Workers and 12 from the ranks of the CIO Chemical Workers met in Washington, drafted a proposed constitution for an amalgamated union of workers in the oil, chemical, atomic and related fields.

It was a good demonstration of trade union democracy in action—and a good lesson for press and political critics of labor. The members of the Oil and Chemical Workers, as they make their own decisions, can count on the support of CIO in their efforts to build a stronger union.

Summer Fantasy

That dubious friend of Sen. McCarthy, Mr. J. B. Matthews, has had another vision—which he has written out in detail in the August issue of the Police Gazette.

In a magazine more devoted to display and discussion of feminine charms, Matthews has written an article in which he finds Communists operating inside the Catholic church; attacks Bishop Bernard Sheil of Chicago, one of the most liberal and beloved of Roman Catholic figures, and pours vitriolic scorn on two esteemed Catholic magazines.

Matthews, it will be recalled, stirred up a hornet's nest a few months ago when he alleged to see a big red plot within the Protestant clergy.

His latest argument confirms the fact that to Matthews any person who voices belief in democratic liberalism and the rights of labor is a "red." That's just what the Commies and the lunatic-fringe reactionaries would like people to believe. And it plays right into the hands of Communists.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE — Executive Vice President
JAMES B. CAREY — Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS
Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.
Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII — August 23, 1954 — No. 34

Breaking 90 At Last

In Other Words—

Betting On A Pair Of Treys

Gerald W. Johnson, former editorial writer for the Baltimore Sun, says that the U. S. was "caught betting on a pair of treys" in Indo-China. He appraises this country's role in the affair in a New Republic article, which follows:

By GERALD W. JOHNSON

PERHAPS THERE ARE under the surface deep mysteries that explain the pained bewilderment of our public comment on the affair of Indo-China, but superficially it seems as easy to understand why France left Indo-China as why Friar John quit the monastery. There were seven reasons, he explained, the first being that he was thrown out. Nobody listened to the others.

JOHNSON

We, on the other hand, prefer listening to all the others while shutting our ears to the first. Some of our pundits have elaborated a theory that Geneva was another Munich with Mendes-France playing the role of Neville Chamberlain. The fact that Munich was at one end of the war and Geneva at the other is ignored, as is the fact that Czechoslovakia was willing to fight and Indo-China is not, unless, indeed it fights for the invader.

Without doubt, one reason for the desperate efforts to find some way of accounting for the situation other than an admission that the French were licked is that the admission entails a sharp reduction in our estimate of our own moral superiority.

We had announced loudly that the Communists must be stopped at the "bottle-neck" and that we were going to help stop them, and the announcement made not the slightest impression upon the Communists. They assumed that our words were a mouthful of wind and proceeded as if we had never spoken and events justified them.

This could not have happened to a nation whose moral superiority is recognized by all the world, but it is bound to happen to any nation that is once caught betting on a pair of treys.

If the new Administration had told the French in unmistakable terms back in January 1953, that it was going to risk no more Koreas, we might not have saved the French, but we would have saved face and when the end came we might have been able to exert some sort of influence upon the course of events.

Dulles did not "lose" Indo-China any more than Acheson "lost" China; but Dulles was not one whit better off than Acheson at preventing the disaster. This is a fact that we are extremely reluctant to face, but it will not go away because we shut our eyes to it.

As a mere outside observer utterly ignorant of high politics, this writer clings stubbornly to the conviction that we do, in fact, have a very decided moral superiority over Communist ideology; but we have not brought it to bear since we lost in two fields in which we had material superiority to begin with.

Yet the slightest inquiry into why we have failed to employ our best weapon in this struggle leads to embarrassment. The reason is definitely internal politics.

The Reality Of Freedom

Not a single Russian infantryman has been killed, unless by accident, in the wars that have extended Communist influence in Asia; communism has advanced by offering the semblance of economic as well as political freedom to oppressed people.

The obvious way to stop it was to offer the reality of freedom to the same people; but to do that would have interfered with countless diplomatic and business arrangements throughout the world. More, and from the standpoint of reactionary Americans, worse, it would have afforded aid and comfort to battlers for social justice at home.

So we have laid aside the weapon of moral suasion and have relied on nuclear fission instead. So China has gone. Indo-China is going, and India stands perplexed.

If India goes, the rest of Asia is pretty sure to go with it; and if Asia goes the bomb may, indeed, become our last hope and a slim one, because Russia has it, too. Too much faith in military and too little in moral force may end by costing us a dozen of our biggest cities, to say nothing of our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor.

"Would you mind telling me how much good 192 H. P. is doing us?"

CIO Aide Reports—

U. S. Group Offers Help Against Job Bias

(The first year of operations of Pres. Eisenhower's Committee on Government Contracts, designed to prevent discrimination in that field of employment, is reviewed by George L-P Weaver. Weaver, director of the CIO Civil Rights Committee, represented CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther on the government committee.)

By GEORGE L-P WEAVER

ANYONE who has ever been denied a job, pay increase or promotion because of his color, religion, race or birthplace, will need no explanation as to why the CIO is determined to use every means at hand to eliminate job discrimination.

Although we have made great strides during the past 10 to 15 years, we know that even today there are many plants where Negroes, Puerto Ricans, Jews and other minorities never get past the hiring gate. There are many more plants that hire only a handful and countless others in which these workers never get away from a broom.

WEAVER

Even in 12 states and 31 cities where Fair Employment Practice laws have been passed we are faced with the difficult and challenging task of getting enforcement.

In states where there are no FEP laws, the most important resource we have is in the non-discrimination clause in all government contracts, which requires every firm to give equal opportunity to all workers, regardless of race, creed or color.

Since these contracts, which amount to almost $40 billion a year, are paid for with taxpayers' money, it is logical that the government should make such a demand. The agency responsible for enforcing the clause is called the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

Because we believed that the non-discrimination clause, if properly enforced, would afford protection against discrimination to many thousands of workers who were not otherwise protected, the CIO agreed to lend its resources and support to this program.

Although the Committee has been operating since last August, the number of complaints it has received has not been significant, partly because the public is not fully aware of its existence. The fact that there are six million contracts in operation at the present time makes enforcement more difficult.

On the other hand, the Committee has just worked out a set of revised procedures which are expected to speed up compliance. These include: posting the non-discrimination clause in a prominent place in each contractor's plant; publication of a pamphlet entitled "Equal Opportunity Is Good Business," and establishment of advisory groups of interested government and private agencies.

Most important, the Committee has arranged for each of the 30-odd agencies that award contracts to set up its own procedures for handling complaints.

Hopeful Of Results

While no one could honestly claim that the Committee has chalked up an imposing record during the past year, we are hopeful that these many months of planning will soon bring concrete results. Until such time as we have enough support in Congress to get a federal Fair Employment Practices Law, we must continue to utilize every possible resource.

If the plant you work in is under government contract or sub-contract, you can help by reporting any violations of the clause to: The Chairman, President's Committee on Government Contracts, Washington, D. C.

Be sure to include the name of the company and the city where the plant is located, together with all the facts that led you to believe that the company is discriminating. With teamwork and goodwill the important task of making equal employment opportunity a living reality can be advanced a step further.

(Distributed by Jewish Labor Committee's Labor Reports)

Washington Window—

Oil Barons Get Their Political 'Scratch' From Tax Favoritism

By Public Affairs Institute

OIL MILLIONAIRES, especially the Texas kind, seem to be everywhere in the news these days.

Not only are they becoming more and more powerful in the financial world but their money, position and influence are felt in many other fields.

Their pressure has decided the fate of many pieces of legislation—in state capitals as well as in Washington. Their money has elected many candidates for public office — defeated others.

Their backing has put millions of dollars worth of programs on radio and TV, designed to influence the thinking of the American people.

Rarely are they friends of organized labor or sympathetic to social efforts to raise the living standards. They are the rugged individualists of the 20th Century. Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) is a noteworthy exception.

Why are these men in oil so powerful today? Why are they becoming millionaires at a far faster rate than merchants or manufacturers or other types of businessmen?

Result Of Tax Favors

The answer is that we have made them millionaires.

The oil millionaire of today is the product of tax legislation passed by our elected representatives in Congress. He is kept in his favored tax position by those he helped to elect to Congress and those who fear the wrath of his opposition if they oppose.

The Administration successfully squelched efforts to give low and middle income citizens a tax break through increasing individual exemptions in the tax bill which recently passed Congress. It would cost the Treasury too much, they said. Yet nothing was done to stop the special allowances to oil and gas producers which cost the Treasury $1.5 billion a year.

This tax break is known as depletion allowance. Depletion means to empty. When the operator of an oil well sells his oil the resource is used up. The law is intended to compensate him for using up his property.

The odd thing about the law is that it has nothing directly to do with how much the oil well has been depleted. Rather it permits an oil well operator simply to deduct 27.5% from his gross income and it cannot be taxed.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch
"We Need Joe In Our Business."

Recently Sen. Williams (R. Del.) revealed just how much average oil companies save in taxes under the oil depletion allowances. Below, the savings are shown for three companies typical for the taxable year of 1952:

	Net Taxable Income Before Excess Depletion	Net Taxable Income After Excess Depletion
Company A	19.4 million	$ 2.4 million
Company B	54.3 million	27.6 million
Company C	131.5 million	44.3 million

These are not particularly large companies but one firm gains $17 million, another $26 million and a third $87 million of tax-free income on which they would normally be paying taxes in other businesses.

This is the stuff from which today's newest kind of millionaires are made.

. . . Minnesota Is A Case In Point

FROM WAY DOWN Southwest, oil millionaires are tossing healthy quantities of money way up North to Minnesota in an effort to defeat the re-election drive of one of labor's warmest supporters in Congress—Sen. Humphrey (D.).

Early indications are, however, that it will take more than money to defeat this battling legislator. Public opinion polls give him a heavy lead over his Republican opposition and he's still gaining. Both city and farm areas are backing him for his efforts in their behalf.

Humphrey supporters are expecting an "Eisenhower-type" two-level campaign. Herbert Waters, Jr., his campaign manager said: "I expect the candidates to operate on a high level in the Minnesota tradition. However, down below, the Republicans will operate with oil money. And they just won't stop McCarthy from coming in, although they won't admit they agree with him."

There's no doubt about oil money here, Waters said. One of the more famous of the oil millionaires, H. L. Hunt of the controversial Facts Forum programs, has bought up large amounts of TV and radio time throughout the state for Humphrey's opponent.

Go Hat In Hand

Last month a delegation of Minnesota Republicans was reported visiting Hunt and several other fabulous oil moneymen in an effort to secure still more contributions for the fight against the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party candidate.

The oil people have reason not to like Humphrey's politics. For one thing, he has been a leading opponent of 27.5% oil depletion allowance through which oil companies save something like $1.5 billion in taxes each year. The tax break makes them as rich as they are.

Another reason why they oppose Humphrey is that his entire record of battling for labor and labor's rights and social progress, in general, conflicts pretty strongly with their social philosophy.

As in 1948, organized labor is carrying a large part of the campaign for Humphrey. CIO-PAC, AFL-LLPE, and the railroad brotherhoods are working close together in a complete registration check and registration drive.

Union members make up a great part of "phonorama," a committee of 1500 volunteers who will make 100 telephone calls each for registration and getting out the vote.

Humphrey's opponent is a chunky, blond, 52-year-old State Treasurer, Kristjan Valdimar (Val) Bjornson. Just as was Joe Ball, whom Humphrey defeated in 1948, Bjornson is a former St. Paul newspaperman. He filed for the race after Gov. Elmer Anderson, Rep. Walter Judd and Dr. Charles Mayo, among others, refused to face Humphrey.

There's a primary election on Sept. 14, but Bjornson as well as Humphrey—each with two opponents—are expected to win easily.

On a straight labor issue Bjornson has yet to challenge Humphrey who has been given a 100% voting record by labor organizations. However, the Republican is known to be close to men like Minnesota's Sen. Edward J. Thye, who voted for the Taft-Hartley Act.

The State Treasurer has some opposition in his own camp. Mrs. Mike Holm, the Republican secretary of state, is on record as favoring Humphrey and she has a sizable political following.

Another thing that undoubtedly worries Bjornson are the polls being conducted by the Minneapolis Tribune, a paper incidentally vigorously supporting him. Its latest poll, July 25, shows Humphrey with 59%, Bjornson with 30% and 11% undecided. The rural areas show Humphrey with 67% and Bjornson with only 20%, giving some pretty strong support to the talk about a farm revolt against the Eisenhower Administration.

Looking To November—

Clint Anderson Fights GOP Smear Drive

(Another in a series about outstanding senators and their campaigns.)

By MILTON PLUMB

"THE LAND of Enchantment," as New Mexico calls itself, has come to be known instead as the land of hotly contested politics. It certainly will be that from now until next November.

Able Clinton P. Anderson (D. N.M.) today faces as tough a battle to win re-election to his second term in the Senate as his colleague, Sen. Chavez, faced two years ago.

Chavez won the election handily, but GOP leaders tried to grab his office by having the Senate refuse to seat him. The issue wasn't finally resolved in his favor until this year.

Chavez's opponent was Patrick J. Hurley, an oil man who had only recently settled in the state.

LOOKING AHEAD—Sen. Anderson (D. N. M.), seated, takes time out from his fight on current issues to advise this group of Future Farmers of America on farm problems. His eye on the nation's needs as Secretary of Agriculture aided farmers.

Citation

The latest of many awards bestowed on Sen. Anderson (D. N.M.) for his services to American farmers was recently presented by the Central Valley Empire Association of California. It's a certificate of appreciation "for outstanding service to western cotton growers and western agriculture."

"Reduced to simpler terms, that meant I got a little extra cotton acreage for those areas," Anderson explains modestly.

This time, however, the big oil, cattle and other interests behind the Republican Party in New Mexico have persuaded Gov. Edwin L. Mechem to carry their banner against Anderson.

Faces Labor Foe

Mechem, a smart politician, has kept closely in line with the wishes of the people of his state on major local issues. He has, for example, followed Anderson's lead in the Senate by also working for drought aid and water conservation measures.

Because this was good politics, the GOP leadership forgave Mechem although he had to buck established Republican Administration policies in doing so.

Here the resemblance ends, however. Mechem several years ago became one of the two authors of a proposed "right-to-scab" amendment to the state constitution. Anderson, on the other hand, played a major part in defeating the proposal in 1948.

It still isn't on the books, and the big business, anti-labor forces—chiefly from outside the state—who were behind the amendment, have never forgiven Anderson's contribution to its defeat. They will provide most of the money spent on this year's New Mexico election, and it's all riding on Mechem.

While Anderson has been busy this year fighting as part of the liberal bloc in the Senate to protect the people's interests, the Republican National Committee picked New Mexico as one of the first states in which to spend a big hunk of its $3.8 million slush fund.

Mechem began campaigning early, and last June Republican National Chairman Leonard Hall turned up at a $50-a-plate New Mexico GOP dinner. He set the tone of the campaign by declaring that the election of Anderson and other Democrats would mean "going back to a government where the Walter Reuthers will have . . . control."

The local GOP smear crew has been busy ever since, and following the pattern set in Texas, Tennessee, Alabama and other Southern states, Anderson is being depicted as "a tool of the CIO."

To set the facts straight, here's Anderson's reply:

"In three terms in the House and six years in the Senate, I don't recall a CIO representative talking to me about pending legislation since my first term in the House. I had never met Walter Reuther until a few weeks ago."

Whatever Hall's purpose in distorting the facts may be, it hasn't proved successful in states like Tennessee and Alabama, where the voters overwhelmingly re-elected Democratic Sens. Kefauver and Sparkman in spite of similar charges. And it isn't likely to have much effect in New Mexico.

CIO Unions Aid

On the other hand, CIO's small membership in New Mexico is solidly behind Anderson in his fight. CIO Oil Workers throughout the state, and CIO Communications Workers in Albuquerque and Sante Fe, will give him effective support because of his outstanding record both in Congress and as Secretary of Agriculture from 1945 until 1948.

Anderson was credited with casting 29 "right" votes out of 30 key issues listed in the CIO News Voting Records for the last two Congresses. Those issues included farm, power, irrigation and other matters in which the people of New Mexico are deeply concerned.

In the present Congress, Anderson has been one of the nationally-respected leaders of the liberal minority. Although ill at the time, he ignored doctors' orders to lead the unsuccessful fight at the start of the session to amend the Senate rules in order to prevent filibusters.

This battle raised constitutional issues which the Republican leadership was unwilling to face, and the Senate therefore adopted a motion by the late Sen. Taft (R. O.) to table the Anderson motion. By doing so, the Republicans wiped out any hope for passage of fair employment practices and other civil rights legislation during the Congress.

Recovering his health, Anderson took a major part in the Democratic fight for enactment of a fair tax law that would have given individual tax reductions to all taxpayers instead of just to wealthy owners of corporation stocks as provided in the Administration bill. He also had an important hand in the successful battle to prevent the GOP attempt to give away the nation's atomic energy program to private monopoly.

Born in Centerville, S. D., Oct. 23, 1895, Anderson was educated at Dakota Wesleyan and Michigan Universities. He has lived in New Mexico since 1917, working at Albuquerque as a political writer and editor and in the insurance business.

He moved into politics in 1920, and a decade later served for two years as state treasurer. He also was New Mexico State Relief Administration director and chairman of the Unemployment Compensation Commission. When he was elected congressman-at-large in 1940, his vote topped FDR's in the state.

During his three terms in the House, Anderson's work as chairman of the House Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures in the 78th Congress first exposed the activities of right wing reactionaries like Joe Kamp and Edward A. Rumely.

His service in the 79th Congress as chairman of the special committee to investigate food shortages gave real aid to the nation's farmers and led to his appointment as Secretary of Agriculture. He resigned from the latter post in May 1948 to run for his present Senate term.

Practical Experience

Anderson's work for agriculture stems from practical experience. For many years he has operated his Lazy V Cross Farm near Albuquerque. He has 530 acres under irrigation, raising feed for beef cattle, so that he knows the problems of farmers and cattlemen first hand.

This accounts for his leadership in Congress to save the REA program in the face of the Administration's attempts to curtail it, and for his deep concern over Republican policies against public power and soil conservation. During the recent drought, he tried in every way to get relief for New Mexico's hard-hit farmers and ranchers.

His Hobbies Help The People

What leisure Sen. Anderson (D. N.M.) has had during his first term in the Senate he's spent at three practical hobbies, each of which has added to his services to the American people.

Besides farming, which has given him immediate knowledge of the problems confronting U. S. agriculture, Anderson built up what is probably the greatest private collection of original documents on the early development of New Mexico and the West. His library now answers western legal problems which even the Library of Congress can't solve.

Experimental home-building was his third and most ambitious undertaking. The first section of his home was built of typical New Mexican adobe, but when he later decided to enlarge it he experimented with a "rammed earth" process.

Anderson says he found the job "difficult and slow," but it paid off for U. S. taxpayers when the government used it to reduce material costs in construction of buildings on Indian reservations.

FARMERS' FRIENDS—U. S. Agriculture reached its highest period of prosperity under the full-production, high-consumption policies advocated by these three Democratic former secretaries of agriculture. Left to right, Claude R. Wickard, Anderson and Charles Brannan discuss drop in farm income under GOP program.

"HOME ON THE RANGE."—Anderson (right) joins Sens. Sparkman (D. Ala.), Morse (Ind. Ore.) and the late Sen. Tobey (R. N. H.) in highjinks at the Saints and Sinners dinner, annual get-together of the circus fraternity. His other hobbies include dramatics, book collecting, farming and rammed earth home building.

TWIN MEMORIALS—Dedication of monument at grave of late Philip Murray, beloved president of CIO and Steelworkers, was followed by union presentation of $100,000 to Mercy Hospital in Pittsburgh for new cobalt bomb cancer treatment center in his memory. Left, Rev. Richard Sherer, of St. Anne's Church, Castle Shannon, Pa., and Rev. Charles O. Rice, noted Pittsburgh labor priest, arrive at dedication, general view of which is seen in center. Right, check presentation ceremony shows (L. to R.) Dr. C. R. Perryman, head of Mercy's Radiation Therapy Center; USA Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, USA Pres. David J. McDonald, USA Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel and Dr. Joseph Perrone of hospital.

Bethlehem Ship Talks Recessed Indefinitely

THE PROLONGED negotiations between the CIO Shipbuilding Workers and the Bethlehem Steel Co. shipyard division were recessed indefinitely last week.

IUMSWA-CIO said that it was agreed that future talks would be held at the call of the federal mediators.

The union said the interruption was due to "the company's adamant insistence that IUMSWA-CIO accept its settlement package."

Bethlehem made an offer conditional on 14 changes in working rules which the union has won during 13 years. The firm proposed a 3c an hour wage increase, a 2c-2.5c increase in its contribution to the insurance plan, and an increase from $100 to $140 a month in pensions, including social security.

NEGOTIATIONS were conducted on behalf of 16,000 IUMSWA-CIO members in eight yards on the Atlantic Seaboard.

IUMSWA-CIO bitterly denounced the Bethlehem offer as a "brutal offensive to smash the resistance of the shipyard workers to its dictatorial demands aimed at undermining seniority rights, cutting take-home pay and indiscriminately transferring workers from ship to ship at the caprice of supervisors."

The union also took issue with a company statement which said that its offer was equal to that agreed to by its principal competitor in the New York area.

THE UNION said that the competitor referred to was the Todd Shipyards Corp.

"We challenge Bethlehem, Todd, or anyone else to produce a signed written agreement between the union and Todd incorporating those terms proposed by Bethlehem," IUMSWA-CIO said.

The union asserted that the joint negotiating committee of Local 15, Hoboken, N. J., and Local 39, Brooklyn, N. Y., rejected an offer by Todd on Aug. 4, and that Todd did not have the "temerity" to ask for the qualifying conditions proposed by Bethlehem.

Firing Of Civic Union Member Hit

DISCIPLINARY action against 15 CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee members by the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission was appealed last week by the union.

Participation in a work stoppage of 100 GCEOC-CIO members led to the firing of Pres. Colie Young of GCEOC-CIO Local 7, and a three-week no-pay suspension of 14 other members of the local.

Local 7 last week appealed to the Maryland Commissioner of Labor on behalf of the 15 employes of the commission, which operates the water system and refuse collection in a Maryland area adjacent to Washington, D. C. All workers involved are Maryland civil service employes.

Martin Wagner, assistant to GCEOC-CIO Chairman A. J. Federoff, said that the local has been seeking to get an understanding with the commission for a year, but that the commissioners would not even talk to the union representatives.

He pointed out that there was nothing in the law to prohibit an understanding on better pay and working conditions.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own

"I hear the big industrialists are saying that we northern workers are willing to take a cut!"

Economic Outlook Says—

One Family In Five Is Paying For Our Blighted Housing

ABOUT one-fifth of America's families live in slums and blighted areas despite years of programs setting the objective of decent homes for all Americans.

If all substandard dwellings in cities and rural areas alike are added, more than 15 million units—almost one-third of the total — are either dilapidated, surrounded by decaying dwellings or lack plumbing or running water. More than 15 million units are beyond repair and must come down.

THIS CRITICAL estimate of the nation's housing situation and a call for two million new homes each year is made in the current issue of the Economic Outlook, publication of the CIO Dept. of Research and Education.

"If 'Home, Sweet Home' is ever to be more than a hopeful dream for most of our low and moderate income families," the Outlook said, "it is time the American people took an honest look at our present and future housing need, consider practical ways to meet it, and then do something about it."

The richest nation in the world, the report said, must not allow the power of special interests to stand in the way of achieving the goal which Congress set up in passing the Housing Act of 1949—"a decent home in a suitable living environment for every American family."

Unfortunately, the 83rd Congress turned its back on that laudable objective when it passed the so-called Housing Act of 1954, noted the Outlook.

"It has taken far too long for America to realize that decent housing is more than a matter of individual concern and some of us are not aware of it yet. Humanitarian instincts and enlightened self-interest gradually merged, however, to produce the first laws affecting housing," the CIO publication said.

Since its beginning in 1934, but particularly since the end of the war, the guaranteed loan program of the federal government has been a boon to home construction.

But millions of low and moderate income families have not enjoyed the benefits of the post-war building boom although, the Outlook charged, the real estate boards and bankers whose federally insured loans involved no personal risk seem highly satisfied.

Only 400,000 units of low-rent public housing have been built since this phase of the federal program was started. Yet the 1949 Housing Act authorized 810,000 units in six years.

THIS YEAR President Eisenhower whittled the target down to a mere 35,000 public housing units annually; Congress went him one better. The Outlook declared that new legislation insures that even this token number will not be built and no public housing will be approved beyond next year.

At least 100,000 and as many as 160,000 new homes are needed every year to replace those destroyed by fire, windstorm, razed for highway development or converted to non-residential use.

More than 15 million substandard dwellings were listed by the 1950 Census. Only about 4.6 million of these can be brought up to standard by repair and modernization.

Thus, said the Outlook, our total housing goal calls for a construction program ranging from two million new housing units annually for the next five years and progressive upward steps to 2.4 million units a year in the period from 1959-1965. In addition, if we are to salvage the 4.6 million units capable of rehabilitation back in 1950, we must repair and modernize these structures by 1965 at the rate of 400,000 units every year.

Pa. CIO Helps In Jobless Pay Case

The Pennsylvania CIO Council has helped the CIO Textile Workers win an important unemployment compensation case in the State Superior Court.

The P. McGraw Wool Co., Pittsburgh, had appealed benefit payments during a work stoppage, contending that it was a strike rather than a lockout. The decision upheld the compensation award, holding the company responsible for the stoppage because it had refused to furnish work on the basis of existing contract terms.

Named City Clerk

Pres. James J. McCabe of Steelworkers Local 2479, Buffalo, N. Y., has been named to the $7500 a year post of Buffalo city clerk.

How Far We're Behind

	Total Substandard	Require Replacement	Can Be Rehabilitated
URBAN
Dilapidated	2,200,000	2,200,000
Lack plumbing or running water	4,700,000	2,700,000	2,000,000
In substandard blocks	2,000,000	2,000,000
TOTAL: Urban	8,900,000	6,900,000	2,000,000
RURAL NON-FARM
Dilapidated	1,100,000	1,100,000
Lacking running water	1,900,000	700,000	1,200,000
TOTAL: Rural Non-Farm	3,000,000	1,800,000	1,200,000
FARM
Serious Deficiencies	2,000,000	1,500,000	(500,000)*
Other	1,400,000		1,400,000
TOTAL: Farm	3,400,000	1,500,000	1,400,000
ALL HOUSING	15,300,000	10,200,000	4,600,000

* Expected to be abandoned

'Brazenly In Broad Daylight'—

Demo Chief Tees Off On Ike For 'Favoritism' On TVA Deal

A CHARGE that one of Pres. Eisenhower's "closest friends" benefitted by the White House drive to curb TVA was voiced last week by Stephen A. Mitchell, national Democratic chairman.

Mitchell described as a "scandal" the Presidential order that the Dixon-Yates syndicate furnish power to an atomic energy plant in Paducah, Ky., without competitive bids and for $140 million more than TVA's charges.

He noted that Bobby Jones, former golf champion, is a lawyer and director for the Southern Co., one of the two companies in the favored syndicate.

"In my view," Mitchell said, "giving away the people's property is corruption, even if it's done brazenly in broad daylight. A director in one of the two companies is one of the President's closest friends, with a cottage next to Pres. Eisenhower's at the Augusta (Ga.) golf course."

Mitchell made his statement during a debate with Republican Chairman Leonard W. Hall before the American Bar Association convention in Chicago. Hall challenged him to cite any "corruption" in the Eisenhower Administration.

REPLIED MITCHELL: "Let's look at the Dixon-Yates scandal which occupied so much attention during the atomic energy debate in the Senate a couple of weeks ago.

"Here was a deal to buy power from a plant to be built by Dixon-Yates to meet the needs of the atomic energy plant at Paducah. A competing syndicate offered to provide the power for $90 million less than Dixon-Yates—and the TVA would provide the power for $140 million less.

"Yet, the President issued a personal order to give the contract to Dixon-Yates, over the protest of both the Atomic Energy Commission and TVA, without competitive bidding."

REFERRING to the close friendship between Eisenhower and Jones, Mitchell said:

"Maybe they never even talked about it, I don't know. Maybe it's just a coincidence that some of the bankers in this Administration—like the Director of the Budget—came from banks which underwrite this kind of project."

In Atlanta, Jones denied that he had used any influence "directly or indirectly" to get favored treatment for the firm of which he is a director.

EISENHOWER, at his press conference, summarily rejected Mitchell's criticism of the Dixon-Yates contract, said he is willing to make public the full record of the agreement which opens up the TVA area to high-rate private utilities.

As to Jones, the President said he was astonished at Mitchell's criticism, said the golfer is a man of unexcelled character and probity.

Senate Majority Leader Knowland (Calif.) tore into Mitchell, claiming his statement "appears to cast reflections and tends to break down the confidence of the country" in the President.

STARTING OUT RIGHT—Five-year-old Toby Pellici, almost hidden by umbrella, starts out his trade union career by helping his mother, Rita, picket Buffalo, N. Y., Western Electric plant. Eleven hundred members of the CIO Communications Workers have been on strike since June 17 against a company attempt to take away seniority benefits won during another strike two years ago.

Sec. McKay Gives Blessing To Still Another Give-Away

By HENRY ZON

ANOTHER give-away is in the making. It's not as big as the atomic energy, interest rate, and off-shore give-aways but it rivals a lot of the others that have taken place since January 1952.

Sec. of Interior McKay has approved a report made by a five-member Bureau of Mines survey committee which recommended that the government dispose of facilities for making helium gas, and discontinue production at its multi-million dollar Nevada titanim plant.

The report also recommended that the government discontinue production of zirconium at its multi-million dollar plant in Oregon, and of oil shale and oil from shale in Colorado. Other recommendations were that the government cut down on fuel research in West Virginia and gradually turn mine inspection over to the states.

The report was prepared by two coal mine operators, an oil corporation executive, a copper corporation executive, and a mining school dean.

It promptly aroused opposition in Congress and there will be a fight on it. The Interior Dept. said most of the recommendations will be put in effect immediately and the remainder within a year.

The government has been engaged in the production of helium since 1925. In the late 1930's Sec. of Interior Harold Ickes refused to sell helium to the Nazis in inflate their zeppelins.

Only last month Pres. Eisenhower asked Congress for more production at the government's four helium extraction plants.

'Peanut Politics' Of GOP Hit In Northwest Power Project

"PEANUT POLITICS" by the Republicans on Northwest regional power development were exposed by Richard L. Neuberger, Democratic candidate for Senator from Oregon.

Neuberger cited a recent proposal that the Army's report be revised to place Hells Canyon and other Snake River projects far in the future.

The Democratic candidate, who is running against Sen. Cordon (R.), said he was opposed to any plan that would eliminate Snake River from the Northwest regional development program.

"Hells Canyon, on the Snake River, is the only great power project not opposed in any sense by commercial or sports fishing groups," Neuberger said.

"To delay Hells Canyon and other Snake projects would be to sacrifice the prosperity of a vast Oregon region.

"If I am elected to the Senate, I will fight to prevent the political re-writing of the 308 Report, insofar as I am able. The destiny of our region is more important than the balance sheets of some power companies, which are striving to block Hells Canyon forever and ever."

'Bootleg Play' Hit On Grazing Lands

Rep. Magnuson (D., Wash.) last week branded the grazing amendment which the Senate tacked onto the unrelated farm price supports bill "the slyest legislation bootleg play of the 83rd Congress."

The measure would give stockmen with grazing permits vested property rights in public lands. Protests from conservationists caused House and Senate conferees finally to shelve the amendment.

CIO Councils In Action

MILWAUKEE CIO COUNCIL sparked action of county authorities in drafting a stand-by $40 million public works program. The county board of supervisors recently announced a program charted at its direction by department heads. The Council called for the plan last April in a letter to the board.

The Council also is preparing for a Women's Forum on Political Action to be held Sept. 23 at Milwaukee.

Irked By Ike

Dissatisfaction with the Eisenhower Administration was voiced by many farmers who visited the CIO booth at the Ionia, Mich., fair. It was the first of 11 fairs in which the Michigan CIO will maintain booths in cooperation with various international and local unions, and local councils.

- Action to aid unemployment was indicated at Cincinnati, O., where the Greater Cincinnati CIO Council is represented on the city's full employment commission which recently was organized.
- The drive of the Fostoria, O., CIO Council to have the Labor Dept. declare the city an area of critical unemployment—entitled to priority in awarding of defense contracts — has finally been won.
- All of the half-dozen candidates endorsed for Genesee County, Mich., offices by the Greater Flint CIO Council won nomination in the recent primaries. However, three candidates supported by the Council for city commissioner failed to win nomination.
- The Minnesota CIO Council has alloted funds for radio and television programs to aid candidates it is supporting. The Council reported it had received $3471 in voluntary PAC contributions by the end of July.
- The St. Paul, Minn., CIO Council for the fifth year sponsored a CIO baseball night in support of the Saints against the Toledo Sox.
- The Pennsylvania CIO Council sent a letter to all affiliates reminding them that Sept. 11 is the final day to register to vote in the Nov. 2 election.
- The Cook County (Chicago) CIO Council is holding additional eight-week training courses for PAC precinct workers in anticipation of the November election. The Council's Community Services Committee recently sponsored a program in Spanish on its program.
- The Indiana CIO Council is backing the campaign of the Marion County (Indianapolis) CIO Committee to have all local unions turn over membership lists as part of a campaign to get all CIO members registered.

UAW Center Plans To Burn Mortgage

COME LABOR DAY they're going to burn the mortgage on the big CIO Auto Workers Center in Ottawa, Ill.

Four years ago Reg. 4 convention delegates from Illinois and Iowa directed their officers to purchase the 14-acre tract for $30,000 for its 100,000 members. Now, the cost is being paid off with the proceeds from sale of tickets to more than 100 local unions.

The big celebration will be part of a three-day jamboree at Ottawa, Sept. 4, 5 and 6. The turnout is expected to be the largest in the Union Center's history.

The Union Center has some of the finest and most modern facilities enjoyed in union camps.

FACE OF POVERTY—One of the reasons CIO unionism is growing in Puerto Rico is that seven persons quite often have to live in such filthy shacks as those at left, which are near San Juan. Center, David Sternback (left), CIO representative in Puerto Rico, listens as Gov. Luis Munoz Marin (center) and CIO National Rep. Adolph Germer discuss workers' problems. Right, Vice Pres. Russell Lasley of CIO Packinghouse Workers leans across the table to ask Gov. Munoz a question. At far right is Pres. Armando Sanchez of UPWA-CIO Sugar Workers.

Labor's World—

Commie-Run WFTU Aids Purge Of Free Unionists

THE COMMUNIST-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions must not be allowed "to misuse democratic privileges for the destruction of free trade unionism," the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions declares in the current issue of its monthly magazine.

"Anyone who believes in the principles of free trade unionism is persecuted ruthlessly by the Communists in the countries ruled by them," the ICFTU says in a 7000-word examination of the Red world labor body printed in its publication, Free Labor World.

"Many trade union leaders have been jailed and killed because they demanded the same trade union rights as those enjoyed by Communists in democratic countries.

"It is not suggested that the same methods should be used in democratic countries against the WFTU and its followers. However, that should not prevent the free trade unions from applying against their Communist enemies methods which are both democratic and effective."

THE STUDY debunks the WFTU's claimed membership of 80.7 million members. It shows how the figures have been inflated by arbitrarily increasing the alleged membership in Russia and the satellite countries from 39.5 million in 1949 to 64.5 million at present, while claiming 16.2 million in other nations—a figure the ICFTU declares actually is only about 7.2 million.

Communist influence cannot be accurately assessed on the basis of numbers of labor groups belonging to the WFTU or other affiliates, the study declares. It offers a simple test for penetrating the camouflage of front organizations—"the WFTU always supports Soviet policy and never opposes it."

The article also warns against yielding to WFTU "unity" proposals, describing the organization as successor to the Comintern and Cominform in the task of achieving Russian aims "under the guise of trade union activity."

Germany

One-fourth of West Germany's 16 million workers were attempting to wrest wage increases from recalcitrant employers last week.

The Transport & Public Service Workers, which had threatened to strike in support of demands for a 2.4c hourly wage increase, was polling 820,000 members on a 1.42c offer. In Bavaria, negotiations were under way to end a strike of 230,000 members of the Metal Workers Union. The Postal Workers Union, representing 224,000 federal employes, joined the parade with a demand for increases of 2.3c per hour and 10% in monthly wages.

Ruhr metal workers, North Rhine coal miners, inland port and shipping workers and additional civil servants also are demanding pay boosts.

England

The British Confederation of Shipbuilding & Engineering Unions, representing 39 unions with about three million members, at its annual conference instructed the executive committee to open negotiations for substantial wage increases. In the metal industries, it called for a new wage structure aimed at widening the differential between skilled and unskilled workers.

Spain

According to information reaching the ICFTU's affiliated Spanish trade unions in exile (UGT), additional workers have been arrested on charges of belonging to an underground trade union organization. Six are members of the Communications Workers Unions and one is a Food Workers Union member.

Many workers arrested earlier on similar charges are still being held in preventive imprisonment in Spanish jails. —G.N.L.

CIO Joins Mourning For Metal Unionist

CIO's three top officers cabled condolences last week on the death of Konrad Ilg, head of the International Metal Workers Federation.

"The free labor movement of the world has lost a staunch and courageous leader," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said in a message to Federation headquarters in Berne, Switzerland.

Three CIO international unions are affiliates of IMF: the Steelworkers, the Auto Workers and the Shipbuilding Workers.

Island Sugar Workers Warned On Low-Wage Industry Influx

MAJOR improvements in organizational structure and an increased per capita tax were voted by Puerto Rico's sugar workers at their three-day convention.

The 400 delegates, members of the Sindicato Azucarero of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, also played host to a fraternal delegation of UPWA-CIO members from U. S. plants including fellow sugar workers from Louisiana.

Rapid organizational growth and increasing stability were predicted for the Sindicato by UPWA Vice Pres. Russell Lasley who attended the convention in Caguas, P. R.

THE CONVENTION, representing 67,000 sugar workers, heard Gov. Luis Munoz Marin stress the importance of collective action on economic problems through labor unions.

Fernando Sierra of the Puerto Rican Insular Labor Dept. told the group that island officials are doing all they can to encourage industrial expansion in Puerto Rico.

"But we want new plants for a better economy," he said. "If industry wants to locate here only to exploit workers by paying low wages instead of helping to raise the standard of living, then we don't want them at all."

The U. S. group, including CIO National Rep. Adolph Germer and CIO Puerto Rican Rep. David Sternback, along with UPWA island leaders, met with Gov. Munoz at his mansion. Under discussion were Puerto Rico's economic problems and governmental policies to meet them.

The UPWA spokesmen urged speedy efforts to make the 75c minimum wage universal throughout the island.

Gov. Munoz is "working realistically to make the Puerto Rican economy as good as that of the U. S.," Germer said.

The visitors were guests of honor at a typical village fiesta in Santa Isabel. The affair, held in the city square, wound up with a street dance.

Armando Sanchez was reelected president of the Sindicato Azucarero by the convention.

Price Jolts Amid Tragic Poverty

U. S. fraternal delegates from the CIO Packinghouse Workers to the convention of the Puerto Rican Sugar Workers were "deeply impressed" by the tragic poverty of Puerto Rican workers and equally "shocked" at high price tags on daily necessities.

"We got a terrific jolt," UPWA-CIO Vice Pres. Russell Lasley said, "when the price of a cup of coffee jumped from 15c to 25c while we were there."

Yearly earnings for workers in the sugar fields average from $300 to $500, he reported.

RICE KITCHEN is run for the 13,000 strikers against Ohmi spinning mills in Japan. The workers want the right to associate with husbands or wives and to leave their dormitories at will. ICFTU supported strikers and helped produce a mediation plan to end two-month dispute.

Memorial To Moody Set

FORMATION of a Blair Moody memorial fund, to pay off campaign expenses of the former Democratic senator and to help educate his two youngest sons, was announced in Detroit last week.

John E. Murphy, chairman of the memorial fund committee, said Moody nearly exhausted his cash reserves while "once again seeking the opportunity to serve his country." Moody died at 52 of virus pneumonia while campaigning for the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Michigan CIO Council Pres. August Scholle and Mike Novak, president of the Greater Detroit and Wayne County CIO Council, are among the committee members. Fund headquarters is at 2257 National Bank Bldg., Detroit 26, Mich.

'Reckless Assault' On Social Security Hit By Larson

ATTACKS on the social security program are "a reckless assault on one of our most valuable institutions," according to Undersecretary of Labor Arthur Larson.

He challenged the belief that social security, unemployment and workmen's compensation are "a socialist government handout in exchange for which we have bartered away our liberty, self-respect and our ambition."

Larson expressed doubt that anyone could prove social security has adversely affected the morale, drive or character of the American people. He termed it "an insurance benefit bought and paid for by the systematic contributions of the employe and his employer."

You And Your Money—

'How Can We Get Surplus Foods?' CSC Has Answers For Jobless Areas

HOW CIO councils can help secure government-held surplus foods for distribution in areas of unemployment and under-employment is spelled out in a special memorandum prepared by the National CIO Community Services Committee.

Butter, cheese, non-fat dry milk, shortening, beans, beef and gravy and potatoes are all available to state governmental agencies for use of persons and families certified to be in need.

The foods, declared surplus by the government when they are in oversupply, are purchased by the Agriculture Dept. and stored in government warehouses.

THE MEMORANDUM, Distribution of Federal Government Surplus Foods, is available on request from CIO-CSC, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. In it, CIO-CSC gives a step-by-step procedure for either state, city or county CIO councils to follow in obtaining the foods.

The state council should first find out whether the program is already in effect within the state. A U. S. Dept. of Agriculture bulletin from the Agricultural Marketing Service, "Federal and State Agencies Handling Distribution of Donated Commodities," gives the name and location of the proper person and agency to contact.

"If the surplus food program in your state is limited to charitable institution and school use," the CIO-CSC memorandum says, "the State IUC should try to convince the state agency handling distribution to enlarge its program to include areas where there is unemployment and under-employment."

The memorandum suggests that the program should also include persons receiving state or county public welfare relief. State cooperation can be gained in some instances, the memorandum points out, if a responsible county agency such as the county welfare board, county relief board or the county commissioners will accept responsibility for securing the foods through proper governmental procedure. Certification by the county agency that recipients are qualified is also required.

AT THE COUNTY or city level, the CSC memorandum suggests meeting with the county commissioners to enlist their support for such a community food distribution plan.

"The IUC or local union should let it be clearly known that the CIO looks upon this project as a community program designed to benefit all people in need in the community and not only unemployed CIO members," the memorandum stresses.

Should the county commissioners take a hostile attitude toward the request, because of anti-labor sentiments or because of additional expense, CSC recommends asking support from community and civic organizations such as the Community Chest, Red Feather member agencies or the Council of Social Agencies.

CSC warns councils to be cautious of attempts to use the program as a substitute for relief grants or of attempts by "unscrupulous politicians" to use the program for personal advantage.

Example

One state CIO council already helping operate a surplus food distribution plan in areas of unemployment and under-employment is the Pennsylvania CIO Council.

Council Pres. Harry Boyer and Charles Ferguson, executive secretary of the council's Community Services Committee, have been instrumental in developing such a program in 33 counties in the state.

$25 Million In Chest Gifts Credited To CIOers In Year

CIO MEMBERS last year gave more than $25 million to community chests and united funds, according to Treas. John Brophy of the CIO Community Services Committee.

Brophy so reported at a dinner in honor of more than 20 graduates of the first counsellors' training course conducted by the Knoxville, Tenn., Area CIO Council.

"The CIO-CSC program of 'giving once for all,'" Brophy said, "has helped to establish a number of united funds throughout the country which promote federated fund-raising and community-wide budgeting on the basis of relative needs."

Brophy, who is also coordinator of the CIO Free World Labor Fund, said the aim of local Community Services Committees is to advise union members and their families, and to keep them informed of available health and welfare services.

The CSC also plans participation in community fund-raising campaigns and maps programs for union members during layoffs and strikes.

Brophy said that as a result of these activities "much as has been done to eliminate the paternalistic attitude so prevalent prior to the last depression, so services in time of need come as a matter of right."

Another result of CSC activities, he said has been to give CIO members a greater share in determining the policies of chest agencies.

Price Of Coffee Dips As Refiners Boost Gasoline

CONSUMERS got a break on their food budget last week, but the cost of operating the family car climbed.

The price of coffee was cut 10c a pound by a number of small distributors, then by A. & P. and the other majors. Coffee prices have mounted steadily for several months. A reported shortage of Brazilian coffee was denounced as a "hoax."

Motorists found it cost more to say "fill 'er up." Gasoline prices were advanced from .8c to 1c by leading refiners and distributors.

TAKING A LOOK—Busload of Washington, D. C., CIO members inspect Community Chest agencies at first hand. Guide is Maxine Lucas (left), Labor Participation Dept. director, handing literature to CIO Community Services Committee Chairman Joseph A. Beirne, also Communications Workers president, and Armiger L. Jagoe, Jr., of Chest.

IUE Pact Ends Pay Bias Against Women Workers

DISCRIMINATION against women workers is wiped out in a new contract won by the CIO Electrical Workers with the Monsanto Chemical Co., Springfield, Mass.

All inequities were ended by a 13c an hour general pay increase to all women workers. In addition, IUE-CIO also gained an across-the-board raise of 5c an hour, bringing the total increase to all women workers to 18c.

Other gains included a 30-minute paid lunch period for employes working overtime two hours or more and a rotating shift premium of 8c an hour, which practically every worker will receive.

IUE-CIO also obtained an extra day's pay if any of 10 paid holidays occurs during the employe's vacation.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

YOU CAN EXPECT a little easing of living costs in September for the first time this year, as the result of lower prices for meat—the largest single item in your food bill.

Costs of rent, which have boomed for the last four years with disastrous effects on wage-earners' budgets, have also leveled off. There is even visible for the first time since 1950 a slight beginning downtrend in building costs. If they actually are starting downward, this event will be eagerly welcomed by many moderate-income families still waiting to buy a house.

Buying Calendar

The most notable price reductions this month are on television sets. You can now buy a good-quality table model for a little over $100. Here are tips on these and other buying opportunities:

TV SETS: Emerson's new 17-inch table model listing at $130 is now the lowest-priced full-quality set to our knowledge. Cost has been reduced by making the cabinet of Masonite in a leather-like finish, but the chassis itself is the same 20-tube quality as in more expensive Emerson sets.

Since improvements in color television are developing rapidly and prices beginning to come down to more attainable levels, a low-priced black-and-white set like the Emerson looks like a good value for anyone wanting television now. Any much larger investment in black-and-white is not advisable now since such sets are on the way to becoming obsolete.

With discounts widely available (few retailers now insist on full list prices for television sets and household appliances) this new Emerson is available in many stores at around $105-$110.

Several manufacturers have also introduced so-called "portable" television sets with carrying handles. But unless you really expect to carry a set to different places or different parts of the house, a standard table model is a better buy. It costs less than the portable, which requires a more expensive cabinet.

In larger-screen sets, Admiral has been running a special on its 21-inch table model in plastic cabinet, at a list price of $160—$40 off the previous $200 list. This is another full-quality set, and the reduction, plus additional discounts on the retail level, should be available until Labor Day at least.

Crosley has introduced a new low-priced 21-inch console set in wood cabinet at $190 list. Admiral, too, has a good-quality console set in the $200 list-price bracket.

FALL CLOTHING: Prices of family clothing for this fall are slightly less than a year ago. But remember that price tags are always highest at the start of the season, and manufacturers and retailers start making reductions in October.

In women's coats, the fashion emphasis this year is on soft materials. But there are going to be disillusioning experiences among women who buy them. The nap of soft woolens wears off quickly at cuffs, elbows and around buttonholes, and such coats quickly look threadbare.

Coat fabrics are often mixtures of new and reprocessed wool. The label tells you the kind of wool the fabric contains. If it just says "wool" that means all new wool. This is generally preferable to a mixture, both for warmth and durability. Even a mixture should be at least half new wool for reasonable wear. But there are differences in quality of new wool, too. A good wool fabric feels springy and resilient in your hand. When you grasp it and let go, it resumes its shape without wrinkles.

HOUSES: Prices of building materials have been edging down slowly this past year while the overall cost of building a house has remained level following a drop from 1952's peak. But significantly, price tags on larger, more expensive houses are being trimmed now that this market seems gorged, and builders are beginning to produce moderate-price houses in greater volume. The tags on low and medium-priced new houses are still holding up, but they are remaining on the market longer, which is a portent of possible impending reductions.

FOOD: If you shop carefully, you have a chance to cut your food bills this fall. There will be an abundance of grass-fed beef on the market, with hamburger, pot roasts and stew beef reasonable in price.

Pork, too, is coming down from its high recent prices, and veal will be a little cheaper. Hens for fricasseeing will be another comparatively economical food buy. Eggs are unusually cheap for this time of year, with the mediums and pullets now offering better value than the large eggs.

(Copyright 1954 by Sidney Margolius)

Murray Fund Gift Is Praised

PRAISE for "breadth of social responsibility" in the recent Philip Murray Memorial Foundation grant of $200,000 to the National Council of Churches of Christ was voiced editorially by the Cincinnati, O., Enquirer.

The Enquirer editorial cited the gift, along with various other Foundation contributions to universities, hospitals and other organizations.

"The record is a commendable one," the editorial said, "for it bears witness to the breadth of social responsibility felt by the leaders of an important labor organization."

The Foundation, established in honor of the late CIO and CIO Steelworkers president, made the donation for use "on behalf of the practical application of religious principles to the everyday world of economic life."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

MRS. RIFFE and I would like to thank all of the friends from all over the country who have written and sent cards and flowers during my absence from the office. Their warmth has helped us greatly.

After a good rest I am looking forward to taking up my duties in Washington. I am grateful for the way the men and women of CIO have carried on their work in my absence and I am equally thankful for the efforts of my co-workers among the officers of CIO and its affiliated unions who have taken their time to carry this column in my absence.

★

By R. J. THOMAS
Assistant CIO Executive Vice President

SEPARATED from the American mainland, but bound to it by strong ties, are Puerto Rico and St. Thomas Island. The people of those islands are awakening to the gains they can achieve through organized labor activity.

CIO is extending a helping hand to them. Never satisfied with the status quo, CIO has always sought further advances, explored new frontiers.

It is natural that CIO should not be content to confine the benefits of trade unionism to the continental boundaries of the United States.

Adolph Germer, CIO national representative, has just returned from an intensive tour of these two islands on behalf of CIO. Brother Germer gives a grim account of the working and living conditions of the people there. And he tells of the great strides they are making in their effort to build a strong, democratic labor movement.

We have some 65,000 Puerto Rican workers affiliated with Packinghouse Workers of America-CIO, mostly sugar workers. Our CIO Transport Workers Union is attracting numbers of members in Puerto Rico. There is sentiment for organization in other segments of the island's economy. The CIO Communications Workers and CIO Oil Workers have received inquiries indicating considerable interest among the workers in their jurisdictional fields.

All these CIO members are affiliated with the Puerto Rico Industrial Union Council, which is working closely with CIO Rep. David Sternbach to develop an effective council program.

Recently, we chartered a local industrial union in St. Thomas, in the Virgin Islands. Brother Germer visited these CIO members during his trip and relates the enthusiasm with which they welcome CIO membership and plan for CIO growth and expansion.

A NUMBER of our internationals have found it necessary to resort to strike action to enforce their current collective bargaining goals. In the Northwest, the Intl. Woodworkers of America-CIO is conducting a militant strike against powerful lumbering interests. Our CIO Rubber Workers are on strike against major companies in the industry. The long strike in Port Arthur, Tex., in the retail field continues unabated.

Numerous other strikes, in various parts of the country, are being conducted by other CIO international unions, amidst harassing tactics of the companies, the courts and governmental agencies.

All of this shows a definite trend on the part of management to break the back of the labor movement. Encouraged by a friendly federal administration, they have adopted again the arrogance and high-handed tactics of former times.

For years, management has been telling us that it has come to accept organized labor and to recognize its collective bargaining role. Recent events indicate that some representatives of management have never meant what they said. They were just biding their time.

Not only in the economic field, but also in the legislative and political they are using their vast resources to impair the effectiveness of our unions. In their callous disregard for human rights, some of them even welcome the fact that there are nearly five million unemployed in this country.

They believe that condition weakens the spirit of the workers in their industries and they rejoice in the government's refusal to take practical steps to halt the spread of unemployment with all the misery it brings.

IN THE FACE of growing consolidation of employer strength, through association or actual merger, and the growing hostility of federal and state governments, some of our unions are seeking to unite their forces.

Thus we have seen the recent merger of unions in the wholesale and retail field, and exploratory talks toward possible merger of such great organizations as the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers and the CIO Oil Workers in the petro-chemical field, and the CIO United Railroad Workers of America and CIO Transport Workers Union in the field of transportation.

These discussions and these amalgamations reveal the growing conviction on the part of union members and the leadership of our unions that stronger unions are the only answer to the onslaughts of the reactionary forces abroad in the land.

LISTEN TO THE CIO RADIO PROGRAM
John W. Vandercook AND THE NEWS
every weekday evening on the ABC Network

UAW Hits Denial Of Jobless Pay

MORE THAN 11,500 Michigan workers of the Ford Motor Co. have been disqualified for unemployment compensation benefits in a decision described by the CIO Auto Workers as "the most outrageous ever taken since the law was first enacted."

A decision by Referee Samuel Sternberg was called "completely contrary to law and precedent" by Dir. Ken Bannon of the UAW-CIO National Ford Dept. and Dir. Clayton Johnson of the union's Compensation Dept.

They said the union would promptly appeal the decision, and a letter containing the union's protest was being sent to the Michigan Employment Security Commission.

THE DISPUTE arose over the payment of unemployment compensation to Michigan workers who were idled in May 1953 during a strike over local issues at Ford's Canton, O., forge plant.

"For the first time in the history of Michigan law," Bannon and Johnson said, "it has been held that the union may not represent its members in any case before referees.

"For the first time in the history of Michigan law, it has been held that a strike in another state serves to disqualify claimants for benefits laid off through no fault of their own in the State of Michigan.

"We have before us a stupid and degrading spectacle of an arbitrary and wilful individual, known for his hostility to unions, trying to introduce Dixiecrat practices into the State of Michigan."

TWU Issue To Arbiter

A DISPUTE over a proposed new schedules on the IND subway division of New York City's transit system will go to arbitration under the new contract between the CIO Transport Workers and the Transit Authority.

TWU - CIO representatives, headed by Local 100 Sec.-Treas. Ellis Van Riper, told the authority committee on grievances last week that the proposed changes would endanger the health and safety of the workers.

The union said the new schedules would reduce rest time for train crews between trips and would increase the number of split shifts. The authority representatives rejected the union objections.

The disagreement will go to an adviser selected by the two parties from a list prepared by the American Arbitration Association. If there is no agreement on the third party, Labor Sec. Mitchell will choose him. The adviser's award will not be binding.

CIO Employes Vote Guild Strike $100

CIO Local Industrial Union 1695, which represents the office workers at CIO headquarters in Washington, has voted $100 to support the strike of the Wilkes-Barre Newspaper Guild, CIO, against the Wilkes-Barre daily papers.

A Call For Organizing—

'None Of Us Can Rest On Our Laurels'—Potofsky

By JACOB S. POTOFSKY

President, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, CIO; member of the CIO Executive Board; and chairman of the CIO International Affairs Committee.

IDEALS AND THE ORGANIZATION to make them living realities have always been the source and mainstay of labor's strength.

Organization, the one great lesson our people learned from their early struggles against sweatshop conditions, has proved to be labor's most effective weapon against the economic and political power of the exploiters of labor.

It was through organization that labor won better wages and working conditions and greater security, built a powerful and responsible labor movement, and transformed industrial chaos into industrial democracy.

But organization must be continual to be effective. It must be continual not only to bring the benefits of unionization to the still unorganized but also to maintain our hard-won gains and to go onward to even higher standards and the achievement of those ideals which have always animated us.

While labor unions are now a recognized part of our society and while in most sectors of our economy they are firmly established, there are still, around us, substantial areas in which the benefits of organization have not been won. These are the frontiers of the labor movement, and they represent both a threat and a challenge. They attract the chiselers, the "industrial hoboes," the free-booters who compete with established industrial plants by exploiting unorganized workers.

COMPETING ON THE BASIS of substandard wages and conditions, they menace our employment opportunities, our living standards, and the gains won through many years of struggle.

Political and economic reaction thrive in such communities, particularly facilitated by the anti-labor climate created and intensified by the Taft-Hartley Act and the host of state so-called "right-to-work" laws.

Nor are these merely local problems, for there are those who would use such localities as operating bases in the campaign for the destruction of the entire labor movement. This is a challenge of far-reaching significance, and we must meet it by intensifying our organizing efforts.

None of our organizations—no matter how old, how strong, how rich in achievement—can afford to rest on its laurels.

The Amalgamated is one of the oldest unions in the CIO. This year we celebrated our fortieth anniversary. During our 40 years, we pioneered in the development of collective bargaining, the arbitration of disputes, comprehensive welfare programs, political action, labor banking, and cooperative housing.

We have gone a long way toward making labor's ideals living realities for our members. Yet we are more active than ever before in every field that affects the welfare of our members as workers and citizens. And we feel as strongly today, as at any moment in our history, that organizing the unorganized is of the greatest importance, that it deserves the best of our efforts and resources.

WE KNOW from experience that organizing is a tough and tedious business. We know that it is costly, full of heartbreak and disappointment, and sometimes brutality—that with the Taft-Hartley Act, the so-called "right-to-work" laws, and the encouragement given reaction by the Republican Administration, organizing is costlier and tougher than it has been for many years.

But we know, too, the necessity of organizing and its many gratifications. We are confirmed in the righteousness of our cause and know the satisfaction of assisting workers to overcome the powerful opposition of selfish interests and launch a union of their own in areas where unionization has never before been tolerated.

We know that, for the workers, the union means more than higher wages and better conditions. It means a new freedom and dignity and an opportunity to share more fully in the good life of America. We know that, for their communities, it means economic, social, and political progress.

Despite innumerable obstacles, the labor movement is advancing in the South, and I have every confidence that the South will be organized. I say this because, essentially, the workers in the South are no different from the workers anywhere else in the United States. They have the same needs, the same aspiriations, and the same fundamental belief in the right of self-determination implicit in our American way of life.

I visited the South several months ago and was very much impressed by our organizations there. The enthusiasm, the positive fervor with which our new members are building and expanding their unions are reminiscent of the spirit with which our founding pioneers launched the Amalgamated 40 years ago.

I AM SURE that the needs and aspirations of the workers in the South will be fulfilled through organization, just as the needs and aspirations of other workers have found fulfillment through democratic labor unions.

It was heartening, too, to see the political transformation being wrought by organization in the South. Wherever CIO unions have been established, there has been an improvement in the political situation in the community. In the South, as elsewhere, the key to effective political action is organization.

At its Fortieth Anniversary Convention this year, the Amalgamated pledged "to continue in the tradition of its founders to organize every worker in its own industrial branches and to assist other unions to organize the unorganized." We are devoting ourselves to this vital task.

Parleys Stalled In Rubber Strikes

NEGOTIATIONS continued last week but were getting nowhere as the CIO Rubber Workers patiently attempted to settle strikes involving 50,000 members employed by two of the industry's giants.

★

The 23,000 members who walked out of 10 Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. plants on July 7 were joined Aug. 13 by 25,000 others who struck eight operations of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

The negotiations were being conducted in Cleveland, where meetings also were being held with spokesmen for the remaining two of the industry's Big Four, the U. S. Rubber Co. and the B. F. Goodrich Co. Work is being continued at the latter two on a day to day basis.

Despite profits at or close to all-time highs, Goodyear and Firestone have refused to offer anything in the way of wage increase other than a 5c an hour boost which their workers in all plants had rejected before walking out.

THE UNION is demanding a substantial wage increase plus elimination of geographical differentials between plants of the same firm. At Goodyear's Topeka, Kan., plant, for instance, tire builders are paid 33c an hour less than the industry average and 34c lower than in comparable plants.

While Goodyear and Firestone were standing firm in their refusal to talk realistically about pay hikes, the strikers were just as firm in their determination to fight for what is justly due them.

Picket lines have remained solid from one end of the country to the other.

PICKETING has been peaceful, too, with no incidents reported to URW-CIO headquarters in Akron, O. In most of the affected communities, the strikers have the support and sympathy of a majority of their fellow citizens.

They also have the support of their fellow union members, who are paying a $2 a week strike assessment, of the rest of the CIO, and the remainder of the labor movement.

The Firestone strike was voted by the executive boards of the eight locals—which had been authorized to act by the membership—after eight weeks of fruitless negotiations. It began upon expiration of the full contract. The other firms are negotiating under a wage reopening clause.

"The company had failed miserably even to approach anything like a favorable agreement," the union said. "In fact, the sessions never came close to resembling collective bargaining."

Goodyear Sets Profits Record As Sales Drop

THE GOODYEAR Tire & Rubber Co. chalked up record profits in the first six months of 1954 while sales fell off, the semi-annual financial report showed last week.

The firm earned $24.6 million in the first half of the year, compared to $22.9 million in the corresponding 1953 period, and is so prosperous it is calling for redemption of $59.2 million in preferred stock. Sales during the period dropped to $551 million from $616 million last year.

The B. F. Goodrich Co. estimated first-half net income at $18.2 million, or 8% more than last year's $16.8 million, while sales were declining from $350 million last year to $304.9 million in 1954.

8-23

Gas, Coke, Oil Merger Talks End

A PROPOSED constitution has been drafted for a merged union of the CIO Oil Workers and the CIO Chemical Workers. The amalgamated union would have some 200,000 members and a much larger potential membership.

A rank-and-file committee of the two unions last week completed work on the constitution after meeting for 10 days at CIO headquarters in Washington.

As the meeting concluded, the following statement was issued by Richard Leonard, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and impartial chairman; OWIU-CIO Pres. O. A. Knight and UGCCWA-CIO Pres. Elwood D. Swisher:

"THE RANK-AND-FILE committee has completed its work and has agreed upon a proposed constitution by which the merged union would be governed.

"This proposed constitution will be presented to the convention of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers Union, which will be held in St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 13 to 16. It will subsequently be presented to a convention of the Oil Workers Union in Cleveland, O., Nov. 15.

"The proposed constitution will be finally submitted to a merger convention of both unions, at a time and place as yet undetermined.

"Details of the constitutional provisions agreed upon will not be announced at this time."

UPWA Taking Vote On Strike

The CIO Packinghouse Workers last week began taking strike authorization votes as negotiations with each of the Big Four employers continued. Contracts expire Sept. 1.

Bargaining sessions have been held with Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Wilson & Co. and the Cudahy Packing Co. The union is seeking a 35-hour week with present 40-hour pay, a wage increase and other contract improvements.

STRIKE SCENE—CIO Rubber Workers gather at Plant 1 gate of Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. in Akron shortly after national strike involving 25,500 Firestone workers begins. Eight plants are down. At Firestone and Goodyear, some 50,000 are out.

URW Veterans Warn Goodyear To 'Forget' About Splitting Ranks

About 35 veteran leaders, who helped organize CIO Rubber Workers Local 2 at the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. in Akron, O., 20 years ago, recalled the "bad old days" with the help of the present strike and warned management that "if it is anticipating a break in our ranks . . . forget all about it." Their statement follows in part:

WE RECALL the sacrifices and suffering of rubber workers' families whose breadwinners worked themselves to the bone for a mere existence.

We all suffered those hardships while many of our friends were thrown upon the scrap heap—burned out or disabled by speedups and unnecessary accidents. All the result of employer greed.

Yes, we are fortunate to have survived "those bad old days." We have lived to enjoy the results obtained through the sacrifices of pioneer members like Sherman Dalrymple, John House and many others who suffered physical violence in the interests of rubber workers of today and tomorrow.

IN THE MEANTIME, we have occasionally disagreed among ourselves. But today in this emergency which confronts our union we are as one.

Most people don't realize that the present strike was precipitated by the reluctance of the Goodyear Co. to correct inter- and intra-plant inequities, and there are glaring differentials in existence among a great many similar Goodyear jobs right here in Akron.

We didn't go out for the sole reason that Goodyear refused to grant us more than a 5c increase. We have gotten completely fed up with the geographical wage differentials which exist throughout the Goodyear chain.

We vigorously contend that there is no rhyme or reason why Goodyear should pay our Topeka, Kans., members 34c less on plantwide averages than prevail in Akron. The tires which are made by Goodyear in Gadsden, Ala., sell for the same price as those produced in Akron.

MANAGEMENT STOOGES are hopeful that they can stir up old antagonisms at their Akron plant and use them to their advantage during this strike.

They are shrewd and unscrupulous enough to know that if you can divide, you can conquer. But they have not reckoned with the fact that we are all good union men. Further, they have not been impressed with the fact that we will stand together today as we stood together many years ago.

Yes, let this be our notice to those who would wreck our union and rob us of our great protection for which we fought so many years, that we loyal members of URW Local 2 will see this strike through to a successful conclusion.

Therefore, if the Goodyear management has been anticipating a break in our ranks, let them just forget all about it. It was just wishful thinking on their part.

CHECK FOR $1500 from Port Alberni (B. C.) Local 1-85 of CIO Woodworkers, representing "first installment" of its strike contribution, is presented to IWA Pres. A. F. Hartung (center) by W. F. Allen (left), Dist. 1 representative on IWA executive board, as Dist. Pres. Joe Morris looks on.

IWA Gains 12.5c Pact At 51 Firms

CIO WOODWORKERS have won a 12.5c an hour wage increase from 51 smaller companies, some of whom want it kept secret because they fear reprisals from larger outfits in the Timber Operators Association.

IWA-CIO Pres. A. F. Hartung said most of the companies signing with the union are relatively small, hiring as many as 30 employes. He declared that the fact that these small outfits can afford the pay increase is another indication of the justice in the union's demands.

THE IWA Northwest Policy Committee meeting at Portland, Ore., reaffirmed the union's proposal to call an immediate halt to the nine-week strike if the employers would agree to place the dispute before impartial arbitrators.

"We have tried to bargain on the basis of facts," Hartung said. "The employers have never pleaded inability to pay. For two years in a row, most of our members have seen workers in other industries make wage gains while Woodworker wages stood still and the cost of living went up."

The union's Columbia River District Council pledged its 15,000 members to continued all-out strike support.

The Oregon State Board of Conciliation planned to enter the strike, which began June 21 when 110,000 CIO and AFL workers walked off their jobs.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own

Reuther Urges Unity For Jobs
—See Page 3

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., August 30, 1954 Vol. 17, No. 35

Labor Day Reminder:

The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

...Register!

...Give A Buck to PAC!

...and Vote!

CIO Asks Atomic Energy Group To End Horse & Buggy Practices

LEO GOODMAN

A FOUR-POINT program as a start toward improving labor and community relations in atomic energy establishments was proposed last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther at a conference with officials of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The meeting was the first opportunity of CIO and AFL officials to lay complaints of their members before top AEC personnel.

At its conclusion, Commissioner Joseph Campbell and AEC General Manager Kenneth D. Nichols said they would "earnestly reexamine the problems discussed and whenever practicable within the agency's power effect improvement."

Reuther was accompanied to the session by Pres. Elwood Swisher of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; Pres. Emerson Pownall of UGCCW Local 288, Oak Ridge, Tenn.; Pres. Barney Sanders of Local 550, Paducah, Ky.; Franz Daniel, Reuther's aide; Ben Sigal, UGCCW general counsel, and Leo Goodman, its Washington legislative representative.

REUTHER, in a statement presented to the AEC, covered collective bargaining, community relations, hospital replacement and schools. On the first, he said:

"Present procedures for handling collective bargaining in atomic energy installations are wholly inadequate and antiquated, and must of necessity be brought up to date if they are to meet the requirements of current labor operations.

"The recent labor dispute resulted from the inadequacy of present procedures under which unresolved grievances accumulated, and laid the basis for growing dissatisfaction and unrest.

"IN THE WAR emergency, the patriotism of atomic energy workers was relied upon as a substitute for adequate collective bargaining. In the present situation it is dangerously, unrealistically and morally wrong to expect wartime policies to provide the basis for needed and desired labor-management stability.

"We urge the AEC and other responsible agents of the government to take immediate steps to review the collective bargaining machinery . . . with a view to develop new and more effective procedures that will insure encouragement and strengthen collective bargaining in a free society."

So far as community problems are concerned—housing is the most pressing—Reuther recommended the appointment of a National Advisory Committee by the President "to make a comprehensive study of housing and community policy."

He also urged the AEC to replace the wartime hospital structure at Oak Ridge, and maintained the Oak Ridge policy of reducing school standards should be reversed until the community "provides a model program for all children of workers currently employed at the installation."

SWISHER GAVE the AEC representatives a more detailed statement covering a wide range of problems. He particularly asked the commission to support efforts to end government ownership of AEC communities under conditions which will permit the residents to buy their own homes and form their own democratic governments.

He also pointed out that "from the very beginning of the whole atomic energy program, the prime irritant, the basic source of dissatisfaction, has been the inadequate supply of housing and the lack of free choice" in securing the accommodations desired or needed.

The meeting was arranged by Sec. of Labor Mitchell as a result of his intervention last month in the wage dispute affecting UGCCW and AFL production workers at Oak Ridge and Paducah.

Goodman Named Secretary Of CIO Resources Group

APPOINTMENT of Leo Goodman as secretary of the CIO Committee on Power, Atomic Energy and Resources Development was announced last week by Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

The committee, headed by Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, represents CIO's interests in a wide field of resources and conservation matters.

Goodman, a veteran CIO staff member, recently has served as Washington legislative representative of the CIO Chemical Workers and was concerned particularly with atomic energy legislation in the recent Congress. He formerly was secretary of the CIO Housing Committee.

In his new post, Goodman succeeds Anthony W. Smith, now on the staff of the CIO Legislative Dept.

Hiring Rate Drops 27%

THE BUREAU of Labor Statistics estimated that during July the nation's factories hired 30 new workers for every 1000 on payrolls, a decline of 14% from June.

The July hiring rate was 27% under a year ago and was equal to the low for the month set in 1930 and 1931.

The average layoff rate for all manufacturing was figured at 17% in July, the same as in June, 55% higher than a year ago and 23% below the July 1952 rate.

The factory quit rate, estimated at 11 per 1000 workers in July, has shown no change for eight months in a row. The July rate is the lowest for that month since 1949. (More on jobs, Page 9.)

Steel Production At 2-Year Low

Steel production for the week ending Aug. 21 was at the lowest level for a full week in two years, the American Iron & Steel Institute reported. Production fell to 1,474,000 tons or 61.8% of capacity, the smallest output since the spring of 1952.

Cleveland UAW Aide Is Slain

Raymond Weirouch, 36, a vice president of CIO Auto Workers Local 515, was dragged from his car and beaten to death a short distance from his home in Cleveland, O. He was chief steward at the Iron Fireman Stoker Co. plant.

The slayer escaped in his car when witnesses started towards the scene. Officials doubted there was a union connection in the killing.

Milton Miller Quits

Milton Miller will resign this week as editor of Frontpage, publication of the CIO Newspaper Guild of New York. He had served for the past five years.

CHARTER of Local 10 of CIO Government and Civic Employees is presented to local Pres. Grant Reese (left) by GCEOC-CIO Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray. Local officers smiling approval are (from left): Beatrice Halt, Beatrice May and Robert Ames. The local represents civilian employes at Andrews Air Force Base near Washington.

CIO Attacks 'Travesty' Of Ike's Pay Hike Veto

THE BILL raising the pay of federal civil service and postal employes was vetoed last week by Pres. Eisenhower because it didn't provide increased revenue to meet the estimated cost of $312 million a year.

The measure would have given nearly two million workers a pay boost of 5%, their first general increase in several years of rising prices.

The veto, announced at the summer White House in Denver, was promptly denounced by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther as a "travesty on economic justice."

"This Republican Administration, which has given away billions of dollars worth of the people's resources — tidelands, atomic energy and other benefits—to wealthy industry, now denies a modest and long overdue salary increase to millions of deserving government employes," he said.

"THE VETO is economically unsound, morally wrong and contrary to the President's declared policy of being liberal with people.

"Unjust and unwise tax reductions given to corporations in the recent Republican-sponsored tax bill would have paid many times over the cost of this modest salary increase."

In the veto message, Eisenhower appeared particularly irked by the fact that Congress had voted the pay boost without enacting higher postal rates designed to offset the added cost in that department, as he had requested.

AFL Pres. George Meany accused Eisenhower of "penalizing government workers in retaliation against what he regards as an omission by Congress."

★

'Take-Away Title' Awarded To Ike By GCEOC-CIO

HAVING won the title of "Give-Away Champion," Pres. Eisenhower "and his caddies are now after the Take-Away title," the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee declared in the wake of the federal pay boost veto.

"The President's veto of even the inadequate pay increase voted by Congress," said Chairman Anthony J. Federoff and Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray, "cynically calls upon federal employes to shoulder the burden of a so-called postal deficit.

"The President, with equal justice, could call upon the American GI to take a pay cut to pay the cost of a new bomber fleet.

"Jointly, the President and his congressional bloc have imposed injury upon the faithful men and women whose toil makes possible the functioning of American government."

Ike And Hoover To Fish—Talk

Pres. Eisenhower and former Pres. Hoover will go trout fishing together this week in the Colorado Rockies The fishing trip will give them an opportunity to discuss Hoover's current study of government reorganization.

Joe's Finances Won't Be Checked

THE TANGLED financial affairs of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) will not be considered by the Senate committee weighing censure charges against him.

Sen. Watkins (R. Utah), chairman of the special six-man committee, made the statement after disclosure that initial hearings would be held on five categories of charges by fellow senators against McCarthy.

The committee did single out McCarthy's refusal to answer questions of an earlier Senate group which investigated the $10,000 Lustron housing pamphlet and other financial dealings of McCarthy's.

Watkins said the committee will ultimately report on "each and every one" of the 46 charges made by Sens. Fulbright (D. Ark.), Morse (Ind. Ore.) and Flanders (R. Vt.).

The five-point "bill of particulars" included: "incidents of contempt for the Senate or a senatorial committee; incidents of encouragement of U. S. employes to violate the law and their oaths of office or executive orders; incidents involving receipt or use of confidential or classified documents or other confidential information from executive files; incidents involving abuses of colleagues in the Senate; and incidents relating to Ralph Zwicker, a general officer of the Army of the United States."

Meantime, the Christian Science Monitor reported a survey it conducted of all public hearings on domestic communism held by the Senator before his controversy with the Army. The Monitor concluded:

"Sen. McCarthy has not found a single Communist spy whose guilt stands proved in court.

"No person charged with treason by the Senator has been indicted."

N

Reuther Urges Unity For Peace, Prosperity

By GERVASE N. LOVE

AMERICA must "work, plan and build together to win the peace and to build permanent prosperity," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said in his annual Labor Day statement.

The CIO chieftain was one of many leaders who glanced back at the past on the holiday and seized the opportunity it offered to call for greater achievement in the future.

He proposed a 10-point program of full production and full employment "geared to meeting serious economic deficits in both America and the world," and "to keep America fully at work for many years to come."

At the same time, he called upon organized workers to rededicate themselves to cooperation "with men and women of good will everywhere in the common effort of winning a world founded upon the principles of peace, freedom, social justice and human brotherhood."

They are better equipped than ever before, he asserted, to make their "maximum contribution to the strengthening of American democracy and in the world struggle for peace, freedom and justice."

Carey Denounces GOP

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, also president of the CIO Electrical Workers, utilized the occasion to urge the labor movement to act on the political front as well as in the areas of organizing and collective bargaining. He denounced the Eisenhower Administration as a "government of business, by business and for business," and called for the election of a Congress "responsive to the needs of the people, not the special interests."

Political action and a plea to workers to use their votes "well and wisely and put democracy's house in order" in November keynoted the statement of National Dir. Jack Kroll of the CIO Political Action Committee.

He, too, attacked the Eisenhower Administration for its concern for wealthy corporations and individuals, as well as for making U. S. families "poorer" than on Labor Day 1953 "because of what has been given away by an Administration dominated by a concern for big business."

A Job To Do

Sec. of Labor Mitchell, recounting the advantages American workers enjoy both as workers and as Americans, declared it is a "privilege . . . to join with my fellow workers throughout the land in striving for a still better America." There is still much to be done, he said, to give low-income workers and their families a full share in our prosperity.

From abroad, Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse of the Intl. Labor Organization cited past contributions of the American labor movement to the ILO's efforts, and pointed out the opportunity of the people of North America today "to make a real contribution to lasting peace through the ILO."

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, in sending fraternal greetings and best wishes to its North American affiliates on Labor Day, asked for "the continued cooperation of North American labor in the struggle for freedom and prosperity for all." To insure the development of a really free world and a genuine and lasting peace, said Pres. Omer Becu and Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek, "more democratic action and more democracy are needed."

CIO PRES. WALTER P. REUTHER
"We need to act . . . to win the peace and to build permanent prosperity."

On The Air

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will deliver a Labor Day address to be heard on many stations of the CBS Radio Network at 11:30 p.m., EDT, on Sept. 6.

In addition, he will present another speech on the NBC Radio Network at 3:45 p.m., EDT, Sunday, Sept. 5. Reuther's talk will precede the regular NBC "Weekend" show.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey will speak over the ABC Radio Network at 4:00 p.m., EDT, on Labor Day, Sept. 6.

Reuther also will speak at two Labor Day rallies in Detroit and Windsor, Ont.

Messages From Churches

The time is ripe for a "generous and forthright" experiment in the direction of expanded collective bargaining to give it more of "the character of organized labor-management cooperation," the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference said in its Labor Day statement.

Such an experiment, wrote Rev. Raymond A. McGowan, department director, should be aimed at "consciously applying the principles of morality to the complicated and ever-changing problems of American industry."

Workers who have exercised their right to organize unions "to obtain a living wage and some measure of security for themselves and their families" are commended in the annual Labor Sunday message of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.

The council also pointed out that labor, management and owners all have the same obligation "to strive under God for good human relationships," and "the same moral imperative to seek the goal of Christian community" with its "full acceptance of the worth of the individual."

If major labor and management problems were to be judged on the basis of the Talmud, "it would be safe to say that our religious tradition would approve the gains made by labor in its right to organize and bargain collectively," the Commission on Justice and Peace of the Central Conference of American Rabbis said in a Labor Day message. On the giant corporations, the conference added, "the Talmudic rabbis would, we believe, impose whatever restraints were necessary to protect the inalienable dignity and the basic rights of worker and consumer."

THE EISENHOWER Administration was singled out for heavy attack by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and National Dir. Jack Kroll of the CIO Political Action Committee in Labor Day statements.

"Labor Day 1954 should be one of great rejoicing for the special interests that run the Eisenhower regime," said Carey, "but not for us, not for America's workers and farmers and housewives.

"For government for the people has been replaced by government for profit and government of business, by business and for business. The New Deal and the Fair Deal have been replaced by the Stacked Deal. The 'Cadillac Crusade' is in high gear."

Kroll said this Labor Day finds every American family poorer than the last "because of what has been given away by an Administration dominated by a concern for big business," adding a warning to "beware of merchants of pie in the sky."

Gains Are In Danger

Carey, who also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers, contended that "every one of our economic and social gains is in jeopardy" because "reaction and big business are undermining the foundations and tearing down the economic protections and social benefits built between 1932 and 1952."

"The Eisenhower 'businessmen's' administration promised to cut the cost of living, cut taxes, balance the budget, reduce the federal debt and give the country a 'hard' dollar," he recalled.

"The cost of living today is near an all-time high. The budget has not been balanced. The national debt has climbed by about $5 billion. The purchasing power of the dollar in June hit the lowest point in our national history. Our economy is sagging, with more than 3.5 million jobless. Taxes have been cut only for the rich. And Congress is steadily giving away the people's resources."

The Republicans have sacrificed national defense in the name of economy, he continued, have alienated other free nations whose friendship we need by their "bluff and bluster" foreign policy, and have divided Americans "by spreading fear and suspicion and hysteria in the name of fighting communism."

The Political Task

Organized labor must do a job not only on the organizing and collective bargaining fronts, Carey said, but on the political front as well.

"Reaction and special privileges," he declared, "can never restrain their own greed and lust for power. We must beat back reaction at the polls this November. We must elect a Congress responsive to the needs of the people, not the special interests.

"Organized labor and liberalism are the only major roadblock to rule by reaction and economic aristocracy. There is no equally effective force for the pres-

(Continued on Page 10)

Reuther Calls For Joint Action 'To Build Permanent Prosperity'

By WALTER P. REUTHER
President of the CIO

LABOR DAY is a day of celebration, of reverence, and of rededication. On this day American labor celebrates its past achevements, honors the memory of those who pioneered labor's early struggles, and rededicates itself to continue in the task of cooperating with men and women of good will everywhere in the common effort of winning a world founded upon the principles of peace, freedom, social justice, and human brotherhood.

On this Labor Day, 1954, we face a future pregnant with the possibilities of war and disaster and at the same time filled with the greatest promise of human betterment . . . if we have the good sense to learn to live at peace and gear our scientific and technical progress to the needs, the hopes and aspirations of the human family.

We live in a period of twilight. We have neither war nor peace in the world; we have neither prosperity nor depression at home. Neither war nor peace, neither depression nor prosperity are inevitable. We need to act in the knowledge that we can drift to war and depression, but to win the peace and to build permanent prosperity, we must work, plan, and build together.

In the world struggle between freedom and tyranny, America remains as freedom's last best hope. As the strongest of the free nations of the world, we must assume a major share of responsibility for providing military, economic and political leadership; but of equal, if not of greater importance, we must provide comparable moral leadership to the free world in its struggle against Communist tyranny.

If we are to be worthy of leading the free world, we must of necessity stand before the world not only as a symbol of material wealth and industrial and military power, but also as a great moral symbol.

We must demonstrate by practical performance that we are a nation possessed not only of great material and economic wealth, but a nation with the needed sense of moral and social responsibility and the practical know-how to translate material wealth into human values. We must gear our unprecedented technical progress to the achievement of greater human progress, human betterment, and human dignity.

Only as America's great economic and material wealth and productive power have a conscious and continuous moral purpose can we as a nation earn the right, and equip ourselves, to lead the free world.

The American labor movement from its early beginning has been unselfishly dedicated to the task of relating material wealth to human values and reflecting technical progress in human progress.

The free labor movement of the

(Continued on Page 10)

Hasty Legislation

In the final hectic days of the 83rd Congress, a bill was hastily passed without full consideration of its connotations and complications. It was voted for by numerous Democratic liberals as an answer to a prolonged and vicious smear by the GOP that the Democrats are "soft" on Communism.

It is understandable, under the circumstances, why the liberals voted for the bill, and observers who saw the look of chagrin on the faces of the GOP's extreme right wing could realize that the liberal Democrats had spoiled their hypocritical game.

Signed by the President, the new law has two principal provisions: (1) it makes the Communist Party illegal, and (2) it denies Communist-dominated unions the right to act as bargaining agents and, in effect, makes them illegal.

It is hard to see how the Communists, who seem to be operating on an underground basis now, will be much more penalized by the new law. But that law does raise some major questions of civil liberties which cannot be easily answered.

Ever since the introduction into Congress of proposals for the virtual outlawing of Communist-dominated unions, the CIO Executive Board has pointed out that such proposals were in effect "government licensing of trade unions"—which is dangerous to a free labor movement since it would give the government the power of life and death over all unions.

The Communists will not be licked by repressive anti-labor legislation—in fact, they are already making propaganda out of it. Communism will be licked, as it has been in America, by high living standards, personal security and the constant common-sense exercise of our traditional civil liberties and rights.

Early last month, the CIO and AFL suggested to both the Senate and House that, before proceeding with legislative action on the sundry proposals offered by Atty.-Gen. Brownell and other such bills, a prominent study commission should be named to investigate what legislation might be desirable to meet the problem of Communist infiltration of labor or other organizations. Such a proposal was in fact accepted by the House Judiciary Committee. If there was any question then about the wisdom of the CIO-AFL proposal, there certainly should not be any today.

We hope that after the excitement of the election campaign is over, the Congress will take a second more reflective look at what it has done.

Pay Raise Vetoed

After Pres. Eisenhower vetoed the government workers' 5% pay raise, a number of GOP newspapers had words of praise for the Chief Executive.

He had, these papers maintained, risen above politics in the interest of principles.

To us, it looked more as if he had cast aside the principle that Uncle Sam should be a model employer, in the interest of Republican politics.

Government workers need and deserve a pay raise. Their pay schedules are below those of people doing similar work in private industry—sometimes far below. Their job security, during these past two years, has been shaken many times.

As CIO Pres. Reuther pointed out, the tax give-away to wealthy individuals and corporations far exceeded the total cost of the pay increase.

But the GOP doesn't see anything wrong in that.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

WALTER P. REUTHER
President

JOHN V. RIFFE
Executive Vice President

JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS
Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, William Millis, Al Zack, Eugene A. Kelley.

Editorial Office: 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.
Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925. 5c a copy, $1 a year, $1.50 a year in Canada. Mail subscriptions: Old and new addresses and three weeks' notice are required for change of address.

Vol. XVII August 30, 1954 No. 35

Quote—'Our House Is Partially In Order'

In Other Words—

A Vision Of Atomic Power

A "new vision" of low-cost electricity possible from atomic power for farms, homes and factories in arid areas is discussed in a report on a western trip by Clyde T. Ellis, executive manager of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association. Excerpts from his report follow:

By CLYDE T. ELLIS

ABOUT A HUNDRED of us, including REA officials, newspapermen and atomic scientists, made a 200-mile, two-day tour of the uranium mining section of southwestern Colorado and eastern Utah.

ELLIS

The trip was sponsored by several rural electric cooperatives, the Colorado State Association of REA Cooperatives, the Uranium Producers Association and several city chambers of commerce in the hope of finding a solution to the area's ever-worsening power shortage.

Very little hydro power could ever be developed in the semi-arid uranium country. While there are vast quantities of coal in all that region, those people already have a vision of low-cost atomic electric energy flowing from the rock of the mountains.

There's no mystery about producing electricity from the atom. By one process, for instance, atomic heat is simply used to produce steam to turn the turbines to turn the generators, just as coal and gas heat are used to turn turbines and generators.

At Cortez, the atomic scientist, Dr. Darol Froman, technical associate director of the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory, told us of the future possibilities of unlimited electrical energy from fissionable fuel at low cost.

He said that even now a piece of U-235 uranium one-twentieth the size of a penny would produce heat equivalent to a ton of coal. A ton of uranium ore, he said, would produce heat equal to that of "5000 to 10,000 tons of coal."

At Monticello, Utah, and other towns we saw uranium processing plants surrounded by great piles of ore. But some of the plants also have to produce their own electricity. This is both expensive and inefficient.

Finally, we moved north into huge canyons and beautiful valleys where, along the rugged, barren mountain sides, many of the 400 operating mines were visible. Most of them, too, have their own little inefficient, expensive and undependable power plants.

And more mines are evidently on the way, for we could see countless 4 x 4 posts among the sage brush, each marking the corner of a claim. More than 700 of these claims had been filed at one county court house during the preceding week.

Energy—But No Power

No private power company operates in this southwestern Colorado-eastern Utah area. The people in town, country and mine alike know they can solve their power problem only through electric co-ops. They seem equally as confident that very soon their future needs should be met by an atomic-fueled plant.

They think there would be sound logic in the Atomic Energy Commission locating a plant of its own in the area, or in AEC cooperating with REA and Colorado UTE Electric Association in the building of an atomic-fueled unit there.

"We are producing the ore for more electrical energy than was ever known before," one miner said, "and yet we have none ourselves."

Hydro power, wherever available, will no doubt continue to be the cheapest energy source for many years, and efficient coal-burning units will no doubt continue to operate. But I am convinced that the age of atomic power is at hand.

Already the experts and responsible officials are saying that our known deposits of atomic fuel exceed by many times the amount of coal, oil and gas reserves in the United States.

This all means that the age of abundant, low-cost energy is at hand, too, and the all-electric farm, home and factory are in sight—if we pursue the proper course.

This will require the enactment of legislation in the next Congress to encourage full participation by all groups in the atomic program and to prevent monopoly from gobbling up most of the benefits, as seems likely under existing laws.

N

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE WHITE HOUSE quickly welcomed Adlai Stevenson's message to Premier Mendes-France of France on the European Defense Community. James C. Hagerty, Eisenhower's press secretary, amiably announced that the President was "delighted" that Stevenson "joins with us in supporting the American position."

Eisenhower needed some help from somewhere. The plain fact is that his foreign policy is in bad shape.

The President inherited his policy from Harry S. Truman. But when the showdowns came, Truman had nerve enough to use American troops and military "advisers" in odd corners of the world.

Ike Really Needed Help

Vice Pres. Nixon told the American Society of Newspaper Editors last April that he thought Eisenhower would have no choice except to order in American troops if France appeared to be "losing" Indo-China. But France lost Indo-China—and the order to American troops never came.

William Philips Simms, longtime foreign editor of the pro-Eisenhower Scripps-Howard newspapers, recently mocked the claims of Republicans that this country has regained the "initiative" in relations with the Soviet Union.

A Critical Report

Simms reported, in effect, that the Russians are licking the pants off us diplomatically. He said, bluntly, that they are successfully picking off our potential friends and allies, that we are losing the cold war, and that Eisenhower ought instantly to start making generous offers to the Soviets, if only to prove what liars they are.

After a year and a half of Eisenhower and Dulles, after a year and a half of brave announcements of bold programs from which Dulles is quickly forced to retreat, we have few dependable friends left in the world.

Stevenson intervened at a critical moment to assure Mendes-France that Democrats, as well as Republicans, favored the concept of a Western European army including both French and German troops. It wasn't hard for him to make this statement; the idea of EDC was born, after all, during the term of Truman and Dean Acheson, Democrats.

Even Stevenson's intervention, however, did not persuade Mendes-France to make parliamentary ratification of the EDC treaty a test of confidence in his government. And among some Republicans, remembering the Dulles threat of an "agonizing reappraisal" of our foreign policy, the late Sen. Taft's dream of dropping our allies and relying on a Fortress America program began to take on new beauties.

★

A Service To The Public

Stephen A. Mitchell, Democratic National Committee chairman, has performed a public service, as well as a service to his party, by his repeated attacks on the now-notorious Dixon-Yates contract. He made an accurate point in charging that the so-called documented record released by the Budget Bureau left more questions unanswered than it cleared up.

The Dixon-Yates contract was invented, apparently, in the fertile mind of Joseph Dodge, the Detroit banker who then served as Budget Bureau director, but since has resigned to private life.

When the TVA needed to increase its kilowatt capacity to serve both the Atomic Energy Commission facilities near Paducah, Ky., and the expanding requirements of TVA customers in Memphis, Tenn., Dodge decided it was not the "policy" of the present Administration to let the TVA increase its own production.

He procured from Eisenhower a "directive" to the AEC to negotiate a contract with the Dixon-Yates syndicate to build a private power plant near Memphis to furnish electricity to the TVA for its Memphis customers.

The pretense was that Dixon-Yates power would go, theoretically, to the AEC. Actually the TVA will continue to serve the AEC near Paducah with power from closer installations. The AEC's needs were used as an excuse to force the TVA, an independent public-power agency of the federal government, to start buying power from a private-utility combine near Memphis.

A Handpicked Deal

The published documents did not include any specifications on which bids to the AEC might have been based. They did not tell how or why the Dixon-Yates syndicate was handpicked as the one group that could meet terms and conditions established.

They did not justify the extraordinary decision to order TVA to buy enough power from Dixon-Yates to pay for the private plant, pay profits on its operations, pay taxes on its earnings—and leave the property, after 25 years, title-free with its fortunate "windfall" operators.

A competing syndicate, whose approaches were turned down, charged publicly that its engineering firm was threatened with loss of other utility business unless it pulled out of any endeavor that threatened to interfere with Dixon-Yates.

This single allegation, in a different administration, would have been sufficient to warrant an investigation of possible anti-trust law violations. It would have been enough to warrant a Justice Department inquiry or a congressional committee hearing to determine the facts.

Apparently the only interest of the Eisenhower Administration is to hamper the TVA and to use the Dixon-Yates syndicate as the instrument.

Record Of Deal To Curb TVA Leaves Key Points Unanswered

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

PUBLICATION of a chronological history of the Dixon-Yates power contract has only "raised more questions than it answered" about the multi-million-dollar deal to hamstring TVA.

A 132-page history of the contract was released last week by the Budget Bureau and the Atomic Energy Commission after Pres. Eisenhower defended his order to award the the contract to the two utility firms. Bobby Jones, former golf champion and close friend of the President, is a director of one of the favored firms.

Last June 16 the President directed the AEC to give the Dixon-Yates syndicate the contract to build a $107 million steam generating plant at West Memphis, Ark., to feed 600,000 kilowatts into TVA systems to replace an equal amount supplied by TVA to an atomic energy plant at Paducah, Ky.

Links To Power Trust

Friends of TVA claimed it was a move to curb TVA, which Eisenhower once described as "creeping socialism." The contract award was assailed during the record 13-day debate on the Administration's atomic energy give-away. After Democratic Chairman Stephen A. Mitchell called the Dixon-Yates deal a "scandal," the chronology was published.

Sen. Gore, bitterly critical of the proposal from the first, wondered if the delay in releasing the chronology was used for "digging out or covering up" and suggested "a close liaison existed between the Budget Bureau and the power trust."

Gore demanded to know why the contract was "tailor-made" for one firm; why prospective bidders were required to have "back up" capacity of 600,000 kilowatts when Dixon-Yates was the only utility combine in the area that could possibly have it and why the contract itself had not been made public.

Sen. Anderson (D. N.M.) charged the Dixon-Yates deal contains federal tax reimbursement provisions despite a congressional prohibition on such arrangements. He said he was told it would take six months to negotiate the power contract for TVA customers.

"But, lo and behold, within 10 days it is ready in proof form," Anderson said.

Both Anderson and Gore noted that the contract indicated a desire by AEC to provide "tax immunity for the present and future" for the Mississippi Valley Generating Co., formed by the Dixon-Yates syndicate.

"But How Do We Turn This Off?"
—Herblock in Washington Post & Times Herald

Mitchell re-entered the controversy by demanding the contract be cancelled. He noted that no call for bids was ever made and that competition was not only not invited, "but it was stifled."

"The deal has been shot through with favoritism by the government to a particular group of private businessmen and on a multi-million dollar scale. It is a raw deal for the taxpayers and for other businessmen who sought to compete," Mitchell said.

Mitchell quickly accepted a challenge by Chairman Cole (R. N. Y.) of the House Senate Atomic Energy Committee to present his 10 questions about the contract. Cole's invitation referred to "repeated intemperate charges" against the President by Mitchell.

This, said Mitchell, seemed to show that Cole had prejudged the case and raises doubts over his "ability to conduct an impartial hearing."

He said GOP apologists have focused discussion on the Eisenhower-Jones part of the controversy "instead of discussing the merits of the Dixon-Yates deal." "The question," Mitchell said, "is not whether Pres. Eisenhower is an honest man. The question is whether the deal he personally ordered is a good deal. If it is a raw deal, then the mere fact that it was ordered by the President does not make it right."

GOP Power Policies Cost Jobs

By WARREN G. MAGNUSON
Democratic Senator from Washington

A $21 MILLION annual payroll has been lost to the Pacific Northwest by the Eisenhower-McKay power policy.

That policy has decreed no new starts on the Columbia River or its tributaries. That power policy has assured that there will not be a single new kilowatt on the line—put there by this Administration.

That policy has substituted the word "partnership" for performance. It has substituted "confusion" for comprehensive development. It has driven a $270 million investment and a $21 million yearly payroll from the Pacific Northwest into the arms of British Columbia.

I document these statements. On Aug. 5 the lead story in The American Metal Market bore this headline, "Reynolds metals to Participate in Big Frobisher Project."

The Frobisher Project is a projected $700 million power and metallurgical development on the headwaters of the Yukon River in British Columbia. Site of the huge project is the Atlin Lake region along the British Columbia-Yukon border, 800 miles north of Vancouver.

Reynolds Metals is taking a 30% interest in the joint enterprise and again Reynolds Aluminum Co. has signed for 30% of the hydroelectric power. American capital which should be available for development in the Pacific Northwest is moving to Canada. The aluminum industry now must consider the possibility of moving elsewhere—and out of the United States, just as the textile industry has moved out of New England.

One-third of the electric output at Frobisher will provide power for about 200,000 tons of new aluminum capacity . . . that represents a potential permanent payroll of 2500 workers diverted from Washington and Oregon by the Administration's short-sighted policy of blocking further development of low-cost power in that area.

Add a proportionate amount of basic fabrication and this becomes a permanent payroll of 4000 workers, enough to support a city the size of Wenatchee, Wash. With the addition of the community services and related employment such a payroll would create, the total becomes 7000 employed persons—which, with families, is a city the size of Everett, Wash.

This is a single example of what the Eisenhower-McKay power policy has done to our region. Seven thousand jobs at a single crack is a price too high to pay for a slogan, or the word "partnership"—coined in the last campaign and parroted ever since.

Another Example

Oregon is confronted with a major economic crisis as a result of "Republican do-nothing policies in the realm of development," according to Richard L. Neuberger, Democratic candidate for the U. S. Senate.

Neuberger charged that the crisis is so desperate that the state's unemployment compensation fund seemed "in serious peril of depletion."

He said that during the first seven months of 1954, Oregon paid out $16.9 million in unemployment compensation. During the same period it collected only $7.6 million. He reminded that strikers are ineligible for unemployment benefits and the high payments are due entirely to the "rising tide of economic joblessness" and not to the lumber strike.

IWA Is 'Hanging Tough' In Long Strike

By GEORGE HOLCOMB
Editor, The IWA-CIO International Woodworker

LABOR DAY of 1954 will see the beginning of a new era of enmity in the Northwest's biggest industry—lumber.

The lumber barons picked up the habit of trying to ride roughshod over their workers' backs in the last century, and they can't seem to get it through their heads that unions are here to stay.

On June 21, about 100,000 lumber workers in two traditionally rival unions—the CIO Woodworkers and the AFL Lumber & Sawmill Workers—"went fishing."

Several thousand are back with wage gains ranging from 2.5c to 15c an hour. A few thousand of these are CIO Woodworkers who got what they were after—12.5c an hour and a third week of paid vacation after five years. About 120 smaller companies agreed to that demand.

There are some defections and back-to-work movements in scattered places, aided by the hiring of as many scabs as can be found. From the newspaper headlines, it would seem that this has ended the strike. But a majority of the strikers were still hanging tough as this was being written at the start of the tenth week.

The employers, in the opinion of IWA-CIO Pres. A. F. Hartung, one of the loggers who helped start the union, began the current fight more than a year ago. In 1953 they refused to make any wage offer, refused to permit the issue to go to arbitration, and took advantage of the political situation to discourage the membership into voting by a slight majority not to strike.

Last November, the union's Northwest Negotiating and Policy Committee began to try to collect wage data from them. They took a united stand against furnishing such information, so charges of unfair labor practices are pending before the National Labor Relations Board.

Preliminary negotiations last spring brought nothing but contemptuous refusals to discuss "cost items" from the employers.

Union negotiators took a strike vote to see if the members were willing to fight for their demands. A substantial majority declared they were. May 3 was set as the deadline.

Rival Unions Join

But the employers refused to budge until just before the strike date. Then they asked the union to postpone the walkout so as to permit another meeting. With some misgivings, the IWA-CIO negotiators agreed. The misgivings proved well founded, for the employers did nothing more than repeat their earlier rejections.

Meantime, the AFL lumber workers, a unit of the Carpenters, began negotiations and met with similar results. Leaders of the two unions established contact early in June and made history by laying plans for a joint strike, which began June 21.

The joint union committee includes Hartung and Kenneth Davis, executive secretary of the AFL union's Northwest District Council. Both had been in on the 1935 organization of lumber workers, but had gone separate ways when the CIO and AFL split.

The employers haven't claimed inability to pay. They claim their workers are better paid than most, that they can't afford to raise wages because then they'd have to raise prices.

That, they maintain, would weaken their competitive position with other construction materials. But in trying to "prove" their point in big newspaper advertisements, they used such distorted figures that the Portland (Ore.) Daily Journal of Commerce printed an editorial setting things straight.

Less Than Adequate

Most Northwest Woodworkers get $1.775 an hour—when they're working. Most of the loggers get more than that, but they do well to get in eight months of work a year and the millmen are lucky to get 10 or 11 months.

Because the bosses refuse to give wage data, the real facts on annual earnings of Woodworkers are not known. Union officials are confident they are less than would provide an adequate standard of living for the average family.

Two things particularly nettled the strikers: the continued refusal of the employers to arbitrate (it would cost them money, they admit), and the fact that the lumber barons have lost more in profits thus far as a result of the strike than it would cost to pay the 12.5c pay boost for the next six years.

Meanwhile, the employers continue a policy of harassment and back-to-work propaganda. They are greatly aided by Gov. Paul Patterson of Oregon and Gov. Arthur Langlie of Washington, both Republicans.

Oregon has an excellent conciliation law that requires the Governor to set up a three-man fact-finding board which must hold public hearings and has the power to subpena records and witnesses. Its findings are not binding, but they can be published.

It took weeks before Patterson appointed such a board. Now it has to study the situation. The employer member has indicated that if it subpenas any employer to appear before it, the latter will challenge the validity of the law and turn the whole thing into a time-consuming court case.

The two Governors proposed on Aug. 20 that the strikers return while a seven-man fact-finding board studies the problem and proposes a settlement within 90 days.

The IWA-CIO turned down the proposal because the board would be unable to make a binding decision; it could not subpena records or witnesses; the scope of its probe would be limited; the 90-day period would permit stalling a report until winter, when loggers can't work because of snow in the mountains, and there was no provision for public hearings.

First Gesture

The Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. on Aug. 19 made the first conciliatory gesture of any of the big operators, offering a 2.5c an hour pay increase. AFL leaders said they would recommend its acceptance by their membership.

The IWA on Aug. 21 asked for more, then offered to submit it to a referendum vote without comment. The company turned down this suggestion with the explanation that they knew it would be rejected without a recommendation.

"No matter how this thing turns out, the operators can't win," observed a leader of the boommen. "They found out we still can't be pushed around, and they've lost enough in profits so they'll think twice before they start another free-for-all."

"CHARGE IT"—Usually it's strictly "cash-and-carry" at the Fred Meyer chain store in Portland, Ore., but striking CIO Woodworkers say "charge it" under food relief plan set up by Local 5-3 during long Pacific Northwest walkout. Most IWA members are picketing along rail lines and at plant gates, but members of Local 5-36 (at right) took to the water. Small Columbia River boat is part of the "loggers' navy," used to picket huge Long-Bell and Weyerhaeuser mills at Longview, Wash. Some 70,000 IWA and AFL Lumber & Sawmill Workers are on strike.

Dodgers

Lumber operators have spent a lot of money on big ads in Pacific Northwest papers, blasting the IWA-CIO and urging potential scabs to take advantage of Taft-Hartley provisions aiding strike-breakers.

But they've been shy about debating strike issues with union leaders, turning down an invitation to appear on a Portland television panel program, along with union officials, for questions and answers on the walkout.

IWA Gets Help When It Counts

CIO Woodworkers are getting increasing financial support for the long Northwest strike.

Last week Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers advised IWA Pres. A. F. Hartung of a $25,000 donation from the UAW to assist the Woodworkers.

The IWA International Executive Board in mid-August set up a $50,000 fund for strike welfare.

One IWA local in British Columbia—where the union has won wage gains in recent settlements—sent a strike contribution of $1500 to the U. S. workers, said that was a "first installment."

TYPICAL OPERATION—Portland's Multnomah Lumber & Box Co. is typical of hundreds of struck operations in IWA strike. The Local 5-3 pickets (from left) are Carmen Rose, Business Agent Ed Coulter and Chalmers Williams.

Vigilantes Pull In Their Horns When IWA Wives Hint Boycott

STRANGE things happen in strikes and one of the oddest occurred at the small eastern Oregon town of Redmond.

On July 8, while some members of the CIO Woodworkers local were picketing the Ponderosa Sales Lumber Co., an employer rammed his car into them and struck the 64-year-old president of the local before he could get out of the way. The union official was hospitalized for a few days, but that didn't seem to upset the town people.

A few days later, when a few scabs started to go through the picket line, the town was in an uproar. A vigilante committee was organized to protect the scabs, but quickly disbanded after the wives of some IWA-CIO members said they might shop in other neighboring cities if the businessmen vigilantes didn't stop interfering with the strike.

Later one Woodworker was reported missing and possibly kidnapped because he didn't show up to go through the picket line. He had a big family and was getting bonus wages. Ponderosa Sales threatened him with the loss of his job if he didn't scab.

He succumbed to the temptation for a few days, then went to the local union office, and said he was ashamed and would stop going through the line.

The employer, meanwhile, reported him missing to the police. The Portland Oregonian had a banner headline on the report, and sent a reporter and photographer to the scene. The reporter quickly located the "missing man"—at his home.

N

Welfare Plan Helps Goodyear Strike Click

RELIEF RULES for URW-CIO Local 2 strikers are checked by Roger Cerasuolo, Virginia Heard (l.) and Sarah Artis.

EACH DAY Welfare and Relief Committee of strikers at Goodyear plant in Akron processes 365 applications for aid. Signs remind members that pickets are needed.

'Rubber Workers Are Victims Of Drive To Undermine Labor'

A radio address aimed at spreading "a better understanding" of the CIO Rubber Workers' strikes against Goodyear and Firestone was given over Station WAKR, Akron, O., by Dr. A. L. Lewis, the union's publicity director. Excerpts follow:

By DR. A. L. LEWIS

FOR NEARLY 20 years, collective bargaining has worked well in the rubber plants of Akron and elsewhere. Under that arrangement, the interests of both employers and employes have been protected. And best of all, a gratifying degree of prosperity has resulted for both management and labor—especially management.

The decline of labor-management relations began when the Taft-Hartley statute became effective. A vengeful Congress wished that monstrosity upon the land, and wage earners have been on the receiving end of all sorts of abuse and unfairness ever since.

In spite of the unnecessary and unjustified interference with our efforts to bargain collectively, we carried on with comparative success. However, with the advent of Ike's Administration, anti-labor members began to dominate the NLRB.

That was apparently the encouragement which big business had been awaiting. In their own words, they started to clip labor's wings. From that period on, a new attitude was clearly apparent at the bargaining table. Where heretofore an acceptable degree of harmony existed, the new look altered that atmosphere very materially. The national hostility generated by the new Republican Administration toward wage earners quickly caught hold of corporation officials.

The climate has proceeded to go from bad to worse. The climax was reached in our industry last month when Goodyear, U. S. Rubber and Goodrich assumed the old autocratic corporation pose which existed in what they so fondly refer to as "the good old days."

But it remained for the Firestone corporation's team of alleged negotiators to reach the last word in modern labor baiting and agitation. For two months, 25 officers of Firestone's eight URW-CIO local unions attempted to work out a mutually agreeable new contract to cover about 23,000 people.

Their efforts were met by the most insulting exhibition of indifference, contempt, condescension, sarcasm and derision that rubber workers have endured in 20 years.

Other Unions Are Hit

The Rubber Workers are not the only victims of this new attempt to undermine and break organized labor. Other unions, notably the CIO Electrical Workers and the CIO Woodworkers, are undergoing this same experience.

It is incredible that the Big Four of rubber, who have profited so handsomely since 1940, should suddenly assume an arbitrary, unbearable attitude. With the elimination of excess profits taxes they can make about the same profits this year as they did last, even though they sell 20% less.

Then, in addition to that windfall, a big business-operated administration has put through numerous other big business reforms which can be translated into wads of folding money. So, why should these high moguls of business suddenly undertake this foolish campaign of vindictiveness? What can they gain by developing an overwhelming spirit of resentment and bitterness among employes, as well as other millions of Americans?

This high-handed treatment of working men and women went out of style with the Model T Ford. It is our fervent hope that the gents who pull the strings in Big Four rubber will quickly recognize that their present tactics are 'way behind times and are extremely unpopular among the great general public.

INTERVIEWERS question members who are in need of assistance (top), other interviewers (lower) fill out order blanks. Rubber Workers' strike at Goodyear began July 7.

STRIKE KITCHEN's fine meals are praised by Local 2 Policeman R. L. Gowens to Art Harrison (l.), Brady Athoy.

ABOUT 1000 MEALS are served daily in strike kitchen, which Local 2 bought from a defunct Akron restaurant. Delicious food is prepared by 35 members who volunteered.

You And Your Money—

Coverage, Benefits Expanded Under Revised Social Security Measure

THE ADMINISTRATION'S revision of the Social Security Act, containing virtually all the changes proposed by Pres. Eisenhower, passed both houses of Congress and was at the White House last week—the last important bill enacted by the 83rd Congress.

The legislation increases benefits, broadens coverage, raises rates and makes other changes in the Old Age and Survivors Insurance System.

The CIO has described the Administration's program as "good so far as it goes," but maintained it does not go far enough. The measure, as passed, provides benefit increases too small too meet the needs of present and future pensioners, the CIO declared, and does nothing to ease the plight of the temporarily or permanently disabled worker beyond freeze his rights.

The Lehman-Dingell Bill, which the CIO supported, would have granted greater benefit increases, protected the permanently sick or disabled, and contained a new program providing payments up to $45 a week for workers temporarily sick or disabled. Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) declared during final debate in the Senate that he will push his proposals again in the next Congress.

Major features of the revised law are:

COVERAGE: Approximately 10 million additional persons were brought under social security coverage. Included were about 3.6 million self-employed farm operators, two million farm workers, 250,000 domestic workers, 150,000 otherwise unprotected federal employes, 100,000 industrial home workers, 50,000 fishermen, and certain self-employed professional workers, including accountants, architects, engineers and funeral directors, as well as clergymen by individual option. In addition, some 3.5 million state and local employes were made eligible if a majority in a governmental unit votes for such coverage.

PRIMARY BENEFITS (the amount due a worker himself): For workers now retired, the minimum increases from $25 to $30 a month, the maximum from $85 to $98.50. For workers retiring in the future, the benefits will range from $30 to $108.50.

(The wife of a retired worker, if she also is over 65, gets half of her husband's primary benefit. Thus minimum benefits for a retired couple are increased from $37.50 to $45 a month. Maximum benefits go from $127.50 to $147.75 for those already retired, and to $162.50 for those who retire in the future.)

FAMILY BENEFITS: Maximum benefits are increased from $168.75 per month to $200 per month for both those now retired and those who retire in the future.

TAXES: Will be levied on the first $4200 ($350 monthly average) of annual earnings beginning Jan. 1, instead of the present $3600. Present rates of 2% each for worker and employer, and 3% for the self-employed, remain unchanged until 1960. Then they begin a climb which will make them 3.5% each for workers and employers, and 4.875% for the self-employed, in 1970, with a further rise to 4% and 6%, respectively, in 1975.

EFFECTIVE DATE for higher benefit payments: Generally, after six calendar quarters of coverage under the higher ($4200) tax base. Transitionally, coverage for six quarters after June 1953. Average increase for a retired worker will be $6 a month, proportionately more for spouse and dependent children.

COMPUTATION BASIS: Now the average of covered earnings in all years after 1937 or 1951, whichever is higher. The revision continues this basis, but eliminates the five years with lowest earnings, as well as periods of total disability lasting more than six months.

EARNINGS AFTER RETIREMENT: One month's benefits are lost at present for each $80 a pensioner earns in covered employment up to the age of 75, when he collects full benefits regardless of earnings. Henceforth, the pensioner may earn up to $1200 a year in covered employment without losing his benefits, and will be paid full benefits after reaching the age of 72 regardless of earnings.

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE: The temporary $5 a month increase in the federal share of relief funds for the needy aged, which would have expired Sept. 30, was continued for two years.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

MODERATE-INCOME FAMILIES have become interested in mutual funds as a possible method of making their small savings earn more money, especially for retirement needs. In the past decade's boom in mutual funds, small investors have already put over $4 billion into them.

Caution On Mutual Funds

As this department has cautioned, mutual funds carry some of the same risks as buying stocks. Since a mutual fund pools your money and those of other investors, and buys an assortment of stocks, if the stock market goes down, fund shares drop too, although in the case of diversified funds, probably not as sharply.

Also most mutuals charge a comparatively high sales fee. On an investment of $1000, you pay $80 in sales expense in most funds, compared to $15-$20 of broker's commission to buy $1000 of stock.

Some advisers, like Louis Engel, author of "How To Buy Stocks," recommend people buy their own stocks rather than invest through mutual funds. A family could buy one of the so-called defensive stocks (which usually don't go down as much in case of a general drop in stocks), and get a yield of 5-6% compared to the 3.5-5% many mutual funds currently pay.

SUCH DEFENSIVE STOCKS include telephone and utility companies, some of the large food and dairy corporations and shoe manufacturers, and banking and insurance company stocks.

Our own feeling remains this: you can still earn more by investing in yourself first. Without risk of capital, a family can earn 4-8% by prepaying its mortgage, life and property insurance premiums, and 12-36% by buying its cars, furniture and appliances for cash instead of on time.

For those who wish to make additional investment in mutual funds, this department has prepared a list classified according to investment objective, with the help of Arnold Green, mutual-funds department manager of Bache & Co.; Philip Gordis, insurance and investments specialist, and other professional advisers.

GENERALLY MUTUAL FUNDS are of three types: balanced funds hold bonds and preferred stocks as well as common, and yield lower earnings but also fluctuate less; income or common stock funds provide more current income but tend to fluctuate in value as the stock market goes up or down; growth funds emphasize investment in corporations believed to have more than average growth possibilities, although current dividends may be small.

Advisers generally suggest that older people wanting retirement income now select an "income" fund, while younger families building future savings might pick a growth fund.

Among the most conservative "balanced" funds are Wellington, Boston Fund, Eaton & Howard Balanced Fund and Scudder, Stevens & Clark.

Among representative "income" funds are Massachusetts Investors Trust, Dividend Shares, Axe-Houghton A and B Funds, and National Stock series.

Leading "growth" funds include Eaton & Howard Stock Fund, Loomis & Sayles, Axe-Houghton Stock Fund, Incorporated Investors, Fundamental Investors, Affiliated Fund, Value Line Fund.

Comments: If you buy fund shares outright rather than on monthly installments, more of your money goes to work right away to earn dividends, and you don't lose as much if you want your capital back in the early years of your investment.

(Copyright 1954 by Sidney Margolius)

BLS Index Hits The Rafters; Auto Workers Get Penny Back

THE COST OF LIVING, pushed by ever-rising food prices, went up for the third consecutive month in the 30-day period ending July 15 and gave a 1c per hour wage increase to one million members of the CIO Auto Workers.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported an increase of .1 point in the Consumer Price Index to a reading of 115.2. This matched the 1954 high, set in January, and was only .2 point under the all-time high of 115.4 chalked up in October 1953.

Acting BLS Commissioner Aryness Joy Wickens said the .7% hike in food prices was attributable to the drought, which sent up costs of fresh fruits and vegetables. Eggs, milk and coffee also rose, as did rents, fuel, cigarets and various services, but costs were down for new autos and summer clothing.

The 1c wage increase for UAW-CIO members offsets a decrease of the same amount they suffered in April under the escalator clauses in major contracts. UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who also is CIO president, pointed out that while it enables them to keep pace with mounting costs, millions of other people must cut down on purchases.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS index:

Period	Index		Period	Old Index	New Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1953:	Jan. 15	190.3	113.9
1943 monthly average	123.6		Feb. 15	188.6	113.4
1944 monthly average	125.5		Mar. 15	188.8	113.6
1945 monthly average	128.4		Apr. 15	188.3	113.7
1946 monthly average	139.3		May 15	188.8	114.0
1947 monthly average	159.2		June 15	190.9	114.5
1948 monthly average	171.2		July 15		114.7
1949 monthly average	169.1		Aug. 15		115.0
1950 monthly average	171.2		Sept. 15		115.2
1951 monthly average	185.9		Oct. 15		115.4
1952 monthly average	190.6 (old index)		Nov. 15		115.0
1953 monthly average	114.4 (new index)		Dec. 15		114.9
1954 monthly average	114.9	1954:	Jan. 15		115.2
			Feb. 15		115.0
			Mar. 15		114.8
			Apr. 15		114.6
			May 15		115.0
			June 15		115.1
			July 15		115.2

Reuther Hails Housing Project In Detroit Slums

THE PROPOSED Gratiot-Orleans housing development in Detroit was hailed last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther. He is chairman of the Committee on Planning and Design of the Citizens Redevelopment Committee, which is in charge of the project.

Reuther said the development "is being approached not just as another housing project but as an opportunity to demonstrate the great possibilities that cleared slum areas offer in developing wholesome healthy neighborhoods in the centers of our urban communities."

He also announced the appointment of three of the country's leading architectural firms to draw up project plans. They are Oskar Stonorov, Philadelphia, consulting architect in the building of Solidarity House, CIO Auto Workers' international headquarters in Detroit; Leinweber, Yamasaki and Hellmuth of Detroit and St. Louis, and Victor Gruen Associates of Detroit,

Bread Prices Up As Parity Cut

A few hours after passage of the Eisenhower Administration's sliding scale support law was assured, big baking companies announced that the price of bread would go up. The law cuts wheat support levels 8%.

UNION MADE, FOR SURE—CIO Steelworkers award a union label to Gravely garden tractors at Dunbar, W. Va., union picnic. Holding label are V. D. Tipett (left), Gravely representative, and Miles Stanley, USA-CIO Local 3715 president. Approving are USA-CIO Reps. Ralph Spindler (left), H. R. Richards and J. C. Carroll.

DOLLARS to help train an Asian trade union organizer were collected at a CIO Rubber Workers summer school at Ohio State University. Building a democratic Asia was the theme of classes on international affairs.

Dollars From URW School Help Malayan Rubber Union

"DOLLARS for a democratic Asia" was the theme at the CIO Rubber Workers summer school at Ohio State University, Columbus, O.

Over $50 was collected from URW-CIO members at the school to help train an Asian union organizer at the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions school in Calcutta, India.

Appropriately enough, there is an excellent chance that this organizer may be signing up union members on Malayan rubber plantations, where the wage is 50c a day.

The collection was taken after three lively sessions on world affairs. Bill Kemsley, CIO representative to the ICFTU in New York, and Ray Larkin of URW Local 5 in Akron, O., who recently took part in the CIO Scandinavian workshop, led a discussion.

Classes in international affairs were taught by Herb Levine of the American Friends Service Committee and James Turner, URW fair employment practices specialist.

The Asian Trade Union College in Calcutta, first and only permanent school of its kind in the Far East, holds three-month classes in trade union history, collective bargaining, law and economics. Students learn by doing, visiting plantations and factories and helping local unions.

One URW student put it this way:

"Workers helping workers is the best effective way I know of winning a democratic world, a world based on human dignity instead of Communist or corporation exploitation of man. As a Rubber Worker and CIO member, I'm proud to take my part in building a better world."

De Gasperi Mourned By CIO President

The "deep regret" of the CIO over the death of former Premier Alcide de Gasperi of Italy was extended to his family and country in a cable from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther to Amintore Fanfani, secretary of the Italian Christian Democratic Party.

"Alcide de Gasperi was a great Italian patriot," Reuther said, "but his vision was not limited by narrow, nationalistic interests. He carried on his tireless efforts to achieve the unity of Europe until almost the very moment of his death. We know that the ideal which he exemplified will continue to inspire countless millions of his fellowmen."

'Prosperity' Myth Punctured By Michigan Jobless Rulings

THE GOP's "prosperity" myth was punctured again in Michigan as long model change-overs start hitting the auto industry.

The developing fall peak in auto unemployment—with shutdowns for new models coming after weeks of declining production of 1954 cars — forced changes in reporting schedules for unemployed workers filing for jobless compensation.

At Chrysler Corp. in Detroit, unemployment hit 27,000 with a peak of 35,000 idle expected soon as plants closed to retool for new models.

Bracing itself for the surging tide of jobless, the Michigan Employment Security Commission instituted new rules for those reporting to collect unemployment checks. The new schedule, MESC said, "will reduce the time necessary to stand in line in order to file."

The revised procedure is aimed at readying the commission for an increase in unemployment which is expected to reach 300,000 in the state this fall.

The model changeovers are expected to run at least six weeks and as long as 10 weeks in the cases of some auto firms.

Great Lakes Steel in Detroit has cut its work force by 1000 and said more would be laid off in the near future because of the drop in the demand for steel. More than 2000 of this firm's 11,000 workers are out on the streets.

Detroit's welfare department reported that thousands of workers who have exhausted their unemployment checks are applying for relief aid.

Despite stringent rules some 6000 families are now on welfare in contrast to a budget estimate that the figure would average 3700 for the year which began in July. Unemployment in Detroit is estimated at 10% of the work force.

1000 In Buffalo Face Job Elimination

"Ike's 'Good Times' Not Evident Here"

So headlined The Buffalo Union Leader, local CIO weekly, in reporting that 1000 auto workers face elimination of their jobs in the upstate New York industrial city.

The Buffalo Chevrolet management informed Local 424 of the CIO Auto Workers that 1000 workers in the gear and axle plant will not be recalled after the coming shutdown for new models. Their jobs have been eliminated by new machinery and method changes.

Referee Bars UAW Lawyers From Jobless Pay Claim Cases

A DOUBLE-barreled blast at the compensation rights of more than 11,500 Ford workers directly, and at all CIO Auto Workers members indirectly, has been fired by Samuel Sternberg, referee for the Michigan Employment Security Commission.

Sternberg ruled that UAW claimants for jobless pay cannot be represented by a UAW attorney without direct authorization by them and that claimants cannot be represented by any lay person or organization.

Earlier, he disqualified the Ford workers in Michigan from collecting unemployment checks for the period they were idled because of a strike in Ford's Canton, O., plant.

STERNBERG dismissed the appeals of 5800 claimants who had not given express authorization to UAW Attorney A. L. Zwerdling and did not ratify his filing of appeals in their behalf.

The referee, described by the UAW as "known for his hostility to unions," cited the canons of the American Bar Association as opposed to an organization attorney appearing for individual members.

He also contended that the Michigan Legislature intended representation in unemployment compensation cases to be the same as in courts—by lawyers only, chosen by individual clients.

In his ruling that laymen and individuals could not represent claimants, Sternberg admitted he was reversing 16 years' practice under Michigan laws. His decision is also contrary to the Labor Dept. Bureau of Employment Security custom, which does not regard a referee proceeding as a judicial process.

Republic Aviation To Lay Off 3000

The Republic Aviation Corp. at Farmingdale, N. Y., announced that it is laying off 3000 employes because too many completed planes for the Air Force had accumulated on the field.

Open Shop Move Fought In Maryland

THE CIO is preparing to meet head-on a Maryland campaign for a "right-to-scab" law.

The Maryland CIO Council immediately countered the opening of headquarters of the Maryland Right-To-Work Committee at Baltimore.

The Council called a meeting to chart the course in fighting the so-called "right-to-work" bill, which the committee will push at the 1954 session of the Maryland General Assembly, opening next Jan. 2.

Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Della said the Maryland CIO will make every effort to defeat the committee-proposed measure. A similar bill did not get out of committee at the 1947, 1952, and 1953 Assembly sessions.

DELLA SAID that he understood the bill is patterned after a Virginia law, which makes the union shop ineffective and bans the closed shop.

The Council's board will meet with Maryland directors and staff members of CIO unions to plan the fight at 7:30 p.m., Aug. 31, at the CIO Auto Workers Hall, 526 St. Paul Place, Baltimore.

Eisenhower Bars Higher Tariff On Lead And Zinc

HIGHER import duties on lead and zinc were rejected by Pres. Eisenhower in a ruling in which he ordered a sharp increase in federal stockpiling of the metals from domestic production.

Both moves were urged by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a request to Eisenhower last July in which he explained that members of CIO unions, particularly the Steelworkers and Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, work in the mines and smelters. The higher import levy had been recommended by the U. S. Tariff Commission in answer to the industry's plea that it was no longer able to meet foreign competition.

The Steelworkers and UGCCW, at a conference of delegates from 17 states in Denver in March, proposed a detailed program for aiding the economically ailing industries.

Ike Gets Bills Hiking Shipyard Jobs

SEVERAL bills passed by the 83rd Congress will mean more employment for shipyard workers but none for merchant seamen and licensed ship personnel, according to Executive Sec. Hoyt S. Haddock of the CIO Maritime Committee.

Haddock said that "status quo" of employment of merchant seamen will be maintained even if Pres. Eisenhower signs the permanent 50-50 bill. This bill would require that at least 50% of all foreign aid be shipped in U. S. merchant ships in the future.

He said that there is some doubt that the President will sign the measure because of the pressure from the State Dept. acting on behalf of the foreign merchant marine.

"The U. S. is the only maritime nation in the world," Haddock said, "that does not have an active policy of promoting its merchant marine over those of foreign nations."

OTHER MEASURES will mean additional employment in the depressed shipyard industry. Haddock said that there will be no additional seamen employed because the new ships to be built simply will replace those in use.

One bill provides $82.6 million for ship construction, repair and conversion. Under it $44.5 million will be a subsidy to the Moore-McCormack Lines and the Grace Line for the construction of four passenger-cargo ships.

Also provided by the measure is $11.1 million for modernization of four Liberty cargo ships. Haddock said this is an experiment to determine whether the government should embark on a program of modernizing ships in the National Defense Reserve Fleet.

Haddock said that in his opinion no additional ships would be built under the trade-in-and-build tanker provision of the measure. He said Congress enacted this section simply to "bail out" owners of tankers, who will receive from the government more than their value for obsolete ships.

THE PRESIDENT has signed another measure that provides for the construction of 20 tankers. Fifteen of them will be built by private companies for operation by them under 10-year Military Sea Transport Service leases. Five will be built for the Navy.

Under another measure the Navy will have $450 million to build merchant and troop transport ships in private yards. Still another measure provides $18 million for the Maritime Administration to spend on repairing ships in its mothball fleet.

PROMOTION — Ralph Bunche, the first American Negro to win a Nobel peace prize, has been promoted to United Nations undersecretary from director of the UN's Trusteeship Division.

Reuther On Labor Day Hits Apostles Of Fear

(Continued from Page 3)

world has been, and continues to be, in the vanguard of freedom's fighters against the evil forces of Communist tyranny and all other ugly forms of totalitarianism.

Free labor has effectively met the Communist challenge because free labor has worked at the practical day-to-day job of fighting economic and social injustices which are the essential ingredients out of which communism builds its power. The free labor movement of the world, joined in the Int'l. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, fights for social progress, for higher living standards, and for a fuller measure of economic and social justice for all people everywhere.

Labor recognizes that all of the basic human and democratic values that we cherish are indivisible, and that they can be made secure only as they are made universal and enjoyed by people everywhere. Free labor acts in the belief that the struggle for peace and freedom are inseparably woven together with the practical struggle for social justice.

Ours Is Major Task

The nature of the Communist conspiracy for world domination compels America and the free world to be strong militarily. While building adequate military power to check aggression on the battlefields, we must however at the same time launch a total war against poverty, hunger, disease, ignorance, and man's other ancient enemies. In this task America must assume the major responsibility, for the American economy is freedom's greatest material asset.

The American economy, fully mobilized, is capable of forging the weapons of defense and at the same time providing the tools with which to fight an all-out struggle against poverty, hunger, and social injustice.

We must prove to the hungry and desperate peoples of the world that the cause in which we enlist their support, their cooperation, and their loyalty is the building of a world society in which people everywhere can live in peace and enjoy both freedom and economic well-being.

Only as we effectively deal with the problem of achieving and maintaining full employment and full production, making the good things of life for people in peace time and raising living standards—limited only by our resources and technology—and by helping the dispossessed peoples of the world help themselves to achieve a measure of economic and social justice can we effectively strip the mask of hypocrisy from Communist propaganda.

We must make these millions of hungry and desperate people understand that the Communists offer the promise of economic security at the tragic price of political and spiritual enslavement and that the world which we are dedicated to build will make it possible for people everywhere to live in peace and enjoy a full measure of both economic security and political and spiritual freedom.

The American labor movement, during its many historic struggles, has erected a living monument to the fact that people can have both bread and freedom. So long as the world is divided between those who are free and those who are slaves, between those who are hungry and those who are fed, neither peace nor freedom will be secure. Peace and freedom cannot be made secure so long as we divide up economic scarcity. Peace and freedom can be made secure only when the world learns to create and distribute economic abundance.

The Positive Fight

America must apply its economic and political genius in helping to point the way to mobilize abundance in the positive fight against poverty, hunger and human insecurity. Only such a positive fight can successfully release the economic force and spiritual strength of the free people and be the ultimate answer to the challenge of Communist tyranny.

On this Labor Day American labor, strengthened in the solidarity of human brotherhood, is better equipped than ever before to make its maximum contribution to the strengthening of American democracy and in the world struggle for peace, freedom and justice.

During the past year, American labor, through the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, has taken a historic step toward laying the basis for the ultimate achievement of a united labor movement.

The no-raiding agreement approved by more than 100 international unions demonstrates a growing maturity on the part of labor leadership and clearly demonstrates the broad acceptance of the basic fact that the whole labor movement transcends in importance any segment of the labor movement. The no-raiding agreement is an important beginning on which labor solidarity and unity must be fashioned in the days ahead.

In the period ahead American labor will redouble its efforts in cooperation with men and women of good will in other walks of our society in a joint effort to narrow the gap between American democracy's noble promises and its lack of practical performance in many areas of our national life. On this Labor Day we resolve to renew our efforts to have government and industry take needed steps to achieve and maintain a peacetime economy based upon full employment and full production.

A Call For Action

There is no lack of work to be done in America. Full employment and full production can be achieved and maintained if we have the good sense to gear our productive economy to the tremendous unfilled needs of the American people and to make our contribution to the total struggle against world hunger.

On this Labor Day we again call upon responsible people in government to take steps to bring together the leaders of industry, agriculture, labor and consumer groups to jointly and cooperatively work together in the achievement of a dynamic, expanding full employment-full production economy.

Every American is not automatically entitled to security, but he is entitled to an opportunity to earn his economic security with a job at decent wages that will provide him and his family an ever higher standard of living commensurate with our developing technology.

It is economically stupid and morally wrong to attempt to measure today's economic activities by yesterday's performances. Nineteen hundred fifty-four must be measured not by 1952 or 1953 but by the greater possibilities of today and the even greater possibilities of tomorrow.

The American economy can remain free only as it remains dynamic and expanding. American labor has faith in our free enterprise system, but we shall continue to insist that our economy be kept free and enterprising and that ownership conveys responsibilities not only to the stockholders but to the workers and to the entire community.

The Decline Of Jobs

In the light of our resources and our needs our nation's unemployment is both un-American, un-economic, and unnecessary. There are 141 labor markets with more than 6% unemployment and these include 45 labor surplus areas with 12% or more unemployment.

During the last year, jobs in manufacturing decreased by 1,675,000. Counting the fully unemployed and those on short work weeks, the American economy is currently under-producing in the amount of approximately $30 billion annually.

A continuation of this criminal economic waste will deny millions of Americans a fuller share of the good things of life and will immeasurably weaken America in the face of its challenging world responsibilities.

In addition to raising our economic sights so that we can mobilize and share economic abundance, we must, if we are to provide moral leadership, also raise the level of political morality.

We need to get back to the principles and values on which the founding fathers built our republic and which have been the source of strength of our free society. We need to reject the apostles of fear, hatred, and hysteria who would shackle the free human spirit with the deadly cloak of conformity.

A Call For Unity

We must defend with fearless devotion the free market place of ideas, for this is the fountain of our strength. We cannot lead the free world if we continue a nation divided within itself in which smear, slander, and suspicion become the accepted standards of political conduct.

On this day American labor calls upon the American people to rise above the fears that divide us and to find a new unity through the strength of our common faith.

American labor has unlimited confidence in the loyalty and good sense of the American people. We are confident that the American people will overwhelmingly respond to positive, courageous leadership based upon a return to the basic principles of American democracy.

American labor calls upon the leaders of our government to shape our policies and our programs in the image of our faith, not our fears, in the image of our hopes, not our hatreds. In such a program of rededication to the basic principles and ideals, the people of America can count upon the undivided support of the American labor movement.

A Program For Prosperity

In his Labor Day statement, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther suggested this 10-point program for a prosperous America:

A FULL PRODUCTION—full employment program, geared to meeting serious economic deficits in both America and the world, will keep America fully at work for many years to come. Specifically, we must:

1. Demonstrate the courage and the good judgment to launch a comprehensive housing program to wipe out the slums in our cities and the shacks on our farms.
2. Take immediate steps to bring our school systems up to current needs in order to provide every American child, regardless of race, creed, or color, an educational opportunity to facilitate the maximum intellectual and spiritual growth of every child.
3. Expand our health facilities to insure that every American citizen will have access to modern health facilities.
4. Raise social security benefits to adequate levels in order to provide security and dignity for our aging citizens.
5. Increase the minimum wage to $1.25 per hour as the first step providing every American family with a minimum standard of living.
6. Adopt a farm program to give farmers full economic equality with other economic groups.
7. Adopt an international program geared to the courageous use of our food surpluses to fight poverty and hunger in the world—such action will provide the free world with a moral force greater than the power of the H-bomb.
8. Launch a comprehensive program—highway construction, flood control, and resource development projects.
9. Enact a fair tax program based upon tax relief to millions of middle and low-income families, instead of helping wealthy corporations, in order to strengthen the purchasing power base of our economy.
10. Adopt social legislation to improve and strengthen collective bargaining, to guarantee civil rights, and to protect civil liberties. American labor calls upon the leaders of government and industry who currently occupy positions of authority and responsibility to abandon their timid policies and to raise their economic sights.

Carey, Kroll Urge Vigorous Fight To Elect A Better Congress

(Continued from Page 3)

ervation of our economic health. We in the CIO believe that 'what's good for America is good for the CIO.'

Kroll warned workers that in less than two months from Labor Day, they will be facing a vital question at the polls on Nov. 2—"whether there will be jobs for people who want to work."

"In the 20 years of Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry Truman," he said, "the American working man and his family, together with the American farmer and his family, had friends in Washington.

"Government officials holding high office understood and had sympathy for the man who was unemployed or working short time, the farmer whose price at the market place did not meet the costs of production, to say nothing of his labor, the small businessman whose customers had lost their purchasing power, the professional men and women whose clients were unable to meet their bills.

"Today there is no such sympathy and understanding in Washington for the problems of the average man and his family.

"There is sympathy and concern only for the big corporation and the taxes it must pay, the stockholder and the return on his dividends, the private utility corporation and its rates, the oil companies and the offshore oil, the banker and his interest rates.

"Never before in any two years of American history has so much of the nation's wealth and treasure of natural resources been so looted for the benefit of so few as in the past two years. Never has the good will of nations abroad been dissipated so fast.

"These are problems each American should ponder as he spends this holiday with his loved ones.

The CIO-PAC chieftain warned of an intensive, high pressure campaign to be conducted over the next few months by New York advertising firms with the aid of oil money.

"We must beware of these merchants of pie in the sky. We must examine the issues and the candidates and the record. In the past two years we have seen a shocking record of promises denied and promises broken, of weak and divided leadership that merely serves to cloak reactionary performance with honeyed words."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

AS WE COME to another Labor Day, we pause to take inventory of what we have accomplished in the past year, and in the years gone by, and we consider what problems we must face in the future.

The state of our union is sound.

Organizationally, we continue to move forward, in spite of the anti-labor atmosphere created by selfish men in the present Administration.

In collective bargaining, we have held our own. Some of our unions have even managed to move ahead in the face of great pressure from certain employers who would strip away the fruits of untiring years of struggle and effort.

In one real sense, we have achieved a great victory; for among the workers in our unions, the spirit of unity is stronger than ever. Political administrations come and go, but just as our fundamental faith in our nation remains unchallenged by the political fortunes of the moment, so, too, does our faith in the spirit of man which sustains and guides us.

OUR FAITH IS SUPPORTED by the memory of the great men who gave so much of their lives to the trade union movement. No reverses in the political climate can detract from the spiritual heritage left us by Philip Murray and Van A. Bittner. No setbacks can still the voice of Allan S. Haywood, as he urged us to "roll the union on." No force of selfishness can dim the message of hope we inherit from Sidney Hillman.

In my 20 years of working for the union, our leaders made only one demand on me and my fellow workers. They kept before us the example of the people who had gone before, and who had pioneered and suffered, the people who gave their all to the trade union cause, and to the welfare of the workingmen and women of our nation and of the world. In their name, and in their memory, our leaders taught us that we had to go on building stronger unions, better conditions, for more and more workers.

They taught us patience and courage and devotion to God and nation. They taught us by the way they led their own lives. They held out to us an absolute faith in their moral convictions—for our guidance.

Their faith was not of the kind that shifted with current events, whatever problem might arise that had to be faced.

Right now, we face a political problem and challenge. It is the great challenge of Labor Day, 1954. It demands of us that we carry into the political life of the nation the idealism that has been passed down to us from leader to leader, and with which we have attempted to deal in the industrial life of our country.

Our political duties cannot be shoved aside—for most of the world is watching us to find out how we face up our responsibilities. Our leaders not only gave us a sense of idealism, they also gave us a sense of the responsibilities of which I speak, a responsibility to all workers, everywhere.

We work not only for our own salvation, but for the salvation of the whole world, and that means we cannot falter in our search for justice under God. How can we go before the peoples of Asia and Europe and say, "Follow us, we will help you—," if we cannot lead ourselves to a better way of life, politically, socially, economically.

THE JOB WE HAVE BEFORE US is a job for men, men of conviction and courage, men of high character, with deep spiritual beliefs, men who are not afraid of change in this world—the kind of men to whom the people can look for genuine guidance and leadership—men like our own great leaders, whose standards of moral conduct cannot be swayed by expediency.

We have the task of finding such men and supporting their political efforts with every bit of strength we can muster. We have to bring into the political arena the same faith which has seen organized labor wipe out large areas of poverty, hunger and suffering in our industrial life—and that our deeds and words will be posted in the hearts and minds of men as the standards of conduct and the moral principles which are the true meaning of democracy.

It is not always easy to find such men. It is no more easy to go on day after day, fighting for the basic spiritual values of our heritage. But we have the spirit of Philip Murray with us, and Van Bittner, and Allan Haywood, and Sidney Hillman—and with their inspiration fresh in our hearts, we can rededicate ourselves, this Labor Day, 1954, to peace and plenty among the peoples of the world—to the Golden Rule of love for one's fellow man.

Kohler Workers On Labor Day Start Sixth Month On Strike

A HUGE Labor Day parade and bratwurst roast at Sheboygan, Wis., will mark the beginning of the sixth month of the CIO Auto Workers strike at the nearby Kohler Co. plant.

Some 7500 workers are expected to march in the parade which will be held under the auspices of the Sheboygan County Win-the-Strike Committee, which represents all labor organizations in the county.

The strike began Apr. 5 after two months of futile negotiations during which UAW-CIO sought to bring the agreement up to the standard of other organized plants in the bathroom fixture industry.

The community has rallied behind the strikers. Dozens of local merchants and scores of interested citizens have been helping the strikers.

WORKERS in practically every plant in the county have contributed money and other support to the strikers. Money is pouring in to the strike fund campaign sponsored by the Wisconsin CIO Council.

The strikers' ranks are holding firm. Some 3000 UAW members are on strike at the plant which ordinarily employs 3500 workers.

The UAW-CIO members recently rejected unanimously the company's offer of a 3c an hour wage increase at a rally at which UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey was the principal speaker.

HE PLEDGED continued UAW-CIO support to the strike. Mazey pointed out that the company was unable to get more than 10% of production by using strikebreakers and said that the walkout is "effective."

The union originally demanded a 20c hourly wage increase with 5c an hour additional for skilled labor and a union shop.

At the last negotiating session, the union halved its wage demands and agreed to a modified union shop, but the company refused to raise its offer above 3c an hour and said it would never agree to a union shop. Other issues include seniority, pensions and arbitration of discharges.

BACK AT WORK after a long illness, CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe (left) lost no time in settling down on the job. He confers with his aide, R. J. Thomas.

IUE Negotiators Propose Acceptance Of GE Offer

THE NEGOTIATING Committee of the CIO Electrical Workers has informed the General Electric Co. that it will recommend to the union's GE Conference Board acceptance of the revised company offer with an effective date on wages of Aug. 2. The board will meet in New York City Sept. 2.

The offer provides a wage increase of 2.68% an hour with a minimum of 4c. The average increase is slightly more than 5c an hour.

Other contract changes include payment of holidays falling on Saturdays (in the contract year, Christmas and New Year's fall on Saturday); an improved vacation credit system, and a change in the holiday pay basis on continuous operations.

OTHER IMPROVEMENTS are raising to one year the continuation of service credit when time lost is due to compensable disability, and a change in overtime payment when an employe works more than 16 hours.

The offer also alters the language on upgradings and promotions, giving first consideration to present employes and adding three classifications to the list of occupations having progressive increases in job rates.

If the conference board approves acceptance, the term, on other than wages, will be from Sept. 2, 1954, to Sept. 15, 1955.

The company provided the union with two letters, one covering decentralization and job security, the other providing for meetings in the spring to discuss contract changes.

JOHN H. CALLAHAN, conference board chairman, issued the following statement in announcing the recommendations:

"The company has not satisfactorily met the problem of protecting GE workers through a wage reopener against rises in the cost of living and other economic changes during the life of the agreement.

"WE DO NOT accept as final the denial of the June 1, 1954, effective date as a punishment by the company to the more than 100,000 GE workers who insisted upon proper collective bargaining and the right to stand up for what they believe to be just and fair. The company has not fulfilled its obligation to furnish the union with information essential to collective bargaining.

"It is the intention of the committee to make these points clear to the conference board and to our membership with the idea of pursuing these matters vigorously during the life of the agreement."

Matles Loses Shop In His Own Local

James Matles, director of organization of the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers, isn't able to hold even members of his own home local in line.

A unit of the local, employes of Belmet Products, New York City, last week cast 24 votes for the CIO Electrical Workers in a National Labor Relations Board election. There were no "no union" voters.

UE, which had represented the plant 17 years, did not dare to test its strength and withdrew before the election was held.

TWU Contract Saves Members From Layoffs

MORE THAN 6000 members of the CIO Transport Workers employed by American Airlines had the value of their contract brought home recently.

When AFL pilots struck early this month, some 1800 engineers, stewards and stewardesses who are covered by agreements with other unions were laid off almost immediately.

TWU members, who are ground maintenance men and clerks, continued on their jobs during the 21 days of the walkout, protected by a contract that requires two weeks' notice of a layoff. The company did not issue the layoff notices until about a week ago. The AFL pilots maintained no picket lines, and did not request them to quit work.

Phone Learner Wage Upped

MINIMUM wage rates for learners in the independent telephone industry were raised by 7.5c an hour, effective Sept. 20.

The CIO Communications Workers had asked Wage and Hour Administrator McComb either to eliminate the learners' rates or raise them 10c an hour.

Elimination of the rates would have put into effect the 75c minimum wage as provided by law. There are no learners' rates in independent companies under contract with CWA-CIO.

Under the ruling the minimum for the first 320 hours will be 67.5c instead of 60c and for the remaining 160 hours 72.5c instead of 65c.

CIO Night Features A Shutout Game

More than 200 CIO members saw Ray Crone of the Toledo Sox pitch a no-hit, no-run game to beat the Saints 3-0 during the fifth annual game sponsored by St. Paul, Minn., CIO Council.

Economist Stern Of BLS Retires

Boris Stern, long associated with the Bureau of Labor Statistics as an economist and specialist in labor information, recently retired after 30 years' service with the federal government. In 1951 he received the Labor Dept.'s Distinguished Service Award for the individual initiative involved in planning the Secretary of Labor's yearbook.

On Capitol Hill The Promises Still Echo . . .

By MILTON PLUMB

CAPITOL HILL this week is as empty as Republican 1952 campaign promises to help the people proved to be. The Republican 83rd Congress, first under a GOP Administration in 20 years, called it quits Aug. 20 and went home to face the voters.

Its members left knowing the record of the Congress is certain to be the key issue in the coming November elections.

At the start of the second session, the President himself warned that unless the congressmen enacted a "dynamic, progressive program" they would not deserve re-election.

Even so, the GOP Congress limped through the first 14 of the 15 months it was in session without making a real beginning at dealing with the legislation before it. This meant that hundreds of bills had to be rushed through in the closing days and it will be some time before the full impact of "gimmicks" buried in the new laws is realized.

'A Shameful Record'

CIO Legislative Chief Robert Oliver, in his department's "Report on Congress," summed up the 83rd's record last week as being "in the aggregate" contrary to the public interest. In those terms, he said, "the record is shameful."

"The few constructive things which were accomplished with bipartisan support," the department continued, "are substantially outweighed by the many harmful actions which were forced through the slender Republican majorities in Congress."

The GOP, however, took a different tack. Even before the session ended, the Republican National Committee and the White House began their now-until-November hoopla intended to make the 83rd's record seem like a mountain of achievement. They termed it "outstanding."

The GOP committee, obviously smarting from the "do-nothing" label history attached to the Republican 80th Congress, said it wants the 83rd called the "Can Do" Congress. The White House immediately tried to back this up by claiming Congress gave the President 83% of his legislative program.

White House Claims

Demonstrating on charts, presidential aides told a press conference that out of 65 Eisenhower proposals only 11 had been shelved. This backfired the next day when the unobliging Congress voted down one of the items the White House had figured as passed in compiling the average.

Then Washington reporters noting, as the Associated Press put it, that "the White House 'won' and 'lost' columns included many minor measures," did their own tabulation. Their less one-sided picture put the President's "team" in a less favorable light. The AP, for example, scored it 19 wins and 7 losses on "major" legislation.

Such analysis, of course, gave only a mathematical average of how Congress responded to selected requests by the President. It told nothing about the new laws in relation to the public interest. Some of the worst bills enacted were the result of White House pressure.

Not Much To Crow About

According to the non-partisan Congressional Quarterly research staff, last March the President had gained enactment on only five of some 214 requested measures. By the end of the session, the total was up to some 250. Incomplete tabulation indicates that Congress actually gave Ike a little more than half this package.

That isn't so much to crow about when it is recalled that Pres. Truman in 1947 got 48% of his requests through the hostile 80th Congress.

Granted the 83rd did something, what's important is who, how and what it did. The answer is preserved in 38,000 pages of the Congressional Record for the last two years. They show that "Can Do" as it applies to the 83rd Congress, for practically all of the American people really meant "Can 'Do' You."

The 83rd proved that under a "business" Administration a group of willing congressional leaders "can do" big business and the special interest lobbies a lot of favors. But, except for a few grudging concessions, it just wasn't interested in showing what Congress "can do" for the people in general.

Pledges Left Undone

It did things to them instead, "doing" them out of civil liberties, and an expanding, full-employment economy, as well as their national resources. Nearly all GOP campaign pledges about things in the public interest like "fairer" labor laws, a better minimum wage act, and improved health and education went undone.

Except for the courageous band of fighting liberals in the House and Senate, the Congress could have "done" the American people out of even more than the billions of dollars in resources it handed away. Other proposed giveaways of atomic energy, helium, grazing lands and the national forests were blocked, but GOP leaders predicted that, after the elections, the Republicans "can do" them next year.

Because of its handouts to the special interests, the 83rd sometimes is called the "Give-Away" Congress. However, it didn't give to the people, and this name implies a generosity it didn't possess. When it dipped into the public trough, it was only paying off debts to groups who financed the GOP's costly 1952 bid for power.

The record shows that the things the 83rd did best were to "Put Off, Get Off and Pay-Off" and it seems more likely destined to be known as that kind of a Congress.

From its first action shelving Republican campaign promises to do something to curb Senate filibusters, it was a "put off" Congress down to the last month. Then, under White House pressure and impending elections, it did nearly all of its work with a haste that made sound legislation impossible.

In the first session, the only major part of the President's legislative program enacted was the so-called "tidelands" oil give-away. This was the first "pay-off" of many which followed to Texas oil millionaires and others who financed the Republicans' "great crusade."

A Few Gains

About the only creditable pieces of major legislation the 83rd Congress can claim are:

1. Extended coverage of social security, but with far-from-adequate increases in benefits, and no provision for disability payments.

2. Extended coverage of unemployment compensation, but with no increase in payments or federal standards as to duration and minimums.

3. Bigger federal contributions for vocational rehabilitation.

In practically all other major decisions, the 83rd Congress either simply "put off" action altogether, "got off" many New Deal and Fair Deal programs either entirely or in part, or "paid off" more of the GOP's debt to the special interests. (See accompanying box.)

The Administration's biggest "success" was enactment of its "relief for the rich" tax bill under which corporations and wealthy stockholders got the benefits. The GOP successfully defeated Democratic efforts to substitute cuts for all taxpayers.

Seaway At Last

Congress passed a St. Lawrence Seaway Bill which considerably curtailed the extent and usefulness of this water highway and left out all hydropower development. A number of minor bills to improve working conditions for government employes also passed, and the Highway Construction Act was extended.

The only health measure that got through was an inadequate three-year, $180 million plan to encourage hospital construction. Congress killed the President's so-called "health" program, which was really only a plan to have the government vote $25 million to pay insurance companies for losses on health insurance.

Public housing was practically wiped out, and the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was merely extended for another year.

Other parts of the President's program were enacted after Democrats won concessions protecting the public interest—as in modifications of the GOP's plan to turn atomic energy development over to private monopoly.

Democratic opposition also forced Congress to boost the minimum price support level under the new flexible farm program to 82.5% of parity. The Administration wanted it cut to 75%.

The Administration's recommendations on the President's promise to put "justice and fairness" into the Taft-Hartley Act turned out to contain new union-busting provisions which labor called "worse than Taft-Hartley."

Solid Democratic opposition killed these in the Senate, but Republicans promised a new try in the next Congress —if they're in the majority.

Here's the record of the 83rd GOP 'Pay-Off' Congress:

It "put off"

Action to make Taft-Hartley "fairer" to labor by removing "union-busting" sections.

Anti-recession legislation to check drop in farm income, mounting city unemployment and living costs near the highest point in history.

Action on Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell's boast that minimum wage laws would be boosted and coverage increased.

"Wetback" control legislation promised to labor and church groups that would penalize employers and those transporting illegal foreign labor.

Promised repeal of "unjust" sections of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act.

All civil rights legislation and all action to curb Senate filibusters.

Statehood for Hawaii, as pledged in GOP platform, and for Alaska.

A balanced budget; instead, it lifted the national debt ceiling by $6 billion.

Federal aid to education and a school construction program.

A fair procedure code to curb flagrant abuses of Congress' investigative power.

"Building up" the Labor Dept. as promised by Pres. Eisenhower.

It "got off"

The GOP platform and other campaign promises.

Many New Deal-Fair Deal programs, some completely, others only in part.

Financial aid to small business, by abolishing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and replacing it with a phony Small Business Administration.

"Full production, high consumption, good income" farm programs by voting reduced price supports when the farm recession was already so severe that workers in farm equipment plants were unemployed.

"Ability-to-pay" tax laws, by substituting the GOP "trickle down" theory which gives big tax savings to business and to the wealthy few.

The federal housing program, by virtually wiping out public housing.

Forward-moving programs for the development of public power, aid to REA cooperatives, and conservation of soil and natural resources.

"Good neighbor" programs abroad, by slashing foreign economic aid, waving a big stick in the "New Look" atomic retaliation policy, and passing a "go-it-alone" Mexican border labor recruitment program.

It "paid off"—

The oil interests, by giving away oil worth an estimated $50 billion lying off the Texas, California and Louisiana coasts.

The bankers and insurance companies, by accepting the Administration's "hard money" policy and by authorizing higher interest rates on government-insured mortgages.

The big corporations, by voting them "accelerated depreciation" tax cuts and their stockholders the bulk of other tax cuts in the new tax law.

The rubber industry, by giving away at a fraction of their cost the publicly-developed synthetic rubber plants.

The housing lobby, by first wiping out rent controls, killing public housing and then voting federal aid to provide easier terms for home mortgages.

The power lobby, by cutting funds for TVA and other public power projects, letting the Federal Power Commission give away Niagara Falls hydroelectric power, and throwing the $16 billion public investment in atomic energy open to private exploitation.

Wool growers, by giving them 120% of parity in exchange for votes of sheep state congressmen to put through reduced price supports on wheat, cotton and other crops.

Words, Words, Words

Every session when the Senate departs, Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.) fires a parting shot at the "all-devouring monster of verbosity."

Last week he did it again, estimated that the "Tower of Babel" in the Senate cost $1,824,140 to print during the 83rd Congress. Standing beside a six-foot pile of Congressional Records, Neely blamed the wordage on 10 senators—unidentified.

P.S.—It took the Senator 31 minutes to say his say.

Prediction

A hint that Democrats, rather than Republicans, will organize the next session of Congress was voiced by Rep. Wickersham (D. Okla.) as the House wound up.

Turning from Republican House Speaker Martin to Democratic former Speaker Rayburn, Wickersham asked:

"What will be the program of the leadership when the House meets in January?"

The Shame of the Schools (See Page 6)

The CIO News

Official Weekly Publication, Congress of Industrial Organizations

Washington, D. C., September 6, 1954 — Vol. 17, No. 36

'Time Is Running Out For GOP's Era Of Cynical, Broken Promises'

By JAMES B. CAREY
CIO Secretary-Treasurer & IUE-CIO President

TODAY, all over America, this country is enjoying Labor Day. This is a family day. It belongs to America's millions of working people.

Labor Day is the appropriate day for every working person in America to take a long, hard look at what has been happening—to them, and to their unions, during the last year.

Unfortunately, the record of the past year has not been one to inspire confidence. The record of the Administration in Washington has been one of broken campaign promises, of cynical disregard for the needs of our people.

It is almost two years since the Great Crusade trooped into Washington. A great general led his victorious political legions down Pennsylvania Ave. The honking of Cadillac horns sounded their call to arms.

Every Change Was For The Worse

Twenty years of broad-scale social welfare progress came to a temporary halt. We learned the hard way that our government was in the hands of the Cadillac-and-country-club set. "What's good for General Motors is good for America" became the slogan of a big sector of the Republican Administration.

The glib promises of the campaign were quickly forgotten—if they were ever meant to be remembered.

Labor, the Republicans had said, would receive fair treatment. But in quick succession they rained one blow after another on the shoulders of workers and their unions. Every change they proposed was a change for the worse.

For here was a government operating as though the whole United States were a huge grab-bag, into which it could reach and scatter favors to its chosen friends among the wealthy interests and the great corporations.

Dipping Into The Grab-bag

The men of the Administration dipped into the grab-bag—and in a twinkling America's off-shore oil was gone. A handful of states and a handful of oil companies were given one of the richest treasures this nation owns.

The gigantic give-away program of the Administration has continued without interruption. The excess profits tax on business was allowed to die—and profits became even more excessive.

Life was made easier for the families whose income rolls in from stock dividends. Thanks to Administration tax programs, the higher income families received the lion's share of tax relief. And Mr. Average American received only a pittance.

Just a few weeks ago, the Administration reached into the nation's treasure chest again and came up with what may be the greatest handout of all time—the atomic energy give-away.

In 1952, Pres. Eisenhower had brave assurances for the workers and farmers of the country. But the President of the United States has not carried out his pledges to the farmers and to the workers.

At the same time, he has faithfully fulfilled every promise made to the corporations and to the wealthy families whose contributions financed the high-priced advertising and slogans that won him his victory.

The fair treatment promised to labor went the way of so many other glib campaign pledges. All the threats poised in the Taft-Hartley Act have been trotted out during this Administration to impede the progress of workers and their unions.

Giving Aid To Run-Away Shops

From the White House itself came suggestions that would have made a bad act worse. When Congress refused to move in the direction of making Taft-Hartley worse, the appointees of this Administration to the National Labor Relations Board went to work to put new restrictions on the right to organize and bargain collectively.

One by one they have cut and hacked away at the traditions of collective bargaining until they bid fair to make the term a mockery. Instead, acting through directives and new interpretations, they have stocked the anti-labor arsenal of business with cannons while they have severed the string on the pop-gun with which the Taft-Hartley Law left labor to defend itself.

They have created an atmosphere in which the most reactionary, anti-labor leaders of business felt quite comfortable—so comfortable, in fact, that America is now witnessing the greatest spurt of run-away shops in its history. I can promise these corporations like General Electric that everywhere they move, the unions will move too.

Thunderclouds Of Depression

The hard-hearted men of business who dominate this Administration have looked the other way, have preferred to ignore the thunderclouds of depression which are gathered on America's horizon.

Their lust for profits, their unconcern for people, have steered this country towards the brink of economic disaster. But they deem it un-American to cite the growing number of unemployed and the mounting rolls of under-employed, those factory workers on two and three days a week.

They have their high-priced advertising writers to coin slogans for heading off growing depression. But a slogan never put food on the table of a single American family.

After almost two years, the people have had enough—more than enough. The movement to restore government to the people, for the people is once again under way.

Another election day is coming. Here, at the ballot box, is the golden treasure this Administration can't plunder—the right to vote for a government concerned with its people and not with profit sheets.

(From a Labor Day broadcast on the ABC Radio network.)

Rubber Union Settles 3 Big Pacts; Firestone Talks Pushed

THE CIO Rubber Workers have settled wage reopening negotiations with three of the industry's Big Four and were bargaining last week in an effort to end a strike at the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

The pay boost pattern, involving a 6.5c an hour average increase, also was being extended to independents.

The pattern was set when union negotiators finally reached an agreement with the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. which ended a 52-day strike. The settlement provided for a general increase of 6c an hour in eight of the company's 10 plants, with a hike of 8c at Gadsden, Ala., and one of 10c at Topeka, Kan., where wages are still below the industry's average.

About 23,000 URW-CIO members were affected by the Goodyear pact.

The following day the union settled on behalf of about 15,000 B. F. Goodrich Co. employes on the same average basis. Workers in six plants received a 6c boost. At the firm's Los Angeles plant the increase was 7.5c, and at Oaks, Pa., it was 9c.

Next in line was the U. S. Rubber Co., which agreed to a general increase of 6.5c an hour for its 32,000 employes in 19 plants, no area differentials being involved.

URW-CIO negotiators meantime were continuing meetings with Firestone, where about 25,000 members walked out Aug. 13. The full contract is open instead of wages alone, with the union seeking conditions set forth in other agreements.

URW-CIO Pres. L. S. Buckmaster announced that the 6.5c package pattern has been agreed to by several independents. Among them are the Baldwin Rubber Co., Pontiac, Mich., with about 1000 employes; the Seiberling Rubber Co., Barberton, O., and the Richardson Co., with plants in New Brunswick, N. J.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Melrose Park, Ill.; Tyler, Tex.; Ogden, Utah, and Newnan, Ga.

Steelworkers Hike Pay In Can, Kaiser Pacts

A NEW CONTRACT—negotiated a month before the old agreement expired—will give some 18,500 members of the CIO Steelworkers employed by the American Can Co. a 12.5c package increase.

The settlement was one of three the USA-CIO worked out within a few days of each other, agreements also being reached with the Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp., and the Steel Co. of Canada.

Meantime, negotiations were continuing in Pittsburgh with the Continental Can Co., which employes about 15,000 USA members.

The American Can settlement, effective Oct. 1, gives workers in 36 plants a general wage increase of 5c an hour; an additional 5c an hour on pensions, which follow the basic steel pattern with a minimum of $140, and a 2c increase in company-paid insurance coverage.

SEVERAL MINOR changes also were made. The contract expires Sept. 30, 1955, except for insurance, where the agreement continues to Mar. 14, 1957, and pensions, which remain unchanged until Mar. 14, 1958.

The new Kaiser agreement gives 5500 USA members an 8c per hour wage increase. At plants in Trentwood, Mead and Tacoma, Wash., the workers get 5.4c across the board and 2.6c in job increments, while at Newark, O., and Halethorpe, Md., the division was 5.8c in flat increases and 2.2c in job increments, the objective being greater uniformity in wage scales.

The two-year contract, effective Sept. 1, also contains improved insurance provisions, liberalized vacation pay and eligibility clauses, and a guarantee of eight hours reporting time.

All-night negotiations 24 hours after expiration of the old contract left 7000 USA members free to strike the Steel Co. of Canada's plant at Hamilton, Ont., yielded a settlement which was due to be presented to the workers for ratification late last week.

Its terms were not made public, but the union sought the basic steel package in the U. S.

Labrador Ore Firm Bars Organizers

The CIO Steelworkers in Canada last week charged that a "campaign of intimidation" against the workers is being waged by the Iron Ore Co. at its fabulously rich iron ore mines in the Labrador-Ungava region, on the Labrador-Quebec border.

The union is attempting to organize about 3000 employes at Seven Islands and Knob Lake, key centers in the operation. USA-CIO Rep. Jean Gerin charged the company with violating federal and provincial laws, and with using armed police to bar organizers from Knob Lake.

CIO Supports Chilean Strikers

The Chilean Confederation of Copper Workers was assured last week of full support of the CIO in its strike against the Braden Copper Co., an affiliate of the American-controlled Kennecott Copper Co.

"You have our assurance of solidarity and our best wishes for success in the settlement of your just demands," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther cabled the union.

Fact-Finding Move Pending In IWA Strike

STRIKING West Coast CIO Woodworkers were balloting over the Labor Day weekend on a proposal by the governors of Oregon and Washington for ending the 12-week-old strike.

